

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

HARVARD LAW SCHOOL LIBRARY

National Reporter System.—State Series.

THE SOUTHEASTERN REPORTER,
VOLUME 52,

CONTAINING ALL THE DECISIONS OF THE

SUPREME COURTS OF APPEALS OF VIRGINIA AND WEST VIRGINIA, AND SUPREME COURTS OF NORTH CAROLINA, SOUTH CAROLINA, GEORGIA.

PERMANENT EDITION.

DECEMBER 23, 1905—APRIL 7, 1906.

KF
135
.52
56

ST. PAUL:
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1906.

COPYRIGHT, 1906,
BY WEST PUBLISHING COMPANY.

JUDGES

OF THE

COURTS REPORTED DURING THE PERIOD COVERED BY THIS VOLUME.

GEORGIA—Supreme Court.

WILLIAM H. FISH, CHIEF JUSTICE.

ANDREW J. COBB, PRESIDING JUSTICE.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES.

J. H. LUMPKIN.

BEVERLY D. EVANS.

JOHN S. CANDLER.¹

MARCUS W. BECK.

SAMUEL C. ATKINSON.²

NORTH CAROLINA—Supreme Court.

WALTER CLARK, CHIEF JUSTICE.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES.

PLATT D. WALKER.

HENRY G. CONNOR.

WILLIAM A. HOKE.

GEORGE H. BROWN, JR.

SOUTH CAROLINA—Supreme Court.

Y. J. POPE, CHIEF JUSTICE.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES.

EUGENE B. GARY.

IRA B. JONES.

C. A. WOODS.

VIRGINIA—Supreme Court of Appeals.

JAMES KEITH, PRESIDENT.

JUDGES.

RICHARD H. CARDWELL.

GEORGE M. HARRISON.

JOHN A. BUCHANAN.

STAFFORD G. WHITTLE.

WEST VIRGINIA—Supreme Court of Appeals.

HENRY C. McWHORTER, PRESIDENT.

JUDGES.

HENRY BRANNON.

GEORGE POFFENBARGER.

JOSEPH M. SANDERS.

FRANK COX.

¹Resigned January 15, 1906.

52 S.E.

²Appointed January 15, 1906.

(III)*

CASES REPORTED.

	Page		Page
Able v. Southern Ry. (S. C.)	962	Baker v. Monumental Sav. & Loan Ass'n (W. Va.)	408
Ackiss' Ex'rs v. Satchel (Va.)	378	Ballou, Jones v. (N. C.)	254
Adair v. Atlanta (Ga.)	789	Ball & Sheppard v. Paquin (N. C.)	410
Adams, American Bonding & Surety Co. of Baltimore City, Md., v. (Ga.)	622	Baltimore Bargain House v. St. Clair (W. Va.)	660
Adkins v. Huff (W. Va.)	773	Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Allen (W. Va.)	465
Adkins v. State (Ga.)	656	Bank of Columbia, Gregg v. (S. C.)	195
Ailstock v. Moore Lime Co. (Va.)	213	Bank of Elberton, Hawes v. (Ga.)	922
Akin v. Jaudon (Ga.)	768	Banks v. State (Ga.)	74
Alexander v. Du Bose (S. C.)	786	Barbour, Stedman & Herod v. Tompkins (W. Va.)	707
Alfriend v. Fox (Ga.)	925	Barrett, Dudley v. (W. Va.)	100
Allen v. Wilkinson (W. Va.)	454	Bas v. Lawrence (Ga.)	296
Allen, Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. (W. Va.)	465	Battle, Chapman v. (Ga.)	812
Allen, Sanders, Swan & Co. v. (Ga.)	884	Battle, Polhill v. (Ga.)	87
Allison's Ex'r v. Wood (Va.)	559	Beasley, Couch & Co., Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. (Va.)	566
Alsbaugh, Eubanks v. (N. C.)	207	Beaumeister, Newport News Pub. Co. v. (Va.)	627
American Assur. Ass'n of Atlanta v. Hardiman (Ga.)	536	Bell, Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. (Va.)	700
American Bonding & Surety Co. of Baltimore City, Md., v. Adams (Ga.)	622	Bellenot v. Laube's Ex'r (Va.)	698
American Can Co. v. Commonwealth (Va.)	893	Belvin, Snipes v. (N. C.)	1039
American Missionary Ass'n, Brewer v. (Ga.)	804	Bennett & Co. v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank (Ga.)	330
American Tobacco Co. v. Polisco (Va.)	563	Berkeley County Court, Old Nat. Bank of Martinsburg v. (W. Va.)	494
Americus Mfg. & Imp. Co., Fricker v. (Ga.)	65	Bernard v. Shemwell (N. C.)	64
Ammons v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.)	781	Best v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. (S. C.)	223
Anderson v. Anderson (Ga.)	161	Bettis v. Avery (N. C.)	584
Anderson, Screws v. (Ga.)	429	Bickford, Newport News & O. P. R. & Electric Co. v. (Va.)	1011
Andrew v. Carithers (Ga.)	653	Bidwell v. Bidwell (N. C.)	55
Aragon Coffee Co. v. Rogers (Va.)	843	Biles v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (N. C.)	129
Armour Packing Co. v. Clark (Ga.)	145	Biscoe Lumber Co., Mills v. (N. C.)	200
Ashby & Co., Hackney v. (Ga.)	886	Bishop v. Bishop (Ga.)	743
Ashby, Elliott v. (Va.)	383	Blackley, State v. (N. C.)	1039
Asheville & B. St. R. & Transp. Co., Crenshaw v. (N. C.)	731	Bluenstein, Rogers v. (Ga.)	617
Atlanta, Adair v. (Ga.)	739	Board of Graded School Trustees in Town of Kernersville, Lowery v. (N. C.)	267
Atlanta, Edwards v. (Ga.)	297	Bond v. Branning Mfg. Co. (N. C.)	929
Atlanta, Jones v. (Ga.)	76	Booth v. Rosier (Ga.)	327
Atlanta, Starr v. (Ga.)	298	Bott, Lane Bros. & Co. v. (Va.)	258
Atlanta, Thrower v. (Ga.)	76	Bourne v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (N. C.)	1038
Atlanta, B. & A. R. Co., Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. (Ga.)	320	Bradley, Cotton v. (N. C.)	1038
Atlanta Buggy Co. v. Hess Spring & Axle Co. (Ga.)	613	Bradshaw, Raburn v. (Ga.)	922
Atlanta Northern R. Co., Haden v. (Ga.)	431	Brakelow S. S. Co., West v. (Ga.)	888
Atlanta & C. Air Line R. Co., Hayes v. (N. C.)	416	Branning Mfg. Co., Bond v. (N. C.)	929
Atlanta & C. Air Line R. Co., Reid v. (N. C.)	307	Brannon Carbonating Co., Lyles v. (N. C.)	233
Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. Atlanta, B. & A. R. Co. (Ga.)	820	Brewer v. American Missionary Ass'n (Ga.)	804
Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., Bourne v. (N. C.)	1038	Briggs, State v. (W. Va.)	218
Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., Griffin v. (N. C.)	1039	Broach, Townsend v. (Ga.)	293
Augusta Brewing Co., Watson v. (Ga.)	152	Brock v. Goldsboro Lumber Co. (N. C.)	1038
Augusta Naval Stores Co. v. Young (Ga.)	898	Brock v. Kirkpatrick (S. C.)	592
Augusta Naval Stores Co., Forlaw v. (Ga.)	898	Brooke, Selden v. (Va.)	632
Augusta Perpetual Bldg. & Loan Co., Bryan v. (Va.)	357	Brookshire v. Farmers' Alliance Exch. of South Carolina (S. C.)	867
Augusta Ry. & Electric Co. v. Weekly (Ga.)	444	Brown v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.)	198
Augusta Telephone & Electric Co., Sterling Electric Co. v. (Ga.)	541	Brown v. State (Ga.)	745
Avera, Pennington v. (Ga.)	324	Brown v. W. T. Weaver Power Co. (N. C.)	954
Avery, Bettis v. (N. C.)	584	Brown, Harris v. (Ga.)	610
Baird v. Smith (Ga.)	655	Brown, Nutter v. (W. Va.)	88
		Browning, Providence Mach. Co. v. (S. C.)	117
		Bruner v. Miller (W. Va.)	995
		Brunson v. Furtick (S. C.)	424
		Bryan v. Augusta Perpetual Bldg. & Loan Co. (Va.)	857

	Page		Page
Bryan v. State (Ga.)	298	Commonwealth, Cremeans v. (Va.)	362
Bryant, Campbell v. (Va.)	638	Commonwealth, Harding v. (Va.)	832
Buffington v. State (Ga.)	19	Commonwealth, Haynes v. (Va.)	358
Buist Co. v. Lancaster Mercantile Co. (S. C.)	789	Commonwealth, Hoback v. (Va.)	575
Bumgarner, Loverin & Browne Co. v. (W. Va.)	1000	Commonwealth, Jernigan v. (Va.)	361
Buncombe County Com'rs., Fortune v. (N. C.)	950	Commonwealth, Johnson v. (Va.)	625
Bunker v. Bunker (N. C.)	237	Commonwealth, Robinson v. (Va.)	690
Burke & Williams v. Mackenzie (Ga.)	653	Commonwealth, Satterfield v. (Va.)	979
Burnett v. W. A. Davis & Co. (Ga.)	927	Commonwealth, Standard Oil Co. v. (Va.)	390
Burns, State v. (S. C.)	960	Concord, Fitzgerald v. (N. C.)	309
Busha, Dollar v. (Ga.)	615	Consolidated Light & Power Co., Sikes v. (N. C.)	1039
Cable Co. v. Smith (N. C.)	1038	Cooper v. North Carolina R. Co. (N. C.)	932
Caldwell v. Life Ins. Co. of Virginia (N. C.)	252	Corbett Buggy Co. v. Dukes (N. C.)	931
Cameron, Graves v. (N. C.)	1039	Corley, Equitable Building & Loan Ass'n v. (S. C.)	48
Cameron Glass Co., Federation Window Glass Co. v. (W. Va.)	518	Corley, Whitman v. (S. C.)	49
Campbell v. Bryant (Va.)	638	Cosmopolitan Life Ins. Ass'n v. Koegel (Va.)	166
Campbell v. Doolittle (W. Va.)	260	Cotten v. Bradley (N. C.)	1038
Campbell v. Elkins (W. Va.)	220	Cotten, Wright v. (N. C.)	141
Campbell v. Everhart (N. C.)	201	Cover, Whitaker v. (N. C.)	581
Campbell v. State (Ga.)	914	Cowart, Ivey v. (Ga.)	436
Canadian County Mill & Elevator Co., Greenwood Grocery Co. v. (S. C.)	191	Cox v. State (Ga.)	150
Carey Mfg. Co. v. Watson (W. Va.)	515	Cox, Central of Georgia R. Co. v. (Ga.)	161
Carithers, Andrew v. (Ga.)	653	Crawford v. Masters (N. C.)	663
Carney, Pence v. (W. Va.)	702	Crawford's Adm'r v. Turner's Adm'r (W. Va.)	716
Carolina & N. W. R. Co., Edwards v. (N. C.)	234	Cremeans v. Commonwealth (Va.)	362
Carolina & W. R. Co., Eller v. (N. C.)	305	Crenshaw v. Asheville & B. St. R. & Transp. Co. (N. C.)	731
Carr v. City Council of Augusta (Ga.)	300	Crosson v. State (Ga.)	880
Carstarphen Warehouse Co. v. Fried (Ga.)	598	C. S. Hirsch & Co. v. Meldrim (Ga.)	813
Carter v. North Carolina R. Co., two cases (N. C.)	642	Cumberland Valley Cement Co., Grant v. (W. Va.)	36
Carter, Sanders v. (Ga.)	887	Currence, Parr v. (W. Va.)	496
Cave, Witte v. (S. C.)	736	Cutrell v. Cutrell (N. C.)	1038
Caviness v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland (N. C.)	265	Daley, Flanders v. (Ga.)	687
Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Cox (Ga.)	161	Dalton, Hill v. (N. C.)	273
Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Duggan (Ga.)	768	Daniels, Pickens v. (W. Va.)	215
Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Hall (Ga.)	679	Davis, Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. (W. Va.)	724
Chapman v. Battler (Ga.)	812	Davis, Rose v. (N. C.)	780
Charleston & W. C. R. Co. Frasier v. (S. C.)	964	Davis & Co., Burnett v. (Ga.)	927
Charleston & W. C. R. Co., Roundtree v. (S. C.)	231	Day v. Fay (W. Va.)	1013
Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Beasley, Couch & Co. (Va.)	566	Day, State v. (W. Va.)	1013
Chesapeake & O. R. Co., Fisher's Adm'r v. (Va.)	373	De Hart, Hyatt v. (N. C.)	781
Chesapeake & O. R. Co., Shannon's Adm'r v. (Va.)	376	Delaney v. City Council of Augusta (Ga.)	300
Chestnut v. Chestnut (Va.)	348	Dew v. Pike (N. C.)	1038
Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., Dudley v. (W. Va.)	718	Dimmack v. Wheeling Traction Co. (W. Va.)	101
Chrislip, State v. (W. Va.)	476	Dixon v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.)	673
City Council of Augusta v. Clark & Co. (Ga.)	881	Doak, Stewart v. (W. Va.)	95
City Council of Augusta v. Marks (Ga.)	539	Dolan, State v. (W. Va.)	181
City Council of Augusta, Carr v. (Ga.)	300	Dollar v. Busha (Ga.)	615
City Council of Augusta, Delaney v. (Ga.)	300	Donable's Adm'r v. Harrisonburg (Va.)	174
City Council of Charleston, Marion v. (S. C.)	418	Doolittle, Campbell v. (W. Va.)	260
City of Grafton v. Holt (W. Va.)	21	Double Shoals Cotton Mills, Ross v. (N. C.)	121
Clark v. Emery (W. Va.)	770	Du Bose, Alexander v. (S. C.)	786
Clark v. Statesville (N. C.)	52	Dudley v. Barrett (W. Va.)	100
Clark, Armour Packing Co. v. (Ga.)	145	Dudley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (W. Va.)	718
Clark's Adm'r, Newport News & O. P. R. & Electric Co. v. (Va.)	1010	Duerr v. Snodgrass (W. Va.)	531
Clark & Co., City Council of Augusta v. (Ga.)	881	Duggan v. State (Ga.)	748
Clayton v. Gilmer County Court (W. Va.)	103	Duggan, Central of Georgia R. Co. v. (Ga.)	768
Clifford, State v. (W. Va.)	864	Dukes, Corbett Buggy Co. v. (N. C.)	931
Clifford, State v. (W. Va.)	981	Dunham v. State (Ga.)	890
Cloer, Gwyn-Harper Mfg. Co. v. (N. C.)	305	Dunn, National Bank v. (N. C.)	1039
Coal & Coke R. Co. v. Joyce (W. Va.)	498	Dunn, Pollock v. (N. C.)	1039
Cobb v. Rhea (N. C.)	1038	Duplin Tel. Co., Wilson v. (N. C.)	62
Cody v. State (Ga.)	750	Earl v. State (Ga.)	78
Coffey, Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. (Va.)	867	Eastern State Hospital v. Graves' Committee (Va.)	837
Commonwealth, American Can Co. v. (Va.)	893	Edgefield Mfg. Co., Jennings v. (S. C.)	118
		Edmundson, North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. v. (Va.)	350
		Edwards v. Atlanta (Ga.)	297
		Edwards v. Carolina & N. W. R. Co. (N. C.)	234
		Edwards v. State (Ga.)	319
		Edwards, McKinney v. (N. C.)	1039
		Elberton, Oliver v. (Ga.)	15
		Elkins, Campbell v. (W. Va.)	220

	Page		Page
Eller v. Carolina & W. R. Co. (N. C.)..	305	Georgia Iron & Coal Co., Steele v. (Ga.)..	1038
Elliott v. Ashby (Va.).....	383	Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Tice (Ga.)..	916
Ellis v. Southern R. Co. (S. C.).....	223	German Alliance Ins. Ass'n, Foreman v. (Va.).....	337
Ellis v. State (Ga.).....	147	Gibbes, Seegers v. (S. C.).....	586
Elm Grove Coal Co., Wallace v. (W. Va.)	485	Gibson, Frazier v. (N. C.).....	1035
Emerson, Ledford v. (N. C.).....	641	Giles v. Western Union Tel. Co. (N. C.)..	1039
Emery, Clark v. (W. Va.).....	770	Giles, Lee v. (Ga.).....	806
Equitable Building & Loan Ass'n v. Corley (S. C.).....	48	Gilmer County Court, Clayton v. (W. Va.)	103
Equitable Loan & Security Co. v. Lewman (Ga.).....	599	Givins v. State (Ga.).....	890
Erwin, Rutherford County Com'rs v. (N. C.)	785	Glenn v. Moore County Com'rs (N. C.)....	58
Eubanks v. Alsbaugh (N. C.).....	207	Goldsboro Lumber Co., Brock v. (N. C.)..	1038
Evans, Ex parte (S. C.).....	419	Goodman, Friedman v. (Ga.).....	892
Evans v. Josephine Mills (Ga.).....	538	Gordon, Wood v. (W. Va.).....	261
Everhart, Campbell v. (N. C.).....	201	Grant v. Cumberland Valley Cement Co. (W. Va.).....	86
Farley v. Farley (N. C.).....	1038	Graves v. Cameron (N. C.).....	1039
Farmers' Alliance Exch. of South Carolina, Brookshire v. (S. C.).....	867	Graves' Committee, Eastern State Hospital v. (Va.).....	837
Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, Bennett & Co. v. (Ga.).....	330	Gray, Neal v. (Ga.).....	622
Fay, Day v. (W. Va.).....	1013	Great Falls Power Co. v. Great Falls & O. D. R. Co. (Va.).....	172
Federation Window Glass Co. v. Cameron Glass Co. (W. Va.).....	518	Great Falls & O. D. R. Co., Great Falls Power Co. v. (Va.).....	172
Ferguson v. McCowan (Ga.).....	886	Green v. Green (N. C.).....	1039
Fewell v. Southern R. Co. (Va.).....	689	Green v. Southern R. Co. (S. C.).....	45
Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, Caviness v. (N. C.)	265	Green v. State (Ga.).....	431
Fidler, Hefner v. (W. Va.).....	513	Greenwich Ins. Co., Perry v. (N. C.)..	1039
Field v. Jordan (Ga.).....	885	Greenwood Grocery Co. v. Canadian County Mill & Elevator Co. (S. C.).....	191
Fields, Spears v. (S. C.).....	44	Greer v. State (Ga.).....	884
Fincannon v. Sudderth (N. C.).....	579	Gregg v. Bank of Columbia (S. C.).....	195
Finch v. State (Ga.).....	890	Griffin v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (N. C.).....	1039
First Nat. Bank, Moore v. (N. C.).....	944	Gulley, Hix v. (Ga.).....	890
Fish v. State (Ga.).....	737	Gwyn-Harper Mfg. Co. v. Cloer (N. C.)..	305
Fishburne v. Minott (S. C.).....	646	Hackney v. J. R. Asbury & Co. (Ga.)....	886
Fishburne v. Minott (S. C.).....	648	Haden v. Atlanta Northern R. Co. (Ga.)..	431
Fisher's Adm'r v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (Va.).....	373	Hagan v. Richmond (Va.).....	385
Fitzgerald v. Concord (N. C.).....	309	Hagins, State v. (N. C.).....	1039
Flaherty v. Fleming (W. Va.).....	857	Haley v. State (Ga.).....	159
Flanders v. Daley (Ga.).....	687	Hall v. Hall (Va.).....	557
Fleming, Flaherty v. (W. Va.).....	857	Hall v. State (Ga.).....	891
Fontana, S. G. Moxley & Co. v. (Ga.)....	443	Hall v. Western Union Tel. Co. (N. C.)..	50
Foreman v. German Alliance Ins. Ass'n (Va.).....	337	Hall, Central of Georgia R. Co. v. (Ga.)..	679
Forlaw v. Augusta Naval Stores Co. (Ga.)..	898	Hall, Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. (Va.)..	345
Fortune v. Buncombe County Com'rs (N. C.)	950	Hampton v. State (Ga.).....	19
Fox, Alfriend v. (Ga.).....	925	Hamrick v. Western Union Tel. Co. (N. C.)	232
Fox, Frum v. (W. Va.).....	178	Hanson, Isdale v. (Ga.).....	618
Frazier v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co. (S. C.)	964	Hardiman, American Assur. Ass'n of Atlanta v. (Ga.).....	536
Frazier v. Gibson (N. C.).....	1035	Harding v. Commonwealth (Va.).....	832
Frazier v. Queen (N. C.).....	1038	Harman, Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. (Va.)....	368
Fredericksburg, Standard Oil Co. v. (Va.)..	817	Harris v. Brown (Ga.).....	610
Freeport Smokeless Coal & Coking Co., Rainey v. (W. Va.).....	473	Harris, Georgia Co-op. Fire Ass'n v. (Ga.)	88
Freeport Smokeless Coal & Coking Co., Rainey v. (W. Va.).....	528	Harrison v. Harrison (Ga.).....	813
French v. Vradenburg's Ex'rs (Va.).....	695	Harrisonburg, Donable's Adm'r v. (Va.)..	174
Fricker v. Americus Mfg. & Imp. Co. (Ga.)	65	Harrisonburg, Rankin v. (Va.).....	555
Fried, Carstarphen Warehouse Co. v. (Ga.)	598	Hartigan v. Hartigan (W. Va.).....	720
Friedman v. Goodman (Ga.).....	892	Hatton v. Mountford (Va.).....	847
Friedman v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (Ga.)	763	Hawes v. Bank of Elberton (Ga.).....	922
Frum v. Fox (W. Va.).....	178	Hawks v. State (Ga.).....	762
Furr v. Johnson (N. C.).....	664	Hayes v. Atlanta & O. Air Line R. Co. (N. C.)	416
Furtick, Brunson v. (S. C.).....	424	Haynes v. Commonwealth (Va.).....	358
Gaines v. State (Ga.).....	78	Hefner v. Fidler (W. Va.).....	513
Gainesville & D. Electric R. Co., Thomas v. (Ga.).....	801	Hershman v. Stafford (W. Va.).....	533
Gaissert, Tye v. (Ga.).....	813	Hess Spring & Axle Co., Atlanta Buggy Co. v. (Ga.).....	613
Garner v. Garner (S. C.).....	194	Hickory Camp Coal & Coke Co., Roberts v. (W. Va.).....	182
Gartlan, United States Oil & Gas Well Supply Co. v. (W. Va.).....	524	Highland Development Co., Moon's Adm'r v. (Va.).....	209
Gattis v. Kilgo (N. C.).....	249	Hill v. Dalton (N. C.).....	273
Gee, Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. (Va.).....	572	Hill v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ga.).....	651
Georgia Co-op. Fire Ass'n v. Harris (Ga.)	88	Hill v. State (Ga.).....	822
Georgia Industrial Co., Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. v. (Ga.)	239	Hiller, Kaylor v. (S. C.).....	120
		Hirsch & Co. v. Meldrim (Ga.).....	813
		Hix v. Gulley (Ga.).....	890
		Hoback v. Commonwealth (Va.).....	575
		Hoffman, Wolverton v. (Va.).....	176
		Hodges v. Waters (Ga.).....	161

	Page		Page
Hollinshed v. Woodward (Ga.).....	815	Lane Bros. & Co. v. Bott (Va.).....	258
Holloman, State v. (N. C.).....	408	Langhorne, Wilson v. (Va.).....	841
Holmes, Marbach v. (Va.).....	828	Lassiter v. Sugg (N. C.).....	1039
Holstein, Jaro v. (S. C.).....	870	Laube's Ex'r, Belenot v. (Va.).....	698
Holt, City of Grafton v. (W. Va.).....	21	Lawrence, Bass v. (Ga.).....	296
Hoover v. Saunders (Va.).....	657	Leatherwood, M. Millhiser & Co. v. (N. C.).....	782
Hope v. State (Ga.).....	747	Ledford v. Emerson (N. C.).....	641
Horne, State v. (N. C.).....	136	Lee v. Giles (Ga.).....	806
Houston v. Polk (Ga.).....	83	Lee v. Humphries (Ga.).....	1007
Houston v. State (Ga.).....	757	Lee v. Patillo (Va.).....	696
Howard, Southern R. Co. v. (Ga.).....	1088	Lemon, Jeffrey v. (W. Va.).....	769
Howell v. State (Ga.).....	649	Levi Cotton Mills, R. T. Wilson & Co. v. (N. C.).....	250
Huff, Adkins v. (W. Va.).....	773	Levy v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. (W. Va.).....	449
Hughes v. Western Union Tel. Co. (S. C.).....	107	Lewis v. Owens (Ga.).....	833
Humphries, Lee v. (Ga.).....	1007	Lewis v. State (Ga.).....	81
Hunter, Lively v. (Ga.).....	544	Lewis, Hubbard & Co. v. Montgomery Supply Co. (W. Va.).....	1017
Hutchison v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.).....	263	Lewman, Equitable Loan & Security Co. v. (Ga.).....	599
Huxford v. Southern Pine Co. (Ga.).....	439	Life, Pence v. (Va.).....	257
Hyatt v. De Hart (N. C.).....	781	Life Ins. Co. of Virginia, Caldwell v. (N. C.).....	252
Ingram v. State (Ga.).....	759	Lively v. Hunter (Ga.).....	544
Iola Min. Co., Oyster v. (N. C.).....	198	Lockwood v. Lockwood (S. C.).....	735
Isdale v. Hanson (Ga.).....	618	Logan's Heirs v. Ward (W. Va.).....	398
Ivey v. Cowart (Ga.).....	436	Loomis, May v. (N. C.).....	728
Jackson v. State (Ga.).....	155	Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kohlruss (Ga.).....	166
James v. State (Ga.).....	295	Louisville & N. R. Co., Hill v. (Ga.).....	651
Jaro v. Holstein (S. C.).....	870	Loverin & Browne Co. v. Bumgarner (W. Va.).....	1000
Jaudon, Akin v. (Ga.).....	768	Lowery v. Board of Graded School Trustees in Town of Kernersville (N. C.).....	267
Jeffrey v. Lemon (W. Va.).....	769	Ludwick, Johnson v. (W. Va.).....	489
Jennings v. Edgefield Mfg. Co. (S. C.).....	113	Luther v. Wheeler (S. C.).....	874
J. E. Poling & Co. v. Moore (W. Va.).....	99	Lyles v. Brannon Carbonating Co. (N. C.).....	233
Jernigan v. Commonwealth (Va.).....	861	Mabry v. North Carolina R. Co. (N. C.).....	124
Johnson v. Commonwealth (Va.).....	625	McAdeu v. Palmer (N. C.).....	1034
Johnson v. Ludwick (W. Va.).....	489	McClung, Terry v. (Va.).....	355
Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. (S. C.).....	644	McCowan, Ferguson v. (Ga.).....	886
Johnson v. State (Ga.).....	656	McCoy v. State (Ga.).....	434
Johnson v. State (Ga.).....	737	McCurdy, Stevens v. (Ga.).....	762
Johnson v. State (Ga.).....	880	McDougle, Wade v. (W. Va.).....	1026
Johnson, Furr v. (N. C.).....	664	McGowan v. State (Ga.).....	738
Johnston, Karnes v. (W. Va.).....	658	McIntyre, State v. (N. C.).....	63
Johnston, State v. (N. C.).....	273	Mackenzie, Burke & Williams v. (Ga.).....	653
Johnston's Adm'r v. Moore Lime Co. (Va.).....	360	McKinney v. Edwards (N. C.).....	1039
Joiner v. State (Ga.).....	151	McNeely v. South Penn Oil Co. (W. Va.).....	480
Jones v. Atlanta (Ga.).....	76	McWhorter, Morrison v. (W. Va.).....	394
Jones v. Ballou (N. C.).....	254	Manhattan Social Club, Town of Phœbus v. (Va.).....	839
Jones v. Pennsylvania Casualty Co. (N. C.).....	578	Mann v. Mercer County Court (W. Va.).....	776
Jones, Rountree v. (Ga.).....	325	Marbach v. Holmes (Va.).....	828
Jones, State v. (N. C.).....	240	Marion v. City Council of Charleston (S. C.).....	418
Jordan v. State (Ga.).....	768	Marks, City Council of Augusta v. (Ga.).....	539
Jordan, Field v. (Ga.).....	885	Martin, Warner v. (Ga.).....	446
Jordan, Weathersby v. (Ga.).....	83	Massey v. State (Ga.).....	78
Josephine Mills, Evans v. (Ga.).....	538	Masters, Crawford v. (N. C.).....	663
Joyce, Coal & Coke R. Co. v. (W. Va.).....	498	Mathews v. Parker (Ga.).....	322
J. R. Asbury & Co., Hackney v. (Ga.).....	886	Mauldin v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. (S. C.).....	677
Kaplon & Bro., Town of Harper's Ferry v. (W. Va.).....	492	Maxwell, Warner v. (Ga.).....	809
Karnes v. Johnston (W. Va.).....	658	May v. Loomis (N. C.).....	728
Kaylor v. Hiller (S. C.).....	120	Medical College of Georgia v. Rushing (Ga.).....	833
Kean v. Landrum (S. C.).....	421	Meldrim, C. S. Hirsch & Co. v. (Ga.).....	813
Kearns v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.).....	131	Mercer County Court, Mann v. (W. Va.).....	776
Kehoe, Willcox v. (Ga.).....	896	Merchants' & Miners' Transp. Co. v. Moore & Co. (Ga.).....	802
Keller v. Keller (W. Va.).....	318	Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Hall (Va.).....	345
Kelley v. Ohio River R. Co. (W. Va.).....	520	Millhouse v. Southern Ry. (S. C.).....	41
Kennedy, Selden's Ex'r v. (Va.).....	635	Miller v. Mitchell (W. Va.).....	478
Kilgo, Gattis v. (N. C.).....	249	Miller, Bruner v. (W. Va.).....	995
King v. Thompson (W. Va.).....	487	Miller, Walker v. (N. C.).....	125
Kinsey v. Notla Marble Co. (N. C.).....	1089	Millhiser & Co. v. Leatherwood (N. C.).....	782
Kirkpatrick, Brock v. (S. C.).....	592	Millinder v. State (Ga.).....	760
Knowles v. Savage, Son & Co. (N. C.).....	930	Mills v. Biscoe Lumber Co. (N. C.).....	200
Koegel, Cosmopolitan Life Ins. Ass'n v. (Va.).....	166	Millner v. State (Ga.).....	302
Kohlruss, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. (Ga.).....	166	Minott, Fishburne v. (S. C.).....	646
Kolman v. State (Ga.).....	82	Minott, Fishburne v. (S. C.).....	648
Lackey, Southern Chemical Co. v. (N. C.).....	272
Laidley v. Reynolds (W. Va.).....	405
Lancaster, Town of Wadley v. (Ga.).....	335
Lancaster Mercantile Co., Robert Buist Co. v. (S. C.).....	789
Landrum, Kean v. (S. C.).....	421
Lane v. Rowan County Com'rs (N. C.).....	140

	Page		Page
Misenheimer v. Ritchie (N. C.).....	1039	Palmer, McAden v. (N. C.).....	1034
Mitchell, Miller v. (W. Va.).....	478	Paquin, Ball & Sheppard v. (N. C.).....	410
M. Millhiser & Co. v. Leatherwood (N. C.).....	782	Parker, Mathews v. (Ga.).....	322
Montgomery Supply Co., Lewis, Hubbard & Co. v. (W. Va.).....	1017	Parks v. Simpson (Ga.).....	616
Monumental Sav. & Loan Ass'n, Baker v. (W. Va.).....	408	Parr v. Currence (W. Va.).....	496
Moore's Adm'r v. Highland Development Co. (Va.).....	209	Patillo, Lee v. (Va.).....	696
Moore v. First Nat. Bank (N. C.).....	944	Patten, Stoner v. (Ga.).....	894
Moore v. State (Ga.).....	81	Patterson v. State (Ga.).....	77
Moore, J. E. Poling & Co. v. (W. Va.).....	99	Patterson v. State (Ga.).....	534
Moore, Murray v. (Va.).....	881	Patterson, Southern R. Co. v. (Va.).....	694
Moore County Com'rs, Glenn v. (N. C.).....	58	Patton v. Rome (Ga.).....	742
Moore Lime Co., Ailstock v. (Va.).....	213	Pearson v. Wimlish (Ga.).....	751
Moore Lime Co., Johnston's Adm'r v. (Va.).....	380	Pence v. Carney (W. Va.).....	702
Moore & Co., Merchants' & Miners' Transp. Co. v. (Ga.).....	802	Pence v. Life (Va.).....	257
Morgan v. State (Ga.).....	748	Pendleton's Adm'r v. Richmond F. & P. R. Co. (Va.).....	574
Morrison v. McWhorter (W. Va.).....	394	Pennington v. Avera (Ga.).....	324
Morton, State v. (N. C.).....	1039	Pennsylvania Casualty Co., Jones v. (N. C.).....	578
Mountford, Hatton v. (Va.).....	847	Perkins v. State (Ga.).....	17
Moyer, State v. (W. Va.).....	80	Perry v. Greenwich Ins. Co. (N. C.).....	1039
Mozley & Co. v. Fontana (Ga.).....	443	Person, Ex parte (N. C.).....	1033
Murray v. Moore (Va.).....	381	Peters v. State (Ga.).....	147
Murray, State v. (S. C.).....	189	Peyton, Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. (Ga.).....	803
National Bank v. Dunn (N. C.).....	1039	Peyton, State v. (W. Va.).....	393
Neal v. Gray (Ga.).....	622	Philip Carey Mfg. Co. v. Watson (W. Va.).....	515
Nelson v. State (Ga.).....	20	Pickens v. Daniels (W. Va.).....	215
New v. State (Ga.).....	160	Pike, Dew v. (N. C.).....	1038
Newport News, Swift & Co. v. (Va.).....	821	Pitts v. State (Ga.).....	147
Newport News Pub. Co. v. Beaumeister (Va.).....	627	Plemmons v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.).....	953
Newport News & O. P. R. & Electric Co. v. Bickford (Va.).....	1011	Polhill v. Battle (Ga.).....	87
Newport News & O. P. R. & Electric Co. v. Clark's Adm'r (Va.).....	1010	Poling & Co. v. Moore (W. Va.).....	99
Newton, Sheppard v. (N. C.).....	143	Polisco, American Tobacco Co. v. (Va.).....	563
Nock, Winder v. (Va.).....	501	Polk, Houston v. (Ga.).....	83
Nolly v. State (Ga.).....	19	Pollard v. State (Ga.).....	149
Norfolk, Norfolk, P. & N. N. Co. v. (Va.).....	851	Pollock v. Dunn (N. C.).....	1039
Norfolk, P. & N. N. Co. v. Norfolk (Va.).....	851	Pooler v. Smith (S. C.).....	967
Norfolk Ry. & Light Co. v. Williar (Va.).....	380	Pope v. Prince's Adm'r (Va.).....	1009
Norfolk Ry. & Light Co., Townsend v. (Va.).....	970	Pope's Will, In re (N. C.).....	235
Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Bell (Va.).....	700	Porter v. State (Ga.).....	283
Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Coffey (Va.).....	367	Postal Tel. Cable Co., Ex parte (S. C.).....	676
Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Davis (W. Va.).....	724	Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Peyton (Ga.).....	803
Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Gee (Va.).....	572	Pressley v. State (Ga.).....	750
Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Harman (Va.).....	868	Prince's Adm'r, Pope v. (Va.).....	1009
Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Scruggs (Va.).....	834	Propeller Towboat Co. of Savannah v. Western Union Tel. Co. (Ga.).....	766
Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Spencer's Adm'r (Va.).....	810	Providence Mach. Co. v. Browning (S. C.).....	117
Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Tidewater R. Co. (Va.).....	852	Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. v. Georgia Industrial Co. (Ga.).....	289
North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Edmundson (Va.).....	350	Queen, Frazier v. (N. C.).....	1038
North Carolina Corp. Commission v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (N. C.).....	941	Rabon, Stanaland v. (N. C.).....	417
North Carolina Min. Co., Roper v. (N. C.).....	1039	Raburn v. Bradshaw (Ga.).....	922
North Carolina R. Co., Carter v., two cases (N. C.).....	642	Rainey v. Freeport Smokeless Coal & Coking Co. (W. Va.).....	473
North Carolina R. Co., Cooper v. (N. C.).....	932	Rainey v. Freeport Smokeless Coal & Coking Co. (W. Va.).....	528
North Carolina R. Co., Mabry v. (N. C.).....	124	Raleigh, Pace v. (N. C.).....	277
Notia Marble Co., Kinsey v. (N. C.).....	1039	Ralph v. State (Ga.).....	298
Nugent v. Watkins (Ga.).....	158	Randall v. State (Ga.).....	889
Nutter v. Brown (W. Va.).....	88	Rankin v. Harrisonburg (Va.).....	555
Ohio River R. Co., Kelley v. (W. Va.).....	520	Rathbun, United Moderns v. (Va.).....	552
Old Nat. Bank of Martinsburg v. Berkeley County Court (W. Va.).....	494	Rawlins v. State (Ga.).....	1
Oliver v. Elberton (Ga.).....	15	Rawls v. State (Ga.).....	72
Oney v. West Buena Vista Land Co. (Va.).....	843	Raymond v. Strickland (Ga.).....	619
O'Quin, Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. (Ga.).....	427	Reel v. Reel (W. Va.).....	1023
Overstreet v. Sylvania Water Supply Co., two cases (Ga.).....	164	Reid v. Atlanta & O. Air Line R. Co. (N. C.).....	307
Owen, Tussey v. (N. C.).....	128	Revolution Cotton Mills v. Union Cotton Mills (S. C.).....	674
Owens, Lewis v. (Ga.).....	333	Reynolds, Laidley v. (W. Va.).....	405
Oyster v. Iola Min. Co. (N. C.).....	198	Rhea, Cobb v. (N. C.).....	1038
Pace v. Raleigh (N. C.).....	277	Richmond, Hagan v. (Va.).....	385
		Richmond, F. & P. R. Co., Pendleton's Adm'r v. (Va.).....	574
		Ridgley v. State (Ga.).....	761
		Riley v. Yost (W. Va.).....	40
		Ritchie, Misenheimer v. (N. C.).....	1039
		Ritchie, Turk v. (Va.).....	339
		Robert Buist Co. v. Lancaster Mercantile Co. (S. C.).....	789

	Page.		Page
Roberts v. Hickory Camp Coal & Coke Co. (W. Va.)	182	Smith & Kelly Co., Young v. (Ga.)	765
Robertson, Swords v. (Ga.)	544	Smokeless Fuel Co. v. W. E. Seaton & Sons (Va.)	829
Robinson v. Commonwealth (Va.)	690	Snipes v. Belvin (N. C.)	1039
Rogers v. Bluenstein (Ga.)	617	Snodgrass, Duerr v. (W. Va.)	531
Rogers, Aragon Coffee Co. v. (Va.)	843	Snow v. Transylvania R. Co. (N. C.)	1039
Rome, Patton v. (Ga.)	742	Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co., Stewart v. (Ga.)	331
Roper v. North Carolina Min. Co. (N. C.)	1039	Southern Chemical Co. v. Lackey (N. C.)	272
Rose v. Davis (N. C.)	780	Southern Pine Co., Huxford v. (Ga.)	439
Rosenthal v. State (Ga.)	82	Southern R. Co. v. Howard (Ga.)	1038
Rosier, Booth v. (Ga.)	327	Southern R. Co. v. Patterson (Va.)	694
Ross v. Double Shoals Cotton Mills (N. C.)	121	Southern R. Co. v. Rumsey (Ga.)	812
Roundtree v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co. (S. C.)	231	Southern R. Co., Ammons v. (N. C.)	731
Roundtree v. Jones (Ga.)	325	Southern R. Co., Brown v. (N. C.)	188
Rowan County Com'rs, Lane v. (N. C.)	140	Southern R. Co., Dixon v. (N. C.)	673
Rowland v. Rowland (Va.)	366	Southern R. Co., Ellis v. (S. C.)	228
R. T. Wilson & Co. v. Levi Cotton Mills (N. C.)	250	Southern R. Co., Fewell v. (Va.)	689
Rumsey, Southern R. Co. v. (Ga.)	812	Southern R. Co., Green v. (S. C.)	45
Rushing, Medical College of Georgia v. (Ga.)	333	Southern R. Co., Hutchison v. (N. C.)	263
Rutherford County Com'rs v. Erwin (N. C.)	785	Southern R. Co., Kearns v. (N. C.)	131
St. Clair, Baltimore Bargain House v. (W. Va.)	660	Southern R. Co., Plemmons v. (N. C.)	953
Sams v. State (Ga.)	18	Southern R. Co., Sherrill v. (N. C.)	940
Sanders v. Carter (Ga.)	887	Southern R. Co., Stokes' Adm'r v. (Va.)	855
Sanders, Swan & Co. v. Allen (Ga.)	884	Southern R. Co., Wood's Adm'r v. (Va.)	371
Sands v. Stagg (Va.)	633	Southern Ry., Able v. (S. C.)	962
Santee River Cypress Lumber Co., Woodward v. (S. C.)	733	Southern Ry., Milhouse v. (S. C.)	41
Satchel, Ackiss' Ex'rs v. (Va.)	378	South Penn Oil Co., McNeely v. (W. Va.)	480
Satterfield v. Commonwealth (Va.)	979	Spears v. Fields (S. C.)	44
Saunders, Hoover v. (Va.)	657	Spencer's Adm'r, Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. (Va.)	310
Savage, Son & Co., Knowles v. (N. C.)	930	Spivey v. State (Ga.)	656
Scandrett v. State (Ga.)	160	Sprinkle v. Wellborn (N. C.)	666
Scott, Tidewater Quarry Co. v. (Va.)	835	Stafford, Hersham v. (W. Va.)	533
Scottish Union & National Ins. Co., Levy v. (W. Va.)	449	Stagg, Sands v. (Va.)	633
Screws v. Anderson (Ga.)	429	Stanaland v. Rabon (N. C.)	417
Scruggs, Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. (Va.)	834	Standard Oil Co. v. Commonwealth (Va.)	390
Seaboard Air Line R. Co., Biles v. (N. C.)	129	Standard Oil Co. v. Fredericksburg (Va.)	817
Seaboard Air Line R. Co., Friedman v. (Ga.)	763	Starr v. Atlanta (Ga.)	298
Seaboard Air Line R. Co., North Carolina Corp. Commission v. (N. C.)	941	State v. Blackley (N. C.)	1039
Seaboard Air Line R. Co., Shannon v. (N. C.)	1039	State v. Briggs (W. Va.)	213
Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. O'Quin (Ga.)	427	State v. Burns (S. C.)	960
Seaboard Air Line Ry., Best v. (S. C.)	223	State v. Chrislip (W. Va.)	476
Seaboard Air Line Ry., Johnson v. (S. C.)	644	State v. Clifford (W. Va.)	864
Seaboard Air Line Ry., Mauldin v. (S. C.)	677	State v. Clifford (W. Va.)	981
Seaboard Air Line Ry., Seegers Bros. v. (S. C.)	797	State v. Day (W. Va.)	1013
Seaton & Sons, Smokeless Fuel Co. v. (Va.)	829	State v. Dolan (W. Va.)	181
Seegers v. Gibbs (S. C.)	586	State v. Hagins (N. C.)	1039
Seegers Bros. v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. (S. C.)	797	State v. Holloman (N. C.)	408
Selden v. Brooke (Va.)	632	State v. Horner (N. C.)	136
Selden's Ex'r v. Kennedy (Va.)	635	State v. Johnston (N. C.)	273
S. G. Mozley & Co. v. Fontana (Ga.)	443	State v. Jones (N. C.)	240
Shank v. Washington Exch. Bank (Ga.)	621	State v. McIntyre (N. C.)	63
Shannon v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (N. C.)	1089	State v. Morton (N. C.)	1039
Shannon's Adm'r v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (Va.)	376	State v. Moyer (W. Va.)	30
Shears v. Traders' Bldg. Ass'n (W. Va.)	860	State v. Murray (S. C.)	189
Shemwell, Bernard v. (N. C.)	64	State v. Peyton (W. Va.)	393
Sheppard v. Newton (N. C.)	143	State v. Strayer (W. Va.)	862
Sherrill v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.)	940	State v. Thompson (N. C.)	1039
Siers v. Wiseman (W. Va.)	460	State v. Waldrop (S. C.)	793
Sikes v. Consolidated Light & Power Co. (N. C.)	1039	State v. Woodrow (W. Va.)	545
Simpson, Parks v. (Ga.)	616	State, Adkins v. (Ga.)	656
Singleton v. State (Ga.)	156	State, Banks v. (Ga.)	74
Small v. Small (Ga.)	768	State, Brown v. (Ga.)	745
Smith v. State (Ga.)	329	State, Bryan v. (Ga.)	298
Smith, Baird v. (Ga.)	655	State, Buffington v. (Ga.)	19
Smith, Cable Co. v. (N. C.)	1038	State, Campbell v. (Ga.)	914
Smith, Pooler v. (S. C.)	967	State, Cody v. (Ga.)	750
		State, Cox v. (Ga.)	150
		State, Crosson v. (Ga.)	880
		State, Duggan v. (Ga.)	748
		State, Dunham v. (Ga.)	580
		State, Earl v. (Ga.)	76
		State, Edwards v. (Ga.)	319
		State, Ellis v. (Ga.)	147
		State, Finch v. (Ga.)	890
		State, Fish v. (Ga.)	737
		State, Gaines v. (Ga.)	78
		State, Givins v. (Ga.)	890
		State, Green v. (Ga.)	431
		State, Greer v. (Ga.)	884
		State, Haley v. (Ga.)	159
		State, Hall v. (Ga.)	891

	Page		Page
State, Hampton v. (Ga.).....	19	Terry v. McClung (Va.).....	355
State, Hawks v. (Ga.).....	762	Theilig, Tyler v. (Ga.).....	606
State, Hill v. (Ga.).....	322	Thomas v. Gainesville & D. Electric R. Co. (Ga.).....	801
State, Hope v. (Ga.).....	747	Thomason v. Thomason (S. C.).....	870
State, Houston v. (Ga.).....	757	Thompson, King v. (W. Va.).....	487
State, Howell v. (Ga.).....	649	Thompson, State v. (N. C.).....	1039
State, Ingram v. (Ga.).....	759	Thrower v. Atlanta (Ga.).....	76
State, Jackson v. (Ga.).....	155	Tice, Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. (Ga.)..	916
State, James v. (Ga.).....	295	Tidewater Quarry Co. v. Scott (Va.).....	835
State, Johnson v. (Ga.).....	656	Tidewater R. Co., Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. (Va.).....	852
State, Johnson v. (Ga.).....	737	Tompkins, Barbour, Stedman & Herod v. (W. Va.).....	707
State, Johnson v. (Ga.).....	830	Town of Harper's Ferry v. V. Kaplon & Bro. (W. Va.).....	492
State, Joiner v. (Ga.).....	151	Town of Phoebe v. Manhattan Social Club (Va.).....	839
State, Jordan v. (Ga.).....	768	Town of Wadley v. Lancaster (Ga.).....	335
State, Kolman v. (Ga.).....	82	Townsend v. Norfolk Ry. & Light Co. (Va.)	970
State, Lewis v. (Ga.).....	81	Townsend v. Broach (Ga.).....	293
State, McCoy v. (Ga.).....	434	Townsend v. State (Ga.).....	293
State, McGowan v. (Ga.).....	738	Tracewell v. Wood County Court (W. Va.)	185
State, Massey v. (Ga.).....	78	Traders' Bldg. Ass'n., Shears v. (W. Va.)..	860
State, Millinder v. (Ga.).....	760	Transylvania R. Co., Snow v. (N. C.).....	1039
State, Milner v. (Ga.).....	302	Triadelphia, Wheeling & E. G. R. Co. v. (W. Va.).....	499
State, Moore v. (Ga.).....	81	Trice v. State (Ga.).....	890
State, Morgan v. (Ga.).....	748	Truitt v. State (Ga.).....	890
State, Nelson v. (Ga.).....	20	Turk v. Ritchie (Va.).....	839
State, New v. (Ga.).....	160	Turner v. State (Ga.).....	1
State, Nolly v. (Ga.).....	19	Turner's Adm'r, Crawford's Adm'r v. (W. Va.).....	716
State, Patterson v. (Ga.).....	77	Tussey v. Owen (N. C.).....	128
State, Patterson v. (Ga.).....	534	Tye v. Gaissert (Ga.).....	813
State, Perkins v. (Ga.).....	17	Tyler v. Theilig (Ga.).....	606
State, Peters v. (Ga.).....	147	Union Cotton Mills, Revolution Cotton Mills v. (S. C.).....	674
State, Pitts v. (Ga.).....	147	United Moderns v. Rathbun (Va.).....	552
State, Pollard v. (Ga.).....	149	United States Oil & Gas Well Supply Co. v. Gartlan (W. Va.).....	524
State, Porter v. (Ga.).....	283	Vale v. Suiter & Dunbar (W. Va.).....	313
State, Pressley v. (Ga.).....	750	Vinson v. State (Ga.).....	79
State, Ralph v. (Ga.).....	298	Vinson v. State (Ga.).....	761
State, Randall v. (Ga.).....	889	V. Kaplon & Bro., Town of Harper's Ferry (W. Va.).....	492
State, Rawlins v. (Ga.).....	1	Vradenburg's Ex'rs, French v. (Va.).....	695
State, Rawls v. (Ga.).....	72	W. A. Davis & Co., Burnett v. (Ga.).....	927
State, Ridgley v. (Ga.).....	761	Wade v. McDougle (W. Va.).....	1026
State, Rosenthal v. (Ga.).....	82	Wadley, Walker v. (Ga.).....	904
State, Sams v. (Ga.).....	18	Walden v. Walden (Ga.).....	323
State, Scandrett v. (Ga.).....	160	Waldrop, State v. (S. C.).....	793
State, Singleton v. (Ga.).....	156	Walker v. Miller (N. C.).....	125
State, Smith v. (Ga.).....	329	Walker v. State (Ga.).....	319
State, Spivey v. (Ga.).....	656	Walker v. State (Ga.).....	738
State, Townsend v. (Ga.).....	293	Walker v. Wadley (Ga.).....	904
State, Trice v. (Ga.).....	890	Wallace, Ex parte (S. C.).....	873
State, Truitt v. (Ga.).....	890	Wallace v. Elm Grove Coal Co. (W. Va.)..	485
State, Turner v. (Ga.).....	1	Ward, Logan's Heirs v. (W. Va.).....	398
State, Vinson v. (Ga.).....	79	Warner v. Martin (Ga.).....	446
State, Vinson v. (Ga.).....	761	Warner v. Maxwell (Ga.).....	809
State, Walker v. (Ga.).....	319	Washington v. State (Ga.).....	910
State, Walker v. (Ga.).....	738	Washington Exch. Bank, Shank v. (Ga.)	621
State, Washington v. (Ga.).....	910	Waters v. Waters (Ga.).....	425
State, Watson v. (Ga.).....	751	Waters, Hodges v. (Ga.).....	161
State, Williams v. (Ga.).....	19	Watkins, Nugent v. (Ga.).....	153
State, Williams v. (Ga.).....	156	Watson v. Augusta Brewing Co. (Ga.).....	152
State, Wilson v. (Ga.).....	81	Watson v. State (Ga.).....	751
State, Wilson v. (Ga.).....	82	Watson, Philip Carey Mfg. Co. v. (W. Va.)	515
State, Wright v. (Ga.).....	146	Weathersby v. Jordan (Ga.).....	83
Statesville, Clark v. (N. C.).....	52	Weaver Power Co., Brown v. (N. C.).....	954
Steele v. Georgia Iron & Coal Co. (Ga.)...	1038	Weekly, Augusta Ry. & Electric Co. v. (Ga.).....	444
Sterling Electric Co. v. Augusta Telephone & Electric Co. (Ga.).....	541	Wellborn, Sprinkle v. (N. C.).....	666
Stevens v. McCurdy (Ga.).....	762	W. E. Seaton & Sons, Smokeless Fuel Co. v. (Va.).....	829
Stewart, In re (N. C.).....	255	West v. Brakelow S. S. Co. (Ga.).....	888
Stewart v. Doak (W. Va.).....	95	West Buena Vista Land Co., Oney v. (Va.)	343
Stewart v. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. (Ga.).....	331
Stokes' Adm'r v. Southern R. Co. (Va.)..	855
Stoner v. Patten (Ga.).....	894
Strayer, State v. (W. Va.).....	862
Strickland, Raymond v. (Ga.).....	619
Sudderth, Fincannon v. (N. C.).....	579
Sugg, Lassiter v. (N. C.).....	1039
Suiter & Dunbar, Vale v. (W. Va.).....	313
Swift & Co. v. Newport News (Va.).....	821
Swiger v. Swiger (W. Va.).....	23
Swords v. Robertson (Ga.).....	544
Sylvania Water Supply Co., Overstreet v. two cases (Ga.).....	164

	Page		Page
Western Union Tel. Co., Giles v. (N. C.)..	1039	Wilson v. State (Ga.).....	82
Western Union Tel. Co., Hall v. (N. C.)..	50	Wilson v. Western Union Tel. Co. (Ga.)..	153
Western Union Tel. Co., Hamrick v. (N. C.).....	232	Wilson & Co. v. Levi Cotton Mills (N. C.)	250
Western Union Tel. Co., Hughes v. (S. C.)	107	Wimbish, Pearson v. (Ga.).....	751
Western Union Tel. Co., Propeller Tow-boat Co. of Savannah v. (Ga.).....	768	Winder v. Nock (Va.).....	561
Western Union Tel. Co., Wilson v. (Ga.)..	158	Wiseman, Siers v. (W. Va.).....	460
Westmoreland, Woodward v. (Ga.).....	810	Witte v. Cave (S. C.).....	736
Wheeler, Luther v. (S. C.).....	874	Wolverton v. Hoffman (Va.).....	176
Wheeling Traction Co., Dimmack v. (W. Va.).....	101	Wood v. Gordon (W. Va.).....	261
Wheeling & E. G. R. Co. v. Triadelphia (W. Va.).....	499	Wood, Allison's Ex'r v. (Va.).....	559
Whitaker v. Cover (N. C.).....	581	Wood County Court, Tracewell v. (W. Va.)	185
Whitman v. Corley (S. C.).....	49	Woodrow, State v. (W. Va.).....	545
Wilkinson, Allen v. (W. Va.).....	454	Wood's Adm'r v. Southern R. Co. (Va.)..	371
Willcox v. Kehoe (Ga.).....	896	Woodward v. Santee River Cypress Lum-ber Co. (S. C.).....	733
Williams v. State (Ga.).....	19	Woodward v. Westmoreland (Ga.).....	810
Williams v. State (Ga.).....	156	Woodward Hollinshed v. (Ga.).....	815
Williar, Norfolk Ry. & Light Co. v. (Va.)..	380	Wright v. Cotten (N. C.).....	141
Wilson v. Duplin Tel. Co. (N. C.).....	62	Wright v. State (Ga.).....	146
Wilson v. Langhorne (Va.).....	841	W. T. Weaver Power Co., Brown v. (N. C.)	954
Wilson v. State (Ga.).....	81	Yost, Riley v. (W. Va.).....	40
		Young v. Smith & Kelly Co. (Ga.).....	765
		Young, Augusta Naval Stores Co. v. (Ga.)	898

THE SOUTHEASTERN REPORTER.
VOLUME 52.

(124 Ga. 31)

RAWLINS et al. v. STATE.

TURNER v. SAME.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

1. JURY—OMISSIONS FROM JURY LIST.

The board of jury commissioners may, in the exercise of their discretion, omit from the jury list of the county all persons who are exempted by law from jury service, as well as those whose business or avocation is such that it is reasonably probable that an excuse from jury service would be granted by the judge.

2. CRIMINAL LAW—VENUE—CHARGE—DISCRETION OF JUDGE.

In the determination of whether the venue of a criminal case shall be changed for the reason that the condition of the public mind is such that the accused cannot obtain a fair trial by an impartial jury, the law imposes upon a trial judge the responsibility of making an examination and informing himself of the truth of the averments upon which the application is made, and the Supreme Court has no power to control his discretion in such a matter unless it has been plainly and manifestly abused. The record does not disclose any such abuse of discretion in the present case.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 15, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, § 8044.]

8. INDICTMENT—JOINDER OF PARTIES.

Principals and accessories before the fact may be charged in the same indictment and in one count.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 27, Cent. Dig. Indictment and Information, § 333.]

4. SAME—ACCESSORY BEFORE THE FACT.

An indictment which charges that one, being absent at the time when the crime was committed, did "procure, counsel, and command" the person alleged as principal in the crime to commit the same, contains a sufficient charge against one indicted as an accessory before the fact.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 27, Cent. Dig. Indictment and Information, § 228.]

5. HOMICIDE—INDICTMENT.

The indictment was not subject to any of the objections set forth in any of the demurrers.

6. CRIMINAL LAW—CONTINUANCE.

When a motion for a continuance is made upon the ground of the absence of witnesses, and the court postpones the case until the following day, and notifies counsel that officers will be furnished to bring into court the absent witnesses, and such officers are furnished, and all the witnesses desired are brought into court, and there is no further motion for a continuance, a ground of a motion for a new trial complaining of the refusal to continue on the day the case was first called is without merit.

52 S.E.—1

7. SAME—TRIAL—DISORDER IN COURT.

The failure of the court to interpose of its own motion, in case of disorder by the spectators at the trial, will not generally be a sufficient reason to reverse the judgment, when no ruling in reference to the disorder was invoked from the court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 14, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, § 1460.]

8. SAME—ARRAIGNMENT.

That the accused, who was jointly indicted with others, was jointly arraigned with the others, after he had elected to sever upon the trial, furnishes no reason for granting a new trial, after a separate trial has been accorded to him.

9. SAME—CONDUCT OF SHERIFF.

The action of the sheriff in making the statement to the judge, in the presence of the jury, that the mother of the accused had requested her satchel to be brought into court, and that the satchel contained a pistol, was reprehensible as to the manner in which the fact was communicated to the judge. As it appeared from a statement of counsel for the accused that the pistol was in the satchel solely for the reason that the mother of the accused and her two daughters had been traveling through the country, and that it was carried for protection only, and was not in the satchel nor brought into court for any improper purpose, and as evidence was introduced to the same effect, and the truth of the statement and the evidence was admitted by the Solicitor General, and the jury were instructed not to allow the incident to have any effect upon their minds in determining upon their verdict, a refusal to declare a mistrial on account of the conduct of the sheriff was properly overruled.

10. SAME—CONFESSION.

The fact that a confession is brought about by improper and unlawful methods from one alleged to be concerned in the commission of the crime is no reason for refusing to allow such person to testify as a witness on the trial of his associates in the criminal enterprise. The circumstances under which the confession was made, and any evidence tending to show that the witness is still laboring under fears, brought about by such circumstances, is admissible to discredit the witness, but the witness is nevertheless competent.

11. HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE—ILL FEELING.

In the trial of a murder case, evidence tending to show a state of bad feeling between the father of the accused and the father of the deceased is admissible for such weight as a jury might see fit to give it in determining whether the accused had a motive in becoming one of a party of assassins to slay the father of the deceased and other members of his family; and this is true, although the father escaped assassination and only two of his children were slain.

12. CRIMINAL LAW—ACTS AND DECLARATIONS OF CONSPIRATORS.

When, in the trial of a murder case, there is evidence tending to show that the accused on trial entered into a conspiracy to slay the deceased and others, the acts, conduct, and sayings of any of the conspirators, while the conspiracy was in progress and before the crime was committed, are admissible as evidence, as well as an act of a conspirator other than the accused, after the commission of the crime, when the act sought to be proved was contemplated by the terms of the conspiracy to be performed after the perpetration of the crime was completed.

13. SAME—ERRORS PENDING TRIAL—CORRECTION.

Errors in the admission of the evidence, made during the progress of the trial, may be corrected by the judge withdrawing the evidence from the consideration of the jury and instructing them not to consider it; and errors in his charge may be corrected by the judge calling attention to the erroneous part of the charge, and in lieu thereof giving to the jury the correct rule.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 14, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, §§ 1992, 1994.]

14. JURY—CHALLENGE TO ARRAY.

Challenge to the array is not the proper method of raising the question of the disqualification of individual jurors.

15. SAME—CHALLENGES BY STATE.

When two are tried jointly for a capital offense, and neither waives his peremptory challenges, the state is entitled to one-half of the whole number of challenges the law allows to both.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 31, Cent. Dig. Jury, § 613.]

16. CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS.

A portion of a charge that is substantially correct, wherein a complete proposition is stated, is not erroneous simply because it fails to embrace an instruction which would have been appropriate in connection with that proposition.

17. SAME—ARGUMENTS OF COUNSEL.

Where counsel in argument makes improper statements, counsel for the injured party may move either for an appropriate instruction to the jury or for a mistrial. Where counsel ask simply for such an instruction, which is given, and the case ordered to proceed, a motion for a mistrial then made upon the same ground should not generally be entertained.

18. SAME—CONTINUANCE.

Where a motion is made to continue a criminal case upon the ground that the accused is physically unable to go to trial, and upon such question the testimony introduced is conflicting, the discretion of the trial judge in overruling the motion will not be controlled.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 15, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, § 3045.]

19. SAME—ILLNESS OF COUNSEL—ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

A motion for continuance on account of the illness of counsel, like all other motions of the same nature, is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial judge. When counsel, whose illness is the ground of the motion, is himself in court presenting and urging the motion, the court is authorized, in the determination of the question whether the condition of counsel is such that the interests of justice demand a postponement of the case, to take into consideration the general appearance of counsel and the mental and physical vigor displayed in the presentation of the motion, and when such a motion is overruled this court may take into consideration what appears in the record as to the manner in which counsel conducted the case, in determining whether there has been such an abuse of discretion in refusing the continuance as to require a reversal of the judgment. In the present case it does not appear there was any abuse of discretion in refusing to continue the case.

20. SAME—TRIAL OF ACCESSORY.

In the trial of one charged as an accessory, it is incumbent upon the state to show the guilt of the person charged as a principal beyond a reasonable doubt; and, as a general rule, in order to establish this fact, any evidence may be introduced which would be admissible if the principal was on trial.

21. HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE.

In the trial of one who is charged as an accessory before the fact to a murder, when it appears that the deceased were killed during the night, as they emerged from the home of their father, by persons who had surrounded the house, evidence that the accused had made threats to slay the father, and had offered persons money to kill him, was admissible.

22. SUNDAY—RECEPTION OF VERDICT.

It is lawful to receive a verdict in a criminal case on Sunday.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 45, Cent. Dig. Sunday, § 82.]

23. HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE.

The evidence as to those who were charged as principals was sufficient to authorize the verdicts rendered against them.

24. SAME—ACCESSORIES.

The evidence as to the accused, charged as accessory before the fact, who was the father of three of the persons charged as principals, was sufficient to authorize the verdict.

25. SAME.

The evidence against the other accused, charged as an accessory before the fact, was not sufficient to authorize the verdict, and the court erred in not granting him a new trial. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Lowndes County; R. G. Mitchell, Judge.

Leonard Rawlins, Frank Turner, and others were convicted of murder. Leonard and Jesse Rawlins brought error, and Turner also brought error. Judgment on bill of exceptions of Turner reversed, and on other bills affirmed.

Milton, Jesse, Leonard, and J. G. Rawlins were arrested for the offense of murder, and were committed to jail. A special term of the court was called for the disposition of their cases. When the grand jury was organized, and before any indictment was preferred, each of the accused filed a written challenge to the array, upon the ground that the grand jury was not legally organized. The objection was that jury commissioners had arbitrarily excluded from the grand jury all lawyers, ministers, doctors, dentists, railroad engineers, and firemen, there being 10 or other large number of each class in the county who were citizens and residents and possessed the qualifications required by law for grand jurors, and there being upon neither the grand jury list nor in the grand jury box any member of any of such classes. It was contended that the arbitrary exclusion of all of these classes without reference to their qualifications was a violation of the statutes and Constitution of this state, and especially that provision of the Constitution which grants to every one due process of law, and that it was also in violation of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as well as of other provisions of that instrument, and had the effect to deny to the accused due process of law, as well as equal protection of the law, and abridged their privileges and immunities as citizens of the United States. On demurrer this challenge was stricken, and the grand jury ordered to retire and enter upon a consideration of the cases. The accused excepted.

The grand jury returned an indictment of which the following is a copy:

"Georgia, Lowndes County. In the Superior Court of Said County. The grand jurors selected, chosen, and sworn for the county of Lowndes, to wit, in the name and behalf of the citizens of Georgia, charge and accuse Milton Rawlins, Leonard Rawlins, Jesse Rawlins, and Alf Moore, of the state and county aforesaid, with the offense of murder, and J. G. Rawlins and Frank Turner, of the county and state aforesaid, with the offense of accessory before the fact to said murder; and for the said Milton Rawlins, Leonard Rawlins, Jesse Rawlins, and Alf Moore, being persons of sound memory and discretion, on the 13th day of June, in the year of our Lord, 1905, in the county aforesaid, with force and arms, one Willie Carter and one Carrie Carter, in the peace of God and said state, then and there being, then and there unlawfully, feloniously, willfully, and of their malice aforethought did kill and murder by shooting the said Willie Carter and the said Carrie Carter with certain guns, which the said Milton Rawlins, Leonard Rawlins, Jesse Rawlins, and Alf Moore then and there had, and giving to the said Willie Carter and Carrie Carter then and there mortal wounds, of which mortal wounds the said Willie Carter and the said Carrie Carter died, and for that the said J. G. Rawlins and Frank Turner, being absent at the time of the commission of the crime aforesaid, in manner and form aforesaid, by the said Milton Rawlins, Leonard Rawlins, Jesse Rawlins, and Alf Moore, did yet then and there unlawfully, feloniously, willfully, and of their malice aforethought procure, counsel, and command the said Milton Rawlins, Leonard Rawlins, Jesse Rawlins, and Alf Moore to commit the crime of murder aforesaid. And the jurors aforesaid upon their oaths aforesaid, do say that the said Milton Rawlins, Leonard Rawlins, Jesse Rawlins, and Alf Moore then the said Willie Carter and Carrie Carter in manner and form aforesaid unlawfully, feloniously, willfully, and of their malice aforethought did kill and murder, and that the said J. G. Rawlins and Frank Turner, being absent at the time of the commission of said crime of murder, did then and there unlawfully, feloniously, willfully, and of their malice aforethought procure, counsel, and command the said Milton Rawlins, Leonard Rawlins, Jesse Rawlins and Alf Moore to commit the said crime in manner and form aforesaid. Contrary to the laws of said state, the good order, peace, and dignity thereof.

"W. E. Thomas, Solicitor General.

"W. L. Carter, Prosecutor.

"July Special Term, 1905."

Each of the Rawlinses filed a written motion for a change of venue, alleging that the special term of the court had been called solely for the purpose of trying the accused, and that, as this was done in response to a call from the people of the county, that fact alone was sufficient evidence that the condition of the public mind in the county was such that they could not get a fair and impartial trial before a jury in that county; that on account of the wide publicity of the case, the false rumors that had gone out, the high feeling and excitement, on account of which the special term had been called within little more than 30 days from the commission of the crime, which was of an atrocious nature, it would be impossible to obtain a legal trial under such circumstances; that a large portion of the jurors had formed and expressed opinions as to the guilt of the accused, either from evidence that had been heard, or statements that had been made in regard to the crime; and that evil-disposed persons had circulated rumors exceedingly damaging to the accused, and that the condition of the public mind was such that it was impossible for the jury to hear the evidence and arrive at a verdict in the manner which the constitution and the law required. Upon this motion the court heard evidence, and after a consideration of the evidence overruled the motions for a change of venue, and each of the defendants excepted.

Each of the Rawlinses filed a general demurrer to the indictment, and also a special demurrer upon the following grounds: The indictment does not charge any overt act that J. G. Rawlins did to make him an accessory before the fact. The indictment does not charge with sufficient particularity the facts alleged to have been committed, so as to put the accused on notice of the particular crime that each was charged with. The indictment does not charge with sufficient particularity the instrument with which the killing was done, simply charging that it was done with certain guns. The indictment does not allege which one of the accused killed Willie Carter, and which one killed Carrie Carter. The indictment charges the principals and accessories before the fact in the same count and in the same indictment. J. G. Rawlins also demurred upon the ground that the indictment did not charge the trial and conviction of the principals in the first degree, or set up the record of the trial, or that the parties were unknown. Turner also filed a general demurrer to the indictment, as well as a special demurrer upon the ground that it did not charge any overt act on his part to make him an accessory before the fact. All of the demurrers were overruled, and each of the accused excepted.

Each of the Rawlinses then filed a challenge to the array of the jury impaneled to try them, upon the same grounds upon which they had challenged the grand jury. These challenges were overruled, and each excepted.

Leonard and Jesse Rawlins were tried jointly. The others were tried separately. Milton, Jesse, and J. G. Rawlins, and Alf Moore, were found guilty and sentenced to be hanged. Leonard Rawlins and Turner were found guilty and sentenced to the penitentiary for life. Each of the Rawlinses and Turner filed motions for a new trial, which being overruled, each excepted.

John R. Cooper, O. M. Smith, A. J. Little, and S. M. Varnedoe, for plaintiffs in error. W. E. Thomas, Sol. Gen., and Jno. C. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the State.

COBB, P. J. 1. The Constitution declares that "the General Assembly shall provide by law for the selection of the most experienced, intelligent and upright men to serve as grand jurors, and intelligent and upright men to serve as traverse jurors. Nevertheless the grand jurors shall be competent to serve as traverse jurors." Civ. Code, 1895, § 5877; Pen. Code, 1895, § 851. The General Assembly has provided that the selection of jurors shall be made by a board of jury commissioners composed of six discreet persons appointed by the judge of the superior court in each county. Pen. Code, 1895, § 813. Upon these commissioners devolves the duty of revising the jury list at the time required by law. In this revision they are limited to the names appearing upon the books of the tax receiver of the county, and they are authorized and required to select from the names there appearing "upright and intelligent men to serve as jurors." From the number so selected they are required to select not exceeding two-fifths "of the most experienced, intelligent and upright men to serve as grand jurors." "The entire number first selected, including those after selected as grand jurors, shall constitute the body of traverse jurors for the county." Pen. Code 1895, § 818. The Constitution does not require that all upright and intelligent men shall be selected as jurors. If it were otherwise, the law which limits the jury commissioners to names appearing upon the tax digest, as well as the law which declares that certain county officers shall not be selected as jurors, would be invalid. The Constitution merely fixes the qualifications of a juror, and leaves to the General Assembly the question as to whether all of those persons or a lesser number shall be selected. The law passed by the General Assembly for the purpose of carrying into effect the constitutional provision does not require that all persons possessing the constitutional qualifications shall be selected. It reposes in the jury commissioners, not only the authority to determine what men have these qualifications, but how many of such men shall be selected for jury duty in the county. The jury commissioners may select all belonging to this class, or they may select a lesser number. The jury list of the county is not to be made up of any given number, but this is a matter left to the discretion of the jury commissioners. The number of persons selected for jury service is to be determined by the jury commissioners in the exercise of a wise discretion, taking into consideration the whole number of persons liable to jury service, the volume of business to be transacted in the various courts which requires the presence of jurors, as well as the facilitation of business in such courts. They should keep in mind on the one hand the right of those entitled to a jury trial, whether in civil or criminal cases, and on the other hand the right of those who are subject to jury duty, making the list embrace such a number as will enable the courts to be carried on according to the spirit of the Constitution and the law, and at the same time not making the number so small that jury service would become burdensome upon those selected for that duty. One placed upon the jury list by the commissioners is, so far as jury service is concerned, declared to be intelligent and upright. But the fact that a person's name is not upon the jury list of the county is no evidence that he is not intelligent and upright, nor that the commissioners did not consider him as such. The Constitution fixes the class subject to this duty. The jury commissioners, under the authority of the General Assembly, select those members of that class who shall be called upon to perform the duty. The jury commissioners should not omit from the jury list persons possessing the qualifications required by law, unless in their opinion the omission of such persons as a class would tend to facilitate the business of the courts. Persons possessing the qualifications required by law should not be excluded because they form a class of persons holding to a particular religious belief, or belonging to a particular political party or society, or because they entertain views, on any matter not affecting the good order of the community or the preservation of the public morals, different from the larger number of the community in which they live. But if there is a class of persons, some of whom possess the qualifications required and others do not, whose business or avocation is such that they are all entitled under the law to claim an exemption from jury service, or who would probably be excused from jury service on application to the judge, the omission of the entire class from the jury list would not be an abuse of discretion on the part of the commissioners; such exclusion being calculated to facilitate the business of the court and avoid the delay incident to the summoning of jurors to take the place of jurors excused from service.

All of the classes that were alleged to have been excluded from the jury box in the present case belonged to either one or the other of the classes above referred to. They were either exempt, or their business was of such a character that it was reasonably certain that the judge would excuse them from service. There was no averment in the challenge that the exclusion was due to fraud, or any improper motive. There was no suggestion that either the grand or traverse jurors drawn for service did not possess the qualifications required by law. There was no objection to any of the jurors that were on either list. The sole objection was that the list was deficient in number. In Daniel O'Connell's Case the jury was selected under an act requiring that the names of all persons possessing qualifications required by law should be selected, and still a challenge to the array, that the jurors had been illegally and fraudulently selected for the purpose of prejudicing the parties upon trial, was stricken on demurrer, and this ruling was affirmed by a full court on the motion for a new trial, and finally affirmed by the House of Lords, though Lord Dennen and Lord Campbell were of the contrary opinion. Thompson & Merriam on Juries, § 140. While this ruling does not commend itself, at the same time we think it clear that where the law reposes in a body of public officers the selection of persons of given qualifications for service as jurors, and there is no charge of fraud or purpose to prejudice the rights of the parties on trial, and no objection to any of the jurors thus selected, a challenge to the array should not be sustained merely for the reason that there were other jurors possessing the qualifications required who might have been added to the list if the commissioners had seen proper to include them. In People v. Jewett, 3 Wend. 814, the accused and others were indicted for the offense of conspiracy to abduct William Morgan. It was claimed that the conspirators acted with the Masons, whose secrets Morgan disclosed. A challenge to the array of the jurors was made upon the ground that the supervisors whose duty it was to select the jurors had excluded from the list all persons who were Masons, and had included therein many persons who were anti-Masonic in their feelings. The qualifications fixed by law for jurors were that they should be possessed of certain property qualifications, should be men of integrity, fair character, sound judgment, and well informed. There was no complaint that any of the men selected failed of these qualifications. While Chief Justice Savage expressed in his opinion his condemnation of the exclusion of any set of men on account of their belonging to an association or fraternity, it was held that the challenge to the array was properly overruled. The Chief Justice in his opinion said: "Whilst those who are selected are unexceptionable, the fact that others equally unexceptionable are excluded is no cause of challenge of the array. A challenge can be supported only by showing that the persons selected are not qualified according to the requirements of the statute." There was nothing in the action of the jury commissioners complained of which was in violation of any provision of the Constitution or any statute of this state, nor is there anything in the statute providing for the creation of the board of jury commissioners and prescribing its duty which could be held a denial of due process of law or of the equal protection of the laws, or an abridgment of the privileges and immunities of a citizen, within the meaning of the different provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

2. The Constitution requires that one charged with crime shall be tried in the county where the offense was committed, unless the judge is satisfied that an impartial jury cannot be obtained in that county. Pen. Code 1895, § 29. When the judge is so satisfied, he is authorized to change the venue of the trial. In determining this question he is authorized to hear evidence in order to throw light on the condition of the public mind, as well as to take into consideration what may fall under his observation as the presiding judge of the court. The matter is of necessity left by the law largely to his discretion. No one could be better endowed with this power than a fearless and conscientious judge, who is present in the county, and can observe the manner and conduct of the people, and can hear the testimony of those witnesses who may be called by the accused and those called by the state, as well as the testimony of any witness he may see fit of his own motion to bring before him. While under the law this court has the right to review a judgment overruling a motion to change the venue, such a judgment will never be overruled unless it is manifest from the record that the discretion vested in the judge has been abused, and as a result the accused has been forced to trial in a county where it was impossible for him to obtain a fair trial before an impartial jury. The judge in the present case heard evidence, and no doubt took into consideration as well those things which fell under his observation not detailed in the evidence, and which of necessity could not be detailed, and, after consideration of the motion, overruled the same. See White v. State, 100 Ga. 659, 28 S. E. 423 (1).

3. The general rule is that an accessory before the fact cannot be tried until after the conviction of the principal, but this does not prevent the indictment of the principal and the accessory before the fact at the same term of the grand jury and in the same bill. Stone v. State, 118 Ga. 707, 45 S. E. 630, 98 Am. St. Rep. 145. It is also permissible to embrace the accusation against the accessory before the fact in the same count in which the principal is charged. Bishop v. State, 118 Ga. 799, 45 S. E. 614. When so indicted, of course, it is not necessary to allege the trial and conviction of the principal, or that the principal is unknown or for other reason cannot be tried.

4. The indictment charges that the four alleged principals committed the offense of murder upon named persons, and then proceeds to charge that J. G. Rawlins and Frank Turner, being absent at the time of the commission of the crime, did "unlawfully, feloniously, willfully, of their malice aforethought, procure, counsel, and command" the alleged principals to commit the crime. Complaint is made that there is nothing in this language which charges the alleged accessories before the fact with any act which would make them accessories. That which makes one an accessory before the fact is procuring, counseling, and commanding another to commit a crime, and this is the only act necessary to constitute the offense, and when it is charged in the language of the statute that the accused did procure, counsel, and command the alleged principal to commit the crime, he is charged in terms with that which constitutes the offense, and it is hard to conceive how the charge could be made more clear and more specific.

5. The principals were jointly charged with killing each of the persons named in the indictment, and each was therefore charged with the murder of both. The allegations were sufficiently specific to put them upon notice of exactly what they were charged with, and it was unnecessary to allege which one killed Willie Carter and which one killed Carrie Carter, when it was distinctly alleged that all were engaged in the killing of both. The objection in the demurrer that each was not put upon notice of what was charged against him is therefore without merit. The indictment also charged that the killing was done with certain guns, and the objection that there was no allegation as to what were the instruments used in the perpetration of the offense was also without merit.

6. The special grounds in the motion for a new trial filed by Milton Rawlins will now be disposed of. Complaint is made that the court overruled the motion for a continuance based upon the absence of witnesses whose testimony was claimed to be material. In a note to this ground the judge says the motion was overruled, and counsel was notified that the case would be called for trial on the following morning, and in the meantime any number of officers required would be furnished to send for and bring into court the witnesses who were absent, and such officers were furnished, and all the witnesses were brought into court with the exception of those whom the counsel for the accused, in a subsequent recess of the court, informed the court he would not require, and when the case was called on the following morning there was no further motion for a postponement. It is apparent from this statement that this assignment of error is without merit.

7. In one ground of the motion for a new trial it is alleged that the court allowed and permitted the audience to cheer the Solicitor General while he was making his concluding argument, and failed to rebuke those engaged in this disorder. No motion for a mistrial was made, nor was any ruling invoked by counsel for the accused because of this disorder, and the assignment of error is simply upon the silence of the judge in regard to the same. In a note to this ground the judge says that the applause was brought about by a colloquy between the Solicitor General and counsel for the accused, in which nothing was said about the accused, or any circumstance of the case, and that immediately upon the happening of the disorder he suppressed it and corrected it. This assignment of error might probably be disposed of for the reason that the statements in the ground are not certified, as the facts stated in the certificate are antagonistic to those stated in the ground. But, without basing the matter solely upon this point of practice, it is sufficient to say that neither in the ground nor in the certificate of the judge are the facts sufficiently stated for this court to determine whether the incident in its details was of such a character as to be so prejudicial to the accused as to require a reversal of the judgment, even if the question was properly before us upon an assignment of error based upon some ruling of the judge at the time the disorder occurred. Of course, a judge should suppress disorder and rebuke and punish those engaged in it, without waiting for action on the part of the counsel or parties interested in the case; but, as a general rule, error cannot be assigned upon the failure of the court to interpose under such circumstances of its own motion. Even in a criminal case a judgment will not ordinarily be reversed for misconduct of counsel, parties, or spectators, unless a ruling upon such conduct is invoked from the judge at the time it occurred. O'Dell v. State, 120 Ga. 152, 47 S. E. 577 (5). The facts of the Woolfolk Case were extraordinary and exceptional, and the reversal of the judgment in that case was not based entirely upon the misconduct of the spectator which had passed without a proper rebuke from the judge. See Woolfolk v. State, 81 Ga. 552, 8 S. E. 724 (4).

8. The four persons charged as principals in the indictment, and one of them charged as an accessory before the fact, were all arraigned at the same time, over the objection of the counsel for the accused in the present case. Error is assigned upon this action of the court. It is claimed that, as the accused had elected to be tried separately, they should be arraigned separately. There is no merit in this exception. All of the persons charged in the indictment may be arraigned at one time, and so long as their right to a separate trial, if they desire it, is not interfered with by the court, a joint arraignment cannot be said to be prejudicial to any one of them. As the judge recognized the right of the accused to a separate trial, and accorded them that trial, we cannot see that any harm resulted from the joint arraignment. 2 Enc. P. & P. 678.

9. While the case was in progress the sheriff came into court, and in the presence of the jury said to the judge: "Mrs. Rawlins sent me for her grip downstairs. I have it here, and it has a pistol in it." Counsel for the accused immediately objected to this statement, unless it was explained, stating that Mrs. Rawlins had been traveling through the country with her daughters, and that she carried the pistol for their protection. The judge then remarked that he would instruct the sheriff to take the pistol out of the grip before delivering it to Mrs. Rawlins. The court then took a recess, and upon reassembling counsel for the accused made a motion for a mistrial, claiming that the sheriff had come into court in a very excited manner and had made the statement in the presence of every one in the courtroom, including the jury. The court then proceeded to hear evidence from Mrs. Rawlins and the sheriff as to the circumstances under which the pistol was placed in the grip, and also the purpose of Mrs. Rawlins in having it there, and it appeared that it was there solely for the purpose stated by counsel; that is, for the protection of Mrs. Rawlins and her daughters while traveling through the country. It also appeared that the grip was sent for at the request of Mrs. Rawlins, to take therefrom a letter which counsel desired. The Solicitor General admitted in the presence of the jury that the entire statement and contention of counsel as to the presence of the pistol was as stated by him, and that it was not placed in the satchel or brought into court for any improper purpose, and moved the court to instruct the jury that the incident should not in any way prejudice the case of the accused. The court, after hearing the evidence, as well as the statement of the Solicitor General and counsel for the accused, overruled the motion for a mistrial, and instructed the jury that the incident should have no weight with them in making up their verdict. Without reference to the manner in which the sheriff obtained the information that the pistol was in the satchel, whether by an unauthorized search or not, when it came to his knowledge that it was there and the satchel was brought into court, it was his duty to inform the judge of this fact. But this should have been communicated to the judge privately, and not in open court in the presence of the jury, and the conduct of the sheriff in making this communication in this public manner was reprehensible. But after the entire matter had been investigated, and the jury fully informed as to the circumstances as seems to have been the case from the record, and an instruction by the judge that the incident should have no weight whatever with them, it was not error to overrule the motion for a mistrial.

10. One of the witnesses for the state was an alleged accomplice. It appeared that he had made a confession to the officers who arrested him as to his participation in the crime, and that he was then called as a witness for the state and testified as such. Objection was made to the admissibility of his testimony, upon the ground that he had made a confession to the officers which was improperly obtained, being the result of his being put in fear at the time he made it. It was claimed that the confession was not voluntary, and was made under such circumstances that if the witness had been on trial it would not have been admitted as evidence. The contention is that, as this confession would not be admissible against him if he was placed on trial, he is not competent to testify against his associates to the facts disclosed in the confession, and which he reiterated upon the witness stand. Evidence that the officers first obtained information as to his participation in the crime by placing him under the influence of fear, and that at the time of the trial he still labored under this fear, would be admissible to go to the jury along with his testimony, in order that they might determine upon the weight to be given it; but neither the improper methods used in obtaining the confession nor the apprehension under which the witness labored during the trial would render him an incompetent witness. The court permitted the accomplice to testify, not only as to what had been previously said by him in his confession to the officers, but also as to all the circumstances under which the confession had been made. His testimony as to the confession and all the circumstances went to the jury. They were thus enabled to determine whether his evidence was of such a character as to be entitled to any weight at all. There was no error in admitting the testimony of this witness, nor in any of the various rulings complained of in reference to its admission.

11. Evidence was admitted tending to show that there was a state of bad feeling between the Carter family and the Rawlins family, and especially between the heads of the two families. This evidence was objected to on the ground that the evidence of bad feeling should be limited to any bad feeling that might exist between Milton Rawlins and the children that were killed. There was no merit in this objection. The state of feeling existing between the father of the accused and the father of the deceased was pertinent, and especially was it pertinent to show a state of bad feeling generally between the two families. The weight, of course, to be given to this testimony, was to be determined by the jury in ascertaining whether there was a motive for the accused on trial to commit the crime with which he was charged.

12. Evidence was admitted showing that J. G. Rawlins had had a conference with the witness Moore before the crime was committed, in which he gave him certain instructions in reference to the commission of the crime, and there was also evidence that on the morning before the killing J. G. Rawlins went to the house of a neighbor and obtained a gun which belonged to him, but which had been in possession of his neighbor for about a year, and also that on the morning after the killing J. G. Rawlins obtained a loan of $110 from a bank in Valdosta. The objection to this testimony was that anything J. G. Rawlins did or said in the absence of Milton Rawlins was inadmissible against the latter. It appeared from the testimony of Moore, the accomplice, that he and the three sons of J. G. Rawlins were to slay the entire Carter family, and that Moore was to receive $100 for his participation in the crime, and that this $100 was to be paid him the morning after the crime was committed. There was evidence tending to establish that the persons indicted had conspired to slay the entire Carter family, and that J. G. Rawlins was the instigator and originator of the scheme. Whether this conspiracy was in fact established was a question for the jury, but there was enough evidence tending prima facie to establish it to authorize the admission of the acts of the alleged conspirators; the jury to give the evidence such weight as they saw fit in the event the conspiracy was established. There was no error in admitting this testimony. Carter v. State, 106 Ga. 372, 32 S. E. 345, 71 Ann. St. Rep. 262 (5), and case cited.

13. The court, in charging upon the defense of an alibi, used language which was calculated to create the impression that the defense of an alibi must be established to the satisfaction of the jury beyond a reasonable doubt; but before the jury retired the court called their attention to this portion of the charge, and corrected any error thus made. The court also admitted in evidence an indictment against J. G. Rawlins, which charged him with assault with intent to murder upon Carter, the prosecutor, and a peace bond which had been given by Rawlins at the instance of Carter. The Solicitor General was permitted to withdraw this evidence from the consideration of the jury, and the jury was instructed by the judge that the evidence was withdrawn from their consideration, and they were not to consider it at all. While we realize that an impression once made upon the minds of a jury, either by the charge of the court or by the admission of evidence, cannot always be entirely removed, still when an error has been committed, and the judge does all in his power to correct the effect of the error, the law generally prevents the party against whom the error was committed from complaining of it. In regard to the error in the charge, as well as the error, if it was such, in admitting the evidence, the correction was as complete in each instance as it was possible, and we cannot say that there was anything which appears in the record to show that the prejudicial effect of the error upon the minds of the jury was not removed. There may be an error of such a character that nothing done by the judge can correct the harmful effect of it; but this occurs in rare instances, and it is almost universally held that an error in instruction is sufficiently corrected by attention being called to the improper instruction and a proper instruction being given, and that an error in the admission of evidence is sufficiently corrected by its being withdrawn from the consideration of the jury, with a statement to them that they are not to consider it. Any other general rule than this would result in a verdict being vitiated in every case where the evidence was voluminous, the charge lengthy, and the trial protracted.

There was no error in failing to charge upon the law of confessions and the law of duress, as there was no evidence authorizing instructions upon these subjects. There were a number of other assignments of error upon the charge; but, when these portions are read in connection with the entire charge, it is apparent that there was nothing in any of them which would prejudice the accused. There was sufficient foundation for the admission of the dying declarations. If any fuller instruction on the subject of dying declarations than those given were desired, counsel for the accused should have presented it in an appropriate written request. The counsel in his argument to the jury having admitted that a murder had been committed, there was no error committed by the judge in referring to that fact in his charge.

14. The motion for a new trial in the case of Jesse and Leonard Rawlins raises a number of questions which are similar in their nature to those raised by the motion filed by Milton Rawlins, and so far as these questions are concerned further discussion is unnecessary. We will now treat of such of the special grounds as relate to questions not already discussed. Objection was made to the panel of jurors put upon the accused, upon the ground that there were included in such panel jurors who had been called and rejected on the trial of Milton Rawlins. These objections were overruled, and this ruling is assigned as error, for the reason that such jurors had formed or expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused. This objection was in the nature of a challenge to the array. It is well settled that it is not a proper ground for a challenge to the array that the panel includes individual jurors who would be disqualified to try the case. Such jurors can be eliminated from the panel by a challenge to the poll. As was said in Humphries v. State, 100 Ga. 261, 28 S. E. 25: "If the panel contained any jurors who were subject to challenge, the accused would have an opportunity, when they were put upon their voir dire and qualified, to show the fact of such disqualification by putting the individual juror upon the court as a trior. It is possible that a challenge to the array would be overruled, where the entire panel was composed of persons who would be subject to challenge to the polls; and, on the other hand, a panel made up of jurors not subject to any challenge to the polls might be set aside on a challenge to the array. A challenge to the array goes to the form and manner of making up the panel, without regard to the objections to the individual jurors who compose it; while the challenge to the poll is directed solely to an objection which is inherent in the individual juror." See, also, Thompson v. State, 109 Ga. 272, 34 S. E. 579; Teal v. State, 119 Ga. 102, 45 S. E. 964 (2); Taylor v. State, 121 Ga. 343, 49 S. E. 303.

15. The accused being tried jointly, each demanded the right to challenge peremptorily 20 jurors. This right was accorded to them. Their counsel then objected to the Solicitor General being allowed 20 peremptory challenges. In Cruce v. State, 59 Ga. 83, it was held that where two are tried jointly for a felony each is entitled to 20 peremptory challenges. In Butler v. State, 92 Ga. 601, 19 S. E. 51, it was held that where two are tried jointly for a capital offense, and neither waives his peremptory challenges, the state is allowed one-half the whole number of challenges which the law allows to both.

16. Exception was taken to the following charge: "The testimony of an accomplice in a case is not sufficient of itself to convict a party charged with the commission of a crime, under the law. That testimony, in order to authorize you to convict, must be corroborated, and the extent of the corroboration of the testimony is a question entirely for the jury. However strong it may be, or however slight it may be, is a question for you to determine, and you will give it such credit as you believe under the law it is entitled to." The assignment of error upon this charge is that the judge instructed the jury that slight evidence might corroborate the testimony of an accomplice, and there was a failure to instruct the jury that corroborating evidence must connect the accused with the commission of the crime. The jury are not authorized to convict upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. What shall be the extent of this corroboration is a question to be determined by the jury. It may be strong, or it may be slight; but in each case it must be of such character as to satisfy the minds of the jury as to the connection of the accused with the criminal enterprise. As was held in Chap- man v. State, 109 Ga. 164, 34 S. E. 369, the judge should not charge the jury as matter of law that slight evidence is sufficient to corroborate the testimony of an accomplice; but as matter of fact slight evidence is sufficient, if it is satisfactory to the minds of the jury. The objection to the charge in the Chapman Case was that it was calculated to make an impression in the minds of the jury that any corroboration, however slight, would compel them to treat the testimony of the accomplice as corroborated. In the present case the judge distinctly charged the jury more than once that the testimony of an accomplice, uncorroborated, was not sufficient to convict. He also charged fully upon the law of reasonable doubt, and the extract from the charge above quoted, when taken in connection with the entire charge, was not calculated to mislead the jury in regard to the amount of corroboration required. He tells them in terms it is a question for them to determine, and they are to consider the corroboration, whether it be strong or slight; and the effect of the charge is simply to state that it is for the jury to determine whether the corroboration was of such a character as to satisfy their minds. The charge did not in distinct terms state to the jury that the corroboration must connect the accused with the criminal enterprise. The extract from the charge complained of is upon the extent of the corroboration so far as its weight is concerned; and upon such a charge an assignment of error cannot be properly based which merely complains of the failure to charge upon another distinct proposition relating to the subject of corroboration. The extract from the charge being substantially correct in regard to matters therein dealt with, the accused cannot complain that other and distinct propositions relating to the same subject were not embraced.

17. Complaint is made that the court refused to grant a mistrial on account of certain remarks made by one of the counsel for the state. In his opening argument counsel used the following language: "Has the time come in the good old county of Lowndes when a man cannot lie down in his home at night and be protected from midnight assassins? It is time for you to put a stop to it, and put such defendants as these out of the way. We do not need them here." The ground of the motion recites that counsel for the accused immediately asked the court to declare a mistrial, and that counsel who had made the remarks then said: "I withdraw my remarks. I do not want to do anything to hurt the defendants before the jury. I apologize for what I have said to the court and to the jury, and I ask his honor to withdraw it from the jury." The court then said: "Yes, gentlemen; these remarks were improper from the associate counsel, and I withdraw what he said from your consideration altogether, and I instruct you that counsel's remarks have no weight with you in your deliberations. I do not think that the remarks were cause for a mistrial, so I refuse to withdraw the case from the jury, and I overrule the motion of defendant's counsel to declare a mistrial." In a note to this ground the judge states that counsel for the accused first moved the court to instruct the jury not to consider the remarks, which was done, in the language set forth in the ground, and after the court had complied with that request and ordered the case to proceed, counsel for the accused then asked that a mistrial be declared, and this motion was overruled. Without determining whether, under all the circumstances, the remarks of counsel for the state were sufficient to require a mistrial, the refusal to declare a mistrial was not error. Improper remarks of counsel are subject to correction either by proper instruction to the jury or a mistrial, according to the nature of the remarks and the circumstances under which they were made. Counsel for the party claimed to have been prejudiced by the remarks is authorized to determine what his remedy shall be, whether he shall ask for appropriate instruction, or whether he shall ask for a mistrial. When he has asked for one method, and that method has been followed by the court at his instance, he cannot ask subsequently that another method be adopted. See in this connection Patton v. State, 117 Ga. 231, 43 S. E. 533 (10).

The foregoing disposes of such of the special grounds in the motion for a new trial in the case of Leonard and Jesse Rawlins as require an elaborate discussion. The instruction on the subject of confessions was appropriate in the connection in which it was used; it being claimed that the alleged accomplice had been compelled to confess under the influence of fear, and that when he testified he was still under the influence of such fear. The other instructions which were complained of, when taken in connection with the entire charge, were not calculated to mislead the jury in regard to any of the vital issues in the case. The instructions as to the form of the verdict were sufficient to show the jury that they were authorized to acquit one or both, or convict one or both, as the evidence authorized, and the refusal to charge the written request on that subject is no cause for a new trial.

18. The motion for a new trial filed by J. G. Rawlins presents some questions similar to those involved in the other cases, and nothing further need be said concerning them. Those grounds raising other questions will now be considered. After the trials of the other defendants, the case of J. G. Rawlins was called, and a motion for a continuance was made upon the ground that the physical condition of the accused was such that he could not go safely to trial. The accused presented his own affidavit to this effect. The court heard testimony of two physicians, one of whom was at the time attending the accused. Both of them swore that, while he was not perfectly well, he was as well as he had been for a year or more previous to the trial, and was as well as he probably ever would be, and that in their opinion he was not in such a condition that a trial would be either dangerous or specially harmful to his health. In a note to this ground of the motion the judge states that he was satisfied from the evidence that the accused could go to trial without detriment to his health; that during the trial of his sons he had been in the courthouse, and had taken an active part in their defense so far as consulting with counsel was concerned, and had attended the entire trial of each, except possibly during the argument of the cases; and that during the trial of his own case he conferred with his counsel "with apparent ease and activity, and ample strength and ability to do the same, and that with ease and strength he went upon the stand and made his statement, which consumed about two hours and a half." The statement of the judge is, in effect, that neither before the trial nor during the trial was there anything apparent in the condition of the accused to indicate that his condition was such that he could not aid his counsel in the conduct of the trial or sustain the strain of the same. Motions for continuance upon the ground of the physical condition of the accused are addressed to the discretion of the judge. He may consider the testimony produced, as well as the condition of the accused as it appears to him. In such cases the good sense, sound judgment, and humanity of the trial judge must be relied upon as safeguards against injustice. McDaniel v. State, 103 Ga. 268, 30 S. E. 29. It does not appear that there was any abuse of discretion in refusing the continuance.

19. When the motion for a continuance just referred to had been overruled, Mr. Cooper, counsel for the accused, made a statement in his place which was in effect as follows: That all of the preceding week he had been hard at work trying the case of Milton Rawlins; that the weather was the hottest he had ever felt; that he worked from Monday morning until Friday night; that he was under great mental strain on account of the intense interest he felt in the case; that he had been notified by the judge to return for the trial of this case; that he had endeavored to obtain a leave of absence on the ground that he was worked down, but the judge refused to grant the same, stating that this case must be tried; that since Monday morning of the present week (the day on which this statement was made being Thursday) he had been engaged in the trial of Leonard and Jesse Rawlins, being leading counsel in that case, had examined the witnesses, and at the suggestion of his associate had argued the case before the jury, making an argument of two hours and a half in length; that he had contracted a cold, and his voice was weak, and his throat out of order, and he did not feel that he was physically able at this time to defend a man charged with murder; that he did not believe he was physically able to do justice to the case; that he needed a rest, and asked a continuance until his physical condition was such that he could properly represent his client. The judge remarked that he did not remember any formal application for a leave of absence, but that counsel might have stated to him privately that the case should go over, and, while he knew it had been a heavy tax upon counsel and all others in the case on account of the condition of the weather, still counsel had been apparently as active as any member of the bar, more so than most of them, and while he may have contracted some cold, as a great many others had, the court did not think, from the appearance of counsel and his connection with the case up to that time, that he would not be able and fully competent to do justice to his client, and under such circumstances, as there were associate counsel, and the term had been specially called to try these cases, he did not think sufficient cause had been shown for a continuance. In a note to this ground the judge says that counsel had already made two motions to continue the case at the same term of the court, which were overruled, and that as "an additional reason for overruling the motion the appearance, voice, energy, and activity and conduct of the able attorney, Hon. John R. Cooper, at the time he was making the motion, in the judgment of the court demanded that the motion be overruled." And the judge further states that, after overruling the motion, "the activity, energy, and ability exercised and manifested by counsel during the trial could scarcely have been surpassed"; counsel having fully and elaborately argued the case for the space of two hours and a half to the jury.

The rule of the court requires that all grounds of a motion for a continuance shall be urged and insisted upon at once, "and after a decision upon one or more grounds, no others afterwards urged shall be heard by the court." Civ. Code 1895, § 5675. The accused had united with his three sons in a motion to continue the case, before any of the trials, on the ground of absent witnesses. This motion was overruled for the reasons set forth in that paragraph of the opinion which deals with the assignment of error in that ground of the motion for a new trial filed by Milton Rawlins. At the time that this motion was made all grounds for continuance which then existed should have been taken advantage of. Of course, the rule of court would not prevent the judge from entertaining a motion for continuance thereafter upon a ground which had subsequently arisen. When counsel moved to continue the case on account of the physical condition of the accused, as it was claimed that this condition resulted from the trial of his sons, being a cause which arose after the first motion to continue was disposed of, there was no error in the court's entertaining this motion. But counsel should have embraced in this motion both grounds then claimed to exist; that is, the physical condition of the accused, and the physical condition of counsel. It appears from the record that the motion to continue on account of the physical condition of the counsel was made immediately after the motion to continue on account of the physical condition of the accused was overruled. If both grounds existed, as must have been the case, under the rule of court counsel could not make the motion upon one ground only, and, that having been overruled, then urge the other. In addition to this, there does not seem to have been any abuse of discretion in overruling the motion to continue on account of the condition of counsel, even if the court had authority to entertain it. The illness of counsel when there is but one, or of the leading counsel when there is more than one, is a sufficient ground for a continuance. Pen. Code 1895, § 964. "Illness" is defined to be an attack of sickness, ailment, malady, disease. Cent. Dict. The illness of counsel contemplated by the law is such a physical condition, resulting from sickness, malady, or disease, as would prevent counsel from properly attending to his duties as such. It does not mean any mere indisposition, but indisposition of such character as to disqualify a person from the discharge of those delicate and responsible duties which devolve upon counsel in the trial of a case. The determination of whether such an illness in fact exists as is contemplated by the law is reposed in the trial judge before whom the motion for a continuance is made. If the counsel who is ill is absent, evidence should be heard as to his condition, and where the condition of counsel is in question the court is authorized to determine this question, like all other questions of fact submitted to its decision. If counsel who makes the motion is himself present in court, making and urging the motion in his own proper person, the judge may determine the question by the condition of counsel as it appears to him. Especially would this be the case where counsel had been engaged for a number of days in the trial of other cases before the same judge, who was thus enabled to determine by a trial, in the nature of a trial by inspection, whether counsel's condition on the day the motion is made is essentially different from what it was on other days when he was actively engaged in the conduct of other cases, without complaint as to physical inability. The judge based his refusal to continue the case upon the ground that the energy, activity, and general appearance of counsel at the time that he made the motion was such as to impress him with the fact that while counsel might have been laboring under an indisposition from cold and work in the other cases, he was still mentally and physically competent to discharge the duties incumbent upon him in the coming trial. The judge states that this impression, made at the time that the motion was made, was emphasized and confirmed by the able manner in which counsel conducted the case through a tedious trial of three days. In addition to this, if the statement of counsel as to his condition is considered in its entirety, it is apparent that he was not ill at all within the sense of the statute. He had a slight cold, probably some huskiness in his voice; but he was suffering under no attack of sickness, disease, or malady, within the meaning of the word "illness" as it is ordinarily understood. He was merely tired, and this condition of body and mind is not sufficient to postpone the trial of a case, unless it reaches the point where mind and body are so exhausted that the duty in hand cannot be performed with justice to those to whom the duty is due. All who have ever been engaged in the practice of law can appreciate that counsel very often are required to perform their duties when they are physically and mentally tired; but the business of the courts would become blocked if such a condition was recognized as a ground for continuance, when the tired condition of counsel was short of exhaustion, mental or physical. During a term of court continuing for two weeks, counsel who are engaged in every case that is tried during that time, of course, become tired and more or less exhausted. The same is true of the judge and the jurors, and all others upon whom the responsibility of the administration of the law rests. But a case must not be postponed on account of the physical condition of counsel being affected by the work in the line of his profession or otherwise, unless the physical condition brought about by the work is such that further effort would imperil his health, or an attempt to perform the duty, under the circumstances, would result in injustice to those interested in the performance of a duty owed to them. This matter, as all matters relating to the continuance of cases upon similar grounds, is addressed to the discretion, judgment, and humanity of the trial judge, and nothing appears in the record which authorizes us to say that this discretion has been abused in the present case. While we have no doubt that the motion to continue was made in the utmost good faith, and counsel really believed at the time that he was in such an exhausted condition that he could not do justice to his client, still, from all that appears in the record, we think, with the trial judge, that our brother was mistaken as to what was really his condition. It is apparent from the record and the assignments of error therein that counsel conducted this case with his usual skill and ability, and if any injustice has been done to his client it has not been made to appear.

20. Upon the trial of one charged as an accessory before the fact it is incumbent upon the state to prove the guilt of the person charged as a principal beyond a reasonable doubt. The record of the conviction of the principal is conclusive evidence as to the fact of his conviction, and it is prima facie evidence of his guilt. The fact that the state introduces the record in evidence does not preclude the introduction of other evidence tending to establish the guilt of the principal. Therefore, as a general rule, in the trial of an accessory, any evidence which would be admissible against a principal if he were on trial is admissible on the trial of an accessory, for the purpose of establishing the guilt of the principal. Hence, there was no error in admitting in evidence the dying declaration of Willie Carter, to the effect that he was killed by Milton and Jesse Rawlins, nor in the admission of other evidence which tended merely to establish the guilt of others charged as principals in the indictment. The charge of the judge, when considered as a whole, properly limited evidence of this character to the purpose for which it was introduced. There was nothing in the admission of the evidence, nor in the charge of the court in relation thereto, which was prejudicial to the rights of the accused.

21. Evidence was offered to the effect that the accused had threatened the life of the father of the deceased, and had offered to pay persons to kill him. Exception is taken to the refusal of the judge to rule out this evidence upon the ground that the father was not killed, and therefore the evidence was irrelevant. There was also introduced in evidence a peace bond which the accused had been required to give at the instance of the father of the deceased, and an indictment for assault with intent to murder against the accused, in which the father of the deceased was prosecutor. Exception is also taken to the refusal of the court to rule out this evidence on the ground above referred to. This evidence was properly admitted. The deceased were killed at the home of their father by persons who made a deadly assault upon every member of their family that came out of the house. The father was in the house at the time that the slayers of the children surrounded the same, and these threats against the head of the family, and offers of money to others to kill him, could be properly considered by the jury in determining whether those who slew the children went there under the instigation of one whose enmity against the head of the family was such that he had threatened to take his life, and had even offered to pay an assassin to slay him. The weight to be given this evidence was, of course, for the jury; but it was a circumstance to be considered by them in determining whether the accused had instigated the killing of the children as a part of the scheme to kill the father, or whether the killing of the children could have arisen as a natural consequence of a result of the scheme to kill the father in his home.

The court charged the jury upon the law of confessions; but it appears that this was done at the request of counsel for the accused. While the charge was inappropriate to the case, no exception can be taken to the error which counsel thus caused the court to commit. The testimony showing that on the day of the killing the accused left a watermelon at a store near by his home for Frank Turner, who was jointly indicted with the accused as an accessory before the fact, was properly admitted as a circumstance which the jury might consider in determining whether the testimony of the accomplice Moore was corroborated. It was of little weight, but was nevertheless admissible for what it was worth. What has been said disposes of all the assignments of error in the motion for a new trial filed by J. G. Rawlins relating to the admission of evidence and the charge of the court which require any special notice.

22. The only remaining ground containing a special assignment of error in the motion for a new trial of J. G. Rawlins which need be referred to is that which complains that the verdict was received on Sunday. In Bass v. Irvin, 49 Ga. 436, it was held that a verdict received on Sunday was illegal and a nullity. In Henderson v. Reynolds, 84 Ga. 159, 10 S. E. 734, 7 L. R. A. 327, it was held that the question of the legality of a verdict received on Sunday was not necessarily involved in the case of Bass v. Irvin, and that therefore that case was not binding authority upon that point; and, having thus disposed of the case of Bass v. Irvin, a distinct ruling was made that there is no legal or moral wrong in a judge receiving a verdict and allowing a jury to disperse on Sunday. This ruling was followed in Weaver v. Carter, 101 Ga. 206, 28 S. E. 869, in which two judges dissented, but filed no dissenting opinions. It is true that both of these were civil cases, but we see no reason why the rule should not be applicable to criminal cases as well. The soundness of the rule is demonstrated in the opinion in the case of Henderson v. Reynolds, and we do not deem it necessary to attempt to add anything to the reasoning therein contained.

23. After laborious and earnest investigation of all the special assignments of error in the motion for a new trial filed by J. G. Rawlins and his three sons, we have been unable to find any error which in our opinion requires a reversal of the judgment. It remains, therefore, only to be considered whether the evidence was sufficient to authorize the verdict. So far as Milton and Jesse Rawlins are concerned, the evidence amply authorizes the verdict, without reference to the testimony of the alleged accomplice. There was not only positive testimony as to their presence at the scene of the killing, but there was the dying declaration of Willie Carter that they were his slayers. This evidence alone is sufficient to sustain the verdict as to them. There was no evidence that Leonard Rawlins fired a gun, though there is evidence that he was present with a gun at the time that Milton and Jesse killed

Willie and Carrie Carter, and that he was actively participating with Milton and Jesse in the acts done by them resulting in the slaying of the two Carter children. Even if this were not sufficient alone as to him, the evidence of the accomplice was that he went with the others for the purpose of engaging in the slaughter of the entire Carter family, and the evidence of his presence and his conduct on this occasion would be a sufficient corroboration of the accomplice to authorize a jury to convict him as a principal in the crime.

24. Whether the evidence was sufficient to authorize a verdict against J. G. Rawlins as an accessory before the fact depends upon whether the testimony of the accomplice Moore was sufficiently corroborated. He swore that J. G. Rawlins agreed to pay him $100 to go with his sons to the house of the Carters and there slay the entire family, the money to be paid on the following morning; that he gave him and his sons minute directions as to how Carter and his wife were to be killed, the two older children, and the little children; that he gave him a gun with which he was to kill Carter and his wife, a pistol with which he was to slay the older children, and a knife with which he was to cut the throats of the little children; that in pursuance of the plan originated by J. G. Rawlins, and in endeavoring to carry out his instructions, he (Moore) with the three Rawlins boys repaired to the house of Carter after dark; that a barking of a dog attracted the attention of those within the house; that Willie Carter, a young boy of 16, and his sister, Carrie Carter, a girl of about 14, came out into the darkness to see what caused the barking of the dog; that they both were shot down by Milton and Jesse Rawlins, the girl being killed instantly, and Willie Carter being able to crawl back into the house, where he made the declaration to his parents as to who were his slayers, and died the next morning from the effect of the wound he had received. It is hard to conceive of a murder which was more atrocious in plan, and an execution of a plan, which, though only partial, was more heartless in its nature. It required a demon to conceive the plan, and only a monster would have committed its execution into the hands of his own youthful offspring, under the supervision of a vicious negro hireling. Whether J. G. Rawlins was the originator and instigator of this plan, which was only partly carried out, depends upon whether the jury was authorized to treat the circumstances hereinafter referred to as sufficient evidence to corroborate the testimony of a self-confessed assassin, who claims to have been the hireling of J. G. Rawlins.

It is not necessary, in order to convict upon the testimony of an accomplice, that the corroborating circumstances should be sufficient to authorize a conviction. If such were the law, there would be no reason for introducing the testimony of an accomplice. The corroborating circumstances must connect the accused with the commission of the crime, and must be sufficient, in connection with the testimony of an accomplice, to satisfy the jury beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused is guilty. The corroboration may be strong, or it may be slight; but whether it is sufficient to connect the accused with the commission of the crime, or whether, taken in connection with that testimony and all the other facts and circumstances of the case, the accused is guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, is a question to be decided by a jury. It appeared from the evidence that there had been a state of bad feeling between the elder Carter and the elder Rawlins for a number of years. It also appeared that Rawlins had made threats against the life of Carter at various times, extending from 1902 down to a short time before the homicide; that the year preceding the murder, and the year before that, he had said that before the Carters should stay where they were he would kill them all, from the baby up. He told a negro during the year that the crime was committed that if he would kill Carter it would be worth $100 to him, and he told another negro, about a week before the killing, that he would give him $125 if he would kill Carter. It also appeared that on the morning before the killing Rawlins went to the house of one McDonald, and carried a gun which had the stock so cut that it could be easily recognized and was known as the gun of Rawlins, and left it there, and secured in its place a gun belonging to Rawlins which McDonald had had for nearly a year, having no particular mark, and there was evidence showing that this gun was found, along with a knife, which was shown to be the knife of Rawlins, in the shanty where Moore was arrested. The sheriff testified that Rawlins told him that he was satisfied that the gun which was found in Moore's shanty was his gun, and that Moore must have stolen it out of his house while he was at supper, and must have found the knife about the well or about the yard. He told a neighbor that somebody was going to kill Carter, and that when it was done the neighbor should turn his back, so that he could not see anything. He also said to a witness, the day before the murder, that he was in an awkward place, for, if anything should happen to Carter that night, it would be laid on him. He also said that if Carter should get killed, or his house burn up, or anything like that happen, it would be laid on him. A witness testified that he said, a year before the trial, that he did not believe it would be a sin in the sight of God to kill a man like Carter. Another witness testified that at the term of court just before the killing of the Carter children Rawlins stated that he would not swear that he would not kill Carter before court was over. There was also evidence that on the evening before the murder he came to Valdosta and endeavored to obtain $100 from the cashier of a bank, but could not obtain it that evening because the bank had closed; that on the following morning he negotiated a loan at the bank for $110 and left Valdosta in a hired conveyance, going in the direction of his home, but dismissing the conveyance some distance before reaching home, saying to the driver that he might meet some of his sons up there.

There were other circumstances, of more or less significance, indicating the complicity of J. G. Rawlins in the crime; but those that have been referred to are the more important that the record discloses. These that have been referred to are in our opinion sufficient to uphold the verdict of the jury. The credibility of the witnesses was for them. They have seen proper to give credit to the witnesses testifying to these facts. They have also seen proper, in the exercise of the authority which the law vests in them, to treat these circumstances as sufficient to corroborate the testimony of the accomplice. The trial judge has approved their finding, and we cannot say that the corroboration was of such a character that the jury were not authorized to base a verdict thereon. We see no sufficient reason for reversing the judgment refusing a new trial.

25. The negro Turner, who was also charged in the indictment as an accessory before the fact, was convicted, and his motion for a new trial presents, besides the general grounds, several special assignments of error. As we have reached the conclusion that the verdict was not supported by the evidence as to him, it is not necessary to deal with the special assignments of error. The evidence for the state consisted of the testimony of the negro Moore, the alleged accomplice who was indicted as a principal, and, of course, cannot be upheld unless his evidence was corroborated in such a way as to connect Turner with the commission of the crime. A careful reading of the brief of evidence has failed to disclose to us any such corroboration as would authorize the verdict. It was, therefore, error to refuse to grant him a new trial.

Judgment on bill of exceptions of Turner reversed. Judgment on all other bills affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 64)

OLIVER et al. v. CITY OF ELBERTON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—BONDS—PROCEEDINGS TO VALIDATE—JURISDICTION.

Where, in accordance with the act of 1897, proceedings were instituted by the Solicitor General of a circuit for the purpose of having a judgment entered confirming and validating bonds of a municipal corporation, to be issued under an election which has been held for that purpose, and at the time set for the hearing it appeared that the notice of such time and place, required by the act to be published twice, had only been published once, but the city had been served with the rule, and by its proper officers had made answer thereto, the court was not without jurisdiction of the cause, but could lawfully continue the hearing to another time and require proper publication to be made.

2. SAME—ISSUE OF BONDS—PROVISION FOR PAYMENT.

Before bonds can be legally issued by a municipal corporation, provision must be made for the assessment and collection of an annual tax sufficient in amount to pay the principal and interest of the debt within 30 years. It was not a compliance with the law to provide for the levy of an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest and also to raise a sum each year which would amount in the aggregate to less than the principal, add to create a sinking fund to be loaned by commissioners at interest, with a view of increasing the amount to a sufficiency to pay the indebtedness, but providing that any deficiency should be met by taxation in the year in which the bonds would fall due.

3. SAME—PROVISION FOR TAXATION.

If an illegal provision in regard to providing by taxation for the payment of bonds sought to be issued by a municipality formed a part of the call for an election or the notice thereof, or the authority for holding such an election, so as to affect the election itself with illegality, or to show that it was held on the basis of such an illegal provision, the judge of the superior court should refuse to confirm and validate the issuance of such bonds.

4. SAME—CONFIRMATION OF ISSUE.

If the election was legally held, a failure to provide for payment of the bonds before instituting proceedings to validate the issue would not prevent a judgment of confirmation and validation from being entered. But it would be necessary to make lawful provision for that purpose before the bonds were issued.

5. SAME—PROCEDURE.

Where proceedings were taken for the purpose of validating municipal bonds, and it appeared from the pleadings that the election was regularly held, but that by an independent ordinance the municipality had made a provision for the payment of the bonds which was not in accordance with law, and it declared that if such provision were not lawful it desired to make a lawful one by annual taxation, and objections were filed by intervening citizens to the provision made, the court should not have ignored the issue thus presented, and have entered a judgment of confirmation and validation of the bonds, without more, thus impliedly approving the provision made.

6. SAME.

Direction is given in regard to the question raised in the manner stated in the last head-note.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Elbert County; H. M. Holden, Judge.

Application by the Solicitor General for the validating of certain bonds entered by the city of Elberton. A. S. Oliver and others intervene. Judgment confirming the bond, and interveners bring error. Affirmed.

An election was held in the city of Elberton on June 5, 1905, for the purpose of determining whether or not bonds should be issued to the amount of $20,000 for the purpose of building and equipping a sewer system, and resulted in favor of their issuance. Notice was given to the Solicitor General of the circuit, and on June 19th, he filed a petition to have a judgment entered confirming and validating the bonds, under the act of 1897 (Acts 1897, p. 82). A rule was issued by the presiding judge setting the hearing for July 4th, at Elberton. Service was acknowledged by the city and its mayor and council, and they filed an answer substantially admitting the allegations of the petition. At the time set for the hearing certain citizens prayed to intervene and were made parties by order. It appeared that the notice required to be published twice before the hearing of such a cause had only been published once in a newspaper. The presiding judge thereupon granted an order continuing the hearing, and setting it for July 17th, at Crawfordville. The clerk of the superior court of Elbert county was required to publish a notice of the time and place fixed for the hearing twice in the newspaper in which the advertisements of the sheriff of the county were published, and also to publish a copy of the order twice. To this order the interveners filed a bill of exceptions pendente lite. The city in its answer alleged that it had made provision for the payment of the bonds, and attached an ordinance passed for that purpose, which provided for the levy of a sufficient annual tax to pay the interest, and also for a sufficient tax to raise a certain amount each year, which aggregated less than the amount of the bonds, but which was to create a sinking fund to be loaned by certain commissioners, and the total amount was to be used for the payment of the bonds at maturity, if sufficient. If this amount should not be enough, then the city should levy a tax in the year 1925, sufficient to enable it to pay the bonds. The interveners filed objections to this method of providing for payment as being illegal. At the hearing they also moved to dismiss the petition, on the ground that the court was without jurisdiction to try the case, because of the insufficiency of publication of notice of the hearing at the time when it was first set, and because of the continuance of the hearing to a time more than 20 days after the filing of the petition. The motion was overruled, and a judgment was entered confirming and validating the bonds. The interveners excepted.

Van Duser & Tutt, for plaintiff in error.
Jos. N. Worley, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts). 1. Two points are made in this case. First, it is argued that, inasmuch as the notice of the time and place set for the hearing of the petition to validate the bonds had only been published once, instead of twice, as required by law (Acts 1897, p. 84, § 6), when the time arrived the court was without jurisdiction and could not continue the hearing or request proper publication to be made, but the entire proceedings went for naught. This point is controlled in principle by the decision in Wimberly v. County of Twiggs, 116 Ga. 50, 51, 42 S. E. 478, where it is said: "Certainly the superior court of Twiggs county was the only court which had jurisdiction to validate the bonds, and the fact that the hearing was had before the judge on a day other than that named in the published notice does not render the judgment illegal, when it further appears that the case was regularly continued by the court from the day named in the publication to the day on which the hearing was had. The object of the publication is to inform citizens whose interests are to be affected of the time when the case is set to be heard." This shows that the proceeding is, like a case, subject to continuance from the day first fixed to a later date, and that the court does not lose jurisdiction because the hearing is not had at the time first fixed. Here the municipal corporation had been served with the rule and had answered, and the plaintiffs in error had appeared and been made parties. The court was not wholly without jurisdiction, and had authority to reassign the hearing for another time and place by order, and to cause a new publication to be made rectifying the continuance and giving notice of such time and place. In Roff v. Town of Calhoun, 110 Ga. 806, 36 S. E. 214, no petition for the purpose of validating the bonds there concerned was filed until after the lapse of the time allowed by the statute for beginning such proceedings, and it was held that it was then too late to file it. As to the general power to continue cases to have service perfected, where jurisdiction has been acquired, see 4 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 832; Atlanta & Charlotte Air Line Ry. v. Harrison, 76 Ga. 757; Allen v. Mutual Loan & Banking Co., 86 Ga. 74, 12 S. E. 268; Lassiter v. Carroll, 87 Ga. 731, 13 S. E. 825.

2-6. It is urged that the court erred in passing an order validating the bonds, because provision had not been made for their payment as required by law, and the pleadings and evidence showed that the ordinance actually passed for that purpose was not in accordance with law. Before bonds can be legally issued, such a provision must be made; and their issuance may be enjoined if an attempt be made to issue them without it, or mandamus may be resorted to in a proper case. But it has been held that the making of such a provision is not necessary before a proceeding to validate the bonds can be had. Epping v. City of Columbus, 117 Ga. 263-280, 43 S. E. 808. It is true that the following language was used in the decision (page 281 of 117 Ga., page 810 of 43 S. E.): "If, when the application is made to validate the issue of bonds, it appears to the judge, either from the pleadings or otherwise, that the authorities of the municipality or county do not intend to make provision for the payment of the bonds in the manner required by the Constitution, of course he should not render a judgment validating the issue of bonds." In that case it was alleged as an objection that no provision had been made, and this was held not to render the validation improper. The sentence quoted above was really an obiter dictum; but, construed in the light of the authority cited in support of it and when correctly limited, it was sound. The authority cited was Wilkins v. City of Waynesboro, 116 Ga. 859, 42 S. E. 767. In that case there was an unconstitutional clause in the act of the Legislature authorizing the issuing of bonds; and the ordinance calling the election and the notice required to be given under the act of 1897 contained illegal provisions. Thus the election itself was tainted with illegality, and no bonds could be issued under it. If the foundation had been legal and the election proper, on a proceeding to validate the bonds, it has been seen that the failure to show the making of a provision for payment would not cause the refusal of a judgment of validation. In the case at bar it is not claimed that the ordinance calling the election, or the notice given, contained any illegality which affected the election. In fact the ordinance calling the election is not in the record. The municipal authorities did at some time, which does not clearly appear, pass an ordinance providing for payment of interest by taxation and the creation of a sinking fund to pay off the bonds at maturity by levying taxes annually, aggregating less than the principal sum, and lending out the amount at interest. This plan was not in accordance with the Constitution (article 7, § 7, par. 2), and was illegal (Civ. Code 1895, § 5894).

The question is whether this independent ordinance should have the effect of practically overthrowing the election, or whether, if all the steps necessary to a judgment validating the bonds were taken, the bonds should be validated, but this ordinance be declared void, and the city be allowed to make proper provision for payment according to law, before issuing the bonds. The city in its answer set out the plan for making payment which this ordinance embodied, and added that, if this were not a constitutional provision, it would pass an ordinance providing for a sufficient annual tax for the payment of the principal and interest of the bonds. Objections were filed by the plaintiffs in error, and the judgment merely confirms and validates the bonds, saying nothing as to the point so raised. Standing thus, the judgment would seem to include an approval of this provision for payment.

While we think that the entire result of the election should not be destroyed by reason of this illegal ordinance, still it should not be approved, even by implication. We therefore affirm the judgment, but direct that it be amended by declaring the provision for payment set up not to be legal, and that provision for payment must be made according to law before the bonds are issued. No claim is made that this will exceed the constitutional limit of indebtedness which the city may incur, and we therefore presume that it will not do so.

Judgment affirmed, with directions. All the Justices concur.

(124 Ga. 6)

PERKINS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE—CONFESSION OF ACCUSED—MURDER.

Where, on a trial for murder, the accused admitted the killing, but coupled such admission with declarations which, if believed, showed justification, no presumption that the homicide was murder arose from such admission.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Taylor County; W. A. Little, Judge.

Will Perkins was convicted of murder, and brings error. Reversed.

O. M. Colbert and Carson & McCutchen, for plaintiff in error. S. P. Gilbert, Sol. Gen., and Jno. C. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the State.

FISH, C. J. Will Perkins was convicted of murder, and, his motion for a new trial being overruled, he excepted.

On the trial the evidence for the state, if credible, showed that the homicide was committed by the accused without provocation or extenuating circumstances, while the evidence for the accused, if worthy of belief, showed that the homicide was justifiable, in that he killed the deceased to prevent him from committing a felonious assault upon the accused with a deadly weapon. The accused, in his statement made to the jury, admitted the killing, but claimed that the deceased, without provocation, had struck him on the head one time with an iron monkey wrench, and was endeavoring to strike him again with the same weapon, and that he shot the deceased to protect himself from such assault. This was the only admission of the killing made by the accused. The court instructed the jury as follows: The defendant "goes into the case, as I have charged you, remember, with a presumption of innocence; and remember, also, that if in the progress of the trial it shall have been shown at any time, or admitted to you, that the defendant did kill the deceased, as charged in the bill of indictment, that then the law presumes the killing to be murder, and that presumption remains and exists until, from the evidence in the case, it be shown that a lower grade of homicide than murder is to be found against him, or that the facts and circumstances show a justifiable homicide."

One of the errors assigned upon this charge is that it in effect instructed the jury that a presumption of murder would arise from the admission by the accused that he committed the homicide, though he coupled such admission with "an explanation that might negative malice." As early as Hudgins v. State, 2 Ga. 173, 188, it was held: "The law presumes every homicide to be felonious, until the contrary appears from circumstances of alleviation, of excuse, or justification; and it is incumbent on the prisoner to make out such circumstances to the satisfaction of the jury, unless they arise out of the evidence produced against him." Similar rulings have since been frequently made by this court. See Dorsey v. State, 110 Ga. 331, 35 S. E. 651, and cases cited. In Futch v. State, 90 Ga. 472 (8), 16 S. E. 102, it was held: "If the accused admits the killing with a deadly weapon, but adds an explanation which might negative malice, no presumption that the homicide was murder would arise on such admission; but, if no explanation were added tending to reduce the grade of the homicide, that presumption would arise." As was said in the opinion in that case: "That part of the statement which, if unexplained, would criminate, although it could be received as evidence of the fact it admitted, could not, to the exclusion of another part which qualified and explained it, create a presumption that the accused was actuated by malice and was guilty of murder." Mr. Justice Evans, in Owens v. State, 120 Ga. 299, 48 S. E. 21, basing his remarks on the Futch Case, said: "Murder does not consist merely in the killing of a human being. The killing must be done with malice. When the fact of the killing is shown, and the evidence adduced to establish the killing shows neither circumstances of justification nor alleviation, malice may be inferred. Likewise, if the statement of the defendant admits the homicide without explanation, malice may be inferred from such admission. But if at the time of the admission the homicide is justified, such qualification of the admission of the homicide robs it of the vital element of murder." We think it clear that the exception to the charge was well taken. The error was harmful to the accused, and a new trial must be awarded.

Complaint was made of several other instructions given by the court to the jury; but we deem it unnecessary to deal with them, as there is to be another trial, and our learned brother of the trial bench will doubtless then correct any inaccuracies that may have appeared in the charges upon which error was assigned.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 25)

SAMS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

1. HOMICIDE—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—SELF-DEFENSE.

One who provokes a difficulty may yet defend himself against violence on the part of the one provoked, if the violence be disproportionate to the seriousness of the provocation, or greater in degree than the law recognizes as justifiable under the circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 28, Cent. Dig. Homicide, § 145.]

2. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

Except in so far as the charge of the court conflicted with the ruling announced in the preceding note, there was no error on the trial to which exception was properly taken.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fayette County; E. J. Reagan, Judge.

Chand Sams was convicted of shooting at another, and brings error. Reversed.

J. W. Wise and J. W. Culpepper, for plaintiff in error. O. H. B. Bloodworth, Sol. Gen., for the State.

CANDLER, J. The accused was tried under an indictment charging him with assault with intent to murder, and was found guilty of the statutory offense of shooting at another. He made a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and he excepted.

1. The evidence showed that the accused fired several shots from a rifle at one Frank Porter; one of the shots striking Porter in the leg. There was also evidence for the accused to the effect that Porter was the aggressor, that he threatened the life of the accused and opened fire upon him at the time of the difficulty, and that the accused shot only in self-defense. This, however, was contradicted by the witnesses for the state. The judge charged the jury: "If in this case, gentlemen of the jury, Frank Porter did make an assault upon the defendant, or if he was attempting to make a serious personal injury amounting to a felony on the person of this defendant, or if Frank Porter's conduct—his acts—at the time of the shooting was such as to cause a reasonable man to fear a felony was about to be inflicted upon him, if the circumstances and conduct of the defendant at the time were sufficient to authorize Frank Porter to make the assault upon him, then he would not be justifiable, because no act of Frank Porter in the matter would itself, if the act was brought about by the act of the defendant, justify the defendant, and that act would be no justification of the defendant." While this charge is undoubtedly open to the objection made against it that it was confusing in its tendency, we are not prepared to hold that it was sufficiently so to require the grant of a new trial on that ground. A more serious objection to it, and one which was duly made in the motion for a new trial, is that the concluding clause of the charge, viz., "no act of Frank Porter in the matter would itself, if the act was brought about by the act of the defendant, justify the defendant," does not correctly state the law applicable to the case. Undoubtedly, if one provoke a difficulty, and the person provoked resent the affront offered in such manner and to such an extent as the law recognizes as reasonable and justifiable, the other party to the difficulty will not be justified in repelling by force an assault for which he was directly responsible. Thus, if A. draw a knife and advance in a threatening manner upon B., the fact that B., upon such provocation, drew a pistol and fired upon A., would not justify A. in killing or wounding B. But, if the resentment of the party provoked is disproportionate to the seriousness of the provocation, the same rule would not apply. It must be such resentment as a reasonable man would indulge; and, if it surpass that, the other party, even though he may have provoked the difficulty, would have the right to defend himself against threatened injury. To pursue the illustration already given, if A. speak contemptuously or insultingly to B., or advance upon him in a threatening manner, but not under such circumstances as to give reasonable apprehension of serious bodily harm, B. would have no right to attempt to take the life of A., and, if he did so, A. would have the right to repel the attempt, though it were necessary to take B.'s life in doing so. This principle has been announced repeatedly in the decisions of this court. See Boatwright v. State, 89 Ga. 140, 15 S. E. 21; Butler v. State, 92 Ga. 606, 19 S. E. 51; Fussell v. State, 94 Ga. 78, 19 S. E. 891; Barton v. State, 96 Ga. 435, 23 S. E. 827. In the present case there was evidence from which the jury might have inferred that Porter, the man alleged to have been assaulted by the accused, fired the first shot on account of the fact that the accused had, on the previous day, attempted to induce Porter's wife to have sexual intercourse with him, and the effect of the charge complained of might have been to lead the jury to believe that, if the accused had provoked the difficulty by reason of the conduct referred to, Porter had the right to fire at him, while the accused had no right to defend himself from the assault. The charge excepted to was clearly erroneous, and was cause for a new trial.

2. The remaining grounds of the motion for a new trial disclose no grounds for reversing the judgment of the lower court. The charge to the effect that the man whom the accused shot was justified in assaulting the accused with a deadly weapon, if the assault was necessary to prevent the commission of a felony by the accused on the wife of the other combatant, was not warranted by any view of the evidence; but the motion does not attack it on this ground, and the assignment of error made is without merit. There was ample evidence to authorize the charge on the subject of mutual combat, and it and the other charges complained of were, so far as appears from the record, free from error. The case is sent back for another trial, solely on account of the error pointed out in the first division of this opinion.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 10)

NOLLY v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE—INVOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

The accused was indicted for murder, and was found guilty of involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act. The motion for a new trial does not complain of any error of law on the part of the trial judge, but contends that the verdict was illegal, in that the evidence did not permit of an intermediate verdict between an acquittal and a conviction of murder. There was evidence from which the jury were authorized to find that the accused, without any intention to shoot any one, carelessly fired his pistol in the general direction of a crowd of persons, of which the deceased was one, and that the deceased was shot and killed; that at the time he shot he was standing at the side of a public road; and that the time of the shooting was at night. It was, therefore, not erroneous to refuse to grant a new trial. Stovall v. State, 32 S. E. 586, 106 Ga. 443, is not in point, as in that case it appeared that the accused shot at the deceased, but disclaimed any intention to wound him fatally.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Jasper County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

Ted Nolly was convicted of involuntary manslaughter, and brings error. Affirmed.

G. H. Cornwell and Green F. Johnson, for plaintiff in error. J. E. Pottle, Sol. Gen., for the State.

CANDLER, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 24)

BUFFINGTON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

1. LARCENY—INDICTMENT.

It is essential to the validity of an indictment for larceny that the ownership of the property, if known, be laid in some person or persons.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 32, Cent. Dig. Larceny, § 82.]

2. SAME—OWNERSHIP.

If the indictment lays the ownership of the goods alleged to have been stolen in a partnership, without alleging the names of the partners composing the firm, it is fatally defective. 12 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 967; Clark's Cr. Proc. 228; People v. Bogart, 86 Cal. 245. See Mattox v. State, 41 S. E. 709, 115 Ga. 219.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 32, Cent. Dig. Larceny, § 84.]

3. SAME.

The name "Stewart & Reece" imports a partnership, and therefore an indictment for larceny, wherein the ownership of the goods alleged to have been stolen was laid in "one Stewart & Reece," without more, should have been held bad, on special demurrer directed to this defect therein.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; Harper Hamilton, Judge.

Marvin Buffington was convicted of larceny, and brings error. Reversed.

M. B. Eubanks, for plaintiff in error. W. H. Ennis, Sol. Gen., for the State.

FISH, C. J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 3)

HAMPTON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGE—GROWING CROPS—DESCRIPTION.

A mortgage on "12 acres of cotton," without any further description, does not sufficiently specify the property upon which it is to take effect. Civ. Code 1895, § 2724; Atkins v. Paul, 67 Ga. 97; Osborne v. Rice, 83 S. E. 54, 107 Ga. 281; Thomas Furniture Co. v. T. & C. Furniture Co., 48 S. E. 333, 120 Ga. 879. See, also, Broach v. O'Neal, 20 S. E. 113, 94 Ga. 474; Stephens v. Tucker, 55 Ga. 543.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Chattel Mortgages, § 93.]

2. SAME—FRAUDULENT SALE—INDICTMENT.

An indictment for the wrongful sale of mortgaged property charged that the accused on a given date executed to the prosecutor a mortgage on "12 acres of cotton," to secure a specified debt, and thereafter, without the consent of the mortgagee, sold and disposed "of all the cotton raised on the said 12 acres in said mortgage deed described," with intent to defraud, etc. Held, that a demurrer on the ground of the insufficiency of the description of the property alleged to have been mortgaged and sold should have been sustained.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; Harper Hamilton, Judge.

W. A. Hampton was convicted of illegally selling mortgaged property, and brings error. Reversed.

M. B. Eubanks, for plaintiff in error. W. H. Ennis, Sol. Gen., for the State.

FISH, C. J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(124 Ga. 6)

WILLIAMS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—REVIEW.

There was sufficient evidence to authorize the verdict; and, the presiding judge having refused a new trial and no error of law being assigned, this court will not interfere.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Sumter County; Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Jack Williams was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Wm. Harper, for plaintiff in error. F. A. Hooper, Sol. Gen., for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 8)

NELSON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

CRIMINAL LAW—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

The charge complained of really amounted to an intimation or expression by the judge as to what had been proved in the case, and, so construed, a new trial is required under that provision of law which prohibits a judge from expressing or intimating to a jury what has or has not been proved in the case.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Effingham County; P. E. Seabrook, Judge.

Elymus Nelson was convicted of larceny, and brings error. Reversed.

Nelson was tried upon an indictment charging him with the offense of hog stealing, and was convicted, and to a judgment overruling his motion for a new trial he excepts. Error is assigned in the motion upon the following charge: "Now the state contends, gentlemen of the jury, that upon the date named in the indictment, and in the manner and form therein set forth, that this defendant took and carried away, with intent to steal, one certain described hog, being the property of the prosecutor, Mr. E. E. Foy. The state contends that that contention has been sustained by the evidence introduced on behalf of the state by the various witnesses that the state has sworn in the case, and also by facts and circumstances that have developed from the defendant's witnesses, and from the defense set up in the case. Now, among other things, the state contends that the indictment has been sustained by the testimony of one Mr. Hunter, who says that he had marked a number of hogs for the prosecutor; that he was familiar with his mark, and that the hog that is in question was inspected by him in company with Mr. Hurst; and that the hog was in the mark of Mr. Foy. The state contends that this contention has been proved or sustained by the testimony of Mr. Hurst. You have heard this testimony. It is contended that he went with Mr. Hunter, and saw the hog in question in the pen of the defendant; that the hog was one with which he was very familiar, having known it from its earliest infancy; that he had marked the identical hog, knew its flesh mark, its color, and that it was the hog of Mr. Foy." This charge is alleged to be erroneous for several reasons, among them being that it contained an intimation of opinion by the court to the jury, and that it is argumentative, and singled out issues of fact.

J. H. Smith, R. F. C. Smith, and Strange & Strange, for plaintiff in error. Livingston Kenan, Sol. Gen., for the State.

COBB, P. J. "The office of a charge by the court is to give to the jury such instruction touching the rules of law pertinent to the issues involved in the pending trial as will enable them intelligently to apply thereto the evidence submitted, and from the two constituents, law and facts, make a verdict. In delivering his charge the trial judge should carefully avoid an invasion of the province of the jury. He should refer to the evidence only so far as is necessary to present the leading issues of the cause, leaving the minor contentions of opposing counsel to the consideration of the jury under appropriate general instructions. It should contain no such summary of the evidence as might to the jury seem either to be an argument or amount to the expression or intimation of an opinion thereon." Thomas v. State, 95 Ga. 484, 22 S. E. 315. It was held in the case from which the above quotation was made that it was error for the presiding judge to repeat the substance of the testimony of the state's witnesses, and submit these with the argumentative deductions therefrom by the state's counsel as issues in the case. The judge should not in his charge take up and recapitulate in detail the testimony of the witnesses as it was delivered from the stand, in such a way as is calculated to leave the impression upon the minds of the jury that the testimony of such witnesses has established the fact contended for by one of the parties, or that such testimony is of a nature that it is entitled to more consideration than other testimony in the case. McVicker v. Conkle, 96 Ga. 597, 24 S. E. 23. The ruling in the case just cited practically goes to the extent of holding that it is error for the judge to state to the jury what a witness has testified, such a statement being in effect an expression of opinion as to what has been proved. Suddeth v. The State, 112 Ga. 400, 37 S. E. 747.

The use of the expression "it is contended," or similar phrases, will not in all cases have the effect to relieve a charge detailing the evidence of a particular witness or witnesses from an objection that it amounts to an expression or intimation of opinion. Smith v. Hazelhurst, 122 Ga. 792, 50 S. E. 917. We think that the charge under consideration was liable, not only to leave the impression upon the minds of the jury that the facts testified to by the witnesses named had been established, but also that the testimony of such witnesses was entitled to more consideration than that of other witnesses, who were not named or referred to in the charge. The case is at best upon the evidence close and doubtful, and the error in the charge is in our opinion such as to require a reversal of the judgment refusing to grant a new trial.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(58 W. Va. 122)

CITY OF GRAFTON v. HOLT, Judge.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 31, 1905.)

1. JUDGE—DISQUALIFICATION.

A judge, who is a quasi party to a suit in equity under the description of the bill filed by certain named plaintiffs suing on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, and who will be bound by or has the right to come into the suit and take the benefit of the decree which may be pronounced therein, and thereby derive a pecuniary benefit, is disqualified from acting as judge in the hearing and determination of the suit.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 29, Cent. Dig. Judges, §§ 190-207.]

2. PROHIBITION—ORDER—DISQUALIFICATION OF JUDGE.

An order made by such judge awarding a temporary injunction in such suit is not void, but voidable, and the order cannot be vacated or annulled, or its enforcement prevented by writ of prohibition, on the ground alone that the judge was disqualified by reason of interest at the time he entered the order.

3. TAXATION—WATER RATES.

Water rates exacted by a public corporation from actual consumers are not taxes, but merely the price of a commodity.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Petition by the city of Grafton for writ of prohibition to John Homer Holt, judge of the circuit court of Taylor county. Writ granted.

Dent & Dent and Eugene Somerville, for petitioner. J. L. Hechmer, O. P. Guard, and Ira E. Robinson, for respondent.

COX, J. This is a petition by the city of Grafton for a writ of prohibition to prohibit Hon. John Homer Holt, judge of the circuit court of Taylor county, from interfering with the city in the management and control of its waterworks plant, and from fixing the rates that said city shall charge consumers of water, and from preventing the city from shutting off the water from such consumers as refuse to pay therefor.

The city of Grafton under its charter authority owns the waterworks supplying the inhabitants and others of the city with water for compensation. On the 27th day of May, 1905, the city, upon recommendation of a committee of its council, adopted a schedule of rates for water to be charged the consumers, uniform as to each class of consumers, but increasing the rates theretofore charged. The increased rates were afterwards embodied in a formal ordinance adopted by the common council, and were required to be collected from and after July 1, 1905. It is claimed that this formal ordinance was not adopted until after the 1st of July, 1905, but that is immaterial here. After the adoption of the new schedule of rates a bill was filed in the circuit court of Taylor county by George M. Whitescarver and certain other persons named, citizens, taxpayers, and consumers of water, on behalf of themselves and the other citizens, taxpayers, and consumers of water of said city, similarly situated, against the city as defendant, for the purpose of setting aside the order of the common council increasing the water rates, and for an accounting to ascertain the amount justly payable, applicable to all consumers of the same class with the plaintiffs, and for the purpose of restraining the city, its officers and agents from shutting off the water on the premises of the plaintiffs, and the other inhabitants of the city similarly situated; it being alleged in the bill that the city is threatening to turn off the water for failure to pay the increased water rates. Upon presentation of this bill to the said judge of the circuit court on the 8th day of July, 1905, a temporary injunction was awarded, practically as prayed for. Afterwards, on the 12th day of July, 1905, pursuant to notice, a motion was made by the defendant city to dissolve the injunction on the ground, among others, that the said judge was without legal authority to act in the suit by reason of being a consumer of water within the city and personally interested in the subject-matter of the litigation. The motion to dissolve was overruled by Judge Holt in vacation, and this proceeding followed.

The petition proceeds upon the theory that Judge Holt, being a consumer of water supplied by the city waterworks, is in the same situation as the plaintiffs in said bill, and disqualified from acting as judge in that suit, or touching the subject-matter of that litigation, by reason of interest. The fact is not denied, but conceded, that Judge Holt is a consumer of water from the city waterworks, and in the same situation as the plaintiffs in said bill, although not made a party therein by name. The first question for us to determine is whether or not Judge Holt, being so situated, is disqualified by reason of interest from acting as judge in that suit. In order to disqualify, the interest of the judge must not be merely an interest in the legal question involved in the suit, but an interest in the subject-matter to be determined thereby. Forest Coal Co. v. Doolittle, Judge, etc., 54 W. Va. 210, 46 S. E. 238.

We must see if this is the kind of a suit which, if maintainable at all, could be maintained by the plaintiffs named, suing on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated. The general equity rule is that all parties in interest must be before the court; but there are certain exceptions to this rule, which are as clearly established and as well settled as the rule itself. In cases to which the exceptions apply one or more persons representing a class or common interest or common rights are permitted to sue on behalf of themselves and all others in the same situation. The exceptions to the rule have grown up as matters of necessity to meet the ends of justice. To undertake to review all the authorities defining and sustaining the exceptions would be impracticable in this opinion. We shall content ourselves with the citation of a few of those most pertinent to the case at hand: "The rule requiring all parties interested in the subject-matter or object of the suit to be made parties, however numerous, is relaxed when its observance becomes extremely difficult or inconvenient, and a person holding a common interest with numerous others may sue in his own name in behalf of himself and such other persons without joining them in the suit." Hogg's Equity Proced. § 39. "In some cases the persons who hold a common relation to the subject are so numerous that to attempt to unite them all in one suit would be, even if practicable, very inconvenient, and would subject the proceedings to the danger of perpetual abatement and other impediments from intermediate deaths, marriages, incompetency, or change of interests. * * * In such cases the court will allow a bill to be brought by some of the parties on behalf of themselves and all others, taking care that there shall be a due representation of all substantial interests before the court." Bart. Ch. Prac. § 47. A clear statement of exceptions is contained in Judge Story's work on Equity Pleading. This eminent author says: "The most usual cases arranging themselves under this head of exceptions are: (1) Where the question is one of common or general interest, and one or more sue or defend for the benefit of the whole. (2) Where the parties form a voluntary association for public or private purposes, and those who sue or defend may fairly be presumed to represent the rights and interests of the whole. (3) Where the parties are very numerous, and, although they have or may have separate, distinct interests, yet it is impracticable to bring them all before the court." In speaking of the third class of cases mentioned above, the same author says: "In this class of cases there is usually a privity of interest between the parties; but such a privity is not the foundation of the exception. On the contrary, it is sustained in some cases where no such privity exists. However, in all of them there always exists a common interest or a common right, which the bill seeks to establish and enforce, or a general claim or privilege, which it seeks to establish or to narrow or take away. * * * In all these classes of cases it is apparent that all the parties stand, or are supposed to stand, in the same situation, and have one common right or one common interest, the operation and protection of which will be for the common benefit of all and cannot be to the injury of any. It is under such circumstances and with such objects that the bill is permitted to be filed by a few on behalf of themselves and all others, or against a few and yet to bind the rights and interests of the others." Story's Equity Pl. §§ 97, 120, 128. As bearing upon and sustaining the exceptions mentioned, see Smith et al. v. Swormstedt et al., 16 How. 288, 14 L. Ed. 942; Beech on Inj. 363; Railroad Co. v. Gibson, 85 Ga. 1, 11 S. E. 442, 21 Am. St. Rep. 135; 2 Spelling on Inj. 973; 15 Enc. Pl. & Prac. 629; Fletcher, Eq. Pl. & Pr. § 26; 1 Daniels, Ch. Pl. & Pr.

238; Bull v. Read, 18 Grat. 86. Where such suit in equity is permitted under the exceptions, the bill must show that it is brought on behalf of those whom the plaintiffs represent, and sufficient parties must be before the court to enable it to fairly and fully adjudicate the questions involved. It seems clear to us that the suit of Whitescarver et al. v. City of Grafton comes within the exceptions, and that the suit, if maintainable at all, is maintainable by the plaintiffs, suing on behalf of themselves and all others in the same situation. All consumers have a common interest, a common right, in the subject-matter of the litigation. The number of consumers is large. To require all of them to be before the court would occasion great inconvenience, if not a practical denial of the right to have the subject-matter adjudicated and determined.

Having decided that the suit in equity, if maintainable at all, was properly brought by the plaintiffs on their own behalf and on behalf of all others in the same situation, we have yet to determine what is the character of the interest of Judge Holt, standing in the same situation as the plaintiffs named. In such a suit a person standing in the same situation as the plaintiff is termed a quasi party, and for many purposes has the right of an actual party. 15 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 635. It seems that such person is bound by the decree which may be pronounced in the suit, although he does not come into the suit before the decree. This is true in those jurisdictions which, like ours, have no equity rules requiring that the decree be without prejudice to the party standing in the same situation, but not named, unless such party come into the suit before the decree. 15 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 635; Story's Eq. Pl. 135. But, whether a quasi party is bound by the decree or not, he has the right to come into the suit at any time before the decree and take the benefit of it. 15 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 636. This being true, Judge Holt has the right in that suit to come in and take the benefit of any decree which may be pronounced therein. In either case he has a disqualifying interest. The right (a right of value) to come in and take the benefit of the decree constitutes a disqualifying interest as much as if he were bound by the decree without coming in. Otherwise, we have the anomalous situation of a judge sitting on the hearing of a case in which he has the right to come in and take the benefit of the decree pronounced by him and thereby derive a pecuniary benefit. It may be said that Judge Holt has signified no intention of coming into the suit and taking the benefit of the decree, but this is immaterial. The mere fact that he has the right to do so disqualifies. Findley v. Smith, 42 W. Va. 299, 28 S. E. 370; Forest Coal Co. v. Doolittle, Judge, et al., supra; Moses v. Julian, 45 N. H. 52, 84 Am. Dec. 114. Suitors are entitled to a fair and impartial judgment upon the matters in litigation, and to have that judgment pronounced by a fair and impartial tribunal. Otherwise, courts of justice are but mockeries, and their judgments are without credit or respect. The maxim of the common law, "Nemo debet esse iudex in propria causa," remains inviolate in this state.

It is claimed, however, that Judge Holt is qualified by reason of our statute (Code 1899, p. 1106), which provides that no judge of any court shall be disqualified from performing his official duties with respect to any cause by reason of the fact that he is a citizen and a taxpayer of the municipal corporation which is interested in or is a party to such cause. In order for this provision to render Judge Holt qualified to act in that suit, it must be assumed that the rates of charge for water are taxes, and that Judge Holt is only interested in common with the other taxpayers of the city in resisting the payment of taxes. We cannot give assent to that proposition. Water rates exacted by a public corporation from actual consumers are not taxes, but are merely the price of a commodity. The charges for water do not constitute a uniform assessment against all or any persons or property within the city. It is wholly optional with the consumer whether or not he will take water from the city waterworks. All of the inhabitants may refuse to do so, and in that event the water rates cannot be collected from them. The city is empowered under its charter to deal in a public utility, and it charges and collects therefor in the same manner as an individual or private corporation engaged in the same business. 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 422; Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 139, 34 N. E. 545, 21 L. R. A. 519; Dillon's Munic. Corp. 821; Prov. Sav. Inst. v. Jersey City, 113 U. S. 506, 5 Sup. Ct. 612, 28 L. Ed. 1102; 1 Cooley on Taxation, 5.

It is contended by the petitioner that the writ of prohibition should issue in this proceeding, operating to vacate and annul the order awarding the temporary injunction, on the grounds that the judge was disqualified when he made the order and that there is no equity in the bill. Notwithstanding the fact that Judge Holt was disqualified at the time he made the order awarding the injunction, the order is not void, but voidable. Forest Coal Co. v. Doolittle, Judge, etc., supra; Findley v. Smith, supra; Moses v. Julian, supra; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 742. A writ of prohibition cannot be made a process for the correction of errors and take the place of an appeal or writ of error. County Court v. Boreman, 34 W. Va. 362, 12 S. E. 490; State v. Kyle, 8 W. Va. 711; Sperry v. Sanders, 50 W. Va. 70, 40 S. E. 327; McConaha v. Guthrie, 21 W. Va. 140; Johnston v. Hunter, 50 W. Va. 52, 40 S. E. 443; N. & W. Railway Co. v. Pinnacle Coal Co., 44 W. Va. 574, 30 S. E. 196, 41 L. R. A. 414; Yates v. Taylor County Court, 47 W. Va. 376, 35 S. E. 24; Morley v. Godfrey, 54 W. Va. 54, 46 S. E. 185. A number of our cases hold that, where there is a total want of jurisdiction and the judgment is void, the enforcement of the judgment may be prevented by a writ of prohibition; but those cases do not apply here, where the order complained of is only voidable and we have not examined the bill for the purpose of seeing whether it is with or without equity. If it be without equity, or if the order complained of may be avoided, the city of Grafton has another plain and adequate remedy.

This proceeding was argued and submitted at the September term, 1905, of this court. On the 18th of October, 1905, being the first day of this special term, the city of Grafton, pursuant to notice, made a motion to strike out the answer of Judge Holt in this proceeding as being frivolous, impertinent, and scandalous, and as being foreign to a proper defense. The record does not disclose that any motion was made to strike out the answer previous to or at the hearing and submission of this proceeding, and such motion now comes too late to be considered. It follows from what we have said that a writ of prohibition must be awarded restraining the Honorable John Homer Holt, judge of the circuit court of Taylor county, from further acting as judge in the hearing and determination of said chancery suit, but not from entering such orders as shall be necessary to bring the suit to a hearing and determination before a qualified court or judge.

In awarding this writ we do so without in any way reflecting upon Judge Holt. He no doubt was perfectly honest and sincere in the belief that he was qualified to sit in the suit mentioned and that it was his duty to do so. It is often a question of grave doubt as to the qualification of a judge, and he should not refuse to sit when qualified, any more than he should insist on sitting when disqualified.

(38 W. Va. 119)

SWIGER v. SWIGER.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 22, 1905.)

1. APPEAL—DISMISSAL—NEW PETITION.

When an appeal and supersedeas have been dismissed under rule 3, of the Supreme Court (45 S. E. viii), a new petition, reciting the fact of the former petition and allowance and dismissal, and referring to the assignments of error contained in the former petition, and making them a part of the new petition, is sufficient upon which to allow an appeal, although such new petition prays "that said order of dismissal may be set aside, and that said appeal and supersedeas heretofore allowed may be renewed."

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE—CONVEYANCE TO WIFE—TITLE ACQUIRED.

Where a husband conveys land directly to his wife, not in fraud of his creditors, she takes only the equitable title, while the legal title remains vested in the grantor in trust for his wife, the grantee.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 26, Cent. Dig. Husband and Wife, § 236.]

3. SAME—INCUMBRANCE BY HUSBAND.

In such case the husband cannot convey the legal title to another, or incur the same by deed of trust or otherwise.

4. ACKNOWLEDGMENT—CERTIFICATE.

The certificate of the acknowledgment of a deed imports verity, and cannot be overcome, except by clear and satisfactory proof. The evidence of the grantor denying the execution of the deed and the opinion of experts that the signature thereto is not that of the grantor, are not sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 1, Cent. Dig. Acknowledgment, § 346.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Harrison County.

Bill by Nancy Swiger against Benoni A. Swiger and others. Decree for plaintiff, and Benoni A. Swiger appeals. Affirmed.

J. V. Blair and Davis & Davis, for appellant. M. R. Crouse and G. W. Farr, for appellee.

McWHORTER, J. Daniel Wright died seised of 89½ acres of land on Crane's Nest Run, in Tyler county, which descended to his eight children, subject to the dower of his widow, Prudence Wright. Nancy Wright married Benoni A. Swiger in 1857. After the death of Daniel, Nancy and her husband instituted a suit in the circuit court of Tyler county for partition of the land among the heirs and to assign the dower of Prudence Wright therein. In the partition there was assigned to Nancy lot No. 8, containing 9½ acres, of which 2 acres and a fraction were subject to the dower set apart to her mother, Prudence Wright. Benoni purchased the interests of all the heirs, except that of Nancy, his wife. On the 24th of September, 1888, B. A. Swiger conveyed to his wife, Nancy Swiger, in consideration of $1,000, the said tract of 89½ acres, subject to the dower of Mrs. Wright in 6 acres of said tract. On the 1st day of December, 1890, said Nancy Swiger, by deed of that date, in consideration of $1, granted, bargained, sold, and released to the said B. A. Swiger all her right, title, and interest in said 89½ acres of land, except the 9½ acres set apart to her by the commissioners of partition and decreed thereon, and also on the same day the said parties executed the following writing: "This indenture, made this the first day of December, one thousand eight hundred and ninety, between B. A. Swiger, of the first part, and Nancy Swiger, his wife, of the second part: Whereas, divers disputes and unhappy differences have arisen between the party of the first part and his wife, for which reason they have consented and agreed to live separate and apart from each other during their natural life: Now, therefore, this indenture witnesseth, that the said party of the first part, in consideration of the premises, does hereby covenant, promise, and agree to and with his said wife at all times hereafter to live separate and apart from him, and that he shall and will allow and permit her to reside and be in such and such place or places, and in such family or families, and with such relations, friends, and other persons, and to follow and carry on such trade or business, as she may from time to time choose or think fit for living separate and apart from him, or compel her to live with him, nor sue, molest, disturb, or trouble any other person whomsoever for receiving, entertaining, or harboring her, and that he will not, without her consent, visit her or knowingly enter any house or places where she shall dwell, reside, or be, or send or cause to be sent any letter or message to her, nor shall or will at any time hereafter claim or demand any of her money, jewels, plate, clothing, household goods, furniture, or stock in trade, which she now has in her power, custody, or possession, or which she shall or may at any time hereafter have, buy, or procure, or which shall be devised or given to her, or that she may otherwise acquire, and that she shall and may enjoy and absolutely dispose of the same as if she was a feme sole and unmarried; and, further, the said party of the first part further agrees to deliver his wife one spotted cow and five pictures, small, and enlarged pictures in frame, and cupboard ware, all she desires. The said Nancy Swiger is to have full control of her daughter, Mary Margaret Swiger. In witness whereof, the said parties have hereunto affixed their hands and seals this first day of December, 1890. B. A. Swiger. [Seal.] Nancy Swiger. [Seal.]" Which was duly acknowledged on the day of its date, and recorded in the clerk's office of the county court of Tyler county on the 22d day of December, 1890. On the 10th of May, 1894, the said Benoni A. Swiger made to the South Penn Oil Company an oil and gas lease on said tract of land, calling it 90 acres, more or less, and by deed of August 10, 1898, said B. A. Swiger conveyed to said South Penn Oil Company the one-half of the one-eighth royalty reserved to the lessor, Swiger, in said lease of May 10, 1894.

On the 14th day of November, 1900, as stated in the petition for appeal, as well as in the appellant's brief, Nancy Swiger sued out of the clerk's office of the circuit court of Tyler county her subpoena in chancery, and at the January rules, 1901, filed her bill of complaint therein against Benoni A. Swiger, Nathan Knight, Emmanuel Elder, the South Penn Oil Company, a corporation, and the Eureka Pipe Line Company, a corporation, alleging her marriage to the said B. A. Swiger, and that the said 89½ acres, of which her father, Daniel Wright, died seised, became the property of herself and her husband, he having purchased the interests of the other heirs, and alleging the conveyance to plaintiff by defendant B. A. Swiger of all his interest in said tract of 89½ acres of land by said deed of September 24, 1888, under which she was placed in possession of said land by her husband, whereby she became the owner in fee simple of the entire tract, subject to the dower of said Prudence Wright; that the plaintiff lived with her said husband on said land, exercising the rights of ownership thereof, until her husband, seeming to be desirous of getting possession of said property and the title thereto, began to insist upon plaintiff's reconveying said land to him or to one of his sons, which plaintiff declined to do, which state of affairs continued for some time, and, as it continued, her husband became more violent and abusive towards her, until by threats of personal violence and by personal violence to her forced her to leave home, which was about the summer of 1890, when he took forcible and unlawful possession of said tract of land, in spite of the entreaties of plaintiff to him to regard her rights in the premises; that after forcing her to leave her home he continued his threats of violence and abuse toward plaintiff until he coerced her, by intimidation and through fear of him, into executing the paper writing dated the 1st day of December, 1890, purporting to be a deed for said tract of land, except the 9 acres; that plaintiff was about 65 years of age, frail and delicate, almost blind, and illiterate, and did not know at the time she executed said deed of December 1, 1890, what her rights were in the premises, and, being afraid of him, was afraid to inquire, and that not until quite recently, within two years, was she apprised of what her rights in the premises were; that she brought the ejectment suit and this suit at the risk of her life, because her husband was a smart, scheming, and unscrupulous man, and regarded as a dangerous man when angry at a person or seeking to accomplish his ends; that he was a dangerous and quarrelsome man, and had been engaged in lawsuits more or less all of his life, and also a strong, able-bodied man; that shortly after he forced her to execute the deed of December 1, 1890, he gave an oil and gas lease on said land, receiving a large sum of money as a bonus, and had received rentals, etc., in all aggregating $1,000 or more; that defendant sold a large amount of trees and lumber off of said land, which trees and lumber were worth at least $1,000; that he afterwards sold and conveyed to the South Penn Oil Company one-half of the one-eighth royalty oil reserved by him in the lease for the sum of $500; that he conveyed by deed to Nathan Knight six acres of said tract of land—alleging that said deed from plaintiff to defendant of December 1, 1890, and defendant's lease to the South Penn Oil Company, and his deed conveying one-half of the royalty oil reserved in said lease, and his deed to Nathan Knight for the six acres, part of said tract of land, are clouds upon the title of plaintiff, which she was entitled to have removed by a court of equity, and accordingly prayed therefor and for general relief.

The defendant Benoni A. Swiger filed his demurrer, and also his answer, denying the allegations of the bill alleging his mistreatment of the plaintiff and the threats against her, and averring that the deed dated December 1, 1890, from his wife to himself was a free act on her part, and filed, with his answer, as an exhibit, another writing, bearing date the 1st day of December, 1890, styled an "indenture," executed by himself and the plaintiff, purporting to be an article of compromise, which paper is copied in the early part of this opinion. Defendant denied that he made, signed, acknowledged, executed, and delivered the deed of September 24, 1888, and averred that the same was a forgery, "procured and caused to be made and falsely certified, through and by the acts, solicitations, connivances, and deceptions of the said Nancy Swiger and Jacob Swiger, son of plaintiff and defendant, who confederated and conspired together, as respondent is informed, and by false representations, personations, and otherwise induced and deceitfully caused the notary, Amaziah Ashburn, to write said deed, to which the said Jacob, as respondent is informed, wrote, signed, and forged the name of 'B. A. Swiger,' after which the said Nancy and Jacob wrongfully and deceitfully procured the false and untrue certificate of said notary thereto, with intent and purpose on the part of said Nancy and son Jacob to cheat and defraud this respondent; that the making of said deed was kept secret from this respondent for a long time; that it was not, in fact, admitted to record until, to wit, the 22d day of January, 1889; that immediately upon receiving some information that such writing was in existence respondent began to make inquiry and investigation, and to his surprise and astonishment he ascertained that such writing had been made as hereinbefore stated;" that he went to plaintiff, and she denied that any deed had been made; that he then went to the county clerk's office and found it on record, after which he saw plaintiff and so informed her, when she admitted that such writing was made in his absence; that she and her son had caused it to be made, only intending to use it in the event that anything should happen respondent—should he die or not return home. Respondent denied that any of the bonus, rentals, or other moneys that came to his hands by reason of or under or by virtue of said oil lease and gas lease, said royalty grant, proceeds on oil, gas, timber, or otherwise be longed to plaintiff, and denied that an accounting therefor should be ordered, and prayed that said land, 89½ acres, except said lot No. 8 and said dower interest, might be held and decreed to be the property of respondent, free and acquit from the claim of plaintiff; that said lease and royalty grant and the said Knight deed might be held firm and stable; that said writing purporting to be a deed dated the 24th day of September, 1888, from respondent to plaintiff, might be decreed null and void and set aside; and that plaintiff might be forever enjoined and restrained from using said writing or claiming title thereunder, and for general relief.

The plaintiff filed her demurrer to the affirmative matter set up in said answer and cross-bill, and her answer and special replication thereto, denying the allegations of said answer and cross-bill setting up new matter. The South Penn Oil Company also filed its answer.

Many depositions were taken and filed on behalf of the plaintiff, as well as of the defendant Benoni A. Swiger, and the cause was finally heard on the 2d day of October, 1903, when the plaintiff replied generally to the answer and cross-bill of the defendant B. A. Swiger, except as to the affirmative matter, to which she had filed a special replication, which the defendant moved to strike from the record, which motion the court overruled. The court found that the plaintiff and defendant B. A. Swiger were husband and wife, and had never been divorced; that B. A. Swiger had made, executed, and delivered to plaintiff, Nancy Swiger, the deed of September 24, 1888, and that the same was not forged as charged in defendant's answer and cross-bill, and decreed that defendant B. A. Swiger was not entitled to the relief prayed for in his answer and cross-bill; that since this suit was brought the said Nancy Swiger, the South Penn Oil Company, and Nathan Knight had separately compromised the matters and differences between them in regard to their respective interests and purchases of said tract of land, and the oil and gas therein, and that B. A. Swiger was then and had been in possession of said tract of land, except the part by him conveyed to Knight, embraced in the litigation in this cause, ever since the 1st of December, 1890, enjoying the rents, issues, and profits thereof, collecting bonuses made thereon, and selling timber thereon, and that said tract of land had produced a large amount of oil, and that a part thereof was by the South Penn Oil Company turned over to the defendant B. A. Swiger, before the institution of this suit and shortly thereafter, and further decreed that the plaintiff, Nancy Swiger, was entitled to the relief prayed for in her bill, and that she did not by deed dated December 1, 1890, pass to said B. A. Swiger her interest or right in and to the tract of land and property in controversy in this suit, and the court was further of opinion that said deed of December 1, 1890, was a cloud upon Nancy Swiger's right, title, and interest, and decreed that the same be set aside, annulled, and vacated and held to be void, and that the said Nancy Swiger was the owner in equity of said tract of land, and the rents, issues, and profits thereof be subject to her compromise with the South Penn Oil Company and Nathan Knight and their respective interests, which had been theretofore compromised, and subject to the dower interest of Prudence Wright in about 4 acres, part of the 7 acres and 118 poles now owned by the defendant B. A. Swiger, and upon which well No. 1, drilled upon said farm, was located, and it was further decreed that the South Penn Oil Company or the Eureka Pipe Line Company turn over to M. R. Crouse and G. W. Farr, attorneys for Nancy Swiger, all the one-sixteenth part of the oil produced by the South Penn Oil Company since the 10th day of May, 1901, and yet to be produced from the tract of $89\frac{1}{2}$ acres of land which had been claimed by Benoni A. Swiger, and which had been held since the 10th day of May, 1901, the court being of opinion that Benoni A. Swiger did not own said oil, but that the same belonged to said Nancy Swiger, except the said oil company or pipe line company should turn over to Lathrop R. Charter, Jr., who was appointed as special receiver to receive the same, one sixteenth of all the oil produced since the 10th day of May, 1901, and yet to be produced during the life of Prudence Wright in well No. 1, drilled within the dower interest of the said Prudence Wright, and now owned by the defendant B. A. Swiger, and authorizing the special receiver to sell the production from well No. 1, and loan the proceeds thereof and pay the interest from such loans to the defendant B. A. Swiger or his assigns, during the lifetime of Prudence Wright, and upon the death of said Prudence, after the payment of legal charges and costs connected with the receivership, the principal derived from the sale of the production from said well No. 1 to be turned over to the attorneys for Nancy Swiger, and on motion of plaintiff the cause was referred to a commissioner to ascertain and report the share of oil due Nancy Swiger under the tract of land or already produced therefrom, by whom held, and the value thereof, if the same had not already been turned over, as before provided in said decree, by the said oil company, or pipe line company, or both of them, and said commissioner was also directed to ascertain and report the rental value of the surface of said tract of $89\frac{1}{2}$ acres of land per year from December 1, 1890, less a part thereof already conveyed to Nathan Knight, and who was liable for the rent thereof, and also to ascertain and report the amount of rentals, bonus money, and other money received by the defendant B. A. Swiger from the tract of land in controversy since December 1, 1890, and to ascertain and report the amount and value of the oil received by the said B. A. Swiger from said tract of land, and to state and settle the accounts between B. A. Swiger and Nancy Swiger, and also directed to credit the said B. A. Swiger with any permanent improvement and the value thereof put upon said land since the 1st day of December, 1890, and also credit him with the taxes paid thereon, in so far as the same might be legally shown to exist before the commissioner. From this decree, defendant B. A. Swiger appealed.

Appellee contends that there is no appeal pending, and that on the 8th of September, 1904, an order was entered dismissing the appeal granted January 1, 1904, under rule 3 of the Supreme Court (45 S. E. viii), for failure to print the record. On the said 8th day of September, 1904, a supplemental petition was filed, making the original petition and assignment of errors and transcript of the record of the case a part of such supplemental petition, and prayed "that said order of dismissal may be set aside, that said appeal and supersedeas heretofore allowed may be reinstated, and said cause matured and heard by your honors." It is contended by appellee's counsel that the order granting the second appeal makes no reference to the order of dismissal, nor does it reinstate the cause, that it does not renew the appeal and supersedeas, and that the order entered is responsive to the prayer of the original petition, but not responsive to the prayer for appeal and supersedeas to be renewed. The fourth section of rule 3 of the Supreme Court provides: "An appeal or writ of error dismissed in accordance with this rule may be renewed upon presenting a new petition reciting the fact of the former petition and allowance and dismissal and referring to the assignments of error contained in the former petition." And the new petition, praying that the order of dismissal might be set aside, and that said appeal and supersedeas heretofore allowed may be renewed, complies with the rule, in that it refers to the former petition and assignments of error and the transcript of the record, and made them a part of said petition, and, the new petition being presented within two years from the date of the decree appealed from, the appeal was properly allowed.

Appellant says that the court erred in overruling his demurrer to the bill, first, because the bill's own allegation shows that the plaintiff had abandoned her husband and the land in the summer of 1890, and her suit was not brought until December 14, 1900, and the bill filed at January rules, 1901. More than 10 years having elapsed, her suit was barred. The subpoena in chancery was not copied into the record, but the petition for appeal says: "The summons was issued by the clerk of the circuit court of Tyler county, November 14, 1900, and the bill filed at rules held for said court on the first Monday in January, 1901." Section 5, c. 124, Code 1899, provides that "the process to commence a suit shall be a writ commanding the officer to whom it is directed to summon the defendant to answer the bill or action." It has been frequently held by this court that the date of the issuance of the writ is the commencement of the suit. See United States Blow Pipe Company v. Spencer, 46 W. Va. 590, 33 S. E. 342; Lambert v. Manufacturing Company, 42 W. Va. 813, 28 S. E. 431; Abney v. Lumber Company, 45 W. Va. 448, 32 S. E. 256. The allegations of the bill do not show that the plaintiff abandoned her husband and the land in the summer of 1890, but she alleges that after the execution of said deed of the 1st day of December, 1890, defendant drove her off the land, and she was forced to move onto the tract of land belonging to her mother in Doddridge county, and the proof is not certain as to when she actually left the place, and dates are given from about the 15th of December until March, 1901. The suit is not for a divorce nor for separation, nor does plaintiff pray for the possession of the land, to the exclusion of defendant, but that her property shall be restored to her possession and control, and the deed made by her of the 1st day of December, 1890, be set aside and annulled and held as void. There can be in this case no limitations in favor of B. A. Swiger, by adverse possession or otherwise, because his possession of the wife's land cannot be adverse to her interests, and the doctrine laid down in Randolph v. Casey, 43 W. Va. 289, 27 S. E. 231, does not apply. That was not a contest between husband and wife, but between a married woman and an innocent purchaser for value from the purchaser from plaintiff, the married woman, when the husband had joined in the conveyance to the purchaser and the purchaser had conveyed to Casey, who had held the possession 13 years under color of title before Mrs. Randolph brought her suit. After the deed of September 24, 1888, from B. A. Swiger to Nancy Swiger, the possession by Swiger was that of trustee for his wife; his conveyance of September 24, 1888, being only a conveyance of the equitable title, and the legal title still remaining in B. A. Swiger for her benefit. In Helakill v. Powell, 23 W. Va. 717 (Syl., point 2), it is held: "When the relation of trustee and cestui que trust is once established, no subsequent dealing with the trust property by the trustee can relieve the property of the trust as between the trustee and the cestui que trust." And (point 3): "The bar of the statute of limitations will not be applied in equity to the enforcement of a claim of which equity alone has cognizance." And in Cramer v. McSwords, 24 W. Va. 594 (Syl., point 3), it is held: "In a suit in equity to enforce a purely equitable demand, the defense of the statute of limitations can have no application of itself or by analogy to any limitation in courts of law. Such cases must be determined by courts of equity upon rules and principles of their own." And point 5 is as follows: "While ignorance of law will not prevent the operation of the statute of limitations, the rule is different in equity, a court of conscience. In such court moral, as well as legal, grounds may be considered, and a satisfactory moral excuse may be entertained, although it resulted from ignorance of law." See, also, Berry v. Wiedman, 40 W. Va. 36, 20 S. E. 817, 52 Am. St. Rep. 866; Manning v. Manning, 79 N. C. 293, 28 Am. Rep. 324. Righter v. Riley, 42 W. Va. 633, 26 S. E. 357 (Syl., point 1): "The claim of a wife against her husband is not barred by the statute of limitations during coverture, if at all, until 20 years from the original inception or written renewal thereof."

It is insisted by appellant that the demurrer ought to have been sustained for want of parties, and that B. Engle, trustee, and J. V. Blair the beneficiary under deeds of trust executed by B. A. Swiger upon the property, to secure certain debts of B. A. Swiger to said Blair, should have been made parties to the bill. Robinson v. Dix, 18 W. Va. 523, holds that "a demurrer to a bill for want of parties should properly name the necessary parties defendant who have been omitted, so as to enable the plaintiff to amend his bill and call the attention of the court to this defect, and, if it does not, the demurrer cannot complain that the demurrer is not sustained." The demurrer in the case at bar fails to mention want of proper parties. In Thomas v. Wood, 61 Ind. 132, it is held: "An objection to a complaint that there is a defect of parties should be taken by demurrer, where such defect appears upon the face of the complaint. * * * Where such defect does not appear upon the face of the complaint, the objection should be taken by answer. * * * Such objection, if not so made in court below, is thereby waived, and cannot be raised for the first time in the Supreme Court of Appeals." And in Hutton v. Cuthbert, 51 Mich. 229, 16 N. W. 386, it is held that "a defendant to a bill in equity cannot object to the omission to implead parties whose names they themselves will not disclose." It is not made to appear by any pleadings in the cause that Engle and Blair were necessary parties in the cause, nor that such trust deeds were in existence; but copies of two deeds of trust executed on said property by B. A. Swiger, one dated October 29, 1891, the other April 6, 1892, were filed as exhibits by the defendant with the deposition of Nathan Knight, taken and filed in the cause, which deeds of trust purport to secure on said property the indebtedness mentioned therein, due from B. A. Swiger, and it nowhere appears in the record that the indebtedness so secured or any part of it remains unpaid. Defendant was not competent to incur said property by deeds of trust, or otherwise; it being held in trust by him for Nancy Swiger. Section 1, c. 66, Code 1899; Wormley v. Wormley, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 421, 5 L. Ed. 651; Chaffe v. Oliver (C. C.) 3 Fed. 809; Heiskell v. Powell, supra; Cranmer v.

McSwords, supra; Seborn v. Beckwith, 30 W. Va. 774, 5 S. E. 450; Guernsey v. Lazear, 51 W. Va. 328, 41 S. E. 405; Mundy v. Vawter, 8 Grat. 519; Heth v. Railroad Co., 4 Grat. 482, 50 Am. Dec. 88. From the time of the conveyance by said B. A. Swiger to Nancy Swiger of September 24, 1888, the grantor became the trustee of Nancy, holding for her the legal title, which he could neither transfer nor incur, and the said deed, being of record, was notice to Engle and Blair, as well as all others, that he held such title only as trustee. Therefore the said deeds of trust were void. The deed of December 1, 1890, from Nancy to B. A. Swiger, was no protection to them, as the same was null and void.

But it is contended by appellant that the said deed of December 1, 1890, is aided by the compromise deed of the same date, signed, sealed, and acknowledged by both of them, when considered and construed together, as is proper to be done; and he cites 2 Pom. Eq. Juris. (2d Ed.) § 850, and also Korne v. Korne, 30 W. Va. 1, 3 S. E. 17, where it is held: "Where a compromise of a doubtful right made between parties, it is binding, and cannot be affected by any subsequent investigation or result; and this is so whether it is a compromise of doubtful question of law or fact." See section 850, just cited, that such compromise "will not be disturbed for any ordinary mistake, either of law or fact, in the absence of conduct otherwise inequitable, since their very object is to settle all such possible errors without judicial controversy." Such compromise, to be effective, must be fair and equitable. By the "terms of the deed of compromise" in case at bar, the only consideration passing from B. A. Swiger to his wife Nancy is "one spotted cow and five pictures, small, and enlarged pictures in frame, and cupboard ware, all she desire." By it he is relieved from all liability to assist or support the said Nancy Swiger, and he agrees to live separate and apart from her, and in no wise to interfere with her business or thereafter "claim or demand any of her money, jewels, plate, clothing, household goods, furniture, or stock in trade, which she now has in her power, custody or possession, which she shall or may at any time hereafter have, buy, or procure, or which shall be devised or given to her, or that she may otherwise acquire, and that she shall and may enjoy and absolutely dispose of the same as if she was a feme sole and unmarried." It would seem that the principal consideration for the deed of compromise and the conveyance of the land of December 1, 1890, was the solemn agreement on the part of the vendee to live separate and apart from his wife during their natural lives. If the evidence of his treatment of her is to be believed, that might be construed to be a consideration, or at least a benefit to her, in case her property was restored to her; but can it be said that one spotted cow and five cheap pictures and some cupboard ware could be a sufficient consideration for the 80 acres of land conveyed by her to him? It does appear to me that this compromise is not fairly made, and is in no sense equitable and just.

The court is asked by the appellant to consider and construe together the deed of December 1, 1890, and the compromise deed of the same date. If there was any doubt about the deed of December 1, 1890, being inequitable and without consideration, the compromise deed executed on the same day would dispel all such doubt and make it clear that some improper influence was brought to bear to bring about its execution. The compromise deed, as far as appears upon its face, is entirely independent of the other deed, makes no reference to it or the land in any respect, but is simply an agreement to live separate and apart, not only relieving defendant from the support and care of his wife, whom he had pledged himself solemnly to love, cherish, and support, but casts upon the plaintiff, Nancy Swiger, the burden of the care and control of their daughter, Mary Margaret Swiger. In Switzer v. Switzer, 26 Grat. 574, it is held (Syl., point 2): "A contract between a husband and wife in an agreement for a separation cannot be sustained in any case in which it does not clearly appear that in the negotiation which preceded the agreement, as well as the time of executing the same, the wife was in a position in which she could act and did act, not only with perfect freedom, but with a full knowledge and appreciation of all the circumstances of her situation, and of her individual and marital rights; and the contract in itself must be fair and just, wholly free from exception, and such as a court of equity might have imposed upon the parties in a case in which their persons and their property had properly fallen under its jurisdiction and control." See, also, McKenzie v. Railroad Company, 27 W. Va. 306, 311. It cannot be said that this contract is fair and just, wholly free from exception, and such as a court of equity would impose upon the parties in a suit between them. In Cheuvront v. Cheuvront, 54 W. Va. 171, 46 S. E. 233 (Syl., point 3), it is held that "in a suit brought by a wife against the husband to set aside and cancel a deed or contract between them for fraud in its procurement, by which the husband obtained an advantage over her, the burden of proof is on the husband to show that the wife was fully informed as to the effects of the transaction, and also the utmost fairness thereof." The deed of December 1, 1890, conveying from plaintiff to defendant the land, recites as the consideration therefor one dollar, and there is almost no evidence of any other or further consideration. Not even the "spotted cow and five pictures" are mentioned in that deed. The defendant in his own deposition does make a lame attempt at trumping up a show of consideration, claiming the amount of $881 as passing to his wife as a consideration; but on cross-examination he fails to make a statement of it at all satisfactory. The burden of proof is on B. A. Swiger to show that his dealings were fair, just, and equitable, and this he has failed to show. Cheuvront v. Cheuvront, supra; Darlington's Appeal, 86 Pa. 512, 27 Am. Rep. 726.

It is insisted by appellant that the court erred in sustaining the deed of September 24, 1888, from B. A. Swiger to Nancy Swiger, claiming that the proof is clear that the same was a forgery. There is a vast amount of testimony as to the genuineness of the signature to this deed, and the evidence is very contradictory, scarcely a preponderance either the one way or the other, as to the signature. It is useless to go into a discussion of the evidence taken in the cause. Four witnesses, including the plaintiff, swear positively that they saw the deed delivered by defendant to plaintiff. Defendant examined quite a number of witnesses, some of whom testify that they did not believe the signature to be that of B. A. Swiger, while others say it looked like his, but they were not able to say whether it was his or not. On the other hand, many others testified that they believed it to be his genuine signature. There were very few who could be regarded as experts in the matter of handwriting, some of whom were of opinion that it was not the handwriting of defendant, while others, equally as well qualified as experts, were of the opinion that the signature was genuine. There are some circumstances which tend largely to prove the genuineness of the deed. It is not denied that the notary public, Amaziah Ashburn, certified the acknowledgment. In his answer defendant Swiger does not charge that Ashburn fraudulently made the certificate, but charges that plaintiff and her son, Jacob Swiger, conspiring together, had wrongfully and deceitfully procured the false and untrue certificate of said notary to said deed, "with intent and purpose on the part of said Nancy and son, Jacob, to cheat and defraud this respondent." There seems to have been no disposition on the part of plaintiff to conceal the fact that she had the deed, telling the fact, soon after she got it, that her husband had made a deed to her for the property, and within four months after its execution she placed it upon record. She says, and some other witnesses say, that she did so at his suggestion. He says in his answer, referring to the date of the recordation of said deed, "that immediately upon receipt of some information that such writing was in existence respondent began to make inquiry and investigation, and to his surprise and astonishment he ascertained that such writing had been made as hereinbefore stated." And in his testimony states that he first learned of the existence of the deed from his son in the wheat field, or at wheat harvest, in 1889. A very significant fact was brought out by the testimony of William M. Ashburn, who testified that he went to B. A. Swiger to get a lease on the land on which Swiger lived; that they agreed on a lease; that was in the evening, and the next morning he went to Swiger, who told him the old lady objected to signing the lease; that he (Ashburn) went into the house to persuade her to sign the lease, as it was his business to get it, and while they were talking Swiger began talking to her, persuading her to sign it; that he went out of the house, or they went into another room; they were by themselves, anyhow. When he got with them again, she agreed to sign the lease and signed it. The lease was made to W. S. Furbee & Co. There is a lease filed as an exhibit with the depositions, dated November 15, 1888, made by Nancy Swiger to W. S. Furbee & Co. The lease taken by Ashburn, and which B. A. Swiger induced Nancy to sign, was not signed or executed by B. A. Swiger. What could have been the object of defendant Swiger in having Nancy Swiger to execute the lease, if he did not recognize the fact that it was her land? And if hers, it could only be such under the deed of September 24, 1888. Under this lease she reserved to herself the one-eighth part of the oil produced, and the lessee was to pay her $200 per annum for each and every gas well drilled on the premises, payable within 60 days after the completion of said well, and the lease provided for a rental of 50 cents per acre to be paid to the lessor in case of certain delays mentioned. The evidence in relation to this lease is undenied in any particular by defendant Swiger. Jones on Evidence, § 237. "Whatever a party voluntarily admits to be true, though the admission be contrary to his interest, may reasonably be taken for the truth." So that it is made clear, and not denied by Swiger, that after he knew of the deed of September 24, 1888, he induced the plaintiff to lease the land as her own, and did not at that time lay claim to it, or question her right to lease it, but insisted upon her leasing it. "Where a certificate of acknowledgment is regular on its face, a strong presumption exists in favor of its truth, and the burden of proof rests on the party assailing it." 1 Cyc. 632; Rollins v. Menager, 22 W. Va. 461. In Kerr v. Russell, 69 Ill. 666, 18 Am. Rep. 634, it is held: "As a fine and recovery at common law was subject to impeachment for fraud, so the certificate of acknowledgment of a deed by a wife may be impeached; but the proof to sustain such charge must be of the clearest, strongest, and most convincing character and by disinterested witnesses." And in McPherson v. Sanborn, 88 Ill. 150: "Very clear and satisfactory proof is required to impeach a certificate of acknowledgment of a deed or mortgage." And in Tunison v. Chamblin, 88 Ill. 378, it is held: "The certificate of acknowledgment of a deed imports verity, and cannot be overcome, except by clear and satisfactory evidence. The evidence of the grantor denying the execution of the deed and the opinion of experts that the signature thereto is not that of the grantor are not sufficient." See, also, Lickmon v. Harding, 85 Ill. 505. Judge Holt, in Machine Co. v. Burlack, 35 W. Va. 647, 657, 14 S. E. 319, 322, speaking of the delivery of instruments, says: "First, we must under such circumstances look to the thing done, and not to the thing said; and, second, a solemn deed is not to be exposed to the danger of falsehood and fraud, nor to the 'uncertain, slippery memory of man.'" The signature of Ashburn, the notary public, to the certificate of acknowledgment, is unquestioned, and there is no charge in the pleadings that the notary acted fraudulently, or that he did not make such certificate in good faith. The presumption is that he did his duty. The statute prescribes his duty in the premises, and the certificate is in accordance therewith; and when a duty is laid upon a public officer the presumption is that he performs it according to law, and the contrary must be shown by the objecting party. Lamb v. Cecil, 25 W. Va. 238. The notary, Ashburn, was dead before this litigation. Defendant B. A. Swiger testified that Dr. Amaziah Ashburn, the notary, had his son write a paper for him, which he signed, to the effect that defendant had never signed or acknowledged the deed before him, and that Lovina Swiger and Valentine Underwood testified that they were present when Francis did the writing, but did not know just what he wrote and gave to Benoni. But Francis, on the other hand, swears absolutely that no such thing ever took place, that he was not called upon by his father to do such writing, and that it was absolutely false. The defendant failed to produce any such writing, and failed to account satisfactorily for its non-production.

After a careful review of the whole cause, I am unable to see that the circuit court erred in its decree, and therefore the same is affirmed.

(58 W. Va. 146)

STATE v. MOYER.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 31, 1905.)

1. EMBEZZLEMENT—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Embezzlement is a fraudulent appropriation or misapplication of the property of another by one in whose care it has been intrusted, with the intention of depriving the owner thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 18, Cent. Dig. Embezzlement, §§ 1-10.]

2. SAME.

Under section 19, c. 18, p. 89, acts 1903, in order to constitute the crime of embezzlement it is necessary to show (1) the trust relation of the person charged, and that he falls within that class of persons named; (2) that the property or thing claimed to have been embezzled or converted is such property as is embraced in the statute; (3) that it is the property of another person; (4) that it came into the possession or was placed in the care of the accused under and by virtue of his office, place, or employment; (5) that his manner of dealing with or disposing of the property constituted a fraudulent conversion and an appropriation of the same to his own use; and (G) that the conversion of the property to his own use was with the intent to deprive the owner thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 18, Cent. Dig. Embezzlement, §§ 1-10.]

3. SAME—DETENTION OF MONEY.

The mere detention of money belonging to another, without a fraudulent intent to deprive that other of his property, does not constitute embezzlement.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 18, Cent. Dig. Embezzlement, § 8.]

4. SAME—EVIDENCE.

On a trial for embezzlement, evidence of the solvency of the defendant, at or immediately prior to the time of the alleged embezzlement, is admissible.

5. CRIMINAL LAW — GOOD CHARACTER — EVIDENCE.

In a criminal prosecution, evidence of the previous good character of the defendant is always admissible; but it should be confined to the trait of character at issue.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 10, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, § 840.]

6. EMBEZZLEMENT—JOINT OWNERSHIP.

Where by the terms of the contract under which an agent is employed to collect money on commission he is required to turn over to his employer the whole amount collected before being entitled to commissions, the agent is not such a joint owner of the fund as will prevent his prosecution and conviction for the embezzlement of the whole sum.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 18, Cent. Dig. Embezzlement, § 14.]

7. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

On a trial for embezzlement, it is not error to instruct the jury that if the money, or any portion of the money, alleged to have been embezzled, came into the defendant's hands as the agent of and in behalf of his principal, and that he fraudulently converted the said money, or some portion of the same, to his own use, he would be guilty of the embezzlement thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 18, Cent. Dig. Embezzlement, § 13.]

8. SAME—EVIDENCE.

Under an indictment for embezzlement, it is sufficient for the state to prove the embezzlement of any part of the amount alleged to have been embezzled.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 18, Cent. Dig. Embezzlement, § 58.]

9. SAME—DEMAND.

In a prosecution for embezzlement, it is not necessary to show a demand for the return of money collected by an agent, and a refusal upon his part to do so, where by the terms of the contract the time for an accounting and the payment of the money is definitely fixed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 18, Cent. Dig. Embezzlement, § 9.]

10. SAME—PRESUMPTIONS.

But under our statute, in a prosecution for embezzlement, if it appears that the money or property is unlawfully withheld by the accused from the person entitled thereto, and that he has failed to restore or account for such money or other property within 30 days after proper demand has been made therefor, he shall be presumed to be guilty; but such presumption may be rebutted by proof.

11. SAME—DEMAND.

While such demand may be made for the purpose of creating the presumption of fraudulent conversion against the accused, yet it is not essential when the embezzlement or fraudulent conversion can be otherwise proven, except when under the peculiar circumstances of the case a demand should be made.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 18, Cent. Dig. Embezzlement, § 9.]

12. SAME.

On the trial of a charge of embezzlement, proof that the money alleged to have been embezzled by an agent was received in several sums, at different times, and from different persons, during a course of continuous dealing between such agent and his principal, will support a verdict of the jury finding the aggregate sum as the amount of a single embezzlement.

Poffenbarger, J., dissenting.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Fayette County.

William C. Moyer was convicted of embezzlement, and brings error. Reversed.

Adam Littlepage and J. R. Thrift, for plaintiff in error. C. W. May, Atty. Gen., Frank Lively, E. L. Nuckolls, and C. W. Osenton, for the State.

SANDERS, J. This case is here on a writ of error to the judgment of the criminal court of Fayette county, convicting the defendant of embezzlement.

We are asked by the Attorney General to dismiss the case, for the reason that application for the writ of error should first have been made to the circuit court, or judge thereof, and upon the refusal of the court or judge to grant the writ, or upon the affirmance of the judgment by the circuit court after granting the same, then application could be made to this court for such writ. The printed record does not show that the prisoner's application for a writ of error was acted upon by the circuit court; but this is a clerical error, for the original transcript of the record shows that the defendant did present his petition to the judge of the circuit court for such writ, and that it was refused. Therefore the law in this respect has been complied with.

The conviction is sought to be upheld under section 19, c. 18, p. 89, Acts 1903, amending and re-enacting section 19, c. 145, p. 955, of the Code of 1899, which provides: "If any officer, agent, clerk or servant * * * of any incorporated bank, or other corporation * * * embezzle or fraudulently convert to his own use, bullion, money, bank notes, security for money, or any effects or property of any other person, which shall have come into his possession or been placed under his care or management, by virtue of his office, place or employment, he shall be guilty of larceny thereof. In the prosecution of any such officer, agent, clerk or servant, charged with such embezzlement, fraudulent conversion or larceny, if it appear that the possession of such bullion, money, bank notes, security for money or other property is unlawfully withheld by such officer, agent, clerk or servant, from the person or persons entitled thereto, and that such officer, agent, clerk or servant has failed or refused to restore or account for such bullion, money, bank notes, security for money or other property, within thirty days after proper demand has been made therefor, such accused officer, agent, clerk or servant shall be presumed to be guilty of such offense; but the accused may rebut such presumption by disproving any such facts or by other competent testimony germane to the issue, upon the trial." The defendant is charged with having entered into a contract with the Prudential Insurance Company of America, a corporation, to solicit and write life insurance for it, and that he entered upon his employment thereunder as such agent, and solicited and received various applications for life insurance policies, and collected the premiums therefor, and fraudulently converted the amount thereof to his own use. The defendant admits the employment, and the collection by him of the various sums of money as premiums on said policies, but claims that he made a true accounting thereof to his employer.

Embezzlement is purely a statutory offense. It was unknown to the common law, and the statute was enacted for the purpose of supplying what were regarded as defects in the common law of larceny, so as to reach and punish for the fraudulent conversion of money or property which could not be reached by the common law. And while our statute denominates the offense "larceny," and concludes by providing that the person so committing an act of embezzlement shall be deemed guilty of larceny, yet embezzlement is generally regarded as a separate and distinct crime, and is so treated. The distinction between embezzlement and larceny is that embezzlement is the wrongful conversion of property without trespass, or where the original taking and possession is lawful. In order to constitute the offense, it is necessary that the property embezzled should come lawfully into the hands of the party embezzling, and by virtue of the position of trust he occupies to the person whose property he takes. Under our statute, referred to, it is necessary to show, first, the trust relation of the person charged and that he falls within that class of persons named; second, that the property or thing claimed to have been embezzled or converted is such property as is embraced in the statute; third, that it is the property of another person; fourth, that it came into the possession or was placed in the care of the accused under and by virtue of his office, place, or employment; fifth, that his manner of dealing with or disposing of the property constituted a conversion and appropriation of the same to his own use; and, sixth, that the embezzlement or fraudulent conversion of the property to his own use was with the intent to deprive the owner of his property. A mere detention of money belonging to another, without a fraudulent intent to convert it to the use of the one by whom it is detained and to deprive that other person of such property, does not constitute embezzlement. The appropriation of money held by an agent is not, under our statute, larceny, unless it be done with the fraudulent intent to deprive the owner of his property, or the use and benefit thereof. The mere fact of the appropriation or use of property may be an innocent exercise of dominion, if the intention exists to repay or restore it. It is the fraudulent intent that constitutes the offense—the intention to make an absolute appropriation, as contradistinguished from a temporary use without any design to defraud the owner or deprive him of his property. If the Legislature intended to make the mere use of money or other property mentioned an offense, it should not have used the language in the act, which says, to "embezzle or fraudulently convert to his own use."

Now, applying the facts to this case: It is established—in fact, it is not otherwise contended—that the accused was the agent of the insurance company, and as such agent he solicited and wrote for it certain life policies and received the premiums therefor. The persons for whom the policies were written and the amount of the premiums paid therefor need not be given, because there is no material difference, if any at all, upon this question. But while the state contends that these premiums have not been paid to the insurance company, yet the defendant claims to have paid all the premiums collected by him, and, in addition, that the company was indebted to him at the time he ceased to work for it. Therefore, upon this question, there is a direct conflict between the defendant and the witness Carter, who was the agent of the company to whom the defendant was authorized to make these payments. The defendant claims that he made all these payments to Carter, while Carter denies this statement. These witnesses stand, in this case, with equal interests, because, if Carter did receive the money, he is liable to his company, the same as the defendant would be, if he has not made such payments. But, inasmuch as this was a question of fact, and the jury found that fact against the prisoner, the next question is, was there a fraudulent conversion of the money by the prisoner to his own use, with the intention of depriving the owner of his property; but if there has been a conversion of any kind shown, and, if so, whether or not it is shown to have been done with fraudulent intent, so as to come within the foregoing definition, we will not say, inasmuch as the case must be reversed for another reason. Neither will we refer to the evidence, except in so far as may be necessary in dealing with the other questions involved.

The defendant complains that the court refused to permit him to introduce evidence showing the amount of money he had on deposit in bank when he quit the employment of the company. In a prosecution for embezzlement, the law does not presume, merely because money has been intrusted to an individual, he has embezzled it; but, when the state makes such charge, it must prove its truth. It does not devolve upon the defendant to disprove it, or to show what disposition he made of the money. "Since the crime of embezzlement depends upon the existence of a fraudulent intent in the mind of the person by whom the money or property is alleged to have been converted, a wide scope is given to the evidence which may be introduced by the state to show a fraudulent or criminal intent, or on behalf of the defense to show the absence thereof." 10 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) 1032, and cases cited. "Since from its nature intent is incapable of direct proof, great latitude is necessarily allowed in proving this element of the offense. Broadly speaking, any evidence is admissible which has a tendency, even the slightest, to establish fraudulent intent, on the one hand, or, on the other, to show the bona fides of the accused." 15 Cyc. 529. On the question of fraudulent conversion and criminal intent, it is competent to prove the financial condition of the defendant. Proof of solvency would be admissible to show the improbability of the act, and all evidence and circumstances, however slight, which tend to prove the improbability of the commission of an offense, should go to the jury, as the question of criminal intent is for the jury to pass upon, from all the facts and circumstances before them. "On the other hand, the fact that a person was in possession of money tends to negative a desire to obtain it by crime or by borrowing, and is always admissible." 1 Wig. on Ev. p. 476. And in U. S. v. Camp, 2 Idaho (Hask.) 231, 10 Pac. 228, the court held: "On a trial for embezzlement, evidence is competent of defendant's pecuniary condition immediately prior to and during the time the offense is alleged to have been committed." It is true that Moore, a witness for the state, testified that the defendant had in bank $205.15, but this does not conclude the defendant. He is not bound by this statement; but, on the other hand, he had the right to contest it, if he so desired.

Then, again, the court instructed the jury that, if at the time the defendant left the service of the company he had enough money in the bank to discharge anything that he might have owed the company, they should consider the fact in determining whether he had an intention to embezzle the funds. If the jury were to take this fact into consideration, it certainly was proper for them to hear evidence on this point, and it should not be confined to the state giving evidence of this character; but the defendant should have been permitted to show what funds he had there. He may have had many times the amount of the company's claim, which was about $150, and, if so, he had the right to put this fact before the jury. Motive is generally an important inquiry in a criminal prosecution. It would be improbable that a man of much means would embezzle a very small sum of money, and the jury should have all such facts before them in passing upon the question of fraudulent conversion and criminal intent.

The defendant excepted to the ruling of the court in refusing to permit certain questions propounded by him to witnesses in an effort to prove good character to be answered. Evidence of previous good character of a person charged with crime is always admissible. It is a fact which he is entitled to have submitted to the jury, the same as any other fact or circumstance favorable to him. Justice Cooley, in People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9, 97 Am. Dec. 162, in calling attention to the importance of this class of testimony, said: "Good character is an important fact with every man, and never more so than when he is put on trial charged with an offense which is rendered improbable in the last degree by a uniform course of life wholly inconsistent with any such crime. There are cases when it becomes a man's sole dependence, and yet it may prove sufficient to outweigh evidence of the most positive character." So, also, in Hanney v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 9 Atl. 339, in holding that evidence of good character is a substantial fact, like any other fact tending to establish defendant's innocence, and that it should be so regarded by both the court and jury, it was observed that "character is of importance in this: It may of itself, in spite of all evidence to the contrary, raise a reasonable doubt in the minds of the jury, and so produce an acquittal. An honest man may, through malice or otherwise, be charged with crime, and his life or liberty be endangered by fallacious circumstances or perjury, and he may be able to produce no evidence to prove his innocence, except his own oath; and if, in such case, a blameless life and unstained character are of no avail—are a mere make-weight in a doubtful case—his condition is a sad one." It is so fundamental that every man charged with a criminal offense has the right to prove his previous good character that it is not necessary to say more on the subject; but the evidence should be confined to the trait of character involved in the prosecution. As in this case, the trait of character in issue is one of honesty and fair dealing, evidence that the defendant is a peaceable, quiet and law-abiding citizen, or that he is a man of sober and industrious habits, would not be admissible, because these questions do not bear upon the defendant's character for honesty. The questions asked may be too general in form; but as to that we do not say, because they can be corrected upon the next trial.

It is claimed that the court erred in giving certain instructions for the state, and in refusing two instructions offered by the defendant. The first instruction given for the state is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that if a person is an officer, agent, clerk, or servant of a corporation, and receive money for or on account of such corporation, and he fraudulently converts the whole sum to his own use, he will be guilty of embezzlement, though he may be entitled to a share of such money as commission." This instruction involves the question as to whether or not an agent who collects money under a contract to retain a certain amount thereof as commission, and to turn over the remainder to his principal, has such an interest in the fund that he cannot be convicted of embezzlement of the whole. This question is presented by the instruction, yet it does not arise in this case, because, by the contract under which the defendant was employed, he was not given the right to retain his commission; but the contract provides that he shall not be entitled to commissions except when the premiums have been paid to the company in cash, and also he is required each week to make a true account of all moneys received by him, and to return, at the same time, all moneys whatsoever received by him, and that he is to receive a salary amounting to a certain per cent. of his collections. Therefore the instruction, without the concluding words, "though he may be entitled to a share of such money as commissions," is good, and, if good without these words, the fact that they are added does not in any way prejudice the defendant.

Instruction No. 2, complained of, is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the prisoner, Wm. C. Moyers, was an officer, agent, clerk, or servant of the Prudential Insurance Company of America, a corporation, from the 1st day of April, 1903, to the 1st day of January, 1904, and as such officer, agent, clerk, or servant of said corporation that the money or any portion of the money mentioned in said indictment came into his hands for and in behalf of the said the Prudential Insurance Company of America, and that the prisoner fraudulently converted the said money or some portion of the same to his own use, then the said prisoner would be guilty of the embezzlement thereof as charged in the indictment." Complaint is made against this instruction as telling the jury that, if the defendant embezzled any portion of the money mentioned in the indictment, he would be guilty of embezzling the whole sum charged. I do not think it subject to this criticism, because it says if the money or any portion of the money mentioned in the indictment came into the defendant's hands, and that he converted the same, or some portion thereof, to his own use, then he would be guilty of the embezzlement thereof, as charged in the indictment. This evidently means that he would be guilty of embezzling that portion of the money which came into his hands, and which he fraudulently converted to his own use, and would not mean that he embezzled the whole amount, as charged in the indictment.

To the other four instructions given on behalf of the state we see no objection, and think there was no error in giving them.

Instruction A, which the court refused to give for the defendant, presents the question as to whether or not it was necessary for the company to have demanded payment of the money by the defendant, and refusal on his part, before he could be found guilty of embezzlement. It is held by some of the courts that it is necessary to make demand upon the defendant to pay the money or return the property only when the statute makes such demand and refusal elements of the crime. 7 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 404, and cases cited; Edelhoff v. State (Wyo.) 36 Pac. 627. "Whether proof of a demand is necessary to show the conversion depends wholly upon the language of the statute." Underhill on Crim. Ev. § 284. 15 Cyc. 495, says: "However, the weight of the authority is to the effect that a demand for the money or other property alleged to have been embezzled need not be made by the prosecution, in the absence of statute to the contrary, except under the peculiar circumstances of the particular case." Our statute does not require a demand and refusal to be shown, and as to whether or not a demand is necessary depends upon the circumstances of the particular case. But in a prosecution under the statute, if it appears that the possession of the money or property alleged to have been embezzled is unlawfully withheld by the defendant from the person lawfully entitled thereto, and that the defendant has failed or refused to restore or account for the same within 30 days after proper demand has been made therefor, such accused officer, agent, clerk, or servant shall be presumed to be guilty. But this presumption is not conclusive, and may be rebutted by any competent evidence. This statute is not designed to require a demand to be made before one can be convicted of embezzlement, but it affords a cumulative remedy; that is, if the state can show that the money or property is unlawfully withheld, and that the statutory demand has been made therefor, and that the money has not been paid or the property restored within the time named in the statute, then the defendant will be presumed to have converted it to his own use, without other proof of a fraudulent conversion. But while the statute provides for such demand, and raises a presumption of guilt against the accused when the same is shown to have been made and not complied with within the statutory period, it does not change the rule, so as to dispense with a demand when, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, it should be given. In this case, under the contract, the defendant agreed to make weekly reports, and to remit all money received by him every week, and, inasmuch as a definite time is fixed by the contract for the payment of the money, it would seem from the authorities that no demand for its payment is necessary, but the fact of conversion can be proved by other evidence. In all cases for embezzlement or fraudulent conversion, evidence of demand for a return of the money or property, and its refusal by the defendant, is competent for the purpose of tending to show conversion; but while it is always admissible, yet it is not always necessary. In the case of Reynolds v. State (N. J. Sup.) 47 Atl. 644, the court, speaking upon this subject and in reference to the case of Fitzgerald v. State, 50 N. J. Law, 475, 14 Atl. 746, says: "This assignment is undoubtedly grounded upon what this court said on the subject of a demand in Fitzgerald v. State, 50 N. J. Law, 475, 14 Atl. 746. That case has given some misapprehension as to the law on this subject, although a careful reading of it seems to leave it free from any uncertainty. That case does not hold that it is necessary, in all cases where money comes lawfully into the hands of an agent or other person within the statute, to make demand before criminal proceedings may be instituted. All that was held there was that the mere neglect to pay over will not justify a conviction for fraudulent conversion where funds have come lawfully into the hands of the defendant. A demand is only one class of evidence for proving fraudulent conversion. Other classes are: (1) Where, by statute, a public officer is required to pay over funds at a definite time, and fails to do so, and there is proof that he has not done so, and has applied the same to his own use, that is evidence from which a jury may find a fraudulent conversion, even without a demand; or (2) where, by the rules and regulations or agreement under which the defendant is employed and to which he is required to conform, a time is definitely fixed for him to account for moneys received, and it appears that he has lawfully received moneys of his employer, but has not paid over same in accordance with such rules, regulations, or agreement, but has converted the same to his own use, this is also evidence from which the jury may find that there was a fraudulent conversion of such funds without formal demand; or (3) where it appears by the evidence that the embezzler has fled after the alleged embezzlement, and that his act and conduct were of such a character, in connection with his flight, as to indicate that his intent was to fraudulently take or convert the funds which he retained, there the jury may also find from such facts a fraudulent conversion, even without a demand. In all cases not coming within any of the classes above mentioned, but which are of an uncertain, or general, or special agency, where the time for the return of the funds collected is indefinite, or not fixed, or which is at the pleasure of the agent or servant, there a demand or other evidence of a fraudulent intent to convert may be necessary to put the defendant in a position of having fraudulently converted the money to his own use. It should be said, however, that a demand and refusal does not of itself in any case establish fraudulent conversion, or conversion by a defendant to his own use, but that it is only evidence to go to the jury upon the question of the defendant's fraudulent conversion." Therefore we think it was not error to refuse to give the instruction in this case.

The defendant's instruction B, presenting the theory of joint ownership, was properly refused, for the reason, as stated in the discussion of instruction No. 1 for the state, under the contract of the defendant with the company, he was not entitled to any part of the money collected by him until he had paid it over to the company, and, therefore he could not have been a joint owner with the company of the fund.

It is assigned as error that the court permitted the state to introduce evidence of a number of distinct transactions, in order to make up the aggregate sum alleged to have been embezzled. It is true the evidence shows that the money which the defendant is charged with having embezzled was collected by him at different times and from different persons; but the collection of these several sums by the defendant was lawful, and in the due course of his employment, and, if there was shown to be a conversion, it was not a distinct and independent conversion of each sum, but the conversion of each sum as one transaction. "On a trial of a charge of embezzlement, the fact that the money alleged to have been embezzled by the defendant was received in several sums, at different times, and from different persons affords no ground for requiring the prosecutor to elect on which sum he will rely for conviction." Gravatt v. State, 25 Ohio St. 162. We do not think the court erred in this respect.

For the reasons given herein, the judgment of the criminal court is reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, and a new trial awarded the defendant.

POFFENBARGER, J. (dissenting). Unless prejudicial to the prisoner, error in rulings on evidence and instructions is not ground for a new trial. In the absence of something in the record by which the court can clearly see that no injury or prejudice to the prisoner could have resulted from such an erroneous ruling, it is cause for a new trial; for error is presumed to have been prejudicial unless the court can see that it was not. State v. Musgrave, 43 W. Va. 672, 28 S. E. 813; Robinson v. Lowe, 56 W. Va. 308, 49 S. E. 250; Ward v. Ward, 47 W. Va. 768, 35 S. E. 873; Osborne v. Francis, 38 W. Va. 812, 18 S. E. 591, 45 Am. St. Rep. 859; Ward v. Brown, 53 W. Va. 228, 44 S. E. 488; State v. Douglass, 23 W. Va. 298. The rule in civil and criminal cases is the same in this respect. State v. Douglass, 23 W. Va. 298.

The prisoner was entitled to show his financial condition, and the court refused to allow him to testify concerning it in one instance; but, if other evidence in the case disclosed it, how could he have been injured by the error? He himself was permitted to say, in the course of his testimony, at another time, that he had had about $350 when he began work for the company, and had nothing at the time of the trial. What money he had in bank appeared from the evidence adduced by the state, as shown by Judge SANDERS' opinion. In this way the jury had before them the financial condition of the prisoner in substance. It was conceded that he had had more money, at the time the conversion is alleged to have been made, than he was charged with having misappropriated, and could have paid what he owed, and his own statement as to what he had had when he began work made it plain that he was probably worth nothing more. He had no right to have his financial condition made the principal issue in the case and ascertained with the exactness and accuracy with which a commissioner in chancery would have reported it. As it substantially appeared in the case, no matter how, he had all the benefit from it that could have resulted from an ascertainment of it to the dollar, and was not injured in the least by the failure of the court to allow him to show it in a particular manner and at a particular time.

The error herein noted being the only one found in the record, I cannot agree to reverse the judgment and allow a new trial for that alone, and therefore dissent.

(38 W. Va. 163)

GRANT v. CUMBERLAND VALLEY CEMENT CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Oct. 31, 1905.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS — ACCOUNT — SUFFICIENCY.

A verified account, filed in the clerk's office of a county court under the provisions of section 8 of chapter 75 of the Code of 1899, for the purpose of preserving a mechanic's lien, must show on its face substantial compliance with the conditions specified in the statute as the requisites of such lien; but, however informal it may be, the lien will stand if it shows such compliance.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Mechanics' Liens, § 208.]

2. SAME—SPECIFICATION OF ITEMS.

When the basis of such lien is work and labor, and the recorded paper shows the kind, amount, and price thereof, failure to enter each month's, day's, or year's service, as the case may be, as a separate item of charge, and credit each payment as a separate item, with the date thereof, will not vitiate such paper, if on its face it discloses with reasonable certainty the kind, amount, and contract price of the service and time of performance. Itemization in form is unnecessary, if it appear in substance and effect.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Mechanics' Liens, §§ 234, 236, 256.]

3. SAME—CONSTRUCTION—CONSIDERATION OF STATEMENT.

To determine the sufficiency of such an account and claim, the account proper and the sworn statement appended to it may be read together and considered as a whole.

4. SAME—PRIOR LIENS—ADJUDICATION.

If there be prior liens by mortgage, deed of trust, judgment, and claims under the mechanic's lien statutes, on the property sought to be subjected to a mechanic's lien, it is not error of which the debtor can complain, if at all, to make the holders of all of such liens parties, convene them before a commissioner, adjudicate them, and decree a sale of the property to satisfy them, although no controversy as to the amounts or priorities of any of them is alleged.

5. SAME—INTEREST IN LAND—EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.

An equity of redemption is not the difference between the value of the property in respect to which it is held and the amount of the liens thereon, but an equitable estate in the property, capable of being enlarged into complete legal title by discharging the liens, and in such case the interest of the owner therein, within the meaning of section 3 of chapter 75 of the Code of 1899, is such equitable estate.

6. EQUITY—BILL—SUFFICIENCY.

If a bill and its exhibits, read together, show all the facts necessary to be alleged in a bill sufficient in law, a demurrer thereto is properly overruled.

7. REFERENCE—PROPER TIME.

An order of reference, made on a bill, to the gravamen of which the answer does not respond by denial, is not premature.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Mineral County.

Suit by James Grant against the Cumberland Valley Cement Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. McDonald, for appellant. Wm. Clayton and Chas. N. Finnell, for appellee.

POFFENBARGER, J. Complaining of a decree of the circuit court of Mineral county in a suit brought by James Grant to enforce a mechanic's lien against the property of the Cumberland Valley Cement Company, a corporation, given by section 7 of chapter 75 of the Code of 1899, said corporation has appealed, assigning as grounds of error the overruling of its demurrer to the bill, premature entry of an order of reference, and provision for the sale of its property for the satisfaction of prior liens thereon, as well as the mechanic's lien, so as to pass the estate in fee simple therein, instead of the sale of its mere equity of redemption in its real estate.

Upon the demurrer it is insisted (1) that the account filed in the clerk's office of the county court for the preservation of the lien lacks some of the requisites of "a just and true account of the amount due," after allowing all credits; (2) that said account does not show the services, for which the lien is claimed, to have been rendered within nine months before the lien was recorded; (3) that prior lienors were made parties to the bill. The account, with the affidavit verifying it, an attested copy of which is exhibited with and made part of the bill, reads as follows:

"The Cumberland Valley Cement Company, to James Grant, Dr.

1903.

May 17th. To salary as superintendent under contract with said company from May 17th, 1899, to May 17th, 1903, four years, at $1,200 per year, to be paid monthly, $100 per month.....$4,800 00

Cr.

By aggregate of all payments made to said James Grant on account of salary up to this date.....$4,000 00

Balance due James Grant.....$ 800 00

"State of Maryland, County of Alleghany—to wit:

"James Grant, being first duly sworn, deposes and says that the foregoing is a just and true account of the amount due him, said James Grant, after allowing all credits, from the Cumberland Valley Cement Company a corporation duly incorporated and organized under the laws of the state of West Virginia, and having its plant, works, real estate, and personal property at Cedar Cliff in Mineral county, West Virginia, for work and labor expended and performed for said company by him as superintendent, under a contract made on the 17th day of May, 1899. And said affiant further says that the real estate of said corporation is a tract of 140 acres of land, more or less, situate, lying, and being at and near Cedar Cliff on the North Branch of the Potomac river and Knobley Mountain, in said county of Mineral, adjoining lands of Carrie Brady and others, which was conveyed to said Cumberland Valley Cement Company by S. Dana Lincoln and wife, by deed dated 13th June, 1899, recorded in the office of the clerk of the county court of Mineral county, West Virginia, in Deed Book Number 20, pages 606 & 607, and on which tract are situated the works of said company at which the said James Grant performed the work and labor aforesaid. And this account is filed for the purpose of securing to said James Grant the benefit of the lien therefor on all the real estate and personal property of said company, which is provided for by the statutes of the state of West Virginia, and the work and labor for the value of which this lien is claimed was not performed more than nine months before the filing of this account.

"James Grant."

The account and sworn statement annexed to it are to be read together upon the inquiry as to whether the statutory requirements have been complied with. U. S. Blowpipe Co. v. Spencer, 40 W. Va. 698, 21 S. E. 769. The account proper sets forth correctly the name of the defendant, without describing it as a corporation; but the sworn statement supplies this defect, if defect it be, by the positive affirmation that it is a corporation. Though it is nowhere stated in so many words that the services for which the lien is claimed were rendered within nine months next preceeding the filing of the account, it is declared, in the language of the statute, that "the work and labor for the value of which this lien is claimed was not performed more than nine months before the filing of this account," and the account claims the salary to May 17, 1903, the day before the filing thereof. It also shows the amount of the earned salary, $4,800, to have been paid to the extent of $4,000, leaving a balance due of $800, a sum less than the salary for nine months. As the services continued until the filing of the account, and the balance due is less than nine months' salary, and the services unpaid for were not performed more than nine months before the filing of the account, the claim must be for services rendered within nine months. In both the account and the statement the claim is described as one for service rendered under a contract with the owner of the property against which it is asserted. Is the account sufficiently itemized? It does not show each month's salary charged as a separate item and each payment as a separate item of credit, in conformity with the view of counsel for the appellant, as to the requirement of the statute. But his objection seems to go to the form of the account, rather than to matter of substance. Itemization is required, so that the debtor and other creditors may determine from an inspection of the recorded account, for what the lien is claimed—whether for work and labor, and, if so, the nature of it, when performed, and at what price; or materials, and, if so, the kind, quality, and price, and when furnished; or both labor and materials, and, if so, the kind, quality, and price of each, and when performed and furnished. The account and sworn statement accompanying it in this case, read together, plainly show the requisite facts, notwithstanding the lack of formality and clerical taste.

A case relied upon as an authority against the form of statement adopted is Rude v. Mitchell, 97 Mo. 365, 11 S. W. 225, cited in Phil. Mech. Liens, § 350, holding as follows: "A lumping item of the whole contract price on the one hand and the credits on the other is no compliance with the law." But this language must be referred to its subject-matter, the account filed in that case, for illustration. It is too general to permit application to all accounts. They differ in nature, according to the subject-matter. The one considered in the case cited was under a contract to make additions to a building, thus involving both labor and materials of several different kinds, and the account was lumped into three large items, without any indication whatever as to how much was for labor and how much for materials. Here it appears on the face of the account that the basis of it is labor, and the kind, amount, and price are all plainly disclosed. What reason is there for requiring further specification? To require more would impose upon the contractor duties which are outside of the purpose underlying the statute, which is that the owner may be able to ascertain the correctness and reasonableness of the demand asserted against his property, and that purchasers and incumbrances may have information concerning the nature and amount of the lien. Phil. Mech. Liens, § 349. "The intention was that the mere inspection of a record to be found at a particular place should disclose all the information necessary in order to enable those interested therein to determine as to the existence of liens on the property." Loan Co. v. Furbush, 80 Fed. 631, 26 C. C. A. 38. Such being the purpose, it obviously follows that a substantial, though not technical, compliance with the statute is sufficient, and this court has so decided in U. S. Blowpipe Co. v. Spencer, 40 W. Va. 698, 21 S. E. 769. "All that is required is that enough should appear on the face of the statement to point the way to successful inquiry." Phil. Mech. Liens, p. 617, § 350, citing Knabb's Appeal, 10 Pa. St. 186, 51 Am. Dec. 472; McLaughlin v. Shaughnessy, 42 Miss. 520; Wilvert v. Sunbury, 81 Pa. 57.

An attested copy of the account and sworn statement is exhibited with the bill and made part thereof. This supplies the want of certain specific allegations which should otherwise have appeared in the bill, but were not inserted. Reading the bill and exhibit together, as the court may do (Sadler v. Taylor, 49 W. Va. 104, 38 S. E. 583; Johnson v. Anderson, 76 Va. 766; Thompson v. Clark, 81 Va. 422), all the necessary allegations appear, as above indicated in the analysis of the account and statement. Mr. Hogg, in his Equity Procedure, at section 124, gives the following clear and concise statement of the requisites of such a bill as this: "The bill to enforce a mechanic's lien must show on its face that the claimant has taken the steps necessary to the creation of such a lien; that the work was done or material furnished in pursuance of a contract with the owner of the property or his authorized agent, to be used in constructing, altering, repairing, or removing the house, mill, manufactory, or other building, appurtenance, fixture, bridge, or other structure against which the lien is claimed; the filing of the account with the proper officer within the time required by law after the claimant has ceased to work or furnish material, together with a description of the property against which the lien is claimed; and there should be an averment of the name of the owner of the property against which the lien is claimed at the time the work was performed or the materials furnished, and it should appear that the suit was brought within the time required by law. The bill must also show the existence of the debt, at the time suit is brought, for the payment of which the lien is sought to be enforced."

The objections based upon the bringing in of prior and subsequent lienors as defendants and upon the direction of the decree to sell the property for the satisfaction and discharge of all the liens reported by the commissioner, may be disposed of together; for they are founded upon one and the same conception and view of the nature of the suit. Section 3 of chapter 75 of the Code of 1899, concerning mechanics' liens, provides that persons who are entitled to assert such a lien shall have liens upon the house or other structure for which labor or materials are furnished "and upon the interest of the owner in the lot or lands on which the same may stand, or to which it may be removed." As there was a prior mortgage and also a prior deed of trust on the real estate of the defendant, in consequence of which it had only an equity of redemption in the property, it is insisted that the mechanic's lien extends to and covers only such interest, and hence that only such persons as are interested in the equity of redemption, namely, the owner and subsequent incumbrancers, should be made parties, and that only the equity of redemption should be sold. This view is supplemented by reference to section 10 of said chapter, by which the mechanic's lienor is required to make all other persons having liens on the property under said chapter parties; the assumption being that only those persons who are designated by the statute as parties should be made defendants. Both of these propositions are untenable. The interest of the owner referred to by the statute is not merely the value less the liens, but is the estate in the land, which may be an estate in fee simple, a life estate, or a term for years, or a mere equitable title, such as enables him, upon compliance with certain requirements, to call in the legal title. The defendant has such title, though incumbered by liens. The legal title is outstanding in the mortgagee; but, upon payment of the mortgage and trust deed debts, the owner would be entitled to call it back and have it revested in him. His equity of redemption is the right to pay the debts and reacquire the legal title, and vest in himself a complete legal fee-simple title. It is upon this right that the plaintiff acquired a lien, and not upon the value of the property less the liens. Suppose some prior liens had been discharged after the mechanic's lien had attached; can it reasonably be said that the interest thus relieved would not be covered by the mechanic's lien, and, if all the prior liens had been thus discharged, this mechanic's lien would not be the first lien? If this were not true, the lien clearly would not cover the interest of the owner.

In some jurisdictions the courts hold that prior lienors are not necessary or proper parties. Tompkins v. Horton, 25 N. J. Eq. 284; Smith v. Shaffer, 46 Md. 573; Portones v. Hadenock, 182 Ill. 377, 23 N. E. 349. Who are necessary parties is determined in the various states by the statutes providing for the enforcement of the lien. In New Jersey, the action is at law and the judgment enforced by execution. In Maryland, the statute authorizes enforcement by bill in equity and says that in such case the same proceeding shall be had as were used by the courts of equity to enforce other liens; but the courts hold it improper to make a prior lienor a party unless he comes in and consents to be made a party. The Illinois court held that it was not error to decree a sale subject to a prior deed of trust without making the cestui que trust a party. Of the failure to make him a party the debtor only complained. In that case, however, the trustee was a party. The Illinois practice seems to be very similar to our own. Our statute provides, at section 12 of chapter 75, that, if the lien be established in favor of any of the creditors whose claims are presented in the suit, the court shall order a sale of the property on which the lien is established, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy such claims, in like manner as in other suits in chancery. Hogg's Equity Procedure, at section 70, after referring to the statute, says: "A suit to enforce a mechanic's lien is carried on with all the rights, principles, and methods of procedure incident to a court of equity; so that the question of parties is usually determined by these principles and methods." This court seems never to have passed directly upon the question of proper parties in such a suit. Hence it becomes necessary to resort to the general principles governing chancery practice in other cases for a solution of it. In all creditors' suits against decedents' estates and suits for the enforcement of judgment liens, it is necessary that all lienors be brought before the court. For this we need look no further than the statute. Code 1899, cc. 86, 139. Upon bills to enforce mortgages, judgment creditors and other lienors must be made parties. Hogg's Eq. Pro. § 72. But there are some cases in which it is not necessary, such as bills to set aside fraudulent conveyances and bills to enforce vendors' liens. McClagherty v. Croft, 43 W. Va. 270, 27 S. E. 246; Neeley v. Ruleys, 26 W. Va. 686. But in such cases, and, indeed, all cases, it seems necessary that the legal title be before the court. Turk v. Skiles, 38 W. Va. 404, 18 S. E. 561; Bensimer v. Fell, 35 W. Va. 17, 12 S. E. 1078, 29 Am. St. Rep. 774; Smith v. Parsons, 33 W. Va. 653, 11 S. E. 68; Blunyer v. Sherman, 23 W. Va. 657; Norris v.

Bean, 17 W. Va. 655; Baker v. Oil Tract Co., 7 W. Va. 454. This seems to accord with the Illinois practice, as indicated by the case above cited, in which the trustee only was made a party. Very well considered cases, decided by the Supreme Court of Minnesota, are of the same import. Finlayson v. Crooks, 47 Minn. 74, 49 N. W. 398, 645; Bassett v. Menage, 52 Minn. 121, 53 N. W. 1064. The former case holds that a mortgagor or any other party claiming an interest in the premises may be made a party, and his rights adjudicated whenever it might be done, in an action to foreclose a mortgage. The statute in that state, however, says the lien may be enforced in the same manner as in actions for the foreclosure of mortgages upon real estate, except as otherwise therein provided. There, as here, most of the provisions of the statute refer to mechanic's lien claims; but the court says that is because such lien is the subject of which the statute specially treats, and the mention of such liens and claims does not forbid the making of other interested persons parties to the suit.

In this case there was a prior mortgage and a prior deed of trust, in consequence of which the legal title was not in the defendant, and it was necessary to make the mortgagee and trustee parties. By his bill the plaintiff subordinated his lien to the mortgage and the deed of trust, several judgment liens, and a prior mechanic's lien, and claimed no priority over any of them. None of these lienors made any defense to the bill and are not complaining of the decree. Whether, if said prior lienors had appeared and demurred to the bill, the court would have sustained their demurrer, holding them not to be necessary parties, there is no occasion to say. By not doing so they have waived the error, if any there was. The defendant is not in a position to complain, for the reason that the error, if any, is not prejudicial to it. Moreover, there seems to be a precedent for making all lienors and interested persons parties to a suit of this kind in the case of U. S. Blowpipe Co. v. Spencer, 40 W. Va. 698, 21 S. E. 769. There, a judgment lienor was made a party defendant, but the bill was held good on demurrer. Though, in bills to set aside fraudulent conveyances, it is not necessary to make all creditors parties, it is the general practice to do so, and our Reports are full of cases in which it has been done. As no complaint is made by the creditors on that ground, and the debtor and its grantor are not in a condition to complain, because not prejudiced by any irregularity in that respect, since all the creditors are entitled to have satisfaction out of the property, if sufficient, upon the establishment of the fraud alleged, the decree is allowed to stand. When the mechanic's lien is established, so as to give jurisdiction, no reason is perceived why all creditors may not, if they choose to do so, come in and have their liens enforced in the same cause. The power of a court of equity, having jurisdiction of a cause, to hear all persons interested in the subject-matter thereof, is very broad. Every lienor could maintain a separate and contemporaneous suit for the enforcement of his lien, unless required in some way to present his claim in some other suit, and the court could hear them all together, and make one decree of sale to satisfy all, and this would be necessary in order to avoid confusion. There is no lack of jurisdiction here. The lien gives that, and, it having been conferred, the court may take cognizance of such incidental matters, germane to the subject-matter, as may be necessary to give definiteness and certainty to its decree and full relief to the plaintiff. Is it a hardship upon the defendant to precipitate upon him the liens of all his creditors? If he is able to pay the lien for which the suit is brought, he may, by doing so, stop the proceedings. If he cannot do so, the property must go to sale anyhow to satisfy it, and his interest in it is extinguished by the sale. He is not, therefore, prejudiced or injured by making them parties. However this objection on the part of the defendant might have been viewed by the court below, it cannot avail him here to reverse the decree, all the alleged improper parties having acquiesced in it and thereby signified their willingness to take the benefit of it; for the rule is well settled that judgments and decrees, though erroneous, will not be reversed at the instance of persons who are not prejudiced by the error. Nor did the court err in decreeing a sale of the land to pay the liens thereon, instead of the equity of redemption; for the statute provides that the court shall order a sale of the property as in other suits in chancery, and it is the universal practice to order a sale of the land for the purpose of satisfying all the liens that are adjudicated and ascertained in the suit.

The order of reference was not premature; for, at the time it was made, the bill and its exhibits showed a number of liens. The requirement that a prima facie case be made before the allowance of an order of reference was fully met. The answer substantially admitted indebtedness on account of services as superintendent, but denied that it existed "in manner and form" as alleged in the bill, and averred that a true account would show that "said work, or the greater part thereof, was performed before the time mentioned in said claim of lien." It did not deny the other liens set forth in the bill. It is argumentative and evasive, not making a full and square denial of the plaintiff's claim. It admits indebtedness, but denies the correctness of the amount claimed, and contests the lien claimed on the ground of defects in the recorded notice. In such a state of the pleadings, an order of reference could properly be entered without proof to sustain the allegations of the bill. All allegations not denied are taken as true. Code 1899, c. 125, § 36; Gardner v. Landcraft, 6 W. Va. 36; Dickinson v. Railway Co., 7 W. Va. 390; Warran v. Syme, 7 W. Va. 474; Burlew v. Quarrier, 16 W. Va. 108.

For the foregoing reasons, the decree complained of will be affirmed.

(38 W. Va. 213)

RILEY et al. v. YOST.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 31, 1905.)

1. PLEADING—PROFERT—OYER.

Profert cannot be made, or oyer demanded, unless the declaration avers a sealed instrument. [Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 39, Cent. Dig. Pleading, §§ 913, 918, 922.]

2. SAME—DECLARATION.

The fact that a declaration makes profert does not alone make the writing part of the declaration, without a demand of oyer.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 39, Cent. Dig. Pleading, §§ 919, 923, 925.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Taylor County.

Action by Oscar F. Riley and Columbus N. Mason against F. Harris Yost. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs bring error. Reversed.

Dent & Dent, for plaintiffs in error. Davis & Davis and E. D. Lewis, for defendant in error.

BRANNON, P. Oscar F. Riley and Columbus N. Mason brought an action of assumption in Taylor county against F. Harris Yost. The declaration contains the common counts and one special count upon a written contract. Under a demurrer there was a judgment of nil capiat, and the plaintiffs brought the case here.

The defendant says that the written contract does not support the action as stated in the special count upon it; but we must take that count without considering the written contract. That count avers the executing of a written contract and makes profert of it. We cannot consider it for these reasons. The count does not say that the contract is under seal. There can be neither profert nor oyer of a contract not under seal, and though profert be made, it is unavailing to make the writing part of the declaration. There cannot be profert, because the declaration does not profess to declare upon a sealed instrument; and, there having been no oyer demanded, we could not read the contract, even if said to be sealed, because to read it there must be, not only profert, but oyer. Duval v. Malone, 14 Grat. 24; 16 Ency. Pl. & Prac. 1087. There can be no profert or oyer, except of certain sealed instruments. Andrew's Stephen on Plead. 159; 1 Barton, L. Pr. 316; 16 Ency. Pl. & Prac. 1083. Such is the common-law rule of pleading. There seems to be an erroneous idea with some that a profer of an instrument, sealed or unsealed, makes it a part of the declaration, and we meet with declarations sometimes which file writings marked as exhibits, just as if the case were in chancery. That does not make such paper part of a common-law pleading, though it does in the case of equity pleadings. A declaration at law on a writing must give the legal effect of the writing, and to do so must state so much of it as will support the action; but that does not make the instrument a part of the pleading. It is not generally the office of common-law pleading to incorporate writings. Perhaps, where the declaration sets out the instrument by its tenor—that is, in its very words—it becomes a part of the declaration, but not where the tenor is not given. 8 Ency. Pl. & Prac. 740. It may be asked, how can a variance between the declaration and writing be taken advantage of? By objection to the introduction of the paper in evidence; if a sealed instrument, also by oyer and demurrer; or, where it is claimed that the writing does not support the action, a demurrer to the evidence would raise that question.

Looking, then, at the special count, and not reading the writing, we find that it states that the plaintiffs owned various options giving them the right to purchase the coal in various tracts of land, and that they sold and assigned to the defendant all their rights in said options in consideration of $150 cash and other considerations, one of which was that the plaintiffs were to receive from the defendant the difference between $18 per acre and the purchase price per acre of the option for each and every acre of coal the defendant "may purchase under said option." It is claimed that this gave the defendant only the option to purchase the tracts—that is, option to consummate the options assigned to him—without obligation to pay the plaintiffs the difference between the purchase price named in the option and $18 per acre, unless he should purchase the land under the option, and that the declaration should have averred such purchase. But the declaration goes on and avers that by the writing the defendant "agreed to pay plaintiffs the difference between $18 per acre and $15, the purchase price under the option, to wit, $3 per acre, for each and every acre of coal which the defendant could and might purchase under said options, whenever the number of said acres of coal should thereafter be ascertained and determined during the life period of said option as limited on the fact thereof, or as extended at the special instance and request of the defendant, whose duty it became to keep alive said option, until consideration for the transfer thereof were fully paid and satisfied, and his purchase could be fully compensated thereunder." The count then avers that the number of acres of the coal had been ascertained to be not less than 2,000. Now, from that count on its face Yost did not have the right to determine not to purchase under said option and refuse the plaintiffs the $3 per acre; for the declaration says that the defendant was to pay the plaintiffs $3 for every acre which he "could and might purchase under said option," and that he was to make such payment whenever the number of acres of coal should be ascertained. The count says that the instrument bound Yost to keep alive the options until the consideration should be paid, thus importing intent to impose absolute liability for the consideration. Testing the matter by the declaration alone—that is, by its version and legal effect of the legal contract—an absolute liability was imposed on Yost to pay that $3 per acre to the plaintiffs, whether he purchased the coal under the options or not. I repeat that we do not say whether or not that liability is imposed on the defendant by the written contract.

We reverse the judgment, overrule the demurrer, and remand the cause.

(73 S. C. 443)

MILHOUSE v. SOUTHERN RY.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 13, 1905.)

1. PLEADING—OBJECTIONS TO EVIDENCE FOR INSUFFICIENCY OF PLEADING.

Where defendant does not move to strike out certain allegations of the complaint, he cannot object to evidence in support of the same.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 39, Cent. Dig. Pleading, § 1433.]

2. CARRIERS—FLAG STATIONS.

Civ. Code 1902, § 2134, providing that trains shall stop at stations for the accommodation of passengers, does not apply to flag station, but only to regular advertised stopping places.

3. SAME—REFUSAL TO STOP—DAMAGES.

Where an engineer willfully passes a flag station, seeing a passenger standing there, the latter can recover punitive damages.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Carriers, § 1038.]

4. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

A request covered by an instruction already given is properly denied.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Trial, §§ 651-659.]

5. CARRIERS—FAILURE TO STOP AT STATION.

In estimating damages for failure of a train to stop for a passenger at a flag station, inconvenience, the direct cause of the negligence, may be considered in estimating the damages.

6. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where a complaint alleges that the conductor was acting within the scope of his duty when he failed or refused to stop the train at a flag station at which plaintiff was waiting, a request to charge that the conductor of a train is not called upon to look out for signals of intending passengers at flag stations was properly refused as inapplicable.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Lexington County; Jas. F. Izlar, Special Judge.

Action by John A. Milhouse against the Southern Railway. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Defendant appeals on following exceptions:

"(1) Excepts because his honor erred in allowing the plaintiff to testify, over the objection of defendant, that his feelings were hurt and that he was subjected to inconvenience, upon the ground that the same were not elements of damage in this case.

"(2) Excepts because his honor, the presiding judge, erred in charging the jury as follows: 'You have heard the testimony in this case, and you must determine the question whether or not he was a passenger on that occasion. If he was, he was entitled to the rights of a passenger. He was entitled to board the train with his ticket, and to be transported with safety and convenience to the point of his destination. I say that was his contract, that is what the railroad had undertaken to do, and that is what the railroad company is bound to do, in my opinion, under that state of facts'—the error being that under the testimony Perry was a flag station for train No. 30, which the plaintiff desired to board, and it was necessary that it be flagged, and it was not required to stop for plaintiff without being flagged, even though plaintiff held a ticket.

"(3) Excepts because his honor erred in reading to the jury section 2134 of Code of Laws of South Carolina of 1902, to wit, 'Every railroad company in this state shall cause all its trains of cars for passengers to entirely stop upon each arrival at a station, advertised by such company as a station for receiving passengers upon such trains, for a time sufficient to receive and let off passengers,' and in charging the jury as follows: 'Now, a request to charge from the defendant is that that does not apply to flag stations; but I charge you that it does. It applies to every advertised station, and if they advertise this as a flag station, and passengers are to get on and off at that point, why the train was bound to stop and receive those passengers, and it was bound to stop long enough for them to get on and off, notwithstanding it may not be a regular station on the line of their road'—the error being that said section of the Code does not apply to flag stations at all, or to trains which stop only on flag. Further, the evidence showing that Perry was a flag stop for the train in question (No. 30), this charge required the train to be stopped there, whether flagged or not, which is contrary to law and to said section of the Code.

"(4) Excepts because his honor erred in charging the jury, at plaintiff's request, as follows: 'When a passenger purchases a ticket from the agent of a railroad company at a station where tickets are sold, he is entitled to passage on the train of cars for passage on which the ticket was purchased to his destination; and it is the duty of the railroad company to stop its train at such station long enough for said passenger with such ticket to get aboard for the purpose of traveling thereon to his destination'—such charge being inapplicable to this case, erroneous, and to defendant's prejudice. It is submitted that, Perry being a flag stop for the train in question, the defendant was not required to stop for plaintiff unless such train was flagged.

"(5) Excepts because his honor erred in charging the jury, at plaintiff's request, as follows: 'That it is the duty of the employees of the company, its agents and servants on its train, to keep a lookout at its stations where tickets are sold along its route; and any such train for riding on which tickets have been sold will fail to stop for such passenger at its peril, as failure to stop is negligence in the law, which will entitle such passenger to such damages as he may prove by the preponderance of the testimony under the allegations of his complaint against the negligent company, defendant.' (1) Such charge was erroneous, in that it did not declare the law with reference to the stopping of trains at flag stations, where the train is required to be flagged before it will stop. (2) It exacted more than the law required, and held defendant to the duty of keeping a lookout and stopping its trains at flag stations, whether properly flagged or not. (3) It was further erroneous in declaring that a failure to stop is negligence in the law which will entitle the passenger to damages; whereas, on the contrary, it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove negligence on the part of the railroad company in failing to stop at a flag station after the train has been properly flagged.

"(6) Excepts because his honor erred in failing to charge defendant's second request to charge, which was as follows: 'It is only when it is shown that an engineer actually saw an intending passenger, or there is sufficient evidence to authorize a jury to find that the engineer saw him, that there can be such a willful disregard of the plaintiff's right, or such personal indignity to him, in rolling by without stopping, as would entitle the plaintiff to recover punitive damages'—the same being a correct proposition of law and applicable to this case.

"(7) Excepts because his honor erred in failing to charge defendant's third request to charge, which was as follows: 'The burden is upon the plaintiff to establish the allegations of his complaint by the preponderance of the evidence, and unless the jury is satisfied therefrom that the engineer of the train in question actually saw the signal to stop and willfully disregarded it, the plaintiff is not entitled to any exemplary damages in this case'—the same being a correct proposition of law and applicable to this case.

"(8) Excepts because his honor erred in failing to charge defendant's fourth request to charge, which was as follows: 'If the engineer, with reasonable care, ought to have seen, but did not see, the signal to stop, if such was given, this would present a case of only ordinary negligence, and in such case plaintiff would not be entitled to any exemplary damages—the same being a correct proposition of law and applicable to this case.

“(9) Excepts because his honor erred in failing to charge defendant's fifth request to charge, which was as follows: ‘Damages for the mere failure of a carrier to stop its train on signal at a flag station consists in compensation for the actual loss sustained by the intending passenger. This will include the actual loss sustained as the direct consequence of the carrier's failure to stop the train’—the same being a correct proposition of law and applicable to this case.

“(10) Excepts because his honor erred in failing to charge defendant's sixth request to charge, which was as follows: ‘If you find from the evidence in this case, if there be such evidence, that the engineer of the train in question, in the exercise of reasonable care, failed to see the signal to stop at the flag station of Perry on the morning in question, if such signal was given, or that it was mere negligence on the part of said engineer in not seeing such signal, if it was given, then your verdict, if you find for the plaintiff, can only be for the actual damages sustained by the plaintiff, which actual damages must be the direct and necessary consequence of the failure to stop the train’—the same being a correct proposition of law and applicable to this case.

“(11) Excepts because his honor erred in failing to charge defendant's seventh request to charge, which was as follows: ‘Mere inconvenience is not a ground of damages in an action against a carrier for failure to stop its train on signal at a flag station’—the same being a correct proposition of law and applicable to this case.

“(12) Excepts because his honor erred in failing to charge defendant's eighth request to charge, which was as follows: ‘Plaintiff in this case is not entitled to any damages for inconvenience, pain or annoyance’—the same being a correct proposition of law and applicable to this case.

“(13) Excepts because his honor erred in failing to charge defendant's ninth request to charge, which was as follows: ‘Section 2134 of Code of South Carolina of 1902, does not apply to what are known as flag stations, but only to what are known as regular stations, where the train is advertised to stop regularly’—the same being a correct proposition of law and applicable to this case.

“(14) Excepts because his honor erred in failing to charge defendant's tenth request to charge, which was as follows: ‘The conductor of a railroad train is not called upon to look out for signals to stop or for intending passengers at flag stations. That is the duty of the engineer’—the same being a correct proposition of law and applicable to this case.”

E. M. Thompson, for appellant. Andrew Crawford and G. T. Graham, for respondent.

GARY, A. J. This is an action for damages, which the plaintiff claims he sustained, by reason of facts set out in the complaint, which alleges: “That on the morning of the 8th day of February, 1904, between 4 and 5 o'clock, the plaintiff, who had arranged to go to Columbia, S. C., on the morning of the said 8th day of February, 1904, to consult with Dr. Taylor, who was to examine and treat plaintiff for an injury to his side, from which injury he was suffering, and having purchased a ticket from Perry Station, on said railroad, to Columbia, S. C., from the station agent of the defendant at Perry, and paid the station agent the fare usually demanded and paid for a ticket from Perry to Columbia, and as defendant's passenger train from Savannah to Columbia was then due at Perry, the plaintiff, in company with said station agent and others, walked out to defendant's railroad tracks at a point where the defendant's railroad trains always stop, for the purpose of allowing its passengers to get off and on its trains, and when the defendant's passenger train from Savannah to Columbia came in sight, the said station agent directed one Martin N. Price to signal the train, and the said Price having given the signal pursuant to the direction of the said station agent, the said train slackened up the speed at which it was running and slowed up to about six miles an hour, when the conductor of said train (who was the agent and servant of the defendant and acting within the scope of his authority as such), with a lantern in his hand came out of one of the cars of said train with the porter thereof to the lowest step of the platform of said car, whereupon the said station agent of the defendant called out to him, ‘I have five passengers for you, or ‘there are five passengers here for you.’ That it was the duty of the defendant to stop said train at said Perry Station long enough for plaintiff to get on board of it and carry him to Columbia aforesaid, but regardless of its duty in that respect, and in utter disregard of the rights of the plaintiff, the conductor of said train, who heard said station agent when he announced that said passengers were awaiting transportation, and who was the agent and servant of the defendant and acting within the scope of his authority as such, negligently, recklessly, wantonly, and willfully failed and refused to stop said train for plaintiff to get on board thereof, and negligently, recklessly, wantonly, and willfully caused the speed of the train to be increased and to move off rapidly towards the city of Columbia, so as to make it impossible for plaintiff to get on said train, thus leaving the plaintiff standing on the cold wet ground in the rain at Perry Station. That by reason of the negligent, reckless, wanton, and willful conduct of the defendant and its agents and servants in falling and refusing to stop said train at Perry Station long enough for plaintiff to go on board of it, and in increasing the rate of speed of said train when it was informed that passengers were at said station for the purpose of boarding said train, and as a direct result thereof, plaintiff was insulted, his feelings injured, he was compelled to remain at said Perry Station several hours in the cold rain before he could board another train for Columbia, he was greatly annoyed, delayed, and inconvenienced in reaching Columbia, was delayed from 24 to 36 hours in Columbia, during all which time he suffered much pain, annoyance, and inconvenience, and was subjected to considerable pecuniary loss and expense, and was greatly inconvenienced and delayed in getting back to his home, and was otherwise greatly injured, to his damage $2,000." The answer of the defendant was a general denial. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $500. The defendant appealed upon exceptions which will be incorporated in the report of the case.

1. First exception: As the testimony was responsive to the allegations of the complaint, the defendant is not in a position to raise the objection that it was inadmissible, after failing to make a motion to strike out the said allegations. Martin v. Ry., 70 S. C. 8, 48 S. E. 616.

2. Second, third, fourth, fifth, and thirteenth exceptions: Section 2134 of the Code of Laws of 1902 is as follows: "Every railroad company in this state shall cause its trains of cars for passengers to entirely stop upon each arrival at a station, advertised by such company as a station for receiving passengers upon such trains, for a time sufficient to receive and let off passengers." At the time mentioned in the complaint, Perry was a flag station for the train upon which the plaintiff expected to become a passenger. He had seen a regular timetable, advertising the fact that it was a flag station for said train, and his own testimony is to the effect that he had full knowledge of such fact. There is no testimony showing that the regulation making Perry a flag station for said train was unreasonable or oppressive; and, as the company did not advertise Perry as a station for receiving passengers on the train in question, we do not think that the plaintiff, under these circumstances, had the right to invoke the provisions of said section. The defendant was only bound to stop its train at such a station when duly flagged.

3. Sixth, seventh, and eighth exceptions: The failure of an engineer to see a passenger may not only be the result of negligence, but likewise of willfulness. If he should intentionally fail to see a passenger, punitive damages would be recoverable.

4. Ninth and tenth exceptions: While the requests were refused, the propositions therein stated were substantially charged by the presiding judge.

5. Eleventh and twelfth exceptions: When there is testimony showing that the inconvenience was the direct and proximate result of negligence or willfulness, it may be taken into consideration by the jury in awarding damages. Cen. R. & B. Co. v. Strickland (Ga.) 16 S. E. 352.

6. Fourteenth exception: Conceding that the request contained a sound proposition of law, it was inapplicable to this case, as the complaint alleged that the conductor was acting within the scope of his authority, when he failed or refused to stop the train at the station. Wilson v. Ry., 51 S. C. 79, 28 S. E. 91.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

(72 S. C. 395)

SPEARS v. FIELDS.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 7, 1905.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGE—TENDER—PRODUCTION OF PAPERS.

Where a chattel mortgagor tenders the amount due, he has a right to demand surrender of the note and mortgage; but the mortgagee has a reasonable time in which to procure them, and, where the mortgagor then gives notice that he will not pay, it is unnecessary for the mortgagee to proceed further.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Chattel Mortgages, § 501.]

2. DAMAGES—CONTRACT—BREACH—SPECIAL DAMAGES.

In an action of claim and delivery by a chattel mortgagee, defendant set up, as a defense to plaintiff's allegation of a debt due, damages resulting from the mortgagee's refusal to carry out a part of the mortgage contract. The evidence showed that the mortgagee had contracted to advance supplies to the amount of $50, but that he was unable to furnish all the fertilizers required by the mortgagor, whereby the mortgagor was unable to cultivate certain land which he had rented. Held, that the damages arising from such circumstances were not recoverable, unless the special circumstances were known to the mortgagee at the time he broke his contract.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Darlington County; Gary, Judge.

Action by C. M. Spears against W. D. Fields. From circuit order reversing judgment of magistrate court, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

George W. Brown, for appellant. Spears & Dennis, for respondent.

WOODS, J. The defendant gave to the plaintiff a chattel mortgage of a horse to secure agricultural advances for the year 1902 to the amount of $50. Only $20.67 was advanced, for the reason, as defendant alleges, that the plaintiff did not have in his store and could not furnish fertilizers and other staple supplies. After the time fixed for the payment of the advances, the plaintiff brought this action of claim and delivery to obtain possession of the mortgaged property. The defendant set up two defenses: (1) Tender of the sum advanced, $20.67; and (2) damages due to his having to leave uncultivated 10 acres of land, which he had rented at $2.50 per acre, and to loss of time in trying to make other arrangements for advances. The judgment of the magistrate in favor of the defendant was reversed by the circuit court. The question of law made by the appeal is whether there was error of law in not sustaining the defenses set up.

1. The finding of fact by the circuit court that the tender was conditional is not reviewable by this court. We may remark, however, that it is admitted the defendant demanded immediate delivery of the note and mortgage as a condition of the tender. The mortgage was then in the clerk's office, but was subsequently procured and offered to the defendant, who objected that the note was not also offered. Upon plaintiff's agent proposing to procure and surrender the note also, defendant replied it would be useless, as he would not pay. The defendant had a right, on tender of the amount due, to demand surrender of the note and mortgage; but the plaintiff could not be denied reasonable opportunity to procure them, and, when the defendant denied liability and gave notice he would not pay, it was not incumbent on the plaintiff to proceed further. The exceptions as to tender cannot be sustained.

2. In considering the question of damages, it is to be borne in mind the defendant is not setting up the loss resulting from having to leave a portion of his farm uncultivated as damages for the "taking and holding" of the property allowed by the statute in claim and delivery proceedings. The claim rests on an entirely different foundation. The plaintiff's right to the possession of the property depends on his ability to prove that he held a chattel mortgage and the defendant owed an overdue debt secured by it. The action will therefor be defeated if the defendant can show there was really no debt. He undertakes to do this by offering proof that, although he received $20.67 under the mortgage, yet by reason of the plaintiff's refusal to carry out his part of the mortgage contract he was damaged more than $20.67. The damages thus resulting are not set up as a counterclaim, but as a defense to plaintiff's allegation of a debt due under the mortgage. Therefore on this point the case stands precisely as if the plaintiff had sued on the note and mortgage to recover a money judgment, and the defendant had denied the debt because it had been absorbed by the damages inflicted by the plaintiff's failure to carry out his part of the mortgage contract. The inquiry, then, is whether such damages as are here claimed are allowable on the issue of debt or no debt. It is not necessary to decide whether they are too remote, and therefore may not be deducted from the debt, because, aside from that point, there is nothing to indicate they were to be anticipated, when the contract was made, as a result of its breach, in view of the peculiar situation and circumstances of the defendant. There is no evidence whatever that the plaintiff knew the defendant had rented land and was dependent on the advances he was to make to cultivate it, or that plaintiff was acquainted with the peculiar condition of defendant's agricultural interests in any respect, or contracted with reference to defendant's special circumstances. This being so, the damages arising from plaintiff's alleged breach of contract due to circumstances peculiar to the defendant are not recoverable, and therefore cannot be taken into consideration in determining whether the defendant owed a debt secured by the chattel mortgage. The following statement of the principle under which the case falls is taken from Hadley v. Baxendale, quoted with approval in Sitton v. McDonald, 25 S. C. 68, 71, 60 Am. Rep. 484: "Damages which would not arise in the usual course of things from a breach of contract, but which do arise from circumstances peculiar to the special case, are not recoverable, unless the special circumstances are known to the person who has broken the contract." Colvin v. Oil Company, 66 S. C. 61, 44 S. E. 380; Hays v. Telegraph Co., 70 S. C. 16, 48 S. E. 608, 67 L. R. A. 481.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(73 S. C. 396)

GREEN v. SOUTHERN RY. CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 7, 1905.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT — NEGLIGENCE — DEFECTIVE MACHINERY.

Where an accident happens to a servant by the breaking of a machine in ordinary use, and there is neither proof of defects in the machine nor of error in its use by the servant, the law will not draw the inference that the machine was defective, and then from that the inference of lack of care of the master.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, §§ 881, 884.]

2. SAME — EVIDENCE.

Where an engine hostler was injured by an alleged defect in the machinery, and the cause of the accident was not shown by plaintiff's evidence, and it did not appear that it might not have been due to causes for which the defendant was not responsible, and there was no evidence that any of the causes mentioned by plaintiff as possible causes were present, a judgment for defendant was proper.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Greenville County; Gary, J.

Action by T. A. J. Green against the Southern Railway Company and others.

From order of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

McCullough & McSwain, for appellant. T. P. Cothran, for respondents.

WOODS, J. This is an appeal from an order of nonsuit. The action is to recover the sum of $10,000 damages on account of personal injuries received the 17th day of May, 1903. The allegations of the complaint are that at that time plaintiff was a hostler in the employ of the defendant, Southern Railway Company; that, as hostler, it was his duty to shift engine No. 1,072, which pulled in train No. 40, going north, and place it upon the side track to be inspected and repaired by the defendants, and, when informed by them that the engine was ready, to place it upon the main track, so that it might pull train No. 97, going south; that the engine was left standing near the turntable pit, and, after plaintiff was informed by the defendants that the engine was ready, he reversed the lever and turned on the steam, but, instead of the engine going backward, as it would have done if it had been in proper repair, it moved immediately forward, and fell into the turntable pit, a depth of several feet, and plaintiff received the injuries mentioned in the complaint. The acts of negligence charged are: First. Furnishing the plaintiff with a defective engine; second. failing properly to inspect and repair the same. At the conclusion of plaintiff's testimony, the circuit judge granted a nonsuit upon the ground "that there is no evidence tending to establish the allegations of negligence contained in the complaint."

The following is a statement of the material testimony: Plaintiff testified that, after placing the engine upon the side track, so that it might be inspected and repaired, as was the custom and duty of the defendants, he left it from 50 minutes to an hour. The defendants West and Greeson were about the engine, as plaintiff supposed, for the purpose of inspecting and repairing the same, as was their duty. He did not see either of the defendants under the engine, but did see two of the "helpers," who were not expert machinists, under it. To properly inspect an engine it is necessary that the machinists should go underneath it. Between the time that he left the engine and went back to it, the defendant Greeson was on the engine, and "moved the lever backwards and forwards to disconnect the valve stem." After West and Greeson had finished their work upon the engine, Greeson told him that "No. 1,072 was ready to move." Thereupon plaintiff mounted the engine, and put the lever in reverse gear. He then reached for the bell cord, which was wrapped in some way, and after it was unwrapped, he "gave the engine steam and pulled the throttle open." Thereupon the lever fell in head gear to where he had brought it from, and the engine, instead of going backward, went forward into the pit, and he was injured. As hostler, it was not his duty to inspect the engine; but, if it had been his duty, he could have discovered the defect by reasonable inspection. The witness did not undertake, however, to say what the defect was, but, on the contrary, testified on cross-examination that he did not know what caused the reverse lever to fly from back gear to forward gear, but that it could have been caused by several things, viz., lost motion, loose springs, rough valve, weak springs, waste in the notch, or a piece of coal in the notch. It was dark when plaintiff was told the engine was ready to be pulled upon the main line, and he did not look down in the quadrant to see whether the latch of the lever went into the notch or not. "There is not an engineer on the road that does that. You cannot light a torch to see whether it is in or not." C. L. Cauble testified that he had been working for the Southern Railway Company for 21 years, and had been an engineer for 17 years. He said: "If an engine or locomotive has its lever reversed and the latch fastened in rear end of quadrant, and if steam be applied, and the reverse lever fly out of the notch and into forward end of the quadrant, I would say such engine is in a very defective condition. If the engine be just starting off, I do not think such thing possible, and I have not seen such in my experience." Edward Day, formerly a locomotive engineer of 13 years' experience, testified as follows: "Q. If an engine, a locomotive engine, would have its reverse lever reversed and put in back gear, and if, when the steam be applied, that engine moves forward by reason of the reverse lever flying forward, would you say that engine is in defective condition? A. Yes, sir. Q. What do you say as to that? A. I think it would be badly out of order if it would fly from back to front when steam is applied. Q. Do you think it would be possible for an engine which was standing perfectly still with its reverse lever in back gear for the reverse lever to fly forward upon the application of steam? A. Not unless she is in mighty bad shape, sir. If the engine was standing perfectly still and the reverse lever was in back gear, and when steam was applied she would have to be in a bad worn condition for it to fly forward. I never had one to do it with me. I have had them to fly out of gear and go down to where it was worn into head gear. As a general thing, they work considerably more in head gear than in back gear, which leaves the back latch gear and notches in good shape."

In every suit of a servant against a master for personal injury arising from the use of machinery, inquiry is directed mainly to two forces operating under natural laws, namely, the master's machine supplied to the servant, and the servant's mind and hands acting on the machine. The injury is usually due either to the error of the master in failing to supply safe machinery, or to the error of the servant in the use of his mind and hands, or to both of these causes acting together. But an error of the master in furnishing a defective machine does not conclusively imply negligence by the master, for he may have used due, and even great, care in its selection; nor does an error of the servant in the use of the machinery conclusively imply negligence on his part, for he may be in actual error while doing just what a prudent man would do under like circumstances. Neither the master nor the servant is charged with perfect knowledge of all natural laws and forces under which they act, nor even with errorless conduct in applying their imperfect knowledge of such laws and forces; and hence they are chargeable only with the results of errors which are due to negligence. The servant on entering the employment assumes the risk of his own errors, whether due to negligence or not, and he assumes also the risk of the operation of the machine and of the errors of the master, unless the master fails to use due care in making the machine safe. When an injury to a servant is proved to result from a defective machine, the law puts upon the master the burden of proving that he used due care in making it safe. Lasure v. Mfg. Co., 18 S. C. 275; Carter v. Oliver Oil Co., 34 S. C. 211, 13 S. E. 419, 27 Am. St. Rep. 815; Branch v. Railway Co., 35 S. C. 405, 14 S. E. 808. But when an accident happens by the breaking of a machine in ordinary use, and there is neither proof of defects in the machine nor of error in its use by the servant, the law will not draw first the inference that the machine was defective, and then from that inference infer the lack of care of the master. Gentry v. Railway Co., 66 S. C. 256, 44 S. E. 728; Edgens v. Gaffney Mfg. Co., 69 S. C. 529, 48 S. E. 538. Natural forces beyond the control or foresight of the master, such as heat and cold and moisture, the action of outside persons having access to the machine without knowledge of the master, and, most probable of all, the unconscious errors of the servant in the use of his mind and hands, may cause a perfect machine to break. These agencies are often as obscure and as little susceptible of being made evident as a latent defect in the machine itself. Therefore, aside from judicial authority, the rule of reason seems to be that it is not safe to infer latent defect in the machine from the fact if its breaking in what to all seeming is ordinary use, because experience teaches the breaking may be due to imperfectly known natural forces, or to unconscious and undiscoverable errors of the human mind and hand controlling the machine. "It sometimes happens, however, that a description of the appliance and of the nature of the accident will indicate negligence by the master in providing appliances which he could not, as a reasonable man, regard adequate for the purpose for which they were used. But this is an inference from proof of the circumstances or physical facts as given in evidence, and not a presumption of law." Edgens v. Gaffney Mfg. Co., 69 S. C. 529, 48 S. E. 538; Gentry v. Railway Co., supra; Hicks v. Sumter Mills, 39 S. C. 89, 17 S. E. 509. Proof of negligence is a condition precedent to the liability of the master. The proof may be either direct or circumstantial, but the plaintiff must assume the burden of furnishing evidence of one kind or the other.

We now consider the facts of this case in the light of the principles above stated. It is not contended there is proof of any specific defect in the engine or negligence on the part of the railroad company. The inquiry then is, does the case fall within the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur? The engineers put up as expert witnesses testified if the catch of the lever of an engine, fastened in the notch in the rear of the quadrant, flies out and into the forward end of the quadrant, they would regard the engine in a very defective or worn condition. Neither of them said, in so many words, in what respect the engine would have to be defective or worn for this result to be produced; but it is sufficiently manifest they meant to catch the lever or the notch on the quadrant would have to be so much worn as not to hold fast. Both said they never had such a thing to happen when the engine was standing still, and one said, in his opinion, it was not possible for it to happen. There was not the slightest evidence that either the catch or the notch was worn. The strong proof to the contrary was that both had worked satisfactorily several times under the hand of the plaintiff within an hour before the accident. The plaintiff himself testified he did not know what caused the accident; that it could have been produced by any one of five causes: (1) A piece of waste in the notch of the quadrant, which would prevent the latch on the lever from catching; (2) a piece of coal similarly lodged; (3) a weak spring to the latch on the lever not forcing the latch into the notch on the quadrant; (4) lost motion in the links; (5) a rough valve. Assuming that the defendant would be responsible for all these possible defects, if they existed, the plaintiff does not say the accident was not or might not have been due to other causes for which the defendant was not responsible, nor is there the slightest evidence that any of the conditions mentioned by him as possible causes were present. The cause of the accident is purely conjectural. There is no more reason to suppose it was due to a defect in the machine than to an unconscious error of the plaintiff in its operation, or to some other undiscoverable cause for which neither party was responsible. "A servant cannot recover where it is merely a matter of conjecture, surmise, speculation, or supposition whether the injury was or was not due to the negligence of the master." 2 Labatt on Master & Servant, § 837.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(72 S. C. 404)

EQUITABLE BUILDING & LOAN ASS'N
v. CORLEY et al.(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 7, 1905.)1. BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS—LOAN —CONSTRUCTION.

Where money is advanced to a member of a foreign building association, and the bond executed provides that the obligation is a Georgia contract, governed by the laws of Georgia, it will be construed, as to applications of payments, in accordance with such laws.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER—CONDITIONS—NOTICE.

Where the mortgage securing a bond refers to the bond for conditions, and the bond is not recorded, it is not notice to a purchaser of the land of any other conditions than those appearing on the record of the mortgage.

3. SAME—BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

Evidence held to show that a purchaser of land covered by a mortgage had notice of the conditions of the mortgage, though such conditions appeared only in the bond, which was not recorded.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Lexington County; Watts, Judge.

Action by the Equitable Building & Loan Association against P. H. Corley and the Roof & Barre Lumber Co. From circuit decree, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Efrd & Dreher, for appellants. R. W. Shand, for respondent.

WOODS, J. The Equitable Building & Loan Association, a corporation having its principal place of business in Augusta, Ga., brings this action to foreclose a mortgage on land in Lexington county, S. C., executed by the defendant Corley, a resident of South Carolina. The land was afterwards conveyed by Corley to Roof & Barre, and by them to the defendant Roof & Barre Lumber Company. The answer sets up the plea of payment. The first question arising under this plea is whether all sums paid to the Equitable Building & Loan Association by Corley and his grantees, after Corley made the mortgage and borrowed the money, should be credited on the sum borrowed and interest, or should be applied not only to that, but also to the expenses of the association and premiums, as provided by the bond.

We first consider this question as it effects the rights of Corley, the original mortgagee. If the contract is governed by the law of this state, as defendants contend, the former method of computation would be correct, and the bond and mortgage would be overpaid. Association v. Holland, 65 S. C. 448, 43 S. E. 978. The circuit judge, however, held the contract fell under the law of Georgia, and that by that law the bond was to be computed according to its terms, which included, not only the sum actually borrowed, with interest, but the expenses and premiums for which Corley was liable as a borrowing member of the association. The following is the statute of Georgia under which the computation in the circuit decree was made: "Be it further enacted, that no fines, interest or premiums paid on loans in any building and loan association shall be deemed usurious, and the same may be collected as debts of like amount are now collected by the law in this state, and according to the terms and stipulations of the agreement between the association and the borrower." Laws Ga. 1890-91, vol. 1, p. 181, § 8. This statute was construed by the Supreme Court of Georgia, in Cook v. Equitable Building & Loan Association, 30 S. E. 911, and Burns v. Equitable Building & Loan Association, 33 S. E. 856. If the Georgia statute governs the contract, it is obvious from its terms, as construed by the Supreme Court of Georgia, that there was no error in the decree of the circuit court. The complaint alleges "that at Augusta, in Georgia, on August 3, 1895, the plaintiff advanced to the defendant Patrick H. Corley, on four shares of the stock of this plaintiff held by him, the sum of $400, and in consideration thereof the said Patrick H. Corley made, executed, and delivered to plaintiff his bond, dated August 3, 1895, in the penal sum of $800." The pleadings and the bond and mortgage are silent as to the place of payment. The law of the place where the contract is made governs as to its construction and the obligations which arise from it, where it does not provide for the application of the law of a different place and makes no mention of the place of payment. 9 Cyc. 668; Touro v. Cassin, 1 Nott. & McC. 178, 9 Am. Dec. 680; Pegram v. Williams, 4 Rich. Law, 219. Here it is not only admitted the contract was made in Georgia, but also that by the bond the parties expressly contracted "that this obligation is a Georgia contract, and in all respects subject to and governed by the laws of Georgia." The law applicable to such an agreement is so well and accurately stated by Scates, C. J., in McAllister v. Smith, 17 Ill. 328, 65 Am. Dec. 651, 654, that we quote at some length from his opinion, though it would be sufficient to refer to our own cases of Thornton v. Dean, 19 S. C. 538, 45 Am. Rep. 796, Association v. Hoffman, 50 S. C. 303, 27 S. E. 692, and Association v. Rice, 68 S. C. 236, 47 S. E. 63: "The contracts were made in this state, and the laws of this state would, had the parties been silent, have become part of the contracts for the construction and meaning of the parties in ascertaining and fixing their mutual rights and obligations. But parties may substitute the laws of another place and country than that where the contract is entered into, both in relation to the legality and extent of the original obligation and in relation to the respective rights of the parties for a breach or violation of its terms. This I call a substitution of the laws of another place or government for those of the place of entering into the contract, and which is noted by the authorities as an exception to the general rule. This is allowed in all civilized countries, and recognized as part of the jus gentium, or law of nations, respecting private and personal rights, and in all cases where the subject-matter of the contract is not malum in se, immoral, or contrary to the local policy, or dangerous to the peace and good order of the particular community in which it is sought to be enforced. When parties seek to enforce such obligations in the courts of the country whose laws have been adopted as those of the contract, it presents only an ordinary case of jurisdiction to the court over a contract made under the same laws of the forum, and by parties within its jurisdiction. But, when the enforcement of the contract is sought in the courts of a country governed by a different rule than the local or adopted law of that contract, the law governing it has no force or obligation ex proprio vigore in that forum, but ex comitate, under the general public law, the court will enforce it, giving extraterritorial effect to the laws of another government, where it is not dangerous, inconvenient, immoral, nor contrary to the public policy of the local government. Where the Legislature does not define and prescribe the extent of this comity, it must be declared by the courts in each case, governed by precedents, under the general public law." 9 Cyc. 665-666. We conclude the contract was governed by the law of Georgia, and as to Corley the computation was correctly made.

The serious question remains whether the plaintiff can foreclose the mortgage on the land in the hands of the Roof & Barre Lumber Company, a subsequent purchaser, for more than a debt of $400 and interest, less the payments made. The bond contemplates that Corley should remain a member of the association after he became a borrower, with the obligation of a member to pay $1.20 per month on each share of his stock until the series to which his certificate belonged should mature; maturity being the date when these payments would aggregate enough, after taking out expenses and premiums, to liquidate the principal of the debt of $400. It contemplates, further, that he should pay in addition each month interest on the $400 at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until the stock should mature, and that his four shares of stock should be assigned to the association as collateral for the obligations of the bond. Upon these payments being kept up until the maturity of the series, the bond stipulated that the obligation would be at an end. The mortgage contains none of these provisions as to the payment of stock, but merely recites that it is given to secure the payment of a bond in the penal sum of $800, conditioned for the payment of $400 "as in and by the said bond and conditions thereof, reference being thereunto had, will more fully appear." There is nothing whatever in the record of the mortgage to indicate or to put a purchaser of the land on notice that Corley was a member of the association or anything more than an ordinary debtor; for we do not think the fact that it was given to a building and loan association and no date of maturity specified could be regarded sufficient for that purpose. If, therefore, there was nothing beyond the record of the mortgage to show notice of the terms of the bond, the principles of Association v. McCartha, 43 S. C. 72, 20 S. E. 807, would be applicable, and the defendant Roof & Barre Lumber Company would not be chargeable with notice of anything beyond an ordinary debt of $400 secured by the mortgage. We find, however, that Roof & Barre Lumber Company answered the complaint, not separately, but jointly with Corley, and the answer, while admitting the execution of the bond and mortgage by Corley, says nothing of a want of notice of the terms of the bond set out fully in the complaint. But, what is still more significant, Roof & Barre and Roof & Barre Lumber Company continued to pay each month after the purchase, for 64 months, the sum of $6.80, which was precisely the amount called for each month by the bond, and which, before the sale of the land, had been paid by Corley. There is no evidence that there was any demand made by the mortgagee for these payments, and it is a fair inference that these parties bought the land with knowledge of the character of the debt represented by the bond which the mortgage secured, and undertook to pay it. They never have indicated, however, in any way that they knew of the provision for the collection of attorney's fees, and the circuit judge correctly held these fees could not be collected from the land.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(73 S. C. 410)

WHITMAN v. CORLEY.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 7, 1905.)

EVIDENCE—DEED—CONSIDERATION.

A valuable consideration, in addition to that expressed in a deed, may be shown by parol. [Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 20, Cent. Dig. Evidence, §§ 1912, 1913.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Saluda County; Welch, Judge.

Action by Bettie A. Whitman against John A. Corley. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Barnard B. Evans, for appellant. J. N. O. Gregory, C. J. Ramage, and J. W. Thurmond, for respondent.

WOODS, J. The complaint alleges the conveyance by the plaintiff to defendant of a tract of land in consideration of a promise of future support, and the failure of the defendant to perform his agreement. The answer denies the promise and alleges the conveyance was made in consideration of the sum of $200 actually paid. The plaintiff recovered judgment, and the defendant appeals.

The deed was introduced and was found to express only a consideration of $200. The plaintiff was then allowed to introduce evidence to the effect that the real consideration was, not the payment of $200, but the promise of support set out in the complaint. This evidence was objected to as an attempt to vary the terms of a written instrument by parol, and the alleged error in its admission is the basis of this appeal. The case of Latimer v. Latimer, 53 S. C. 483, 31 S. E. 304, is authority for the proposition stated in the syllabus: "Except in cases of fraud, it is not competent to show by parol that a deed, purporting to be based on good consideration and executed for a specific purpose, was based on valuable consideration and executed for an entirely different purpose." But that case recognizes and affirms the rule that, where a deed expresses a certain valuable consideration, an additional or a different valuable consideration may be proved by parol. In Garrett v. Stuart, 1 McCord, 514, the consideration expressed in a bill of sale of a slave was $1,000. In an action on a warranty of soundness contained in the bill of sale it was held competent to show that the exchange of another slave was the real consideration. Curry v. Lyles, 2 Hill, 404; Rountree v. Lane, 32 S. C. 160, 10 S. E. 941; Rice v. Hancock, Harp. 393; 2 Devlin on Deeds, 823.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(129 N. C. 366)

HALL v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 24, 1905.)

1. STIPULATIONS—CONSTRUCTION.

Where it was agreed in writing between the parties to a cause that a certain copy of a statute of another state, should be accepted as a statute of that state, and that a certain decision be accepted as the law of the other state upon all the points therein, the agreement should be given effect by considering it as if it had been written into the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 44, Cent. Dig. Stipulations, § 48.]

2. PLEADING—DEMURRER—SCOPE.

Where, in an action against a telegraph company for failure to deliver a message, mental suffering was not set up as a separate cause of action, but as an element of damage, a demurrer seeking to eliminate such feature was defective.

3. TELEGRAPHS—FAILURE TO DELIVER MESSAGE—DAMAGES.

Where a telegram read: "How is mother to-day? Let me know at once, and I will come at once"—and was not delivered, the character of the message was such as to notify the company that unless a satisfactory answer was received the sender would undertake a journey, and, he having done so, the cost thereof was a proper element of damage.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 45, Cent. Dig. Telegraphs and Telephones, § 65.]

4. TENDER—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—TENDER WITH DEMURRER.

Code, § 575, providing that a tender may accompany an answer, does not authorize a tender in aid of a defective demurrer.

5. CONTRACTS—WHAT LAW GOVERNS—PLACE OF MAKING.

In an action on a contract made in Virginia, the rights of the parties are to be determined by the Virginia law, so far as applicable.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 11, Cent. Dig. Contracts, § 724.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Cumberland County; Ferguson, Judge.

Action by M. H. Hall against the Western Union Telegraph Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Busbee & Busbee and R. C. Strong, for appellant. Rose & Rose, for appellee.

HOKE, J. After some formal allegations, the plaintiff complains and alleges as follows:

"That on the 7th October, 1902, the plaintiff delivered to the agent of the defendant, at its office in Newport News, Va., the following message: 'John Hall, Care Mr. Herbert Lutterloh, Fayetteville, N. C. How is mother to-day? Let me know at once, and I will come at once. Miles Hall.' That the plaintiff duly paid the defendant the amount charged for the transmission and delivery of the message to the sendee named therein, and the defendant collected the charges therefor. That the message was received by the defendant at its office in Fayetteville, N. C., but on account of the carelessness, negligence, and gross indifference on the part of the defendant the message was never delivered to either the sendee or Herbert Lutterloh. That the sendee, and especially Herbert Lutterloh, is well known to the defendant's agent in Fayetteville, N. C., and the message could have been delivered to either of them soon after its receipt. That the defendant, having by its carelessness and negligence failed to deliver the message to the sendee named therein, negligently and carelessly failed to notify the plaintiff of the nondelivery of the same, so that he might be able to give a better address, or to pay any additional charges for its delivery, if any such should be necessary. That by reason of the aforesaid carelessness, negligence, and gross indifference on the part of the defendant the plaintiff suffered great mental anguish by not hearing as to his mother's condition, and knowing that she was sick, and not being able to hear from her by reason of the defendant's gross negligence, he was forced to come to Fayetteville, N. C., to his great expense and loss of time from his work, to wit, in the sum of $1,500. That upon his arrival at Fayetteville, N. C., he found that his mother's condition was much better, and, had the message been delivered, his mental suffering would have been relieved, and he would not have been forced to leave his work, and put to the expense of coming to Fayetteville. That the plaintiff has made demand upon defendant for damages he has suffered, but defendant refuses and still neglects and refuses to pay him therefor. That at the time of the aforesaid negligent conduct of the defendant, the following was the statute law of the state of Virginia, relative to such matters, as he is informed and believes:

"An act in relation to special damages recoverable of a telegraph company, approved March 2, 1900.

"1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Virginia that all telegraph companies shall be liable for special damages occasioned by the negligent failure of their operators or servants in receiving, copying, transmitting or delivering dispatches, or of the disclosure of the contents of any private dispatch to any person other than him to whom it was addressed or his agent, the amount of these damages to be determined by the jury upon the facts in each case. Grief and mental anguish occasioned to the plaintiff by the aforesaid negligent failure may be considered by the jury in the determination of the quantum of damages. Special damages recoverable under this act shall not be barred by regulations of the company concerning the repeating of messages, or by any special undertaking to relieve the company from the consequence of its own negligence.

"2. That it shall be in force from its passage."

"Wherefore the plaintiff demands judgment against the defendant for the sum of $1,500, the costs of this action, and such other and further relief as he may be entitled to in the premises."

The defendant demurs as follows:

"The defendant demurs to the amended complaint, for that it does not in whole or in part, or in any part thereof, state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

(1) No damages for mental anguish can be recovered under the allegations of paragraph 8 of the complaint; the same being purely speculative, and, furthermore, contrary to the language of the written message forming the basis of this action, and not in contemplation of the parties to the contract of the transmission and delivery thereof. (2) No damages for mental anguish can be recovered under the allegations of paragraph 9 thereof, which sets forth that upon the arrival of the plaintiff at Fayetteville he found that his mother's condition was much better, and, had the message been delivered, his mental suffering would have been relieved, and he would not have been forced to leave his work and put to the expense of going to Fayetteville. But if the court should be of opinion, based upon the allegations in the complaint, that the plaintiff should recover nominal damages, the defendant hereby tenders to the plaintiff the sum of $1.00 as such damages, and the costs of the action to the time of the trial hereof, upon this demurrer. Therefore the defendant prays that it go hence without day."

An agreement entered into by counsel is made a part of the record in the cause as follows: "Fayetteville, N. C., May 10, 1905. It is agreed that the copy of the Acts of the Assembly of Virginia 1899-1900, in the hands of Rose & Rose, attorneys, be accepted as the statute of Virginia in the case of Miles Hall v. Western Union Telegraph Co., and that the case of Connelly v. Western Union Telegraph Co. (N. C.) 40 S. E. 618, 56 L. R. A. 663, be accepted as the law of the state of Virginia, upon all points therein, in the same case." This agreement, while somewhat unusual in aid of a demurrer, can, we think, be given effect by considering the same as if it had been written into the complaint, and such was, no doubt, the design and intent of the parties. Giving the agreement such placing, however, we are of the opinion that the judgment overruling the demurrer should be affirmed.

Here is a plain and concise statement of a cause of action for breach of contract in the negligent failure of the defendant company to deliver a telegram. It would seem that the character and urgency of the message were such as to notify the defendant that, unless a satisfactory answer was received in regular course of transmission, the plaintiff would go to Fayetteville, which in fact he did, according to the allegations of the complaint. If this be the correct and reasonable interpretation of the message, the cost of the trip to Fayetteville would be an element of damage. There is an additional allegation addressed to the question of mental anguish. This is not stated as a separate cause of action at all, but only as a further element of damage. Its consideration may or may not arise on the further hearing, and in any event the demurrer, which seeks to eliminate this feature of the plaintiff's demand at the present stage of his case, is irregular and defective. Giving such defect its technical term, we should say the demurrer is too broad. It goes to the entire complaint, and this, as we have seen, contains a good cause of action well pleaded, and if the facts can be proved as alleged the plaintiff can recover some damage. The defendant seems to have been sensible of this difficulty, as he tenders a judgment of $1.00 as nominal damage, but we are aware of no law or practice which will permit a tender as an aid to a defective demurrer. Code, § 575 et seq., provides that such a tender may accompany an answer, and this alone is its proper placing, so far as a pleading is concerned, or in reply to a counterclaim.

The complaint averring that the contract was made in Virginia, the rights of the parties to this controversy will be determined by the laws of Virginia, so far as the same apply. Bryan's Case, 133 N. C. 607, 45 S. E. 938; Hancock's Case, 137 N. C. 497, 49 S. E. 952. Both a statute of the state of Virginia and a decision of the Supreme Court construing the same are set forth in the complaint, and admitted—the one by the demurrer, and the other by the agreement. But we do not think it desirable or proper that we should discuss or decide the rights of the parties under the law until the facts are before us, after proceedings had in accordance with the course of practice of the court. Judgment overruling demurrer is affirmed.

No error.

CONNOR, J., concurs in result. BROWN, J., did not sit on the hearing of this case.

(139 N. C. 490)

CLARK v. CITY OF STATESVILLE.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1905.)

1. ELECTIONS—REGISTRATION OF VOTERS.

Under Const. art. 3, § 4, prescribing an educational qualification for voters, but providing that no male person who was, on or prior to January 1, 1867, entitled to vote in any state of the United States wherein he then resided, and no lineal descendant of such person, shall be denied the right to register and vote at any election in this state by reason of his failure to possess the educational qualifications prescribed therein, and providing for a registration of all voters of the latter class and the making of a permanent roll of their names, persons so registered in the permanent roll are not thereby excused from registering at each election in the precinct where they are entitled to vote.

2. SAME—QUALIFICATION OF VOTER.

Registration is a necessary qualification of a voter, so that, when the law requires that a majority of the qualified voters shall have cast their votes for a given proposition before it becomes the law, it means a majority of the registered voters; the question as to the qualification of a voter by the payment of his poll tax not being involved in this case.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 18, Cent. Dig. Elections, §§ 92, 210-215.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Iredell County; Long, Judge.

Action by R. R. Clark against the city of Statesville. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This action was brought to determine the validity of an election held in Statesville on the 15th day of August, 1905, under the provisions of chapter 375, p. 956, of the Private Laws of 1905, at which election the question of issuing $30,000 of bonds for graded school, water, sewerage, and electric light purposes was submitted to the qualified voters of said city. The only question in the case is, as will hereafter appear, whether a majority of the qualified voters of the city voted for the issue of the bonds. The proper authorities ordered a new registration for the said election, under and by virtue of chapter 750, § 3, of the Acts of 1901. At the time of the election there were registered on the permanent roll of registered voters, in the office of the clerk of the superior court, the names of more than 250 persons residing in Statesville who were 21 years old and possessed the qualifications mentioned in article 3, § 1, of the Constitution. These 250 voters were also registered on the old registration books of Statesville at the time the mayor and aldermen ordered a new registration, having registered their names on the said books during the month of March, 1903; but they did not register their names again on the books of the new registration ordered by the city authorities. The permanent roll of registered voters, kept in the clerk's office, shows the names, alphabetically arranged, of voters residing in each of the four precincts into which Statesville township is divided, but does not show which of the voters live inside the city of Statesville and which live outside. There is no permanent roll of registered voters kept by the authorities of Statesville. The only permanent roll is the one kept by the clerk of the court as above stated. Statesville township covers a larger territory than the city of Statesville, and a number of voters on the permanent roll live outside of the city limits. But the 250 voters above mentioned all live within the city. There were 329 voters registered on the new registration books, and of these 223 voted for graded school bonds and 224 voted for water, sewerage, and electric light bonds. The plaintiff contends that the names of the 250 voters registered on the permanent roll, who were also on the old registration books of the city, but who failed to register their names on the books of the new registration ordered by the city, ought to be added to the 329 names on the new registration books in order to ascertain the number of qualified voters at the election. If this is done, the total number of qualified voters was 329+250=579, and neither of the class of bonds voted for received a majority of the qualified votes. There is no question that the act authorizing the bonds to be submitted to a vote of the people was passed in accordance with the constitutional requirements, or that the election was regularly called, or that due notice was given of the election and also of the new registration; nor is there any objection made to the election or to the issuing of the bonds, except that herein specified. As stated by the plaintiff's counsel in his brief, the only question involved in this appeal is this: Were the 250 persons whose names were registered on the permanent roll and also on the old registration books of the city, but not on the books of the new registration ordered by the city, qualified voters at the election? After the election was held, and the finding and determination of the duly authorized canvassers that a majority of the qualified voters had cast their votes in favor of issuing bonds, and when the authorities of the city, who were charged with the duty of issuing the bonds, had declared their purpose to do so, the plaintiff, a taxpayer of the city, brought this action in behalf of himself and all other taxpayers to declare the election void and to enjoin the issue of the bonds. The matter came on to be heard on the complaint and answer, the foregoing facts taken therefrom having been admitted, and it was adjudged upon due consideration that the election was valid, and that the bonds, when issued, will be valid obligations of the city. The temporary restraining order theretofore issued was accordingly dissolved, and the prayer for an injunction denied, with costs. The plaintiff excepted and appealed.

J. B. Armfield, for appellant. Armfield & Turner and Geo. B. Nicholson, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the case). The decision of this case must turn upon the construction of article 6 of the Constitution, and especially of section 4 thereof; it being the one which prescribes a certain educational qualification for a voter and the payment of his poll tax before he shall be entitled to vote, and provides for the registration of all who are entitled to vote without having successfully undergone the educational test therein required, and for the making of a permanent record of such registration. It is now contended by the learned counsel for the plaintiff in this case that this registration of voters who have not submitted to the educational test was intended to be permanent, in the sense that the voter can register once for all time and for all elections, the permanent record required to be made answering as a registration, not only for the next, but for all subsequent elections, such a voter not being required ever to register anew. We are unable to take this view, though it has been ably argued by counsel and presented to us with great plausibility. A consideration of article 6 of the Constitution, and of the system of conducting elections in this state established under its provisions, leads us without any hesitation to the conclusion that such a construction would defeat the main purpose of our election laws, constitutional and statutory, and produce grave and serious results in their operation. The meaning of this section of the Constitution is to our minds unmistakable, and we think the framers of it have selected words most apt and adequate to express that meaning. After prescribing, in sections 1 and 2, certain qualifications for a voter, it is provided in section 3 that "every person offering to vote shall be, at the time, a legally registered voter as herein prescribed and in the manner hereafter provided by law, and the General Assembly shall enact general registration laws to carry into effect the provisions of this article." In section 4 we find that every person presenting himself for registration shall be able to read and write any section of the Constitution in our language, and before he shall be entitled to vote he must show that he has paid his poll tax for the previous year on or before the 1st day of May of the year in which he proposes to vote; but no male person who was on January 1, 1867, or at any time prior thereto, entitled to vote under the laws of any one of the United States wherein he then resided, and no lineal descendant of any such person, shall be denied the right to register and vote at any election in this state by reason of his failure to possess the educational qualifications therein prescribed. Provision is then made, in the same section, for a registration of all voters of the latter class and the making of a permanent roll or record of their names. This was intended to be done most clearly for the sole purpose of furnishing convenient and easily available evidence of the fact that those whose names appear on the list thus made are not required to have the educational qualification. The educational test did not apply to any persons who themselves were, or whose ancestors were, voters on January 1, 1867, and to ascertain and record who such persons were the roll was required to be made. The registration and permanent roll were intended to be a substitute for the educational test or qualification—nothing more, and nothing less. This appears from the language that no person thus registered "shall be denied the right to register and vote at any election in this state by reason of his failure to possess the educational qualifications herein prescribed." In all other respects the two classes of voters, those who are educationally qualified and those otherwise qualified under said section, are to remain on the same footing and to be subject alike to the same laws regulating the exercise of the elective franchise. The context plainly shows that this was the intention and should be the construction of the section, and good and valid reasons can be urged in its support and in favor of the policy adopted. It cannot be doubted that it was the purpose to arrange the voters of this state into two classes, one with the educational qualification and the other without it, but with another qualification deemed to be sufficient in the place of it. But, when they are thus classified and brought to a position of equality of privilege in the exercise of the right to vote, why discriminate against the former class by requiring them to register at each successive election, if so provided by statute, in favor of the latter, by relieving them of this burden. Is it not more reasonable to suppose that the "registration and permanent record" were merely intended to preserve the evidence as to who had thus qualified themselves under the second of the provisions of that section?

But the construction may well be sustained by either of two other reasons. There is a condition annexed in section 4 to the right of persons thus registered on the permanent roll to vote "in all elections by the people of this state," namely, "unless disqualified under section 2 of this article and provided that such person shall have paid his poll tax as above required." Now, section 2 requires, as a qualification for voting, a residence in the state for two years, in the county six months, and in the precinct or ward or other election district four months, next preceding the election, with a proviso that removal from one voting precinct to another shall, after four months from the time of such removal, deprive the voter of the right to vote in his former precinct, and he cannot vote, of course, without registration in his new precinct; and it also provides that conviction of a felony punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary shall disqualify him as a voter until restored to citizenship in the manner prescribed by law. It is evident from this reference in section 4 to section 2 that it was not intended to do more for the one class than for the other. They must all comply with the general provisions of the election laws, enacted for the purpose of securing regularity and certainty in the methods of holding elections and of protecting the ballot box against fraudulent voting. There is no reason why this class of voters, those who are to be on the permanent roll, should be exempt from the operation of those laws, which do not equally apply to the other class. The object of the lawmakers can be well and fully accomplished without such discrimination as between different classes of voters. But we think the very words of section 4 exclude any other conclusion as to the meaning of the organic law upon this subject. The language is that no such person who could vote, or whose ancestor could vote, on January 1, 1867, "shall be denied the right to register and vote at any election in this state by reason of his failure to possess the prescribed educational qualifications, provided he shall have registered in accordance with the terms of this section prior to December 1, 1908." He shall not be denied, not the right to vote, we observe, but the right "to register and vote," provided he complies with the section by registering on the permanent roll or record. Transposing terms, the result will clearly be this: that, if he registers for the permanent roll, he shall not be denied "the right to register and vote" in any future election by reason of his failure to possess the educational qualification. This is too plain, we think, to admit of the likelihood of any misapprehension as to the true meaning. He must register before he can vote. The construction which we have settled upon is the one which has received the full sanction and approval of the Legislature, as is evidenced by the language of section 9 of chapter 550 of the Acts of 1901, being the act providing for permanent registration of all persons entitled to vote under section 4 of article 6 of the Constitution, and that section of chapter 550 of the act of 1901 is especially a legislative interpretation of the meaning of section 4 of article 6 of the Constitution in this respect, that the requirement of registration for the "permanent record," in lieu of the test of reading and writing any section of the Constitution, is only a superadded qualification, and does not dispense with any of the qualifications a voter ordinarily required. This can readily be inferred from the language of said section, which is as follows: "Any person holding a certificate of registration as herein provided for shall be entitled to register in any county of this state, notwithstanding his inability to read and write, provided that he shall be otherwise qualified as an elector."

We have not adverted specially, in this connection, to section 3 of article 6 of the Constitution, by which it is required that every person offering to vote shall be at the time legally registered, as prescribed in that instrument and in the manner thereafter provided by law, and by which it is further directed that the Legislature shall enact "general" registration laws, as distinguished from any special registration laws, to carry into effect the provisions of that article. This manifests clearly the intent that while the person duly registered on the "permanent record" should have the general right forever thereafter to vote in all elections, it being the same right precisely he would have had if the amendment had not been adopted, yet he shall enjoy and exercise this right subject to the other provisions of law concerning elections and to the same extent as they affect other voters who can read and write. The mere fact that he or his ancestor had voted in 1867 was surely not intended to lift him to a higher plane of citizenship, or to accord to him greater privileges or immunities as a voter, than the educated man. Some were freed from the disability of illiteracy, and others permitted to vote if they or their ancestors had voted in 1867. That is all. They were not, therefore, exempt from the full operation of all other laws intended to safeguard the ballot box, and there is no sound reason why they should be. Any other provision might well have been challenged and opposed by the people as unwieldy and inexpedient. This construction preserves and secures unimpaired to the voter on the permanent record the very right which it was the purpose that he should enjoy under the Constitution, and to its fullest extent. Anything more than that would be an unfair discrimination against other voters, and we should not for a moment suppose the people intended that any such result should follow the adoption of the amendment.

We take it to be now thoroughly settled that, contrary to some earlier adjudications, registration is necessary to qualifications as a voter, so that, when the law requires that a majority of the qualified voters should have cast their votes for a given proposition before it becomes the law, it means a majority of the registered voters. Norment v. Charlotte, 85 N. C. 387; Southerland v. Goldsboro, 96 N. C. 49, 1 S. E. 760; Duke v. Brown, 96 N. C. 127, 1 S. E. 873; McDowell v. Construction Co., 96 N. C. 514, 2 S. E. 351; Wood v. Oxford, 97 N. C. 227, 2 S. E. 653. These cases reversed the former rulings on the subject in Railroad v. Commissioners, 72 N. C. 486, and Reiger v. Commissioners, 70 N. C. 319. The canvassers proceeded upon the correct principle in ascertaining that a majority of the qualified voters of Statesville had cast their ballots in favor of issuing the bonds. This results from our construction of the Constitution, when considered in connection with the cases just cited, which define who is a "qualified voter" within the meaning of those words as used in chapter 375, p. 956, of the Private Acts of 1905, under which this election was held, and in other similar acts.

His honor, Judge Long, to whom the matter was submitted for decision, was of opinion, and so adjudged, that as far as appeared the election was in all respects properly conducted and the result correctly declared, and that the bonds will not be invalid for any reason now assigned by the plaintiff. In this opinion and judgment we concur.

Affirmed.

(129 N. C. 402)

BIDWELL v. BIDWELL.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 31, 1906.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE — MAINTENANCE — PARTIES—STATUS.

Where plaintiff and defendant had been divorced a vinculo, plaintiff was not entitled to maintain a suit against her husband for maintenance, authorized by Code, § 1292, in the absence of a showing that the divorce was void and that they were husband and wife at the time the suit was brought.

2. DIVORCE—FOREIGN DIVORCE—RES JUDICATA.

After defendant had acquired an absolute divorce from plaintiff in North Dakota, in an action in which plaintiff appeared, plaintiff sued for divorce in Massachusetts, where she was a resident, and her libel was dismissed on the ground that the North Dakota divorce was valid and a bar to the action. Held that, plaintiff in a suit for maintenance having made no claim that the Massachusetts decree was fraudulent or invalid, she was bound thereby, and was not entitled to claim that a marriage still existed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 17, Cent. Dig. Divorce, § 835.]

3. SAME—ESTOPPEL.

Defendant obtained a divorce from plaintiff in North Dakota, in an action in which she appeared, and was awarded $10,000 and the care and custody of a minor child. After 6½ years plaintiff instituted suit for divorce in Massachusetts, which was determined against her on the ground that the North Dakota divorce was valid and a bar to further proceedings. Held, that plaintiff was thereby estopped, after defendant had married another woman by whom he had had a child, from asserting any further claim against him for pecuniary allowances.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 17, Cent. Dig. Divorce, § 842.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Neal, Judge.

Action by Ella J. Bidwell against George H. Bidwell. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Civil action under section 1292 of the Code to recover for support and maintenance of plaintiff and her minor child. Plaintiff alleged that plaintiff and defendant were man and wife, that defendant had unlawfully abandoned plaintiff, and failed to provide reasonable subsistence for plaintiff and her minor child, though fully able to do so. Defendant answered, denying that he had wrongfully deserted plaintiff, charged the separation to plaintiff's own conduct, and, further, set up the record, proceedings, and decrees of two courts—one in North Dakota, in which the present defendant was awarded an absolute divorce, and the second a record and decree of Massachusetts, in which the present plaintiff sued the present defendant for absolute divorce, and in which there was a decree that the divorce granted in the North Dakota court was valid and binding, and that plaintiff and defendant did not hold the relationship of man and wife—and set up these two records and decrees as an estoppel in bar of relief. Plaintiff replied to the answer, and averred that the decree of divorce granted by the court in North Dakota was null and void, and should be so held, because at the time of the institution of said suit and proceedings and decree therein neither plaintiff nor defendant had any bona fide domicile in North Dakota, "but that defendant had gone to said state with no intent or purpose of becoming a resident or acquiring a bona fide domicile therein, but with the sole purpose of obtaining, by fraud and secretly, a divorce from plaintiff." Further replying, plaintiff averred that the plaintiff was forced by stress of want and dire necessity, being penniless, friendless, homeless, and in a strange land, either to accept such terms as the present defendant might dictate or go hence in destitution for herself and infant child, and under and by virtue of this hard duress, from a necessity from which there was no escape, she took the money he agreed to give her. There was evidence to the effect that the present plaintiff had appeared and answered in the suit in North Dakota, that the decree of divorce was entered after investigation had, and the plaintiff in this suit had been awarded and paid $10,000 as a full and reasonable allowance for the care, education, and maintenance of her minor child. It further appeared that at the time of the institution of the suit in Massachusetts by the present plaintiff, and pending the proceedings therein, the said plaintiff was a citizen, resident, and domiciled in Massachusetts, and defendant had appeared and answered to the libel filed in the cause.

The record of findings of fact and conclusions of law in which the decree of absolute divorce was awarded in the North Dakota suit are as follows: "(1) That plaintiff now is, and at all times since more than 90 days preceding the commencement of this action has been, in good faith a resident of North Dakota, and that defendant is a resident of Springfield, Mass., but is now in this state; (2) that plaintiff is now about 26 years of age and defendant is now about 29 years of age; (3) that on December 9, 1890, plaintiff and defendant were married, and that said marriage has never been annulled or dissolved; (4) that there are two children, living issue of said marriage between plaintiff and defendant herein, to wit, Mary Beulah, a girl four years of age, and Maud, a girl two years of age, the former of which is in the custody of the plaintiff, and the latter in the care and custody of the defendant; (5) that plaintiff and defendant lived together after their said marriage as husband and wife until about the month of December, 1893, at which last-mentioned time they separated, and have lived separate and apart ever since; (6) that this is an action for divorce, and that this court has full jurisdiction of both the parties thereto and of the subject-matter of the action; (7) that defendant, as appears from the proofs herein, has been and is guilty of willful desertion of the plaintiff, and that such desertion, as shown by the proofs herein, is cause for full and absolute divorce under the laws of this state; (8) that the true and best interests of the parties and of the minor children of the parties all require that the custody of said minor child Mary Beulah be awarded to and confirmed in the plaintiff, and the custody of said minor child Maud be awarded to and confirmed in the defendant; (9) that from the proofs as they appear herein the sum of $10,000 is a fair, reasonable, and just sum to be paid by the plaintiff to the defendant for the support, care, custody, maintenance, and education of said minor child Maud, and that the decree herein should require plaintiff to pay said sum to defendant in that behalf, but, and the decree shall so provide, the payment of said $10,000 shall be in full discharge of all obligations of the plaintiff to the defendant, including, not only in behalf of said minor child Maud, but also in full discharge of all obligations from him to her or on account of alimony, support, money, rights of dower, if any, and any and all other obligations whatever, except there be reserved to the said defendant her right of dower, if any she have, in a certain farm in the state of North Carolina, called and known as the 'Moore farm,' near Franklin, in the county of Macon, in said state, formerly owned by plaintiff; (10) that justice to the parties require, and that the decree shall so provide, that each of the parties may visit the child in the care and custody of the other at reasonable times and places provided in that behalf, however, that, when defendant desires to visit the said minor child Mary Beulah, she shall not be required to do so at the home of the plaintiff's parents or relatives, but may do so at the house of some disinterested friend, and with such child in the then temporary custody of such disinterested friend or of the plaintiff. Let judgment be entered herein in conformity with the foregoing by the clerk of the district court," etc. Signed by W. S. Lauder, judge, etc., September 20, 1895.

And the proceeding and decree in the libel for divorce entered in Massachusetts are as follows: "Respectfully libels and represents Ella J. Bidwell, of Springfield, Mass., that she was lawfully married to Geo. H. Bidwell, now of Culasaja, in North Carolina, at Walhalla, in South Carolina, on the 9th day of December, 1890, and thereafterwards your libelant and the said Geo. H. Bidwell lived together as husband and wife in this commonwealth, to wit, at Chester, in said county, and that your libelant has lived in this commonwealth for five years last preceding the filing of this libel; that your libelant has always been faithful to her marriage vows and obligations, but the said Geo. H. Bidwell, being wholly regardless of the same at Culasaja, in North Carolina, on Friday, the 1st day of December, 1893, or thereabout, without just cause willfully and utterly deserted your libelant, which desertion has continued for three consecutive years next prior to the filing of this libel. Wherefore your libelant prays that a divorce from the bonds of matrimony may be decreed between your libelant and the said Geo. H. Bidwell, and that the care and custody of Maud Bidwell and Beulah Bidwell, both minor children of said libelant and libelee, may be decreed to her, and that said libelee may be decreed to pay alimony to your libelant in the sum of $50,000, and for such other orders and decrees as to your honors shall seem meet and as justice may require." Signed by Ella J. Bidwell, February 4, 1902.

The foregoing libel was entered in this court on the 10th day of February, 1902, when the libelant appeared by her attorneys, Bates & Armington, and the libelee appeared by his attorney, E. H. Lathrop, and on the back of said libel is the following acceptance of service: "I accept service of this precept and appear for the libelee, reserving all rights." Signed by E. H. Lathrop, attorney for libelee. February 10, 1902.

And on March 19, 1902, the libelee filed his answer as follows: "The libelee denies each and every allegation in the libel, except said marriage, and that he neither denies nor admits, but leaves the libelant to prove. If the libelant shall prove said alleged marriage, the libelee alleges that he was divorced from the libelant by the district court of Cass county, state of North Dakota, a court of competent jurisdiction and having jurisdiction of the cause and both parties thereto, prior to the beginning of this libel, to wit, September 21, 1895, and which decree of divorce is in full force and effect, and was at the time of bringing this libel. The libelee further says that the libelant has brought two libels against him prior to this one, in which said divorce has been pleaded, all of said proceedings being in this county and of record here; that last proceeding was filed in this county April 12, 1897, and was dismissed January 6, 1902; that said libelee therein pleaded said divorce granted to him as aforesaid in North Dakota, and your libelee says that the issue in this case has been adjudicated in this court, and the libellant is barred from proceedings in this action thereby, and from being granted divorce as prayed for." Signed by E. H. Lathrop, attorney for libelee.

On March 25th there was a full hearing of the evidence, and on March 26th the following decree was filed in the case in the Massachusetts court: "This case came on to be heard on Tuesday, March 25, 1902, before Mr. Justice Maynard; both parties appearing by their respective counsel [naming them]. Now, it appeared upon the hearing of said cause that prior to the bringing of this libel, to wit, September 20, 1895, the said libelee in the above-entitled action, the said Geo. H. Bidwell, was divorced from the said libellant, the said Ella J. Bidwell, by the district court for the Third judicial district of North Dakota, for a cause of divorce recognized in said North Dakota and in this commonwealth, said district court having had jurisdiction of both cause and parties, both parties appearing therein personally and by counsel, and the libelee having filed an answer to said libel, and it further appeared that neither before nor since the filing of this libel was the said Geo. H. Bidwell an inhabitant of this commonwealth. It is hereby decreed and determined that this libel is hereby dismissed, and that said decree of divorce granted by said district court of North Dakota and pleaded herein is a good and valid divorce in this commonwealth, and that the parties are concluded thereby. We hereby assent to this decree." Signed by counsel of both parties and certified by the clerk of the court.

The jury having been impaneled, and the above records presented, further proceedings were had as follows: "This cause coming on to be heard after the introduction of the exemplified copies of the records and decrees in the case of Geo. H. Bidwell against Ella Bidwell, rendered in the court of North Dakota, as alleged in the answer, and the records and decrees in the case of Ella J. Bidwell against Geo. H. Bidwell, rendered in the superior court of Hampden county, Massachusetts, the plaintiff offered testimony tending to prove that the defendant went to North Dakota, not intending to become a resident of that state, and testimony tending to prove the other matters alleged in the replication. Thereupon the court intimated to the counsel for plaintiff that he would charge the jury that the plaintiff was estopped by the Massachusetts decree, notwithstanding the matters alleged in the replication touching the validity of the North Dakota decree, and in deference to that intimation the plaintiff submitted to a judgment of nonsuit and appealed."

Argo & Shaffer and Douglass & Simms, for appellant. Busbee & Busbee, Shepherd & Shepherd, and Jones & Johnston, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the case). On the facts presented for our consideration, the right of the plaintiff to the relief demanded depends on whether the plaintiff and defendant are now husband and wife. Skittleharpe v. Skittleharpe, 130 N. C. 72, 40 S. E. 851. It will be noted that the plaintiff in her reply assails the validity of the North Dakota decree, first, for lack of jurisdiction, and, second, for that the same was obtained by fraud and duress. But no such impeaching allegations are made against the proceedings and decree of the court of Massachusetts. This being true, we are of opinion that the latter decree conclusively determines that the plaintiff and defendant are no longer husband and wife, and that the plaintiff has therefore no right to further support from the defendant.

It is accepted doctrine that, so far as the subject-matter of the controversy is concerned, actions for divorce deal with the status of the parties, and that jurisdiction in such actions is dependent upon the domicile of the parties at the time the decrees are rendered. Where neither party has a domicile in the state of the forum, such court having no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the controversy, a decree of divorce is void, though both parties may have appeared and voluntarily submitted themselves to the jurisdiction of the court. Where the plaintiff only is domiciled in the state of the forum, and has obtained a decree of divorce for a cause recognized as valid in such state, after constructive service of process on the defendant, according to the course and practice of the court, there has heretofore been diversity of opinion as to the extent and binding force of such a decree in other jurisdictions. North Carolina has heretofore held against the validity of such a decree by the courts of other states as affecting the status of her own citizens. The better doctrine, however, now seems to be that where the domicile of the plaintiff has been acquired in good faith, and not in fraud or violation of some law of a former domicile, a divorce of this kind should be recognized as binding everywhere—certainly within the jurisdiction of the United States or any one of them. Atherton v. Atherton, 181 U. S. 155, 21 Sup. Ct. 544, 45 L. Ed. 794; Andrews v. Andrews, 188 U. S. 14, 23 Sup. Ct. 237, 47 L. Ed. 366. The case of Atherton v. Atherton does not establish the proposition here stated on precisely similar facts to the case before us, or it would be controlling; but the general tenor of the decision would seem to favor this conclusion. Where, however, the action is instituted and the decree obtained in the state of the plaintiff's domicile, and the defendant has been served with process within the jurisdiction of the forum or has voluntarily appeared and answered, all the decisions are agreed that a decree in such case is valid, both in rem and in personam, and will bind and conclude the parties everywhere. Jones

v. Jones, 108 N. Y. 415, 15 N. E. 707, 2 Am. St. Rep. 447; Arrington v. Arrington, 102 N. C. 491, 9 S. E. 200. The proceedings and decree of the court of Massachusetts are of the latter character.

It is admitted or established that the plaintiff in that suit, as she is in this, was at the time and still is resident and domiciled in the state of Massachusetts. Her libel was for the purpose of obtaining an absolute divorce from the defendant. He appeared and answered, and set up the proceedings and decree of the North Dakota court in bar of the plaintiff's demand. The Massachusetts court, after full hearing, dismissed the libel on the ground that the North Dakota decree was valid and that the status of the parties was not that of husband and wife. There is here no allegation or claim that the Massachusetts court was without jurisdiction, or that the decree of such court was procured by fraud. The investigation and decree necessarily passed upon and determined the very questions involved here. The court had jurisdiction both of the cause and the parties, and the conclusion is not open to further investigation. True, the case on appeal states that the plaintiff was ready to produce testimony that the defendant never had any domicile in North Dakota, and that such court was without jurisdiction, and that the decree of the Dakota court was obtained by fraud and duress. The answer is that the validity of the divorce has been established by a decree of a competent court having full jurisdiction in the cause, where the very questions she now seeks to raise had been, or could have been, passed upon and determined, and that the plaintiff is thereby estopped from further question concerning them. Jenkins v. Johnston, 57 N. C. 149; Tuttle v. Harrill, 85 N. C. 456; McElwee v. Blackwell, 101 N. C. 192, 7 S. E. 893; Thurston v. Thurston, 99 Mass. 39; Hood v. Hood, 110 Mass. 463; Bradley v. Bradley, 160 Mass. 258, 35 N. E. 482; Cromwell v. County Sac, 94 U. S. 351, 24 L. Ed. 195.

It is suggested that the decree of the Massachusetts court is a consent decree, and for that reason is not binding or conclusive between the parties in actions of this character. The question, however, does not arise on this record; for we are clearly of opinion that this is not a decree by consent. The entire record discloses that the case was conducted throughout as an adversary proceeding, and judgment was entered after full and due inquiry into the facts. Our decision of the cause is in accord with the general equities of the case, as indicated by the course of events and the conduct and present status of the parties. The plaintiff, having appeared and answered in the suit in North Dakota, receives $10,000 awarded her in that case for the care and custody of her minor child. After a delay of 6½ years she institutes her own suit for divorce in Massachusetts, which is determined against her, and in which she is awarded ——— thousand dollars by way of allowance. Again, after considerable delay, in apparent acquiescence, she brings this suit, seeking further allowance for support. The defendant, in the meanwhile, in reliance on the decrees of two courts—one of them certainly having full jurisdiction of both cause and parties—has married another woman and had a child born to him by this marriage.

Apart from the estoppel by record on the principal question, there is strong authority for holding that the plaintiff is estopped by conduct in pais from asserting any further claim for pecuniary allowance against the defendant. Nichols v. Nichols, 25 N. J. Eq. 60; Mohler v. Shank's Estate, 93 Iowa, 273, 61 N. W. 981, 34 L. R. A. 161, 57 Am. St. Rep. 274; Baily v. Baily, 44 Pa. 274, 84 Am. Dec. 439. There should be an end to this litigation. The defendant may well invoke for his protection the maxim, "Nemo debet bis vexari pro una et eadem causa." We hold that there was no error in the ruling of the court below.

No error.

(129 N. C. 412)

GLENN v. MOORE COUNTY COM'RS et al.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 31, 1905.)

1. BRIDGES—POWER TO CONTROL.

Where the owner of land on both sides of a river built a bridge at that point and opened public roads over his lands, the county paying a portion of the expense and contracting with the landowner to thereafter maintain the bridge as a public bridge, the contract was one that it was not competent for the county commissioners to make, and the bridge was subject to the control of the commissioners as all other county bridges, and the board had authority to discontinue the same at any time.

2. MANDAMUS—TO COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

Code, c. 17, § 707, subsec. 15, makes it the duty of the commissioners of each county to open and to discontinue highways and bridges. By section 1090 a willful failure to discharge such duty is a misdemeanor, and by section 711 commissioners failing to discharge any duty imposed by law may be sued for a penalty. Held, that a taxpayer of the county could not maintain mandamus to compel the board of commissioners to repair a certain bridge.

3. INJUNCTION—ERECTION OF BRIDGE.

Code, c. 17, § 707, subsec. 15, makes it the duty of the commissioners of each county to open and to discontinue highways and bridges. By section 1090 a willful failure to discharge such duty is a misdemeanor, and by section 711 commissioners failing to discharge any duty imposed by law may be sued for a penalty. Section 2034 provides that, when a bridge is necessary, the town supervisors, with the concurrence of the county commissioners, shall contract for the building and maintenance thereof at the cost of the county. Held, that where the board of commissioners had in contemplation the opening of a public road to a point on a stream and the erection of a bridge there, and the commissioners had acted honestly and in good faith, a taxpayer could not maintain a suit for injunction to restrain the erection of the bridge.

Appeal from Superior Court, Moore County; Neal, Judge.

Action by E. F. Glenn for a mandamus to compel the board of commissioners of Moore county and others to repair a public bridge, and for an injunction restraining them from erecting another bridge. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Action, prosecuted by plaintiff in his individual right and as a taxpayer of Moore county, for the purpose of having a mandamus directed to the defendant board of commissioners commanding it to repair a public bridge over Deep river and an injunction restraining said defendant from erecting another bridge over said river some distance below the present one. The cause coming on to be heard before Judge Neal upon an order to show cause, he found the following facts: "That about the year of 1882 or 1883 a bridge was constructed over Deep river, in Moore county, at Glenn's Mill. That Dr. R. W. Glenn, the father of the plaintiff, constructed the said bridge at a cost of about $4,000. That after the construction of the said bridge the board of commissioners made an order in favor of the said Dr. R. W. Glenn on the treasurer of the said county for the sum of $1,250 toward the amount expended for the erection of the said bridge. That at the time of the building of the bridge aforesaid and the issuing of the order aforesaid the said Dr. R. W. Glenn was the owner of the lands on both sides of the river at the place where the said bridge was constructed. That at the time of the construction of the said bridge and the issue of the said order, or shortly before or after said times, the said Dr. R. W. Glenn opened up the public roads over his said lands leading to the bridge on both sides of the said river, and the said board accepted said roads as public roads, and have used and worked the same as public roads ever since. That since the said time the public has used the said bridge. That the plaintiff is now the owner of the lands referred to as owned by Dr. R. W. Glenn on both sides of the river, having acquired ownership as one of the heirs of Dr. R. W. Glenn and by purchase from the other heirs. That the plaintiff is a freeholder of the county of Moore, and a taxpayer therein. That the proposed new bridge contracted for by the defendant board is about one-half mile from the old bridge at Glenn's Mill. That after the building of the said bridge, and after it had been received as a public bridge by the board of commissioners of Moore county, the said Dr. R. W. Glenn, the plaintiff, and the co-owners of the property, as set forth in the complaint, constructed the buildings on their real property on both sides of the river at Glenn's Mill, and made the improvements alleged in the complaint, or some of them. That the buildings were constructed and the improvements made with reference to the said contract and the bridge at Glenn's Mill. That a failure to keep the bridge in repair at Glenn's Mill will damage the plaintiff in his property. That the bridge so constructed at Glenn's Mill in 1882 or 1883 became the property of the county. That the board of commissioners since that time made frequent repairs on said bridge. That the board of commissioners of Moore county, upon complaint made as to the condition of said bridge, appointed a special committee to examine said bridge and report to the board, and that said committee made the report attached to the answer of said board marked 'Exhibit A,' and made a part thereof. That thereafter the commissioners of said county made personal examination of the site of the old bridge, and the site of the proposed new bridge, and the other sites, and thereafter, on the 3d day of July, 1905, made the order attached to the complaint marked 'Exhibit B.' That on the 3d day of July, 1905, the defendant entered into the contract attached to the answer, 'Exhibit C.' That the board of commissioners of Moore county has found the facts: (1) That the construction of a bridge over Deep river, at a point near Glendon, in Moore county, is a public necessity; (2) that the proper site for said bridge is at the Hancock old bridge site near the Tyson place. That the old bridge at Glenn's Mill is out of repair. That it is not the intention of the board of commissioners to discontinue the public roads leading to Glenn's Mill. That there is no public road in use leading to the site which has been selected for said bridge, but said board has in contemplation the opening of public roads to and from said bridge; that the owner of the property on the north side of said bridge has agreed with said board to donate to the county sufficient land for the construction of a road to said bridge; and that arrangements have been made for the construction of said road without expense to the county. That on the south side of the river there is a distance of perhaps 150 yards between the site selected and the public road; that a petition has been filed before the board of commissioners praying that a public road be opened over the plaintiff's land, so as to connect the site of said bridge with said public road; and that said petition is now pending before the board, and the board has in contemplation the construction of a public road leading to the proposed bridge. That the proposed new bridge contracted for by the defendant board is about one-half mile from the old bridge at Glenn's Mill. That the said defendant board of county commissioners acted honestly and for what they conceived to be the best interest of the people of Moore county." Plaintiff requested the court to find certain other facts not necessary to be set out. His honor upon the findings dissolved the restraining order and refused to grant an injunction to the hearing. Thereupon the defendants demurred ore tenus, and moved the court to dismiss the action because the complaint did not set forth facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Motion allowed, and plaintiff appealed.

U. L. Spence and Seawell & McIver, for appellant. W. J. Adams, for appellees.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the facts). Two causes of action are set forth in the complaint, although not stated separately as directed by the Code. The plaintiff first relies upon the contract made with his ancestor during the year 1882, by which he insists that the county of Moore is obligated to maintain and keep in repair the public bridge across Deep river, which was, pursuant to said contract, built by his father, who then owned the land upon which he erected a public mill, and that performance of this contract may be specifically enforced by the writ of mandamus. This claim is entirely independent of the demand that the defendant be enjoined from erecting a second bridge one-half mile below the present bridge. It is very doubtful whether the two causes of action—one to enforce a contractual right having no connection with his right as a taxpayer in common with all other citizens of the county, and the other dependent entirely upon such relation to enforce the performance of a public duty—can be joined. As his honor disposed of the cause upon a broader ground, we prefer not to pass upon this question of pleading. We do not think it competent for a board of commissioners to enter into a contract with a citizen to perpetually maintain and keep in repair a public road or bridge, giving to such citizen a cause of action against the county whenever, in the exercise of its discretion in the interest of the public, the same or another board shall deem it proper to discontinue such road or bridge. The power vested in and duly imposed upon boards of commissioners to open and maintain roads and erect and keep in repair public bridges is for the benefit of the public, and they have no power to exercise it for any other purpose, or to bind their successors in that respect. The Legislature and the commissioners are but its agents and cannot do so. In Bridge Co. v. Commissioners, 81 N. C. 491, this court held that "the essential powers of government, conferred for wise and useful purposes, should remain undiminished and unimpaired in the legislative body itself, and pass in full force to its successors. When a contract undertakes to alienate any of these, it is inoperative; and, as no right vests, so no obligation is created under it." The exact question is settled by Smith, C. J., citing with approval Greenleaf's Cruise, in which it is said: "It is therefore deemed not competent for a Legislature to covenant that it will not, under any circumstances, open another avenue to the public travel within certain limits or a certain term of time; such being an alienation of sovereign powers and a violation of public duty." It does not very clearly appear that the contract made in 1882 by the commissioners with plaintiff's ancestor, constituted a covenant running with the land or that it extended beyond his own life. In no point of view can the plaintiff maintain his first alleged cause of action. The bridge, considered either upon the averments of the complaint or the findings of fact by his honor, became upon its completion a part of the public highway, subject to the control of the commissioners, as all other bridges in the county. The fact that the commissioners paid only a part of the cost of its construction did not change its character. Stratford v. Greensboro, 124 N. C. 181, 32 S. E. 394; Trustees v. Realty Co., 184 N. C. 41, 46 S. E. 723.

For a second cause of action, plaintiff sues in his right as a taxpayer to enforce the performance of a public duty. While the right to enforce by mandamus the discharge of a ministerial duty by a public officer is well settled and often exercised, it is equally well settled that, when any discretion is vested in such officer in regard to the manner of performance, the courts will not order a mandamus. The duty to open and to discontinue highways and bridges is vested in the commissioners of each county. Code, § 707, subsec. 15, c. 17. The willful failure to discharge this or any other public duty is a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, removal from office follows. Code, § 1090. A commissioner failing to discharge any duty imposed upon him by law may also be sued for a penalty of $200. Code, § 711; Turner v. McKee, 137 N. C. 251, 49 S. E. 330. In Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244, Pearson, C. J., discussing the power of the court to regulate the manner in which county commissioners discharge the duty of building public bridges, says: "Who is to decide what are the necessary expenses of a county? The county commissioners, to whom are confided the trust of regulating all county matters. Repairing and building is a part of the necessary expenses of a county, as much as keeping the roads in order or making new roads. So the case before us is within the power of the county commissioners. How can this court undertake to control its exercise? Can we say such a bridge does not need repairs, or that, in building a new bridge near the site of an old bridge, it should be erected, as heretofore, upon posts, so as to be cheap, but warranted to last for some years, or that it is better policy to locate it a mile or so above, where the banks are good abutments, etc. * * * In short, this court is not capable of controlling the exercise of power on the part of the General Assembly, or of the county authorities, and it cannot assume to do so, etc." To the same effect is Buckman v. Com'rs, 80 N. C. 121; Vaughan v. Com'rs, 117 N. C. 429, 23 S. E. 354; Black v. Com'rs, 129 N. C. 121, 39 S. E. 818.

The power of the court to direct a mandamus to a board of commissioners, when discretion is vested in it in respect to the manner of discharging a public duty, is fully discussed by Mr. Justice Walker in Barnes v. Com'rs, 135 N. C. 27, 47 S. E. 737. The authorities are carefully collected, and the principles by which the action of the courts is controlled clearly announced. In State v. Town, etc., 44 Minn. 549, 47 N. W. 163, the power of the courts to mandamus town commissioners to construct a public bridge was denied; the court saying: "It is unnecessary for us to consider under what circumstances, if at all, the courts will assume to control these officers in the exercise of the duties imposed upon them in respect to highways, and which, from their very nature, must be largely discretionary. It is certain that this should not be done, unless the particular act, the performance of which is sought to be enforced, is so plainly and imperatively required that a refusal or neglect to do it cannot be reasonably based upon grounds of discretion." The same conclusion was reached in State v. County Court, 33 W. Va. 589, 11 S. E. 72, in which it is said: "It may be that the county court has acted erroneously, and even in disregard of the best interests of the people of the county; but, having a discretionary power, it cannot, while legitimately exercising that power, however erroneously or contrary to the best interests of the county, be controlled by mandamus." In State v. Com'rs, 119 Ind. 444, 21 N. E. 1097, it is said: "It appears from the facts found that the board of commissioners, in the exercise of their discretion, refused to order the bridge repaired. The present is, therefore, not a case where the commissioners refused to act, but is one in which they did not act in a manner to suit the relators, who now ask the court to compel them to reverse their former action. This cannot be done by mandamus proceedings." Smith on Mun. Corp. § 1564; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. 813. While we hold, in accordance with the authorities cited, in the light of the facts in this case as developed either by the complaint or the facts found by the judge, that the plaintiff is not entitled to a mandamus commanding the commissioners to repair the bridge, we do not hold that in no case can such relief be granted. If the Legislature had directed a bridge to be built and maintained in proper condition for public travel as a part of a public highway, and provided the money or directed that a special tax be levied for that purpose, we would not hesitate to direct the writ to issue commanding the board to discharge the imposed duty. The county, being an agency of the state, and the commissioners, being in respect to the opening and maintaining of highways state officers, may be compelled by mandamus to discharge such duty when no discretion is vested in them, as in Tate v. Com'rs, 122 N. C. 812, 30 S. E. 352. In that case the General Assembly had by special act directed the commissioners of Haywood county to levy a special tax for the purpose of keeping in repair the public roads. The plaintiff applied to the court for a mandamus as in this appeal. The present Chief Justice, speaking of the status of counties, said: "They are subject to legislative authority, which can direct them to do, as a duty, all such matters as they can empower them to do." Referring to Brodnax v. Groom, supra, he says: "It merely holds that, as to those matters which the status has legally committed to the discretion of the county commissioners, the courts cannot interfere to restrain or supervise the exercise of that discretion. But this is no authority that the lawmaking power cannot restrict the authority it confers upon the county commissioners by making the manner of working the roads mandatory in any county." Jones v. Com'rs, 137 N. C. 579, 50 S. E. 291; People v. Supervisors, 142 N. Y. 271, 36 N. E. 1062. In this case the power and duty of the commissioners being dependent upon the general law by which a discretion is vested in them, there is no power in the courts to interfere by mandamus. Ewbank v. Turner, 134 N. C. 85, 46 S. E. 508. The same reason and authorities bring us to the conclusion that his honor properly denied the injunction restraining the defendant from proceeding to erect the bridge across the river, as contracted for with the defendant construction company. It is true that the power to construct bridges is confined to public highways; and, if it were made to appear that the defendant board was threatening to expend the public revenues to construct a bridge over a river at some point to which there was no approach or means of exit by the public, the courts would enjoin it as ultra vires.

The power conferred by section 707, subsec. 15, to build and keep up bridges, refers exclusively to public bridges. This is manifest from the language of section 2034 of the Code. It is also true that his honor finds that at this time there is no public highway leading to the point upon the banks of the river at which the proposed new bridge is to be built; but he also finds that the board has in contemplation the opening of a public road to such point, and that arrangements have been made for that purpose, and that a petition has been filed and is now pending before said board for that purpose. The order in which the work is to be performed is within the sound discretion of the commissioners; and his honor finds that they have exercised this discretion honestly, and in a manner which they conceived to be for the best interests of the people of the county. This finding excludes any interference by the courts. It will be manifest, upon slight consideration, that an attempt on the part of the court to direct or control the exercise of such discretion would lead to confusion and conflict highly injurious to the public welfare. We find no error in his honor's judgment in that respect, nor do we find any error in the ruling rejecting the testimony proposed to be introduced by plaintiff. We notice that the summons is made returnable in term, and not, as in cases where mandamus, for other than money demand, is prayed before the judge at chambers, as provided by Code, § 623. This was doubtless because of the joinder of a prayer for injunctive relief. We are not quite sure that his honor, upon the hearing at Monroe of the motions for writ of mandamus and injunction, should have dismissed the action. The cause should regularly have been docketed in Moore county at the time the summons was issued. It would have been more orderly for his honor to have transmitted the orders made at Monroe to the clerk to be duly noted, and at the next term judgment dismissing the action, unless the complaint was by leave of court amended, be entered. Ewbank v. Turner, 184 N. C. 77, 46 S. E. 508.

We concur with his honor that upon the allegations in the complaint the plaintiff was not upon either cause of action entitled to the relief demanded.

There is no error.

(129 N. C. 395)

WILSON v. DUPLIN TELEPHONE CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 31, 1905.)

1. TENDER—SUFFICIENCY.

Where plaintiff, as soon as he had notice of the advertisement of his stock in defendant company for sale for nonpayment of a call made thereon, tendered to defendant's secretary $15 in cash, which was more than the amount due, and told the secretary that he would tender more if that was not enough, which he was prepared to do, and demanded the stock, the tender was sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 45, Cent. Dig. Tender, § 24.]

2. CORPORATIONS—STOCK—CALLS—NONPAYMENTS—SALE.

Where the secretary of defendant corporation declined to accept a sufficient tender of a call made on plaintiff's stock before sale, a subsequent sale of the stock for nonpayment of the call was void.

3. SAME—RIGHTS OF OWNER.

Where plaintiff's stock in defendant's corporation was wrongfully sold at public sale for nonpayment of a call, he was entitled to treat the sale as invalid, and compel the corporation to issue similar stock to him, on payment of the amount of the call, with interest to the date of the tender and cost of advertisement to that date.

Appeal from Superior Court, Duplin County; Council, Judge.

Action by J. P. Wilson against the Duplin Telephone Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Stevens, Beasley & Weeks and Shepherd & Shepherd, for appellant. F. R. Cooper and G. E. Butler, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. The court below finds as facts: That the plaintiff had subscribed for a $25 share of stock in the defendant company, and paid thereon $12.50. That on 16th June, 1905, the balance due, with interest, was $14.78, which the plaintiff did not pay when called for, whereupon on said day, by a resolution of the board of directors, the stock was advertised for sale. As soon as the plaintiff had notice of such advertisement, he tendered the secretary of the defendant company $15 in cash, and told him he would tender more if that was not enough, and that he had plenty of money with him to pay it, and demanded the share of stock. The secretary did not allege that any more was due, but simply declined to accept payment. Upon this, his honor held properly that there was a legal tender (Smith v. B. & L. Ass'n, 119 N. C. 260, 26 S. E. 40; Blalock v. Clark, 133 N. C. 308, 45 S. E. 642), and that the subsequent sale of the stock was void. It seems that the president of the company was present at the sale, as the court finds that he was not present "in that capacity." The purchaser afterwards transferred the share of stock to the president individually for full value.

It is true that the plaintiff might have bought this stock at the sale, and avoided the necessity of this action, as any surplus of his bid over the amount due by him on the stock would have gone to himself; and it is true that he might have brought suit for damages, but he could elect to treat the sale as a nullity, and ask that the company be directed to issue the certificate of stock to him upon payment of the balance due by him for balance due on stock ($12.50), with interest to the date of tender, and cost of advertisement to that day (but not cost of sale), as asked in his complaint, which avers his readiness to pay said sum.

There was evidence tending to show tender, and the finding of fact is conclusive. The sale thereafter was wrongful, and no title passed to the purchaser. The company having issued to him a share of stock without authority, his remedy would be against the company to recover back the purchase money and interest; but, as he has since sold said unauthorized certificate to the president of the company, the rights of the latter can doubtless be adjusted between him and the company without suit.

The plaintiff is entitled to a mandamus for the issue to him of his certificate of stock upon payment of the amount above stated.

No error.

(139 N. C. 599)

STATE v. MCINTYRE.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 7, 1905.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS — OFFENSES — POSSESSION OF LIQUOR.

Laws 1903, p. 144, c. 125, and Laws 1905, p. 987, c. 800, which declare it unlawful to rectify, manufacture, sell, or otherwise dispose of intoxicating liquors, establish minute regulations for the sale of whisky by druggists for medicinal purposes, and impose specific duties on various officers, do not make it an indictable offense to have in one's possession whisky with intent to sell the same.

2. SAME.

Under Laws 1905, p. 991, c. 800, § 20, declaring it unlawful for any person to have in his possession more than two gallons of spirituous liquors at any one time, and providing that the possession of a greater quantity shall be prima facie evidence that such person is engaged in the illegal sale of liquor, the possession of more than the specified quantity of liquor is not of itself a distinct and substantive offense, but is merely an evidential fact in a prosecution for an illegal sale of liquor under other sections of the act.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 29, Cent. Dig. Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 150, 251.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Cumberland County; Moore, Judge.

William McIntyre was convicted of a violation of the liquor law, and appeals. Judgment arrested.

Thos. H. Sutton and N. A. Sinclair, for appellant. The Attorney General, for the State.

HOKE, J. The defendant was indicted, under the law regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors in Cumberland county, for having in his possession and under his control more than two gallons of whisky at one time with intent to sell the same. The statutes under which the defendant was convicted (Laws 1903, p. 144, c. 125, and Laws 1905, p. 987, c. 800) contain no such offense as that specifically charged in the bill of indictment. They make it unlawful to rectify, manufacture, sell, or otherwise dispose of, for gain, intoxicating liquors, etc., establish minute regulations for the sale of whisky by druggists for medicinal purposes, and impose specific duties on various officers in enforcement of the acts, but nowhere, so far as we can discover, make it indictable to have in possession whisky with intent to sell.

It is argued that under section 20, c. 800, p. 991, Laws 1905, "the having in possession more than two gallons of spirituous liquors" is unlawful, and, rejecting the concluding words of the charge, "with intent to sell," as surplusage, the indictment would contain a distinct and substantive offense, made criminal by the law. We do not think, however, that this was the intent of the Legislature, nor is it a correct interpretation of the section. The statute had already clearly defined the acts, made criminal so far as individuals were concerned, imposing specific and severe punishment for its violation, and is here dealing with the administrative features of the law. The entire section reads: "That it shall be unlawful for any person to have in his or her possession, or under his or her control, more than two gallons of spirituous liquors or more than five gallons of malt liquors at any one time, and the possession of a greater quantity shall be prima facie evidence that such person is engaged in the illegal sale of liquor." This is all in one sentence, and the latter part of it, "shall be prima facie evidence," gives clear indication that it was the only effect contemplated as the result of forbidden possession contained in the first part of the sentence; the correct interpretation being that the Legislature only intended to give the possession of more than two gallons of whisky evidential force on the charge of illegal sale, and did not intend to create a distinct and substantive offense. We are confirmed in this conclusion by the consideration that there is grave doubt if it is in the power of the Legislature to make the mere ownership or possession of a given amount of whisky in itself a crime. The right to own property is ordinarily one of the rights regarded as fundamental, which may not be forbidden, forfeited, or interfered with by legislation, except in the assertion of eminent domain or in the exercise of the police power. Only in the rarest instances can the police power be called on to regulate or control the conduct of individuals in the privacy of their own homes, or when not involving any relationship to others or the public.

It is true that the Supreme Court of the United States, in Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205, and in several cases since that time, has given decided intimation that the police power can lawfully be extended to almost any phase of the use of spirituous liquors, and that the Legislature must determine the extent of its exercise. And this is certainly the general trend of the modern decisions on the subject. At the same time, no legislation, so far as we recall, has as yet gone to the extent of making the mere ownership or possession of whisky a crime, except, perhaps, in furtherance of a state monopoly, when in aid of the state's revenue. "They have all stopped short of dealing with private consumption of whisky," says a recent writer on the subject. The only one we have discovered which approaches the extent claimed for the present law was one in the state of West Virginia, making it a crime to keep in possession spirituous liquors for another; and this was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of that state. State v. Gilman, 33 W. Va. 146, 10 S. E. 283, 6 L. R. A. 847. The court does not desire or intend to express an opinion on this very important question. The comments are only made in support of the position that the act in question, from the context and the casual and incidental way in which it is expressed, does not, and does not intend to, make the possession of whisky in itself a crime, but that such possession of the prohibited quantity was only evidential in prosecution for the illegal sale of spirituous liquors, made criminal by other sections of the act.

We hold that no crime is charged against the defendant in the bill of indictment, and the judgment against him must be arrested. Judgment arrested.

(139 N. C. 446)

BERNARD v. SHEMWELL et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 7, 1905.)

1. APPEAL—DECISIONS APPEALABLE—INTERLOCUTORY ORDERS.

An order sustaining a demurrer to a complaint in foreclosure proceedings, on the ground that the mortgagor is not made a party, is not appealable; but, in order to obtain a review of the same, plaintiff should decline to bring the mortgagor in as a party and submit to a dismissal, or take an exception and bring the matter up on appeal from a final judgment against him, if judgment is so rendered.

2. APPEAL—DISCRETION OF COURT—AMENDMENT AS TO PARTIES.

Under Code, § 273, authorizing the court, in furtherance of justice, to amend pleadings or proceedings by adding or striking out the name of a party, an order bringing in an additional party is usually discretionary, and not reviewable.

3. MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—PARTIES DEFENDANT—ORIGINAL MORTGAGOR.

A mortgagor who has conveyed his equity of redemption has no interest in an action to foreclose the mortgage and is not a necessary party defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 35, Cent. Dig. Mortgages, § 1280.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Davidson County; Bryan, Judge.

Action by George Bernard against Baxter Shemwell and others. From an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Dismissed.

Walser & Walser, for appellant. McCrary & Ruark and E. E. Raper, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. This was a demurrer in a proceeding for foreclosure, upon the ground that the mortgagor, who had assigned his equity of redemption, was not made a party. The judge sustained the demurrer, but did not make any order directing him to be made a party or dismissing the action for failure to do so. Had the plaintiff declined to make the additional party and the action had then been dismissed, an appeal would lie. But the plaintiff should either have taken that course or have had his exception noted, and making the additional party should have brought the interlocutory order up for review, if it proved prejudicial and the final judgment were against him. If the final judgment should be in his favor, or the interlocutory order should not prove injurious, a review thereof would not be desired. The court does not entertain fragmentary appeals. It can very rarely happen that making an additional party will be a serious prejudice, and hence such orders are usually discretionary and not reviewable. Code, § 273; Tillery v. Candler, 118 N. C. 889, 24 S. E. 709, and cases cited.

But, should it be contended that such order is prejudicial, no appeal lies at this stage. Lane v. Richardson, 101 N. C. 181, 7 S. E. 710; Emry v. Parker, 111 N. C. 261, 16 S. E. 236; Bennett v. Shelton, 117 N. C. 105, 23 S. E. 95; Gammon v. Johnson, 126 N. C. 67, 35 S. E. 185. The appellant should have noted his exception, and have presented it for review upon appeal from the final judgment, should it be adverse to him. Even if the mortgagor had been made a party, no probable injury to the plaintiff thereby is shown. The appeal must be dismissed because premature; but it is not amiss to say that the mortgagor could have no possible interest in this action, since he had conveyed his equity of redemption. "It is well settled that a mortgagor, who since the execution of the mortgage has parted with his interest in the premises by an absolute conveyance, retaining no longer the equity of redemption, is not a necessary defendant in foreclosing the mortgage. Neither are the heirs of such person necessary parties, nor are his personal representatives or his wife." 9 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 332, and numerous cases there cited; Jones on Mortgages (3d Ed.) § 1402.

The court having sustained the demurrer, the plaintiff should be allowed to make the mortgagor a party, or, if (as suggested) this is impossible, the judge may allow the complaint to be amended so as to set up that allegation.

Appeal dismissed.

(124 Ga. 185)

FRICKER v. AMERICUS MFG. & IMP. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 13, 1905.)

1. WRIT OF ERROR—PARTIES—AMENDMENTS.

If a necessary party to a bill of exceptions was omitted therefrom, it could be added by amendment at its own instance and that of the plaintiff in error, not changing the record or raising new points, but simply joining the new party in the bill of exceptions already filed by the other.

2. SAME—RECORD—INCORPORATION OF EVIDENCE.

Where an auditor filed as a part of the brief of evidence accompanying his report a stenographic report of the testimony, it became a part of the record, and it can be specified and brought to this court as such; and the bill of exceptions will not be dismissed because there is no condensed and narrative brief.

3. SAME—TRANSCRIPT—DELAY IN TRANSMITTING.

Where the clerk of the superior court certified that when he went into office on January 2, 1905, he found the bill of exceptions filed on December 31, 1904, that it had been impossible to transcribe the record within 10 days, and that he forwarded it at once upon completing a copy on January 20, 1905, and where it does not appear that the plaintiff in error or his counsel caused or contributed to the delay or were in any way at fault, a motion to dismiss the bill of exceptions will be overruled.

4. SAME—AUDITOR'S REPORT—EXCEPTIONS.

Where, in an action of an equitable nature, exceptions are filed to an auditor's report, mere general exceptions that such ruling and findings were erroneous under the pleadings and evidence will furnish no ground for reversal.

5. CORPORATIONS—ACTION AGAINST OFFICERS—NECESSITY OF TENDER.

Where an equitable petition alleged that the defendant, who was a director, and its secretary and treasurer, had been acting for the petitioner and was still purporting to do so, and occupied a fiduciary relation to it; that he purchased its property at sheriff's sale and took a deed in his own name; that he incumbered it with a mortgage to secure a loan, the amount of which was used in paying the purchase money at the sheriff's sale, and another to certain loan brokers who aided in the transaction; that he was a man of small means and unable to respond in damages; that he had taken possession of all of the plaintiff's property and had received rents, issues, and profits therefrom; that an accounting was necessary to ascertain what, if anything, should be paid to him; and that until such accounting it was impossible to determine definitely the status—and where the plaintiff offered to do equity and to pay what should be found justly due, if anything, and sought to have the defendant declared to hold the property in trust for it, and that the decree be so molded as to do equity and to return the property to the plaintiff, the petition was not demurrable for want of a tender to the defendant.

6. EQUITY—PLEADING—PETITION.

None of the other grounds of the demurrer were well taken.

7. REFERENCE—INSUFFICIENT REPORT—PROCEDURE.

If the auditor failed to report with sufficient fullness on any issue, a motion for a reference, not an exception to his report, was the proper remedy.

8. NONSUIT.

There was no error in refusing to dismiss the case, in the nature of a nonsuit.

9. TRIAL—EXCEPTIONS.

Where a number of letters were admitted in evidence, and an exception was taken to their admission as a whole, and some of them were admissible, the exception cannot be sustained.

10. USE AND OCCUPATION—AMOUNT OF RECOVERY.

If an agent or person occupying a fiduciary relation towards an owner of property bought it in at sheriff's sale, and took title in his own name, and occupied it in part and in part received rents from it, and upon an equitable proceeding it was determined that the owner was entitled to recover the property and have an accounting for rents, issues, and profits, the liability of the defendant was not necessarily limited to the amount of rents actually collected by him while in possession, but would include what he should have received on that account by proper diligence; that is, the reasonable rental value of the property.

11. CORPORATIONS—OFFICERS—DISLOYALTY.

A director of a corporation, who is also its secretary and treasurer and its agent to procure a loan for it to save its property from sheriff's sale, occupies a fiduciary relation towards it, and cannot acquire interests in the property adverse to the company.

12. SAME—UNAUTHORIZED SERVICES—COMPENSATION.

If a person occupying a fiduciary relation to a corporation, and who was purporting to act for it in procuring a loan to prevent the loss of its property at sheriff's sale, procured a loan and bought the property in his own name, upon a proceeding by equitable petition to recover the property and have an accounting, brought by the company against him, he was not entitled, in addition to his reasonable expenses in procuring the loan, to be credited also with expenses incurred by him in an effort to effect a reorganization of the company without its knowledge or consent; there being no agreement as to the amount for procuring the loan separately.

13. SAME—RATIFICATION.

The bringing of an equitable action for the purpose of recovering the property and having an accounting did not operate to ratify the effort to effect a reorganization of the company without its consent.

14. INTEREST—USE AND OCCUPATION.

Mesne profits, or rental value, does not ordinarily bear interest, at least until it becomes a liquidated sum.

15. TRUSTS—ACCOUNTING.

The auditor reported how the balance between the parties stood on March 1, 1901, and that the amount due by the defendant since March 1, 1901, should be credited with all sums paid out by the defendant for interest on the $35,000 loan procured by him at 7 per cent. per annum, and for taxes, insurance, and caring for the property; said credits to be ascertained by the court on the trial of the case. Held, that this finding contemplated the determination by the court, at the trial, of the balance since March 1, 1901; and this could not be properly done in entering up a decree by merely taking the amount which the auditor had found to be the rental value of the property up to March 1, 1901, charging defendant with the same rate per month after that date, and allowing no credits, without further investigation to ascertain the correct balance at the date of the decree.

16. ACCOUNT—PARTIES.

Where, in a litigation of the character indicated in the preceding headnote, the defendant claimed credit on account of an amount which he had agreed to pay to certain loan brokers, and an amendment was offered by the plaintiff, charging collusion between the defendant and such brokers, and that he had given to them a mortgage on the property involved in the controversy, which included not only legitimate charges, but also certain charges which were attacked as unlawful, and praying that the brokers be made parties, they being residents, that full relief be granted with respect to the matter, and that their mortgage be canceled, such amendment was proper, and should have been allowed, and the brokers should have been made parties defendant.

17. SAME.

In determining between the parties whether the defendant should be allowed credit for certain payments made by him, a corporation to whom the payments were made is not a necessary party, and its absence will not furnish ground for demurrer by the defendant.

18. SAME—INDEMNITY.

In decreeing that possession of the property involved in the controversy should be taken from the defendant and delivered to the plaintiff, there being an outstanding mortgage, the court did not err in the equitable terms which were placed upon the plaintiff, or in requiring it to indemnify the defendant against the mortgage, under the facts of this case.

19. COSTS—EQUITABLE ACTION—DISCRETION OF COURT.

In an equitable action it is the province of the judge to determine upon whom costs shall fall; and this determination will not be reversed, unless the discretion of the presiding judge is abused.

20. WRIT OF ERROR—REVERSAL.

The judgment of the trial court is reversed, and the case remanded, with directions as to its further progress.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Sumter County;

Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Action by the Americus Manufacturing & Improvement Company against Charles A. Fricker. There was judgment for plaintiff and both parties bring error. Reversed in part, and affirmed in part.

On April 12, 1900, the Americus Manufacturing & Improvement Company filed its equitable petition against Charles A. Fricker. Briefly stated, it contended as follows: The plaintiff owned a hotel, of the value of $75,000 and of the rental value of $500 per month. It was incumbered with a mortgage for $35,000, which was foreclosed. It was seeking to procure a loan to prevent the sale or save itself from loss of its property. Fricker was a director and its secretary and treasurer, and was engaged in assisting to procure a loan for it. While so acting in company with its vice president, he went to New York for that purpose. Instead of procuring a loan for it, he procured one in his own name, and bought in the property at sheriff's sale, and, though purporting to be acting for the plaintiff, took the title in his own name, paying for the purchase price the money received from the loan referred to above, and $5,000 borrowed from Weyman & Connors, loan brokers, because the amount of the bid was in excess of the loan obtained in New York. He agreed to pay that firm as brokers $5,000 for services in procuring the loan and in seeking to effect a reorganization. He placed mortgages on the property for this loan from the company and to secure the amount claimed to be due Weyman & Connors. A charter was obtained by the defendant, and an offer made to the old stockholders to take stock in the new company by paying $15 per share, but the proposed new company never became active or received the property. Fraud, collusion, etc., were charged. It was alleged that defendant had taken possession of the property and enjoyed its rents, issues, and profits, and was liable therefor; that the amounts of commissions and expenses claimed by him to be due were not correct; that an accounting was necessary before it could be determined how much, if anything, plaintiff should pay him; and that he was a man of small means and unable to respond in damages. Plaintiff at first alleged a tender, but by amendment alleged that the defendant had taken possession of all of its property and rendered it unable to make one, and that certain stockholders had made a tender, offering to pay what he had expended, but requiring him to account for what he had received. Plaintiff offered to do equity and sought to recover the property and have an accounting. Defendant denied the substantial allegations, especially those as to fraud, collusion, and misuse of his position in the company. He contended, in brief, as follows: He went to New York to assist in obtaining a loan for the company. It was found to be impossible. It was suggested to him that a reorganization might be had; that he might take the loan temporarily in his own name, buy in the property, obtain a new charter, and effect a reorganization on terms just and equitable to the original stockholders. In the emergency he proceeded, but in the utmost good faith and to save the property for the stockholders. He had expended the rents and profits, not for his own individual benefit, but to keep up the property. He admitted that he did not inform the company or its stockholders, on returning from New York before the sale, what had been done, for fear that certain persons who were antagonistic to the plan might thwart it. After he bought in the property he offered to reorganize by allowing each of the stockholders to take the same amount of stock in the new company as they held in the old one, paying $15 per share, $10,000 of which was to be used to pay Weyman & Connors, and $5,000 for improving the property. As this was not accepted, he was left with the property and debts on his hands. Plaintiff has waived its right to have a conveyance; but he is willing to convey the property to it if it will take up the $35,000 loan and the indebtedness to Weyman & Connors, and pay his reasonable attorney's fees and reasonable compensation for his time and trouble. He denied any tender. The case was referred to an auditor. He found that the defendant occupied the position of a fiduciary agent of the plaintiff; that he could not lawfully buy the property and hold the title adversely to it; that the defendant in an accounting was not entitled to credit for the amount agreed to be paid Weyman & Connors for aiding in making the loan and in connection with the attempted reorganization, but only for reasonable compensation for their services in connection with making the loan; that as between the plaintiff and defendant the defendant was chargeable with the rental value of the property while in his possession, and should be credited with the lawful expenses paid by him, including the amount properly chargeable to the company of Weyman & Connors, and any amounts paid by him for interest on the $35,000 loaned, and for taxes; and that the plaintiff should recover the property upon assuming the loan and indemnifying the defendant against liability on account thereof. Both sides excepted to the report. All the exceptions were overruled, except certain ones which resulted in the correction of special items, and a decree was entered. The defendant filed a bill of exceptions, and the plaintiff a cross-bill.

J. H. Lumpkin and Smith, Hammond & Smith, for plaintiff in error. W. P. Wallis and G. R. Ellis, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts). This case was referred to an auditor. To his report the defendant filed 19 exceptions of law and 7 exceptions of fact. The plaintiff was also dissatisfied, but contended itself with 9 exceptions of law and 1 of fact. The defendant filed a bill of exceptions, and the plaintiff filed a cross-bill. The record brought up by the main bill of exceptions contained 678 typewritten pages. In view of the size of the record and the number of the exceptions taken by the parties, it might be said that, relatively to the result of the trial, both were in a state of elaborate dissatisfaction.

1. A motion was made to dismiss the writ of error on several grounds. One was that there was a "misjoinder (?) of parties plaintiff in error," the surety on the bond given by the defendant not being joined, and also that such surety could not "make itself a party and set up matters not of record in the lower court." On the hearing of the application for the appointment of a receiver, which was prayed for in the petition, the presiding judge refused it on condition that the defendant would give bond with surety to pay to the plaintiff such sums as he might be chargeable with for the use of the property, in case the plaintiff should prevail. The bond was given, the plaintiff did prevail, and a decree was entered, which included a judgment on the bond against the surety. The defendant excepted. In this court the surety asked to be made a party plaintiff in error, and the original plaintiff in error concurred in the motion. The motion to dismiss on this ground is not well taken. The surety was interested with the principal in reversing the judgment. If it was in fact a necessary party to the bill of exceptions, which we understand to be the point intended to be raised by the motion to dismiss, it could be added by amendment from the record, not changing the record or raising new points, but simply joining in the bill of exceptions already filed by its principal. In this instance the surety moved to be made a party plaintiff in error, and the original plaintiff in error concurred in the motion. Epping v. Aiken, 71 Ga. 682; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Griffith, 111 Ga. 552, 36 S. E. 859; Ramey v. O'Byrne, 121 Ga. 516, 49 S. E. 595. The decisions cited by counsel to the effect that all parties interested in sustaining a judgment must be served with the bill of exceptions are not applicable to a case like this, where the party not served is not interested in sustaining the judgment of the trial court, but is interested, along with the plaintiff in error, in seeking to reverse it. The motion to amend is allowed.

2. Another ground of the motion to dismiss was because the evidence was not reduced to a brief, or narrative, form, but consisted of the stenographic report written out. The auditor states in his report that "counsel for plaintiff and defendant agreed that the auditor should not make a brief of the oral or documentary evidence submitted, but should file with his report the original documents introduced in evidence and the stenographic report of the oral evidence as taken on the hearing, all of which, in accordance with said consent, are made a part of this report and submitted herewith." Where the auditor filed as a part of the brief of evidence a stenographic report of the testimony, it became a part of the record and could be specified and brought to this court as such; and the bill of exceptions will not be dismissed on the ground that there is no such condensed and narrative brief. Arendale v. Smith, 107 Ga. 494, 33 S. E. 669; Schmidt v. Mitchell, 117 Ga. 6, 43 S. E. 371. Whether the evidence is in such a condition as to furnish ground for a reversal based on it is a different question.

3. It is contended that the record was not transmitted within the time prescribed by law. The clerk of the superior court certified that when he went into office on January 2, 1905, he found the bill of exceptions filed on December 31, 1904, that it had been impossible to transcribe the record within 10 days, and that he forwarded it at once upon completing such copy, on January 20, 1905. It does not appear that the plaintiff in error or his counsel caused or contributed to the delay, but that it resulted from an inability on the part of the clerk to prepare so large a record in so short a time. Civ. Code 1895, § 5555.

4. It would be of little utility to discuss separately each of the numerous exceptions to the auditor's report. A number of them allege in substance merely that certain rulings and findings are erroneous under the pleadings and evidence. General exceptions of this class furnish no ground for reversal. It is difficult, if not impracticable, for a court to successfully search through a brief of evidence containing hundreds of pages to find some particular piece of evidence affecting or bearing on a ruling of the auditor. Armstrong v. Winter, 122 Ga. 869, 50 S. E. 997; First State Bank v. Avera, 123 Ga. 598, 51 S. E. 665.

5. There was no error in overruling the demurrer to the petition as amended. It set out a good cause for equitable relief. One objection made was that the alleged tender was insufficient; and it was so. It was neither by the plaintiff itself, nor for a definite amount. But tender was not necessary as a condition precedent to the filing of this petition. It showed that the defendant, who was the plaintiff's secretary and treasurer, and also a director, and who had been acting for it and was still purporting to do so, and occupied a fiduciary relation to it, purchased its property at sheriff's sale and took a deed in his own name; that he incumbered it with a mortgage to the British & American Mortgage Company to secure a loan, the amount of which was used in paying the purchase money at the sheriff's sale, and one to Weyman & Connors; that he had received rents, issues, and profits from the property; that he took possession of all of the plaintiff's property, and was a man of small means and unable to respond in damages; and that an accounting was necessary to ascertain what, if anything, it should pay to him, and until such accounting it was impossible to determine definitely the status. Plaintiff offered to do equity and to pay what should be found to be justly due, if anything. Johnson v. Giles, 69 Ga. 852; Deichmann v. Deichmann, 49 Mo. 107-110; Irvin v. Gregory, 13 Gray (Mass.) 215; Kerr v. Hammond, 97 Ga. 567, 570, 25 S. E. 337.

6. None of the other grounds of the demurrer were well taken. The stockholders of the plaintiff were not necessary parties to the proceeding between the plaintiff and the defendant, nor were Weyman & Connors or the loan company necessary parties to determine the rights of the plaintiff as against the defendant. Weyman & Connors may have been proper parties, but they were not necessary parties in this proceeding, so that their omission would furnish a ground of demurrer by the defendant. The loan company, moreover, appears to have been a nonresident of the state.

7. If the auditor failed to report with sufficient fullness on any issue, a motion for a re-reference, not an exception to his report, was the proper remedy. Jones v. Nolan, 120 Ga. 588, 48 S. E. 166; Weldon v. Hudson, 120 Ga. 699, 48 S. E. 130; Collinsville Granite Co. v. Phillips, 123 Ga. 830, 51 S. E. 666.

8. There was no error in refusing to dismiss the case in the nature of a nonsuit. The auditor's report stated that "it was also admitted on the trial that the defendant was a director of the plaintiff corporation, and its secretary and treasurer, in the years 1898 and 1899, and prior to that time, and that he was a member of a committee in 1898 and 1899 to procure a loan upon said hotel property, the purpose of which was to pay off the loan thereon known as the 'Dederick loan,' and that he acted in the three capacities." The evidence shows that he went to New York to aid in obtaining a loan for the plaintiff shortly before the sheriff's sale of this property; that he in fact obtained a loan in his own name, purchased the property at the sheriff's sale, took the deed in his own name and went into possession. He contended that he and the vice president of the company and the loan broker found it impossible to procure the loan in the name of the company, that the plan to make the loan and take the title in his own name and secure the loan by a mortgage on the property was necessary in an emergency, and that all he did was in the utmost good faith and for the benefit of the stockholders, and not for his individual benefit. His answer to the petition admits that on his return from New York to Americus, after determining upon his plan of operations and making an agreement to obtain the loan in his own name, he made no statements to the president of the company or to its stockholders as to what he had done, lest others who might be antagonistic to this plan should raise the bidding on the property to a sum beyond his reach. He agreed upon the arrangement in New York some two weeks before the sale and returned to Americus, but made no disclosure of what he had done to his principal or its stockholders. After he bought the property and took the deed to himself, he proposed a scheme of reorganization. The circular letter which he issued to the stockholders began with the statement: "You are doubtless aware that I purchased the Windsor Hotel at sheriff's sale on Tuesday, September 5, 1899, but in doing so I had in mind a plan of reorganization," etc. He then outlined the intended formation of the new company, and offered to allow stockholders of the original company to become stockholders in the contemplated new one, but required a payment of $15 per share to be made, and that acceptance should be signified within ten days or he would find it necessary to realize on the remainder of the new stock "from outside parties." In his answer he says he has cared for the property as if he were the bona fide owner, "as in fact he is." Without going further, we think this will suffice to indicate that the principal showed good ground for equitable action against its agent, director, and secretary and treasurer who thus acted. The dismissal of the case would have been erroneous.

9. A number of letters were admitted in evidence, and one exception includes the whole. Some of them, at least—for instance, letters between the defendant and Weyman & Connors—were admissible; and, this being so, the exception to all the letters in bulk must fail.

10. If an agent or person occupying a position of trust or a fiduciary relation towards the plaintiff bought in its property at sheriff's sale, and took title in his own name, and occupied and used it, or received rents from it, and the owner was entitled to recover from him in equity, upon an accounting for rents, issues, and profits, his liability was not necessarily limited to the amount of rent actually collected by him while in possession, but might include what he should have received on that account, or, in other words, the fair rental value of the property. Proof of the amount actually received would be for consideration along with the evidence bearing on the subject of good faith and diligence in determining the sum for which he was liable; but the actual receipts do not conclusively limit his liability. In the present case there was evidence as to what the property in controversy had brought for rent before the sale, what the defendant represented was its rent-producing capacity when he was seeking to obtain a loan upon the faith of it, what rents he had actually collected, and whether this was all that could have been collected. Evidence was also introduced to show the rental value of the property; that the defendant, some time after making the purchase, had occupied it himself and conducted a hotel there; and that when he rented it to others he had the use of a room and received his own board, and at a later date had rooms for the use of himself and wife and received their board. The auditor found that he was liable for the rental value of the property, and under the evidence we cannot say that he erred. In 3 Thompson on Corporations, after referring to certain breaches of duty on the part of officers and directors of corporations, among them being dealing with themselves in regard to the corporate property, the author says (section 4051): "In respect of the measure of damages or liability on the part of corporate directors and officers for such breaches of trust as those considered in this chapter, the general rule is that equity aims at compensation to those who are beneficially interested in the trust fund, the corporation, the stockholders or the creditors; and the court will mould its decree so as to reach this result according to the varying circumstances of each case." In Rogers v. Dickey, 117 Ga. 819, 822, 45 S. E. 71, 72, referring to the strict accountability to which trustees are held, Mr. Justice Lamar said: "If, as a result of following the law, the profits are small, he cannot be held liable for what he might otherwise have made; but if, for the purpose of increasing the profits, he departs from the law, he can expect no protection from it when loss and disaster follow." In

Dowling v. Feeley, 72 Ga. 557, it was said: "A trustee can make no profit for himself out of the trust estate. If he risk the trust funds and lose, he is compelled to account for their full value; if he is successful, he is required to pay what he gains to the beneficiary of the fund embarked in the enterprise. This rule applies not only to trustees eo nomine, but to all persons sustaining confidential relations to others, such as executors and administrators, guardians, agents, officers, partners," etc. This refers to the corpus of the estate. But the principle would seem to apply to its rental value, if it be found that the amount actually collected by the defendant was less than the property should reasonably have produced. See, also, Pettyjohn v. Liebscher, 92 Ga. 149, 17 S. E. 1007; Bell v. Bell, 20 Ga. 250; Simmons v. Camp, 71 Ga. 54 (5); 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. (2d Ed.), 1062. See notes to Selleck v. French, 6 Am. Dec. 196, 197.

11. The defendant contended that there was no fiduciary or confidential relation between it and the plaintiff which would affect his right to purchase at the sale. But unquestionably one who was found by the auditor to be an officer and director of the company and an agent to procure a loan for it to save its property from a sheriff's sale occupied a fiduciary and confidential relation towards it. Civ. Code 1895, § 4080; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. (2d Ed.) 10; Atlanta Real Estate Co. v. Atlanta National Bank, 75 Ga. 40; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 157. As such he could not acquire interests in the property adverse to the person for whom he was acting. Civ. Code 1895, § 4031; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. (2d Ed.) 1085; Sessions v. Payne, 118 Ga. 955, 89 S. E. 325; Larey v. Baker, 86 Ga. 468, 12 S. E. 684; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7866; Kreitzer v. Orvatt, 94 Ga. 694, 21 S. E. 525; Vallette v. Tedens, 122 Ill. 607, 14 N. E. 52, 8 Am. St. Rep. 502; Wardell v. R. R. Co., 103 U. S. 651, 26 L. Ed. 509; Newcomb v. Brooks, 16 W. Va. 32; Bisph. Pr. Eq. (6th Ed.) 144, 145. A purchase by a trustee at his own sale is voidable at the option of the person for whom he was acting in a fiduciary capacity, whether he acted bona fide or not, or whether actual gain resulted to him or not, if such election be exercised within a reasonable time. Shine v. Redwine, 30 Ga. 780; Lowery v. Idleson, 117 Ga. 778, 45 S. E. 51 (2); Tobin Canning Co. v. Frasier, 81 Tex. 407, 17 S. W. 25; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. (13th Ed.) § 822; Word v. Davis, 107 Ga. 780, 33 S. E. 691. Under the facts disclosed by the evidence in this case, an implied trust arose in favor of the plaintiff, and it had a right to equitable relief against the defendant. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 3159, 3196. See, also, authorities cited above. Nor does it appear that there was such laches on the part of the plaintiff as prevented it from enforcing its rights in equity. Word v. Davis, 107 Ga. 780, 33 S. E. 691, and authorities cited; Darling v. Potts, 118 Mo. 506, 24 S. W. 461 (5).

12. The defendant contended that he was entitled to credit for $5,000 on account of the charge of Weyman & Connors for services. This charge included, not only their services in procuring the loan, but also services to be rendered by them in the effort to effect a reorganization under the arrangement with the defendant. He contended that the plaintiff was liable for the whole of this sum, and should credit him accordingly in the accounting, because he insisted that he contracted for it in good faith. As between the plaintiff and defendant, we do not think the company should be charged with that part of the expenses which applied to an effort to reorganize it without its knowledge or consent. To allow the defendant in an accounting a reasonable amount on account of expenses in procuring the loan was as much as he could ask in equity, there being no agreement as to compensation for procuring the loan, separate from the reorganization plan.

13. The bringing of this action did not operate to ratify the conduct of the defendant in regard to an effort to reorganize the company without its consent. In so far as the sheriff's sale is concerned, however, the plaintiff does not seek to set it aside. Neither the plaintiffs in the mortgage fi. fa. nor the sheriff are made parties, nor is there any prayer to annul the sale or to reinstate the status as it existed prior thereto. The plaintiff seeks to obtain possession of the property, not by setting aside the sheriff's sale, but by taking the results of such sale and charging the title obtained by the defendant under that sale with an implied trust in its favor. Indeed, as will appear later, the plaintiff in its pleadings conceded the necessity of assuming the loan of $35,000, under which the title was procured by the defendant and the mortgage fi. fa. was in part satisfied.

14. The auditor was appointed at the November term of the court, 1900. He struck a balance as of March 1, 1901. His report (apparently for reasons satisfactory to all parties, as no point was made on the delay) was not filed until November 21, 1903. Exceptions were filed, and were heard in October, 1904, and a decree rendered on November 8, 1904. The presiding judge, after correcting certain items in the report of the auditor, rendered a decree in which was included a judgment against the defendant for rents and profits from March 1, 1901, to the date of the decree, at the rate of $500 per month. He deducted from this the balance found to be due the defendant on March 1, 1901, and added interest to the balance thus found in favor of the plaintiff. We are of the opinion that the court should not have found both rents and profits extending from the time when the auditor struck the balance of accounts to the date of the decree, and also interest on the amount of them, or the balance arising from them. Mesne profits, or rental value, does not ordinarily bear interest, at least until it becomes a liquidated sum.

15. The presiding judge also erred in arriving at the amount included in his decree. The auditor reported how the balance stood on March 1, 1901, and that "the amount due by the defendant since March 1, 1901, should be credited with all sums paid out by the defendant for interest on the $35,000, at 7 per cent. per annum, and for taxes, insurance, and caring for the property; said credits to be ascertained by the court on the trial of the case." The presiding judge in fact allowed no credits to the defendant on account of the items suggested by the auditor, but in entering up the decree continued the charge for the rents and profits, at the rate found by the auditor, from the time when the balance was struck to the date of the decree. Exception was taken to this, and it was contended that the presiding judge, having overruled the exceptions with a slight correction of the report, should have confirmed the report and entered a decree upon it without increasing the charge against the defendant by the addition of rents and profits as just stated; that, if he could assume the continuance of the amount of the rents and profits found by the auditor, he should also have assumed that the fixed charges which the auditor had found the defendant was paying continued; or that, if he desired to carry out the auditor's recommendation of striking a new balance at the time of the trial, he should have proceeded in some appropriate manner to have ascertained such balance. The presiding judge added to the bill of exceptions the following note on this subject: "Upon the overruling of the defendant's exceptions November 18, 1904, his counsel was immediately notified, and on November 3d he was notified that the entering of a final decree would come up at a chambers court to be held on Saturday, November 5th, and for him to be present and that he would be heard on such questions as he desired to make. Neither he nor his client appeared at such time. Plaintiff's counsel appeared and presented the court with a decree to be signed, but same was held by the court until November 8th before signing it. Neither during the argument of exceptions nor at any other time was it ever made known or intimated to the court by defendant or his counsel that he had incurred any expenses in the way of interest, taxes, insurance, or caring for the property, or that he had any claim or demand of any character he desired set off against or credited upon the rents due plaintiff. The auditor found and fixed the rental value of the property to be recovered by plaintiff after March 1, 1901, and there was no exception to this finding of the auditor."

Perhaps the auditor may have intended to find a continuing charge against the defendant at a given rate up to the time of the decree. His actual finding on this subject was in the following language: "The auditor finds that defendant is liable to the plaintiff for the rent of said property from September 5, 1899, to March 1, 1901, at the rate of $500 per month, and that the amount due plaintiff by defendant March 1, 1901, was $9,000, and that he is liable to plaintiff for the rent of said property since said date at the same rate, to wit, $500 per month. As already stated, this report was filed November 21, 1903. The auditor left the court to ascertain something in addition to his report. The finding of additional facts or amounts, and increasing or diminishing the amounts found by the auditor, is not strictly a part of the proceeding of passing on the auditor's report and entering a decree upon it. Something more was contemplated, we think—something in the nature of a supplemental accounting to bring the balancing of accounts down to the date of the decree. The desire to bring the accounting for rents and profits down to the date of the final decree was not an improper one. After an auditor's report is filed, the defendant has 20 days to except, remaining in possession. Then most likely follows some delay, in this case a year; the defendant still remaining in possession and enjoyment. And thus he can always have some time for enjoyment between the date of the report and that of the decree. If the plaintiff is entitled to recover, it is not compelled to lose this rental. It is not contemplated by the law that one entitled to a final decree on an accounting must, by reason of the unavoidable delay incident to legal procedure, get less than he is entitled to. In some cases, no doubt, an auditor's report might cover this interval, if it has fixed data to work upon. But in the present case there is an element of uncertainty. The auditor evidently contemplated the ascertainment of additional facts and the striking of a further balance at the trial. Doubtless it would have been better for counsel to have appeared and made claim for further expenditures if he so desired; but the mere notice of an intention to enter a final decree did not put him on due notice that the additional facts would be found by the presiding judge, or call on him with sufficient distinctness to present any claim for the making of a new balance. Under the special facts of this case, we think the proper disposition is to return it to the superior court with direction to allow a reasonable time for an issue to be made as to this particular point, giving notice by rule, order, or other appropriate method to the respective sides, and to have the balance between the parties brought down to date, either by a re-reference of that issue or a direct trial. It is not necessary that the entire case should be reopened, but only that the accounting should be extended from the time when the auditor struck a balance to the time of the trial.

16. While Weyman & Connors are not necessary parties to the original action seeking equitable relief against the defendant, so that their nonjoinder would furnish a ground for demurrer, still, when the plaintiff sought to make them parties defendant, alleging them to be residents of Georgia, charging collusion between them and the defendant, and seeking relief against them along with him in respect to the claim of commissions chargeable against the plaintiff, and praying that the mortgage on the property given to them by the defendant for the amount of $5,000 advanced by them and also covering their claim for commissions should be canceled, there seems to be no sound reason why it should not be allowed, and we think the court erred in rejecting it. Of course, we decide nothing as to the merits of the case, either upon the pleadings or the evidence, in regard to them, except that the plaintiff should be allowed to make them parties if it so desires.

17. The defendant has no cause for complaint that the equities between him and the plaintiff are dealt with in the absence of the loan company. In determining whether, between the parties, the defendant should be allowed credit for certain payments made, the person to whom the payments were made is not a necessary party. Moreover, the loan company seems to be a nonresident and is not shown to have any resident agent.

18. In decreeing that possession of the property should be taken from the defendant and delivered to the plaintiff, there was no error in providing that the plaintiff should indemnify the defendant against the mortgage of the loan company and should assume said loan. The money of the company was used to pay off the purchase money at the sheriff's sale. It would be inequitable to allow the plaintiff to ask a court of equity to let it take the property free from the loan and leave the defendant charged from the debt. Invoking the aid of a court of conscience, the plaintiff cannot take the benefit of the loan, treat the sheriff's sale as passing title and discharging the execution under which it took place, recover its property, leave the defendant as the debtor, and neither pay off the mortgage nor indemnify him against it. The defendant contends that the plaintiff ought to pay off the mortgage debt before recovering the property. But apparently it was not due. The plaintiff claims that it should have an opportunity to plead any set-off or counterclaim which it may have against the foreclosure of the mortgage, and not have its rights relatively to the mortgage fixed in the absence of the latter. This complaint, however, is in direct conflict with the plaintiff's own allegations and prayers. In the petition it was said: "Your petitioner is ready to do equity, * * * and offers to take said property charged with the debt which he has placed thereon." The plaintiff prayed "that said defendant be decreed to execute to your petitioner good and sufficient title to said property, subject to the aforesaid loan heretofore placed thereon by him." Again, in an amendment the plaintiff alleged "that petitioner stands ready to assume these obligations by or for indemnifying the said Fricker against any loss on account thereof. Petitioner has always expressed its willingness and desire to fully protect the said Ericker, and is still willing to do so as may be finally decreed in the premises."

19. In an equitable case it is the province of the judge to determine upon whom costs shall fall, and this determination will not be reversed, unless the discretion of the presiding judge is abused. Civ. Code 1895, § 4850. None of the other exceptions which were in proper shape to be considered present any ground for reversal.

20. Under the authority conferred upon us by law (Civ. Code 1895, § 5586), we reverse the judgment on the points indicated in this opinion, and return the case to the superior court, with direction that the presiding judge by order, or other appropriate method, give the parties an opportunity to form an issue for the purpose of bringing down the account from March 1, 1901, to the date of the trial, and that by re-reference or trial in court the final balance be determined. We also direct that the plaintiff be allowed to make Weyman & Connors parties, if it so desires, so that a determination of the issues made in the pleadings with regard to them and their claims may be had.

Judgment on each bill of exceptions reversed in part and affirmed in part. Let the defendant in error in each case pay the costs therein. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., not presiding.

(124 Ga. 21)

RAWLS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

1. HOMICIDE—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, where the defendant is convicted of the offense of unlawfully shooting at another, and by his own statement is guilty of that offense, he cannot justly complain of the admission of evidence offered to show malice on his part, even though the evidence admitted was inadmissible for that purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 15, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, § 3143; vol. 26, Cent. Dig. Homicide, § 713.]

2. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

Nor, in such a case, would it be error requiring the grant of a new trial to charge the jury as to the law of voluntary manslaughter.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 15, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, § 3161; vol. 26, Cent. Dig. Homicide, § 720.]

3. SAME—SELF-DEFENSE.

An instruction touching the law of self-defense, though not strictly accurate, will not be ground for a new trial, where, from the defendant's statement, the shooting was not justifiable.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; H. C. Hammond, Judge.

W. C. Rawls was convicted of unlawfully shooting at another, and brings error. Affirmed.

E. B. Baxter, for plaintiff in error. J. S. Reynolds, Sol. Gen., for the State.

EVANS, J. Rawls was indicted for the offense of assault with intent to murder, and was convicted of the offense of unlawfully shooting at another. In his motion for a new trial he complains of the admission of certain evidence, and assigns error on various instructions which the court gave in charge to the jury. Exception is taken to the overruling of his motion.

1. Bull, the person alleged to have been assaulted, was the brother-in-law of the defendant, and the evidence submitted by the state made out a clear case of assault with intent to murder, without the slightest provocation. The defendant offered certain evidence tending to sustain the facts which he narrated to the jury in his statement. That statement was substantially as follows: Bull was the brother of defendant's wife. Prior to the difficulty he and Bull got along all right, living in the same house, until he had a quarrel with his wife, when Bull loaded his gun for him. This occurred two days before the difficulty under investigation, during which time the defendant had not visited his wife. He had sent his brother to his wife to get some clean clothes, and his brother returned with a message from Bull to the effect that if he came there again Bull would kill him. Bull sent to the defendant for the key to the house which he had, and defendant sent it to him. Defendant was a constable, and it was a common thing with him to borrow a pistol when it was necessary for him to go out at night upon official business. On the night of the difficulty, he entered the barroom where Bull worked and said to him: "Buddie, give me the key to the front door." Bull said, "I can't do that," and when asked the reason, replied, "Because I don't want to." The entrance of some customers interrupted the conversation, and defendant walked up to the proprietor of the bar and spoke to him about Bull's refusal to give him the key. Defendant then went around to the door of the house and rang the door bell; but the family was upstairs, it was late at night, and there was no response. He went back into the barroom and had another conversation with the proprietor, and then approached Bull in a pleasant manner, and said to him: "Buddie, set down here and let's have a talk. This is child's play. Let's talk this over like men." Bull replied, "I have no talk for you," and turned and walked to the front door and out into the street. Defendant sat down on a box until Bull came back in, and then said: "Don't you know all I have in the world is up there in that house—my wife and my children, and my clothes and everything? I want to see them and give them some money and get some clothes." Bull said: "Well, you can't go." Somebody came in, and defendant said no more at that time; the matter being a family affair which he did not wish to discuss in public. He waited till everybody had gone out, and as Bull came back from the front door, defendant got off the box on which he had been sitting, started towards him, and said: "I suppose you won't allow me to see Ella and the children?" Bull replied, "No, you can't see nobody here," and defendant then said, "I am going to make a trial for it," and started out of the door. Bull said, "If you do, I'll kill you," and started to get his gun. Defendant knew the gun was there, and jerked out his pistol and fired; did not even turn to fire, but fired just as he was. At the third or fourth shot, Bull fell, and one or two shots came after defendant "took the pistol off of him." In this connection, the defendant stated: "I never would have thought of the pistol if he hadn't said that. Just as he said that, and I started out of the door, these threats came to me. I never moved from where I was standing to do that shooting. It was all done like that [snapping his fingers rapidly]. I stood in one track. After the last shot, I backed out of the door and gave myself up to the officer."

The circumstances of the shooting, as narrated by the defendant himself in his statement, fully warranted the verdict which the jury returned. There is nothing in his statement which could have justified the fears of a reasonable man, either that Bull intended to commit a felony upon his person, or to take his life, unless he undertook to carry into execution his determination to effect an entrance into the house. When, according to the defendant's version of what occurred, he announced his purpose to do so, Bull said, "If you do, I'll kill you," and started to get his gun, which the evidence disclosed was back of the bar counter. But there was no immediate necessity for the defendant to shoot in self-defense, nor were the circumstances such as to justify the belief that Bull intended to use the gun, save to prevent the defendant from making a forcible entrance into the house. The defendant says that, upon the prosecutor making this threat, he fired his pistol without moving from where he was standing, and continued to shoot even after Bull fell. Certainly the shooting was not justifiable; and, if the defendant's statement did not warrant a finding that he was guilty of assault with intent to murder, it at least demanded a finding that he had committed the offense of unlawfully shooting at another. In this connection, it may be said that, even though the evidence which was admitted to show malice on the part of the defendant should have been excluded, its admission worked no harm to him, since the jury found that he was guilty of unlawfully shooting at another, and acquitted him of the graver offense of assault with intent to murder, which involves malice.

2. Nor, under such circumstances, should the defendant be granted a new trial because the court improperly charged the jury on the law of voluntary manslaughter, which had no bearing upon the facts of the case. The effect of the verdict was to acquit him of the higher crime, viz., the one charged in the indictment; and, as he was not entitled, even upon his own presentation of the facts of the case, to a verdict of not guilty, the shooting not being justifiable, the instruction on the subject of voluntary manslaughter could not have operated to his prejudice.

3. Exception is taken to the following charge of the court: "I charge you that parents and children may mutually protect each other and justify the defense of the person and reputation of each other, and the relation of brother and sister stands upon the same footing of reason and justice. If Rawls failed to support and care for his wife, if he deserted her and maltreated her, she would have the right to seek the care and protection of her brother, Mr. Bull, and Mr. Bull would have the right to give her such care and protection; and it would have been his further right, for this purpose, to prevent Rawls from entering the house, and his refusal to give up the key of the house, or to allow Rawls to see his sister, could afford Rawls no excuse for attacking him on that account." This charge is excepted to because it was unauthorized by the evidence and was calculated to divert the minds of the jury from the true issue in the case, and because it amounted to an expression of opinion by the court that Bull, in refusing to deliver the key, was acting in defense of his sister. It appears that Bull was shot because of his opposition to defendant's entering his home; but there was nothing to suggest that it was the purpose of defendant to abuse or maltreat his wife. So much of the charge of the court as related to Bull's refusal to surrender the key, as affording no excuse for attacking him, was pertinent to the case. The intrusion in the charge of the defendant's failure to support his wife, or having deserted or maltreated her, as a reason why she might seek the protection of her brother, was hardly pertinent to the issue before the court. However, the defendant has no just complaint that the charge of the court upon this subject was not adjusted to the facts of the case, because his own version of the occurrence shows that the shooting was unjustifiable, and that in no view of the case would the jury have been warranted in returning a verdict of not guilty.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 15)

BANKS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

1. STATUTES—TITLE—MATTERS INCLUDED.

Provisions germane to the general subject-matter embraced in the title of an act, and which are designed to carry into effect the purposes for which it was passed, may be constitutionally enacted therein, though not referred to in the title otherwise than by the use of the words "and for other purposes."

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 44, Cent. Dig. Statutes, §§ 136, 137.]

2. SAME—SUFFICIENCY OF TITLE.

The act of 1903, entitled "An act to make it illegal for any person to procure money, or other thing of value, on a contract to perform services with intent to defraud, and to fix the punishment therefor, and for other purposes" (Laws 1903, p. 90), is not unconstitutional as containing matter in its body different from what is expressed in its title.

3. SAME—SUBJECT-MATTER.

The act referred to is not unconstitutional as containing more than one subject-matter.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

The purpose of the act of 1903, as indicated on its face, is to make criminal and punish certain fraudulent practices, not to enforce imprisonment for debt; and it is not in conflict with the provision of the Constitution which declares that there shall be no imprisonment for debt.

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—STATUTORY RULES OF EVIDENCE.

The Legislature has power to establish rules of evidence, where not in conflict with the Constitution or rights guaranteed by it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 10, Cent. Dig. Constitutional Law, § 59.]

6. SAME.

A provision of the act of 1903 to the effect that proof of the contract of hiring, the procuring thereon of money or other thing of value, the failure to perform service so contracted for, or to return the money so advanced with interest thereon to the time the labor was to be performed, without good and sufficient cause, and loss or damage to the hirer, shall be presumptive evidence of a fraudulent intent in the procurement of the advances, is not an assumption of judicial functions by the Legislature.

7. INDICTMENT — DEMURRER — QUESTIONS RAISED.

A ground of demurrer to an accusation, "because there is no legal contract set out in said accusation, and no payment or advances made are set out," only raises the question as to whether such contract and such payment are set out in the accusation at all, and not whether they are stated with sufficient particularity.

8. MASTER AND SERVANT — FRAUDULENT BREACH OF CONTRACT.

An accusation which charged that the accused procured from the hirer "money, shoes, and clothes of the value of $13, with intent not to perform such service, to the loss and damage of the hirer in the sum of $4," was not sufficiently sustained to authorize a conviction by evidence that the hirer advanced to the accused "in money, clothes, etc., $13.50," and that the accused owed the hirer $4 on account of advancements.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Griffin; E. W. Hammond, Judge.

Richard Banks was convicted of crime, and brings error. Reversed.

Richard Banks was tried in the city court of Griffin under an accusation which charged that, after having contracted with E. M. Flint to perform services for hire as a common laborer on certain terms stated, he procured from the hirer money, shoes, and clothes, of the value of $13, with intent not to perform such services, and did not in fact perform the services contracted for, or return the money so advanced, to the loss and damage of the hirer in the sum of $4. He filed a demurrer to the accusation, which was overruled, and on the trial he was convicted. He moved for a new trial, and after the overruling of the motion excepted.

Thos. W. Kurman, for plaintiff in error.
L. E. Patterson, Sol., for the State.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts).

1, 2. This case arose upon the accusation in a city court, under the act of 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 90) entitled "An act to make it illegal for any person to procure money, or other thing of value, on a contract to perform services with intent to defraud, and to fix the punishment therefor, and for other purposes." The act is attacked as unconstitutional on the ground that it contains two subject-matters, and also contains matter different from what is expressed in its title. Civ. Code, § 5771. "Provisions germane to the general subject-matter embraced in the title of an act, and which are designed to carry into effect the purpose for which it was passed, may be constitutionally enacted therein, though not referred to in the title otherwise than by the use of the words, 'and for other purposes.'" It is not essential that the title to the act should recite in minute detail all of its provisions; otherwise, the act itself would be but a copy of its title. The title should state in a brief and comprehensive form the purpose of the act and the subject-matter to be dealt with. The words "and for other purposes," in the title, are sufficient to cover provisions in the body of the act germane to the general subject-matter. Black v. Cohen, 52 Ga. 621; Hope v. Mayor of Gainesville, 72 Ga. 246; McGruder v. State, 83 Ga. 616, 10 S. E. 281; McCommons v. English, 100 Ga. 653, 28 S. E. 386; Plumb v. Christie, 103 Ga. 686, 30 S. E. 759, 42 L. R. A. 181; Mayor of Macon v. Hughes, 110 Ga. 795, 36 S. E. 247; Hart v. State, 113 Ga. 939, 39 S. E. 321; Stapleton v. Perry, 117 Ga. 561, 43 S. E. 996; Oglesby v. State, 121 Ga. 602, 49 S. E. 706.

3. The act is not unconstitutional on the ground that it contains more than one subject-matter. The subject-matter is the fraudulent procurement of money, or other thing of value, on a contract to perform services. There is nothing in the act which is not germane to this subject-matter, or which is so distinct from it as to constitute a different subject-matter. See the authorities cited above, and also Howell v. State, 71 Ga. 224, 51 Am. Rep. 259; Clay v. Central R. Co., 84 Ga. 345, 10 S. E. 967; Peed v. McCrary, 94 Ga. 487, 21 S. E. 232; Central Ry. Co. v. State, 104 Ga. 831, 31 S. E. 531, 42 L. R. A. 518; Welborne v. State, 114 Ga. 793 (6), 40 S. E. 857.

4. The contention that this act is unconstitutional on the ground that it is an attempt to enforce imprisonment for debt is settled by the decision in Lamar v. State, 120 Ga. 312, 47 S. E. 958. On the face of it, the purpose of the act is to punish fraudulent practices, not the mere failure to pay a debt. Thus considered, it is constitutional; otherwise, it would not be so. And we will not presume an unconstitutional purpose on the part of the Legislature, where the act is readily capable of a construction harmonizing with the Constitution.

5, 6. It is further insisted that the act under consideration is violative of that clause of the Constitution which declares that the legislative, judicial, and executive powers shall forever remain separate and distinct. Civ. Code, § 5720. This contention is based on the second section of the act, which declares that satisfactory proof of the contract, the procuring thereon of money or other thing of value, the failure to perform the services so contracted for, or failure to return the money so advanced with interest thereon at the time said labor was to be performed, without good and sufficient cause, and loss or damage to the hirer, shall be presumptive evidence of the fraudulent intent. This is not an assumption of judicial functions by the Legislature. It declares a rule of evidence under which certain acts are deemed presumptive evidence of a fraudulent intent in committing them. The Legislature has power to establish rules of evidence. Familiar illustrations of the exercise of this power are to be found in a statute which declares that recitals in administrators' deeds of compliance with legal provisions shall be prima facie evidence of the facts recited (Civ. Code, § 3454); and in one which removes the common-law disqualification of a witness by reason of interest and allows parties to actions to testify (Civ. Code, § 5269); and in one which makes the protest of a promissory note evidence of the facts therein stated (Civ. Code, § 5235). Section 2321 of the Code declares that upon proof of damage done by the running of the locomotive or cars or machinery of a railroad company, or by any person in the employment and service of such company, a presumption of negligence arises against the company. This rule, however, though not embodied in the Code, is not entirely of statutory origin. Southern Railway Co. v. Cunningham, 123 Ga. 90, 51 S. E. 979. Judge Cooley, speaking of the legislative power in this respect, says: "As to what shall be evidence, and which party shall assume the burden of proof in civil cases, its authority is practically unrestricted, so long as its regulations are impartial and uniform; but it has no power to establish rules which, under pretense of regulating the presentation of evidence, go so far as altogether to preclude a party from exhibiting his rights." Cooley's Con. Lim. (5th Ed.) 452, 453. See, also, Small v. Slocumb, 112 Ga. 279, 37 S. E. 481, 53 L. R. A. 130, 81 Am. St. Rep. 50. The power of the Legislature on this subject is not so extensive in regard to criminal cases as in regard to those of a civil character. Thus, to illustrate, in the former the accused must be confronted with the witnesses. But the power to make rules of evidence, where not conflicting with any constitutional provision or right exists in respect to both classes of cases. An act quite similar to that under consideration will be found in Pen. Code, § 206, which provides that every insolvency of a chartered bank, or refusal or failure to redeem its bills on demand, shall be deemed prima facie fraudulent; but the president or any director who may be prosecuted may repel the presumption of fraud. It will be noted that the act of 1903 does not declare that the proof of the acts referred to shall be conclusive evidence of intention, or prevent the defendant from rebutting its presumptive effect. Had it done so, a much more serious question would have been raised.

7. Another ground of the demurrer is: "Because there is no legal contract set out in said accusation, and no payments or advances made are set out." This may have been intended to raise some question as to whether there was a want of sufficient fullness or specification in regard to the matters mentioned, but it does not in fact do so. It denies that there was any such contract or making of advances alleged. A reference to the accusation shows that in fact it alleged the making of a contract to perform services for hire, and that the accused obtained from the hirer money, shoes, and clothes of the value of $13. Nor is there any greater merit in the suggestion that the act of 1903 is in violation of that provision of the Constitution which declares that protection to persons and property is the paramount duty of the government, and shall be impartial and complete. The demurrer, therefore, was properly overruled.

8. We find it necessary to reverse the judgment refusing a new trial on the ground that it was not supported by the evidence. The accusation alleged that the defendant procured "from the hirer money, shoes, and clothes of the value of $13, with intent not to perform such services, to the loss and damage of the hirer in the sum of $4." The evidence of the prosecutor, who was the only witness introduced, was that "during the time I advanced him in money, clothes, etc., $13.50. He owes me now $4 on account of advancements." It will thus be seen that nowhere does it appear how much of the $13.50 was in money and how much in clothes, and how much fell within the designation of "etc." As neither the accusation nor the evidence indicated a loss or damage to the hirer exceeding $4, it is quite possible that the entire loss was included in the advances covered by the indefinite description "etc.," which did not accord with the accusation, and was too vague to authorize a conviction. There is nothing else, either in the demurrer or in the motion for a new trial, which requires a reversal.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 1)

THROWER v. CITY OF ATLANTA.

JONES v. SAME.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ORDINANCES.

To maintain a "place" of any character where persons are allowed to bet, offer to bet, place an order for a bet, or telegraph or telephone bets on races of any sort, is an act prohibited by Pen. Code 1895, § 398, and such an act cannot, in the absence of express legislative authority, properly be made penal by a municipal ordinance.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

M. Thrower and L. F. Jones were convicted in the recorder's court of Atlanta of violating an ordinance of the city of Atlanta. Their petitions for certiorari were denied in the superior court of Fulton county, and they bring error. Reversed.

R. R. Arnold and Harvey Hill, for plaintiffs in error. J. L. Mayson and W. P. Hill, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. The plaintiffs in error, Thrower and Jones, were tried in the recorder's court of the city of Atlanta for the alleged violation of a municipal ordinance of which the following is a copy: "It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation, agent or employé thereof, to maintain or carry on any office or place of business, or to have a space or portion of the office, store, or place of business of another, or to maintain a place or point of meeting, in or at which any person or persons is or are allowed to bet, or offer to bet, or place an order for a bet, or telegraph or telephone bets on horse races, boat races, bicycle races, or any kind or description of race, whether such race is to be run in the city of Atlanta or any place outside of said city." They were adjudged guilty and fined by the recorder, whereupon they presented to the judge of the superior court of Fulton county their petitions for certiorari, which were denied, and they excepted. As the evidence in the two cases was identical, and both are governed by the same principles of law, they will be considered together.

In the view that we take of this case it is not necessary to consider the question whether the evidence introduced on the trial was sufficient to show a violation of the ordinance which has been quoted. We are confronted by the broader question whether the ordinance was invalid, in that it undertook to make penal that which was already prohibited by the state law making penal the keeping of a gaming house; and this question we feel constrained to decide in the affirmative. The very evident purpose of the ordinance was to prevent the maintenance of a "place" of any sort, whether on premises owned by another, on the public streets, or elsewhere, where betting of the character designated was permitted. That this is fully covered by the statute against keeping a gaming house (Pen. Code 1895, § 398) has been distinctly held by this court. In Thrower v. State, 117 Ga. 756, 45 S. E. 126, which was an indictment under Pen. Code 1895, § 398, for keeping a gaming house, Mr. Justice Lamar, speaking for the court said: "In prohibiting a gaming house it is intended to prevent the maintenance of a place at which persons come together for the purpose of hazarding and betting money." Clearly, then, if the plaintiffs in error in the present cases were guilty of a violation of the municipal ordinance which has been quoted, they are guilty of a violation of the state law against keeping a gaming house; and the familiar principle that a municipality may not prohibit by ordinance that which is already made penal by state statute, unless there is express and specific legislative authority for the same, will apply.

The case of Penniston v. Newnan, 117 Ga. 700, 45 S. E. 65, is closely in point. There an ordinance of the city of Newnan provided that it should be unlawful for any person to keep an open business house on the Sabbath day, or to trade or traffic on that day, or to work or cause work to be done on the Sabbath; the ordinance containing a proviso that it should not prevent the sale of drugs or the carrying on of works of necessity on the Sabbath day. The accused, who was the proprietor of a drug store, kept open his place of business on the Sabbath day, and his clerks therein sold tobacco and cigars. He was convicted in the police court, his petition for certiorari was overruled, and he brought the case to this court, where the judgment was reversed, on the ground that the offense proved against him was punishable under Pen. Code 1895, § 422, making it penal for any person to pursue his business or the work of his ordinary calling on the Lord's day, and that it could not be punished by the municipality. The case of Hood v. Von Glahn, 88 Ga. 405, 14 S. E. 564, relied on by counsel for the city, and the more recent one of Littlejohn v. Stells, 123 Ga. 427, 51 S. E. 390, are not in point, for the reason that in those cases the municipal ordinances which were attacked had been authorized by express legislative enactment, while it is not claimed that the city in this case had any such legislative authority. Nor is the case of Odell v. Atlanta, 97 Ga. 670, 25 S. E. 173, in conflict with what is here held. The dictum of Mr. Justice Lumpkin in the Odell Case, to the effect that the city, under the "general welfare" clause of its charter, had the right to break up the "business" of selling pools on horse races, was fully explained in the case of Thrower v. State, 117 Ga. 758, 45 S. E. 126, on the ground that the court in the case first mentioned was dealing solely with the legality of the alleged business or occupation, and did not have before it the question whether the city could make penal acts which were already prohibited by the state law against keeping gaming houses.

From what has been said, it follows that the court erred in refusing to sanction the petition for certiorari.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., not participating.

(124 Ga. 4)

PATTERSON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

HOMICIDE—MURDER—EVIDENCE.

The evidence, although conflicting, was sufficient to authorize the verdict, and there was no error in overruling the motion for a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Heard County; R. W. Freeman, Judge.

Mac Patterson was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

Burrell Patterson and Mac Patterson were jointly indicted for the offense of murder. They elected to be tried separately, and Mac Patterson was tried and convicted. His motion for a new trial, based on the general grounds only, having been overruled, he excepted. The evidence introduced by the state tended to show the following facts: On the 20th day of April, 1904, Burrell Patterson, son of the accused, had a difficulty with William Stewart. This resulted at the time in nothing serious, and the two separated. A short while afterward, from a half hour to an hour and a half, Stewart was shot by Burrell Patterson and killed. There was evidence of two witnesses that the accused gave his son a pistol, telling him to go and kill Stewart, and that he (Burrell Patterson) would never land in jail, as he (Mac Patterson) had money to keep him out. Burrell Patterson, accompanied by his father (two or three steps apart according to one witness, ten steps apart, according to another), went in search of Stewart, and, having met him, Burrell threw a brick at him, and then fired two shots from a pistol, from the effects of which Stewart died. Mac Patterson was present, within five to ten steps of Burrell when he fired, and immediately after the killing the two walked away together. The evidence introduced by the accused was in conflict with that of the state as to the presence of the accused at the time of the killing, and as to the accused having given Burrell a pistol with instructions to kill Stewart, and in other particulars.

Hamrick & Smith, for plaintiff in error. W. H. Daniel, J. R. Terrell, Sol. Gen., and Jno. C. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the State.

COBB, P. J. The indictment charged each of the accused as principal in the first degree. Under such indictment, evidence that one of them was the actual perpetrator, and the other was present, aiding and abetting in the commission of the offense, would be sufficient to authorize the conviction of the latter. One charged as principal in the first degree may be convicted on evidence showing him guilty as principal in the second degree. Morgan v. State, 120 Ga. 294, 48 S. E. 9, and cases cited.

The only question in the case is whether the evidence is sufficient to show that Mac Patterson was present at the time of the killing, aiding and abetting his son in the commission of the crime. The evidence is voluminous, and is conflicting on many material points; but there was evidence which would authorize a finding that only a short time before the killing Mac Patterson had given his son a pistol, with directions to find Stewart and kill him, and that, when the son went in search of Stewart, the father followed him, and at the time of the killing was within a few feet of the son. If one advise and counsel another to commit a crime, and then immediately go with that other to the place where the crime is committed, and is actually present, seeing the crime committed and does nothing to prevent its perpetration, he may be lawfully convicted as a principal in the second degree, although no distinct act by him is shown to have occurred at the time of the perpetration of the offense. See Thornton v. State, 119 Ga. 440, 46 S. E. 640. In the case of Walker v. State, 118 Ga. 10, 43 S. E. 856, there was no evidence of a conspiracy, nor was there any evidence that the person present at the time of the killing had advised or counseled the commission of the crime.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 5)

GAINES v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

LARCENY—EVIDENCE.

The prosecutor, who was a merchant, closed his store for the day and went to his home. After he had retired for the night, the defendant called at his house and induced him to return to his store in order that the defendant might buy cloth for a shroud for the dead child of his sister. Upon arriving at the store, where they were met by three of the defendant's brothers, the defendant confessed that the reason assigned for urging the prosecutor to open the store was a mere pretext, and that he and his companions really wanted to buy something to eat. The evidence warranted a finding that the defendant, in pursuance of a previous understanding with his brothers, joined with two of them in engaging the attention of the prosecutor and keeping him in the rear of the store, while the other embraced the opportunity thus afforded to steal a box of tobacco, with the larceny of which they were subsequently jointly charged. Accordingly, the trial judge did not err in charging the jury as to the law bearing upon this theory of the case, nor did he abuse his discretion in refusing to set aside the verdict of guilty returned by the jury.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Hartwell; W. L. Hodges, Judge.

Dillard Gaines was convicted of larceny, and brings error. Affirmed.

Sam. L. Olive, for plaintiff in error. Jas. H. S. Kelton, Sol. Gen., for the State.

EVANS, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 24)

MASSEY v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—NEW TRIAL—DISQUALIFICATION OF JUROR.

When, in a felony case, the name of one of the grand jury who returned the bill appears as "N. J. White," and the name of a juror upon the panel put upon the prisoner as "Neal J. White," due diligence demands an inquiry as to whether it is the same person. The fact that such is the case is not sufficient reason for granting a new trial, when no inquiry was made before accepting the juror.

2. HOMICIDE—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—EVIDENCE.

The verdict was amply supported, and it was not error to refuse to grant a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Hart County; H. M. Holden, Judge.

Marion Massey was convicted of shooting at another, and brings error. Affirmed.

Massey was indicted for assault with intent to murder, and was convicted of the offense of shooting at another. A motion for a new trial was filed, which, besides the general grounds, contained a special ground alleging that one of the jurors who rendered the verdict was one of the grand jurors who found the indictment; the juror's name appearing in the indictment as N. J.

White, and upon the jury list, from which the jury was stricken, as Neal J. White.

A. G. & Julian McCurry, for plaintiff in error. D. W. Meadow, Sol. Gen., for the State.

COBB, P. J. The name of the juror upon the list as furnished the prisoner was Neal J. White. The name appearing in the indictment was N. J. White. With the indictment and the list both before the counsel for the accused, the fact that a juror appeared in each whose initials were the same was sufficient to put him upon inquiry as to whether it was the same person in each list. By the exercise of the very slightest diligence this fact could have been ascertained before the juror was accepted. That the prisoner and his counsel did not know the fact until after the verdict is no sufficient reason for granting a new trial, unless it appears that they could not have discovered the existence of the fact by the exercise of ordinary diligence. Burns v. State, 80 Ga. 544, 7 S. E. 88; Jones v. State, 95 Ga. 497, 20 S. E. 211.

2. The evidence authorized, even if it did not demand the verdict, and it was not error to refuse to grant a new trial.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 28)

EARL v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

1. SHERIFFS—DEPUTY SHERIFFS—POWER TO ARREST—EVIDENCE OF APPOINTMENT.

Under the act of December 8, 1899 (Van Epps' Code Supp. §§ 6097-6103), an inspector of roads and bridges who had been sworn in as a deputy sheriff may arrest for the violation of the criminal laws of this state as other deputy sheriffs. His appointment and qualification as a deputy sheriff may be shown by proof that he acts as such, without production of the written appointment.

2. HOMICIDE—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL.

The jury were authorized to infer from the evidence that the accused shot, with intent to kill, an officer engaged in making an arrest for a crime committed in his view; and the verdict of guilty of assault with intent to murder will not be disturbed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; L. S. Roan, Judge.

George Earl was convicted of assault with intent to kill, and brings error. Affirmed.

S. O. Crane, for plaintiff in error. C. D. Hill, Sol. Gen., for the State.

EVANS, J. W. H. Oshshire was a deputy sheriff of Fulton county, under and by virtue of the act of December 8, 1899 (Acts 1899, p. 89). In company with other officers he entered a dwelling house where the defendant and others were gambling with cards. The officers attempted to arrest the participants in the game, among whom was the defendant, George Earl, who shot Mr. Cheshire while the arrest of the others was being accomplished, and inflicted a very serious wound. The defendant was indicted and convicted of the offense of assault with intent to murder. In his motion for a new trial, in addition to the usual formal grounds, he complains that the court erred in allowing Cheshire to testify, "I am a member of the county police force, and was acting in that capacity," over objection that there was no such office or officer created by law, and in allowing J. W. Maddox to testify, "I am one of the county force, and was sworn in as a deputy sheriff," over the objection that no such office as a county police was created by law, and there was a better way to prove the right to act as a deputy sheriff.

1. Under the act of December 8, 1890 (Acts 1899, p. 89), the commissioners of roads and revenues of all counties in this state having a population of more than 75,000 people, according to the census of the United States, have the power to employ one or more persons, to be known as "inspectors of roads and bridges." These officials may be sworn in as deputy sheriffs, and are given power to make arrests for the violation of the criminal laws of this state as other deputy sheriffs. The population of Fulton county, by the last United States census, exceeds 75,000 people, and the act just referred to is operative in that county. The appointment and qualification of such inspectors as deputy sheriffs may be shown by proof that they act as such. "It is not, in general, necessary to prove the written appointments of public officers. Proof that a person acts as a public officer is, prima facie, sufficient to show that he is such officer." Allen v. State, 21 Ga. 217, 68 Am. Dec. 457.

2. The jury was authorized to believe, from the evidence, that the defendant and others were in a house engaged in gambling with cards, when the prosecutor and the other officers attempted to encompass their arrest. The officers observed through a window that the offense of gambling was being committed, and it was not only their right, but their duty, to enter the house and arrest the parties engaged in this violation of the penal laws. An arrest may be made for a crime by an officer, either under or without a warrant, if committed in his presence. Pen. Code 1895, § 896. The accused made no contention in his statement that he shot the officer to prevent an illegal arrest. His statement was neither lucid nor exhaustive. Evidently, however, he intended the jury to draw the inference that some other person did the shooting. While he admitted that he shot one time, he denied that he fired at the officer. The evidence clearly demonstrated that the officers, while in pursuance of their rights and duties under the law, were attempting to arrest persons engaged in the commission of a criminal act, and that, pending their attempt to make the arrest, the accused fired upon the prosecutor with a deadly weapon. The jury were authorized to infer that the accused shot with intent to kill the officer, and to find that the guilt of the accused was established beyond a reasonable doubt.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 19)

VINSON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT — CONTRACT FOR SERVICES—FRAUD—CROPPER.

A "cropper," who is himself to perform services and labor in making the crop, is within the provisions of the act of 1903, "to make it illegal for any person to procure money, or other thing of value, on a contract to perform services with intent to defraud."

2. INFANTS—LIABILITY FOR CRIME.

A minor who has arrived at the age of criminal responsibility may be convicted under the act of 1903 of the fraudulent practices made penal by that act, although a contract of service made by him may not be civilly enforceable.

3. CRIMINAL LAW—NEW TRIAL—REVIEW.

A ground of a motion for a new trial alleging error in the admission of the testimony of a named witness "as to the damage sustained by him on account of the breach of contract," and also "as to the intent" of the accused, without setting out the evidence objected to, cannot be considered.

4. SAME.

None of the other grounds urged require a reversal.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Sylvania; J. W. Overstreet, Judge.

Henry Vinson was convicted of procuring money on a contract to perform services with intent to defraud, and brings error. Affirmed.

An accusation was brought in the city court of Sylvania against Henry Vinson, charging him with procuring money and other articles of value on a contract to perform services, with intent to defraud the hirer, under the act of 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 90). He filed a demurrer to the accusation, and, upon its being overruled, filed a bill of exceptions pendente lite. He was convicted, moved for a new trial, and upon the overruling of the motion excepted.

H. S. White, for plaintiff in error. H. A. Boykin, Sol. Gen., for the State.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts).

1. One ground of the demurrer was that the defendant was not a laborer, but "a share cropper," during the year 1905, and therefore did not fall within the act of 1903. Civ. Code 1895, § 3131, declares: "Where one is employed to work for a part of the crop, the relation of landlord and tenant does not arise. The title to the crop, subject to the interest of the cropper therein, and the possession of the land remain in the owner." A cropper does not occupy the position of a partner. Padgett v. Ford, 117 Ga. 508, 43 S. E. 1002; De Loach v. Delk, 119 Ga. 884, 47 S. E. 204. If the agreement is, not that he shall perform services himself, but shall procure and furnish labor, he is not a servant, but a contractor. Barron v. Collins, 49 Ga. 580; Duncan v. Anderson, 56 Ga. 398. If he is to work himself, he is a laborer. It has been held that part of the crop to which the cropper is entitled is in the nature of wages, and that, if the owner of the land wrongfully refuses to comply with his obligation, the cropper may assert a laborer's lien on the crop grown by him. McElmurray v. Turner, 86 Ga. 215, 12 S. E. 359; De Loach v. Delk, 119 Ga. 884, 47 S. E. 204. It was held in Hoyt v. Glenn, 54 Ga. 571, that "the affidavit for the enforcement of a laborer's lien under the act of 1869 must allege that the work was done by the plaintiff claiming such lien." See, also, Mabry v. Judkins, 66 Ga. 782; Hinton v. Goode, 73 Ga. 233 (2); Cochran v. Swann, 53 Ga. 39. In McElmurray v. Turner, however, it was held: "Part of the labor furnished by her [the cropper] being that of her two minor children, she being a widow, she was entitled to the lien for that part, as well as for the labor she did in person." Whatever may be the case as to minor children, it is quite clear that under these decisions a cropper, who is himself to perform services and labor, relatively to the provisions of the act of 1903, occupies the position of one who contracts to perform services, and who is to be compensated by receiving a share of the crop raised. The act of 1903 declares that "if any person shall contract with another to perform for him services of any kind with intent to procure money, or other thing of value thereby, and not to perform the services contracted for, to the loss and damage of the hirer; or having so contracted, shall procure from the hirer money, or other thing of value, with intent not to perform such services," etc. Acts 1903, p. 80. The accusation charges that the accused, "after having contracted with the said H. D. Lee, to perform for said H. D. Lee services as a share cropper during the year 1906, did with force and arms, and after he had made said contract, and with intent not to perform said services, and with intent to defraud the said H. D. Lee," etc. We think this alleges that the accused was a cropper who was himself to perform services, and that he therefore fell within the terms of the act of 1903. Ward v. State, 70 Miss. 245, 12 South. 249; McCutchin v. Taylor, 11 Lea, 259.

2. It was made a ground of the motion for a new trial that the accused should not have been convicted, because he was a minor, and could not lawfully contract, and that any contract made by him to perform services was voidable. If the act of 1903 declared it to be a criminal offense to violate a contract, not only would the position above stated be sound, but the act would be unconstitutional. The offense created by that act is not merely a breach of contract, but the fraudulent procurement of money, or other thing of value, on a contract to perform services. The gist of the offense is such fraudulent procurement. The contract of a minor is voidable; but, unless he is under the age at which he is declared by statute to be capable of committing a crime, he is subject to prosecution and conviction. A minor who has arrived at the age of criminal responsibility is as capable of committing a fraud as one of full age. If a voidable contract was used as a means of perpetrating a fraud and committing a criminal offense, the person making the contract would be none the less criminally responsible. The right to enforce a contract civilly, and the power to punish a minor who violates a criminal law, are two distinct things. The act makes no exceptions as to minors. In People v. Kendall, 25 Wend. 399, 37 Am. Dec. 240, it was held that an infant may be convicted of obtaining goods by false pretenses, where he purchases such goods on a credit by falsely representing himself to be a joint owner with his father of certain property. In the opinion it is said: "The legal effect of any contract that may have been formally entered into in the course of committing the offense; in other words, the question in respect to any civil remedy the party defrauded might have against the prisoner is not at all material in defining the crime. They are wholly distinct and disconnected, and depend upon the application of a different set of principles. Suppose a minor, in entering into a contract not binding upon him on account of his privilege, should commit a forgery, or pass counterfeit money, can there be a doubt that he would be punishable for the offense, though the contract itself, of which the act is perhaps but in part execution, was void or voidable?" It appeared that the defendant was about eighteen years of age when the offense was committed. He was, therefore, of an age when he was responsible for a crime. Pen. Code 1895, §§ 33, 34.

3. It is alleged in one ground of the motion for a new trial that the court erred "in admitting the testimony of Henry D. Lee, the prosecutor, as to the damage sustained by him on account of the breach of contract alleged to have been made by Henry Vinson with him; also his testimony as to the intent Henry Vinson had in abandoning his contract, for the reason," etc. This did not set out what was the testimony objected to, the admission of which was claimed to be error. It cannot, therefore, be considered.

4. None of the other grounds urged require a reversal.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 30)

MOORE v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

1. JURY—WAIVER.

A defendant in a misdemeanor case can waive trial by jury, whether the same be upon an accusation or upon an indictment. Logan v. State, 12 S. E. 406, 86 Ga. 266.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 31, Cent. Dig. Jur., § 199.]

2. GRAND JURY — MISDEMEANORS — INDICTMENT.

It is competent for the General Assembly, in creating a city court, to provide that persons arraigned in that court for misdemeanors shall not have the right to demand an indictment by the grand jury of the county (Daughtry v. State, 42 S. E. 248, 115 Ga. 819; Foster v. Jackson, 57 Ga. 206); and an act amending an act establishing the city court of Macon denies to defendants in all criminal cases within the jurisdiction of that court the right to demand an indictment by the grand jury. Acts 1900, p. 144.

3. SAME.

The foregoing disposes of all the questions of law raised in the motion for a new trial, the evidence warranted the verdict, and the court did not err in refusing a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Macon; Robt. Hodges, Judge.

Romey Moore was convicted of stabbing, and brings error. Affirmed.

Upon being convicted of the offense of stabbing, Romey Moore made a motion for a new trial upon the general grounds and because the prisoner had not had a legal trial, as guaranteed to him by the Constitution of the state and the Constitution of the United States; he having waived his right to a trial by jury, which he could not do under the federal Constitution, and been tried and convicted by the judge. Error is also alleged "because the defendant was tried on an accusation framed against him in the city court of Macon, and without a bill of indictment against him found by the grand jury of Bibb county." The motion being overruled he excepted.

Jno. R. Cooper, for plaintiff in error. Wm. Brunson, Sol. Gen., and Roland Ellis, for the State.

BECK, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 30)

WILSON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

1. WRIT OF ERROR—DELAY IN FILING EXCEPTIONS—DISMISSAL.

Whenever it appears that the clerk of a trial court has failed to transmit to the Supreme Court, within the time prescribed by law, a bill of exceptions and transcript, and that the plaintiff in error or his attorney "has been the cause of the delay * * * by consent, direction, or procurement of any kind," the writ of error will be dismissed. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 5571, 5572; Budden v. Brooks, 123 Ga. 882, 51 S. E. 727.

2. SAME—RESPONSIBILITY FOR DELAY.

The bill of exceptions in this case was certified by the trial judge on June 30, 1905, and was filed in the clerk's office July 10, 1905. The transcript of the record was certified by the clerk on August 4, 1905, and reached the Supreme Court the next day thereafter. It appears from an affidavit of a notary public, sent up by the clerk to explain the delay, that the notary "received the bill of exceptions * * * on the 8th day of July, 1905, to have filed in the clerk's office * * * and to secure the plaintiff's affidavits thereto; that upon filing said record he took it to have the affidavits made, and failed to return the record to said clerk's office in time for transmission to the Supreme Court within the time required." The notary was evidently acting for the plaintiff in error or her counsel, and the facts place her or her counsel in the attitude of consenting to, directing, or procuring the delay of the clerk in making out, certifying, and transmitting to this court the transcript of the record within the time prescribed by the statute, and therefore the writ of error must be dismissed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Coffee County; T. A. Parker, Judge.

Lizzie Wilson was convicted of crime, and brings error. Writ dismissed.

Jno. T. Myers, for plaintiff in error. Jno. W. Bennett, Sol. Gen., and Lankford & Dickerson, for the State.

FISH, C. J. Writ of error dismissed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 62)

LEWIS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

CRIMINAL LAW—VENUE—EVIDENCE.

As the city court of Tifton has jurisdiction, civil and criminal, in and over the city of Tifton (Acts 1902, p. 174), proof that an offense was committed in a church located "in the edge of Tifton" sufficiently establishes the venue, and authorizes that court to exercise its jurisdiction in the premises.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Berrien County; R. G. Mitchell, Judge.

Lela Lewis was convicted of disturbing public worship, and from denial of new trial on certiorari she brings error. Affirmed.

Murrow & Pate, for plaintiff in error. W. E. Thomas, Sol. Gen., for the State.

EVANS, J. Lela Lewis was tried and convicted in the city court of Tifton of the offense of disturbing a congregation of persons assembled for divine worship at a certain church in the 1,314th district, G. M., of Berrien county. The evidence disclosed that Shiloh Church, the place where the crime was alleged to have been committed, "was a colored church in the edge of Tifton, in Berrien county, about a half a mile from the courtroom" where the trial was being conducted. She carried the case by certiorari to the superior court, and the judgment of the city court of Tifton was upheld, and a new trial was refused. She sued out a writ of error to this court, assigning as error the refusal to sustain her certiorari. The case was submitted by brief, and the only question argued by counsel for the plaintiff in error was the sufficiency of the proof of venue.

The city court of Tifton was established in 1902 (Acts 1902, p. 174), and was given jurisdiction, civil and criminal, in and over the city of Tifton, and all that portion of Berrien county lying in the 1,314th district, G. M., of that county. The testimony established that the disturbance occurred at a church located "in the edge of Tifton." This was a sufficient designation that the church was included within the limits of the city of Tifton, and therefore the act complained of was within the jurisdiction of the court. There was no error in overruling the petition for certiorari.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(124 Ga. 63)

KOLMAN v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

CRIMINAL LAW—PROOF OF VENUE.

A motion for a new trial, made upon the ground, amongst others, that the verdict was contrary to law and the evidence, should be sustained, and a new trial granted, if the evidence fails to show in what county the alleged offense was committed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Savannah; T. M. Norwood, Judge.

M., alias Philip, Kolman was convicted of a misdemeanor, and brings error. Reversed.

Simon N. Gazan, for plaintiff in error. W. W. Osborne, Sol. Gen., for the State.

BECK, J. The defendant was tried in the city court of Savannah, charged with the offense of a misdemeanor, and after conviction moved for a new trial, which motion the court overruled, and the defendant excepted.

The defendant's motion was based upon the general grounds that the verdict was contrary to law and the evidence and without evidence to support it. The evidence upon the main question in the case—that is, as to whether the defendant was guilty of the specific offense charged, to wit, that he "did instigate the cruel treatment of a domestic animal"—is conflicting, but the motion for a new trial should have been sustained upon the general ground that the verdict was contrary to law and the evidence, inasmuch as the record does not disclose that there was any evidence whatever to show that the crime was committed in Chatham county, as alleged in the indictment; the only evidence tending to locate the scene of the alleged offense being to the effect that it was committed at the corner of "Farm and Bryan," without even naming the city in which Farm and Bryan are situated, and courts do not take judicial cognizance of such facts. Alexander v. State, 105 Ga. 834, 31 S. E. 754; Carter v. State, 48 Ga. 43.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 63)

ROSENTHAL v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—REVIEW.

The evidence warranted the verdict, and no errors of law are complained of.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; Geo. T. Cann, Judge.

Julius Rosenthal was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Twiggs & Oliver and Edmund H. Abrahams, for plaintiff in error. W. W. Osborne, Sol. Gen., for the State.

BECK, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 22)

WILSON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

MASTER AND SERVANT—VIOLATION OF CONTRACT—ACCUSATION.

An accusation in a city court, charging one with the offense of violating the provision of the act approved August 15, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 90), should set forth, at least in substance, a contract definite and certain as to its terms and duration; and an accusation wholly failing to meet this requirement is fatally defective, and a special demurrer thereto, on the ground that "said accusation failed to set forth any contract, not stating when said contract was to begin nor end," should be sustained.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Moultrie; W. S. Humphreys, Judge.

Paul Wilson was convicted of cheating, and brings error. Reversed.

J. D. McKenzie and L. L. Moore, for plaintiff in error.

BECK, J. Paul Wilson demurred to an accusation charging him with cheating and swindling under the provisions of the act of August 15, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 90), upon the ground that the accusation did not set out with definite certainty the contract for services, or the failure on the part of the accused to perform his part thereof, and because the act itself violates the Constitution of the United States as well as that of Georgia. After his demurrer was overruled, the case proceeded to trial, and he was convicted. He made a motion for a new trial upon the general grounds, which was denied by the court, and he now excepts to the ruling of the judge in not granting his motion, and also urges the exceptions which he filed pendente lite to the overruling of his demurrer.

The language of the accusation is as follows: "Said defendant did, on the 20th day of July, 1905, in county aforesaid, unlawfully and with force and arms did contract with Lindsey Ball to perform services as a laborer for the said Lindsey Ball, and by reason of said contract did obtain advances from the said Lindsey Ball in the sum of six dollars in money, * * * and after having so contracted and procured said advances the said defendant Paul Wilson did fail to comply with said contract or return to said Lindsey Ball said advances." It will be readily seen from a cursory reading of this accusation that it is fatally defective. "Before one can be lawfully convicted of a violation of this statute, several things essential to constitute the offense defined must be shown. Among them is that there was a distinct and definite contract for services, and another is that the person contracting to perform this service has, without good and sufficient cause, failed and refused to carry out his contract by performing the service. An implied contract will not do, but there must be an express contract, clear and definite in its terms." Glenn v. State, 123 Ga. 585, 51 S. E. 605. The ruling in the headnote is supported by the authority cited, and by the reasoning in the case from which the quotation is made.

Having reversed the judgment of the court below upon the ground that the special demurrer should have been sustained, it is unnecessary to discuss the grounds of the motion for new trial; but, had it been necessary for us to pass upon the grounds of the motion, we should unhesitatingly have held that the verdict was without evidence to support it. It is true that the prosecutor testified in general terms that the accused did contract with him about the 1st day of July, 1905, to cut wood for him near Moultrie, and "on the strength of this contract he advanced to the defendant $6 in money, and one ax and handle, of the value of $1.21, and one saw, worth $1.15." But there is absolutely no proof in the record as to the duration of the alleged contract, or within what time it was to have been performed; and, beyond the mere claim of the prosecutor that there was "a contract," there was nothing to show with definiteness or precision what that contract was.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 65)

WEATHERSBY v. JORDAN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 8, 1905.)

1. CERTIORARI—APPEAL—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF COURT.

A judge of the superior court, in passing on a certiorari, where questions of fact are involved and the evidence is conflicting, has a discretion to sustain the certiorari similar to the discretion allowed him in passing upon a first new trial, and the discretion will not be controlled, unless it has been manifestly abused.

Savannah Ry. v. Fennell, 23 S. E. 437, 100 Ga. 474; Buice v. Buice, 36 S. E. 909, 111 Ga. 887; Ferry v. Mattox, 44 S. E. 1005, 118 Ga. 146.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Certiorari, § 205.]

2. HABEAS CORPUS—DETERMINATION—CUSTODY OF CHILDREN.

In passing upon the questions raised by the petition and answer in a habeas corpus case for the possession of minor children, the discretion given by the law is to the trial judge, who sees and hears the parties, the witnesses, and the children, and who necessarily has superior opportunities for determining correctly the issues involved, chief of which is the material interest of the children. Smith v. Bragg, 68 Ga. 650.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 25, Cent. Dig. Habeas Corpus, § 84.]

3. CERTIORARI—PROCEEDING—JUDGMENT.

While, in accordance with the ruling announced in the first headnote, the discretion of the judge of the superior court in reversing the ordinary's finding on the facts presented by the petition for certiorari will not be controlled, it was error for him to render final judgment, and for this reason the case must go back for another hearing.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Certiorari, § 191.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Jasper County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

Habeas corpus between Sallie Weathersby and Annie Jordan. From a judgment of the superior court, reversing the findings of the ordinary, Weathersby brings error. Reversed.

Doyle Campbell and Greene F. Johnson, for plaintiff in error. Fleming Jordan, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 108)

HOUSTON et al. v. POLK.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

1. PARTNERSHIP—ACCOUNTING—DEPRECIATION IN FIRM PROPERTY.

In the absence of an agreement to that effect in the contract of partnership, a partner is not liable, upon an accounting subsequently to the dissolution of the firm, for depreciation in the value of the manufacturing plant which is the subject of the partnership; but the loss caused by such depreciation must be borne by the partnership.

2. SAME.

A partner is not liable to his copartners for losses caused by his lack of judgment or discretion unaccompanied by actual negligence or bad faith.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 33, Cent. Dig. Partnership, §§ 135, 136.]

3. SAME—SUIT FOR ACCOUNTING—PLEADING—AMENDMENT.

In a suit by a partner against two surviving partners, for an accounting and for judgment for his proportionate share of the net profits of the concern, where it appeared that the plaintiff's interest in the firm had been purchased by one of the other partners, subject to such an accounting, it was not error to allow an amendment setting up that the remaining partner, while not a party to the contract of sale referred to, knew of its existence and acquiesced in its execution.

4. EQUITY—AUDITOR'S REPORT—EXCEPTIONS.

The present case was an equitable action, and it was not error to refuse to refer to a jury the exceptions of fact to the auditor's report.

5. COSTS—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT.

It does not appear that the trial judge erred in taxing one-half of the costs against the plaintiff in the court below.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, De Kalb County; L. S. Roan, Judge.

Action by W. R. Polk, Jr., against W. J. Houston and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error, and plaintiff prosecutes a cross-bill of exceptions. Affirmed.

The plaintiff's petition alleged, in substance, that on March 29, 1902, he entered into a contract of copartnership with the defendants, W. J. Houston, Sr., and W. J. Houston, Jr., for the construction and operation of an electric light and power plant near Decatur, Ga.; that this contract remained in force until April 10, 1903, "when petitioner sold out his interest in the same to W. J. Houston, Sr., but reserved in said sale his interest in the net profits of the business up to the date of the sale, which were afterwards to be adjusted"; that the operation of the business from March 29, 1902, to April 10, 1903, had resulted in net profits, or excess of income over operating expenses, of $618.05, of which plaintiff's share was $309.02; that plaintiff was indebted to the partnership $84.80, leaving as the balance due him by the defendants $266.62; that he has made frequent and earnest efforts to adjust with the defendants the amount due to him under their agreement, but has been unable to do so; and that they have ignored his demand for payment of the amount due him. Waiving discovery, he prayed for an accounting between himself and the defendants, and for judgment for $266.62, besides interest. Copies of the contract of partnership and of dissolution were attached to the petition as exhibits, as well as a statement of accounts which it was alleged the plaintiff had rendered the defendants, showing the balance claimed to be due him. The contract of dissolution was as follows:

"Georgia, Fulton County: Whereas, W. R. Polk, Jr., W. J. Houston, and W. J. Houston, Jr., entered into a contract of copartnership on the 29th day of March, 1902, for the purpose of constructing and operating an electric lighting plant in the town of Decatur, De Kalb county, Ga.; and whereas, differences have arisen between said parties as to the operation and conducting of the business of said partnership, and it is desired by said Polk and the other parties to said contract that their differences be adjusted and compromise reached without resorting to the courts: It is therefore mutually agreed between the said W. J. Houston and the said W. R. Polk, Jr., that the said W. R. Polk, Jr., will sell to the said W. J. Houston all his right, title, and interest in and to the plant erected by said parties; also all stock that he may claim to own in the Decatur Electric Light, Power & Water Company, which is referred to in said contract of partnership, and that he will cancel said articles of partnership; that he is to convey to said W. J. Houston, free from incumbrance, the one-half undivided interest heretofore conveyed by said Houston to said Polk in and to the land upon which said plant is constructed, known as the 'Houston Mill Place,' in De Kalb county; also all right, title, and interest that he may have or claim in and to the franchise granted by the town of Decatur to W. J. Houston and W. J. Houston, Jr., for the purpose of constructing said plant. The said W. J. Houston, in consideration of the performance of the above stipulations by said Polk, is to pay said Polk the sum of two thousand and thirty-three and 31/100 dollars ($2,033.31), and is to pay the unpaid bills for construction, which [it is] hereby agreed by the parties hereto amount to the sum of fourteen hundred thirty-five and 53/100 dollars ($1,485.53); this being the balance ascertained by the parties hereto, after a careful calculation, as due various parties for material and supplies furnished in the construction of said plant. Said Houston is also to pay the note of fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500.00) given by said Polk to Atlanta National Bank, same being jointly signed by the said Houston. Said Houston is also to surrender to said Polk two notes, one for one thousand dollars and one for fifteen hundred dollars, given by said Polk to said Houston as purchase money for half interest in above described land. Said Houston is also to surrender to said Polk the four hundred dollar Durham note.

"[Signed] W. J. Houston.

"[Signed] W. R. Polk, Jr."

"The above contract has been fully complied with. Apr. 14, 1903.

"The above contract is understood by the parties hereto as not in any manner applying to any net profits that may have accrued from the operation of said plant, but only to the plant, land, franchises, and partnership dissolution; the question of profits up to April 10, 1903, remaining open for adjustment. April 10, 1903.

"[Signed] W. J. Houston.

"[Signed] W. R. Polk, Jr."

By amendment the plaintiff alleged that W. J. Houston, Jr., was the son of W. J. Houston, Sr.; that Houston, Jr., was fully cognizant of the contract of dissolution between the plaintiff and Houston, Sr., was present at various conferences at which the terms and conditions of the contract of dissolution were discussed, actively advised and consulted with Houston, Sr., in regard thereto, and agreed to the terms and conditions of the contract. The amendment also made certain changes in the account sued on, which it is not necessary to set out now.

The defendants filed an answer, in which they admitted the contract of partnership and that of dissolution, but denied that they were indebted to the plaintiff. They denied that the business had yielded any net profits up to April 10, 1903, and averred that, on the contrary, it had sustained losses, for a proportionate share of which the plaintiff was liable. They claimed that certain items of expense were chargeable against the receipts of the business which more than offset the amount claimed by the plaintiff, to wit: (a) Ten per cent per annum on the cost of construction of the plant necessary to be set aside out of the receipts of the business for the purpose of rebuilding the plant when it is worn out, amounting in the present case to $246.58 for the time the plant had been in operation up to the dissolution of the partnership; (b) the cost of installing a new water wheel in the plant, amounting to $416.67, made necessary by the fact that the plaintiff, who was relied upon as a skilled mechanic, installed in the plant a water wheel which was not adequate for the purpose of the business; (c) the cost of replacing incandescent electric lamps in the plant, amounting to $44.95, immediately after April 10, 1903; (d) the cost of replacing a flour and corn mill (amounting to $67.50), which the plaintiff had dismantled in the construction of the electric plant, and which he had never replaced, though agreeing so to do; (e) the amount of $103.11 collected from the town of Decatur for the partnership for lighting the town, and for which he had never accounted. By amendment the defendants set out other items of expense, which it is not necessary to enumerate here, which they claimed should be charged against the receipts of the partnership.

The case was submitted to an auditor, and at the hearing before him the plaintiff demurred to so much of the answer as sought to set off against his claim a proportionate part of the cost of construction of the plant, of installing a new water wheel, of replacing incandescent electric lamps, and of replacing the flour and corn mill; the grounds of demurrer being that they furnished no basis for a recovery by the defendants against the plaintiff, that they were contemplated and adjusted by the contract of dissolution of the partnership, and that the averments were insufficient in law. This demurrer was sustained by the auditor and the paragraphs which they attacked were stricken from the answer. The auditor in his report set out a detailed statement of the accounts between the plaintiff and the defendants as found by him from the evidence, and concluded that "the defendants are indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $225.22, with legal interest thereon from April 10, 1903." The defendants filed exceptions of law and of fact to the report of the auditor. These exceptions were overruled, and the auditor's report was made the judgment of the superior court, with direction that the plaintiff should pay half of the costs of the suit. The defendants excepted to the overruling of their exceptions of law to the auditor's report, and to the refusal of the judge to submit to a jury their exceptions of fact; and the plaintiff filed a cross-bill of exceptions, in which he assigned error upon the judgment requiring him to pay half the costs.

Green, Tilson & McKinney, for plaintiffs in error. H. A. Alexander, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. 1. In the brief of counsel for the plaintiffs in error in the main bill of exceptions it is urged that the demurrer to the answer should have been overruled because, being in the nature of a special demurrer, it could not be filed after the first term. It appears, however, that no such point was raised in the exceptions to the auditor's report, which assigned error upon the sustaining of the demurrer, it being contended merely that the paragraphs of the answer attacked were legally sufficient to withstand the demurrer; and the question as to whether the demurrer was properly sustained must be decided on the points made in the exceptions to the auditor's report and passed upon by the court below. We have no hesitancy in holding that the Houstons were not entitled to charge against the share of the net profits due Polk any proportion of the amount estimated as representing the depreciation in value of the plant and machinery of the partnership. Conceding that an electric lighting and power plant will, as contended, wear itself out in ten years, we fail to see how it can be said to follow, where such a plant is owned and operated by a partnership, that the burden of this depreciation should be borne by one partner to the exclusion of the others. If this item of depreciation was a legitimate charge against Polk, it was an equally legitimate charge against the Houstons, and the account between them on this score stood balanced. It is not contended that this claim grew out of any special agreement between the partners made when the partnership was formed, or that any such agreement existed. The case of Tutt v. Land, 50 Ga. 339 (4), is directly in point; and while counsel for the plaintiffs in error made a provisional request that this case be reviewed, we cannot see any good reason why it should be disturbed, as it seems to us to be founded on sound reason and unanswerable logic. It was there held that where a mercantile partnership was formed, one partner furnishing the stock of goods and the other his skill and services, on a dissolution of the partnership the former was not entitled to claim for the ordinary, natural depreciation of the goods and fixtures of the store. The case of Park v. Tennille, 20 Ga. 118, with which it is contended that Tutt v. Land is in conflict, is not in point. No question of the settlement of partnership accounts was even remotely involved. It was merely decided that where, by the terms of a marriage settlement, the husband had a title to the "annual increase or profits" of a plantation, without the power to dispose of the corpus of the estate, the phrase quoted, in order to give effect to the evident intention of the instrument, should be construed to mean the net, rather than the gross, profits, and that the creditors of the husband could not levy upon crops which constituted the gross profits of the plantation. We fail to see how this decision in any manner stands in the way of the decision in Tutt v. Land, supra, or what possible bearing it has upon the case now under consideration.

2. The portion of the answer in which it was sought to set off against the plaintiff's demand a claim for the cost of installing a water wheel after the partnership had been dissolved was in the following language: "That it had been necessary for defendants to install a new water wheel in said plant since the construction of the same by said Polk, at a cost of $416.67, which is a proper charge against the said Polk and against said receipts, because defendants * * * relied on said Polk as a skilled mechanic for the proper construction of said plant; but, instead of using the proper skill and judgment in the construction of said plant, which defendants expected of said Polk, said Polk installed a water wheel over the protest of defendants in said plant which was entirely too large for the power of the stream, and did not yield for consumption by the machinery the amount of power that should be obtained from a stream carrying the volume of water carried by the stream in question. The placing of this wheel in said plant, and the consequent necessity of replacing it by a new one in so short a time after the construction of said plant, was due entirely to the negligence and want of skill in said Polk, who represented to defendants that he was entirely competent to properly construct the plant in question, and the cost of said wheel is a proper charge against said Polk, as the same is a direct damage to defendants." It will be observed that there is no charge that Polk was guilty of bad faith in the part that he took in the installation of the original water wheel. Indeed, the averments distinctly negative the idea of fraud or bad faith, and place the entire blame for the alleged damage done upon the lack of judgment and skill of the plaintiff. It is well settled that for such damage occasioned by the act of a partner the firm itself is liable, and the individual partner cannot be held to respond. See 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. (2d Ed.) 128 (10b), where the principle is announced that "a partner is not solely liable for losses caused merely by his lack of discretion or good judgment, but amounting to negligence or bad faith, but the loss in such cases must fall upon the partners as a firm." While, in the present case, the answer averred in general terms that the plaintiff had been negligent in installing the original water wheel, the other averments in the same paragraph distinctly negative this idea; for it affirmatively appears that the expediency of installing a wheel of the size described was called in question at the time of its installation, that the plaintiff and the defendants differed on the subject, that the defendants relied upon the supposed superior skill of the plaintiff, and that whatever error he committed was one purely of discretion and judgment. Indeed, it was not claimed that there was any negligence in installing the wheel, but merely that through a mistake of judgment the plaintiff installed one that was too large for the purposes for which it was intended. We are clear that there was no error in striking this paragraph of the answer.

3. It is contended by counsel for the Houstons that the amendment to the plaintiff's petition, in which it was alleged that W. J. Houston, Jr. was cognizant of the contract of dissolution between the plaintiff and Houston, Sr., and agreed to the terms of the contract, should not have been allowed, because its effect was to bind Houston, Jr., by the terms of a contract to which he was not a party. In view of all the allegations of the petition, as well as the contract which was made an exhibit thereto, we do not think this contention is well founded. On its face the contract was merely one whereby Houston, Sr., purchased from Polk the interest of the latter in the partnership. Apparently, Houston, Jr., parted with nothing and acquired nothing by this instrument; but, in a suit by Polk against the surviving partners for his share of the net profits under the terms of the original partnership agreement, it was certainly not amiss to allow him to allege and prove that his withdrawal from the firm was with the full consent and acquiescence of all the partners—not for the purpose of holding Houston, Jr., as a party to the contract, or of binding him to perform any of its terms, but to show the entire mutuality of all the parties to the dissolution, and to negative the idea that by reason of any concealment from Houston, Jr., of the existence of the contract, he was not bound to account to Polk for his share of the net profits of the concern.

4. There was no error in refusing to submit to a jury the exceptions of fact to the auditor's report. While an accounting may be had at law, as well as in equity, an accounting between partners, such as the one in the present suit, where various demands and cross-demands are set up between the parties, is peculiarly a subject for equity jurisdiction. Civ. Code 1895, § 3989; Hogan v. Walsh, 122 Ga. 285, 50 S. E. 84.

5. This being an equity case, the question raised by counsel for Polk in the cross-bill of exceptions, whether the court erred in taxing one-half the costs against him, depends solely upon whether the trial judge abused the discretion vested in him. Clearly this does not appear, and we therefore hold that the assignment of error in the cross-bill is without merit. Civ. Code 1895, § 4850; Guernsey v. Phinizy, 113 Ga. 898, 39 S. E. 402, 84 Am. St. Rep. 270.

While numerous questions were raised by the exceptions to the report of the auditor which have not been discussed, they were not argued in the brief of counsel, and under the uniform practice of this court these contentions must be treated as having been abandoned. We find no error requiring a reversal of the judgment on either bill of exceptions.

Judgment on both bills affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(124 Ga. 111)

POLHILL v. BATTLE et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

INSURANCE—BENEFIT CERTIFICATE—BENEFICIARIES.

A member of a mutual benefit society named as the beneficiaries of a certificate held by him his wife, S., and three sisters, in designated proportions. S. died intestate, leaving the insured as her sole heir at law. Subsequently the insured married J., who survived him. After the death of S. the insured made no provision for the disposition of the amount payable to her under the certificate. A law of the society provided that "in the event of the death, before the decease of a member, of one or more of the beneficiaries designated by him, * * * if he shall have made no other or further disposition thereof, * * * upon his death that part of the benefit made payable to the deceased beneficiary or beneficiaries shall be paid to the surviving beneficiary or beneficiaries equally." Held, that upon the death of the insured his three sisters were entitled to take equally the share which would have gone to S., had she lived, and that J. was not entitled to participate in the distribution of the benefit.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Jefferson County; H. M. Holden, Judge.

Action by Josie E. Polhill against Julia Battle and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Phillips & Phillips and Jas. K. Hines, for plaintiff in error. R. L. Gamble and J. M. Pace, for defendants in error.

CANDLER, J. The Supreme Council Royal Arcanum filed in the superior court of Jefferson county a petition for interpleader, the object of which was to have adjudicated conflicting claims to a sum of money due by it on a benefit certificate issued by John Joseph Polhill, deceased. The case was decided by the judge, without a jury, on an agreed statement of facts, from which it appeared that the certificate was issued on January 19, 1901, and bound the Supreme Council Royal Arcanum (which for convenience will be called the insurance order), upon satisfactory evidence of the death of the insured and upon the compliance with certain stipulated conditions, to pay out of its "widows' and orphans' benefit fund," to Sarah Polhill, wife of the insured, three-sixths, and to Julia Battle, Ella Douglas, and Cornelia Polhill, sisters of the insured, each one-sixth, of an amount not exceeding $3,000. Sarah Polhill died, and the insured subsequently married Josie Polhill, who, together with the three sisters named as beneficiaries of the certificate, survived him. Josie Polhill was never designated by the insured as a beneficiary under the certificate issued by the insurance order. Numerous by-laws of the order were set out in the statement of facts, but many of these have no material bearing on the question at issue. It was provided that "each applicant [for a benefit certificate] shall enter upon his application the name or names, residence, and relationship or the dependence of the person or persons * * * to whom he desires his benefit paid, and the same shall be entered in the benefit certificate according to said directions." It was also provided that benefits might be made payable to any one or more persons of certain classes only, which it is not necessary to enumerate here. We quote from the laws of the order the following:

"Sec. 330. If at the time of the death of a member, if the designated beneficiary is his wife, and they shall be divorced upon the application of either party, or if any designation shall fall for illegality or otherwise, then the benefit shall be payable to the person or persons mentioned in class first (Sec. No. 324), if living, in the shares and order of precedence by grades as therein enumerated; the persons living of each precedent grade taking in equal shares per capita, to the exclusion of all persons living of subsequently enumerated grades.

"Sec. 331. In the event of the death before the decease of a member of one or more of the beneficiaries designated by him in accordance with the laws of the order, if he shall have made no other or further disposition thereof as provided in the laws of the order, upon his death that part of the benefit made payable to the deceased beneficiary or beneficiaries shall be paid to the surviving beneficiary or the surviving beneficiaries equally."

It was also agreed that "one of the objects of the Supreme Council Royal Arcanum, as declared in its constitution, is 'to establish a widows' and orphans' fund, from which, on the satisfactory evidence of the death of a member of the order, who has complied with all its lawful requirements, a sum not exceeding three thousand dollars shall be paid to the wife, children, relatives of, or persons dependent upon, said member, as limited and described in said order relating to benefit certificates, as he may direct in accordance with said laws.' Upon this statement of facts, the judge, after hearing argument, ruled that the three sisters of the deceased, as surviving beneficiaries, were entitled to that part of the fund made payable by the certificate to Sarah Polhill, the deceased wife of the insured, and that Josie Polhill, his wife at the time of his death, was not entitled to any portion of the amount due by the certificate. Josie Polhill excepted.

Great stress is laid by counsel for the plaintiff in error upon the favor shown by the law to widows, and upon the fact that one of the prime objects of the beneficial order in the present case was to provide a fund for the protection and relief of widows and orphans; and it is urged that, although there was no designation of Mrs. Josie Polhill as a beneficiary of the certificate, she should, in view of the spirit of the law, both of the state and of the order, be held to be entitled to the amount due on the death of the insured. It will be observed, however, that the widows' and orphans' fund was expressly declared to be for the benefit of the surviving wife, children, relatives, or dependents of the insured, according to his preference. While a certain order of precedence was established, for guidance in the event of nondesignation or failure of designation, there was no restriction upon the member as to which of his relatives or dependents might be named as beneficiaries. So far as the purposes of the order are concerned, the sisters of a member occupied as favored a position as his surviving wife. To arrive at a proper determination of this case, therefore, we must get away from the idea that as between the different claimants for this fund there are any favorites of the law, and consider solely the right of the parties as defined by the benefit certificate and the laws of the insurance order. Provision was made for a method by which the holder of a benefit certificate might change the person designated by him as a beneficiary. This method was not pursued in this case. By section 830, it was provided that where the designated beneficiary is the wife of the member and they shall be divorced, or if any designation shall fall for illegality or otherwise, the benefit shall be payable in a described manner; and it is contended by counsel for the plaintiff in error that the words emphasized are broad enough to include the present case. A careful reading of the section in question, however, leads to the belief that this section was intended to apply only where the member's wife is the sole beneficiary named; for any other construction would give rise to a hopeless conflict between that section and the succeeding one, which seems to have been framed especially to meet just such a case as the present one. Certainly, the specific language of section 331 should prevail over the vague and general term "or otherwise" contained in section 830.

We do not lose sight of the principle invoked by counsel for the plaintiff in error that the rules of benefit societies should be construed liberally to effect their beneficent purposes; but we must decline to go to the length of construing out of existence a section of the laws of the benefit society which absolutely controls the present case. There was no error in the ruling of the trial judge.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(124 Ga. 114)

GEORGIA CO-OPERATIVE FIRE ASS'N v. HARRIS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

1. INSURANCE—ACTION ON POLICY—VERDICT.

Where suit is brought on a policy of fire insurance covering, in different amounts, a dwelling house and the furniture therein located, the verdict, if the defendant be found liable, need not specify separately the amounts found for loss of the house and of the furniture, but may be a lump sum covering the entire amount of the loss.

2. SAME—OTHER INSURANCE.

While it appeared that at the time of the fire the property covered by the policy was insured in another company, and that the plaintiff had accepted from that company a small sum in satisfaction of his policy therein, there was evidence authorizing the jury to find that this sum did not represent a pro rata share of the loss as claimed by the plaintiff, and that it was accepted by him only because he realized that that company was not liable to him in any amount.

3. SAME—EVIDENCE.

The evidence authorized a finding that the plaintiff did not consent to a restriction of his right to insure in any other company, and also that the loss sustained by the plaintiff was greater than the amount of the verdict.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Richmond County; W. F. Ewe, Judge.

Action by Grandison Harris against the Georgia Co-operative Fire Association. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

F. W. Capers and F. L. McElmurray, for plaintiff in error. Henry C. Roney, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(38 W. Va. 227)

NUTTER v. BROWN et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Nov. 7, 1905.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—DECREE FOR COSTS.

Ordinarily an appeal does not lie from a decree for costs only in a chancery suit, but there are exceptions to the rule, turning on the question of the discretionary power of the trial court respecting costs. A decree for such costs as are discretionary is not appealable, but one for costs not in the discretion of the court is appealable, provided the amount thereof is more than $100.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 2, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, §§ 596, 611, 823.]

2. SAME—EXTRAORDINARY COSTS.

Extraordinary costs, such as allowances of expenses and compensation of receivers, either as between the receiver and the fund in court and parties, or as between party and party, are not discretionary, and a decree respecting such costs is appealable.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 2, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, § 833.]

3. SAME—PROVISIONAL ALLOWANCE.

Such costs may, in a proper case, be provisionally allowed to the officer out of the fund, and ultimately decreed to be paid to the party entitled to the fund by his adversary; but in either case a decree of such character is appealable.

4. RECEIVERS—COMPENSATION—IRREGULARITY IN APPOINTMENT.

Mere irregularities in the appointment of a special receiver, acquiesced in by the parties, will neither deprive such receiver of his compensation, nor the successful party of a decree over against his adversary for the amount thereof, when it has been allowed out of a fund belonging to the party so prevailing.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 42, Cent. Dig. Receivers, §§ 94, 400.]

5. SAME—SALE OF PERISHABLE PROPERTY.

When, in a suit in equity, the title to personal property of such character as renders sale thereof necessary for the adequate protection of the rights of the parties interested is involved, the court in which such suit is pending may properly appoint a receiver to take charge of it and make sale thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 42, Cent. Dig. Receivers, § 21.]

6. APPEAL—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF COURT—COSTS.

When, in such case, one defendant claimed four-fifths of the property in dispute, and two others jointly claimed the remaining interest, and the court adjudged the property to belong to the plaintiff, and gave the ordinary costs against all the defendants, reserving its judgment as to the extraordinary costs, and afterwards decreed that the defendant who had claimed the four-fifths interest pay the same, the decree as to the extraordinary costs will not be disturbed on appeal, unless the court can see that such defendant has been required to pay more than his due proportion of the entire cost.

Brannon, P., dissenting.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Harrison County.

Action by Cordelia Nutter against Beeson H. Brown and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. Scott and Wm. T. George, for appellants. E. G. Smith, E. A. Brannon, and Millard F. Snyder, for appellee.

POFFENBARGER, J. This is a third appeal in the case of Nutter v. Brown, the history of which may be obtained by reference to 51 W. Va. 598, 42 S. E. 661, and 46 S. E. 375, where the dispositions made of the first and second appeals are reported. The decree from which the second appeal was taken directed the special receiver to pay over and deliver the proceeds of the property in controversy to the plaintiff, Cordelia Nutter, and the defendants C. T. Arnett and J. M. Garrett in the proportions in which they were entitled, one-half to Cordelia Nutter, and one-fourth to each of the other two parties, and required the defendants Beeson H. Brown, Henry R. Smith, and Gertrude Duncan to pay to the plaintiff, Cordelia Nutter, her costs. But that decree reserved for future adjudication all questions relating to the compensation of the receiver and his costs and expenses, and also the question whether such costs and expenses should be taxed against the defendants as part of the costs in the cause. After the affirmation of said decree by this court, the receiver filed his report in the court below, showing that he had received on account of the oil $14,052.42, had paid out on account of taxes $404.04, had paid a fee of $25 to the attorney of the receiver, and had retained his commission of 5 per cent., amounting to $702.62, making a total of $1127.66, which, deducted from the total receipts, left $12,924.76, which he had distributed to the parties entitled under the decree aforesaid; and the court confirmed his report and discharged him. Later, May 28, 1904, Cordelia Nutter, James M. Garrett, and O. T. Arnett, out of whose funds said attorney's fee and receiver's compensation had been retained, applied to the court for a decree against Beeson H. Brown, one of the defendants, for said sums as part of their costs in the prosecution of their suit, and such decree was entered for the sum of $723.62. From it Brown has obtained the present appeal.

The appeal is resisted on the ground that the decree is for costs only, as to which no appeal lies. The appellate jurisdiction of this court in cases pecuniary in their nature is limited by the Constitution to those in which the matter in controversy, exclusive of costs, is of greater value or amount than $100. Const. art. 8, § 8. This expressly excludes the addition of costs to the value or amount in controversy for the purpose of making it more than $100. It does not prevent costs, when a subject of independent adjudication, from reaching the appellate court. Taney v. Woodmansee, 23 W. Va. 709, in which an appeal was entertained from a decree overruling a motion to quash an execution, although the amount in controversy was composed wholly of costs. It only inhibits addition of costs to the matter in controversy on the merits, in order to bring the amount up to the jurisdictional point, a sum in excess of $100, and has nothing to do with the question whether an appeal from a decree for costs only may be entertained. In this view of the constitutional limitation my associates do not concur. However, the general rule is, and always has been, both in England and in this country, that, independently of any constitutional limitation, a decree for costs only is not ordinarily appealable. Pritchard v. Evans, 31 W. Va. 137, 5 S. E. 461; Long v. Perine, 41 W. Va. 314, 23 S. E. 611; Graham v. Bank, 45 W. Va. 702, 32 S. E. 245; Cowles v. Whitman, 10 Conn. 121, 25 Am.

Dec. 60; Smith v. Shaffer, 50 Md. 132; Lake v. Shumate, 20 S. C. 23; Temple v. Lawson, 19 Ark. 148; Howe v. Hutchison, 105 Ill. 501; Shields v. Bogilolo, 7 Mo. 136; Sanborn v. Kittredge, 20 Vt. 632, 50 Am. Dec. 58; Elastic Fabrics Co. v. Smith, 100 U. S. 110, 25 L. Ed. 547; Wood v. Welmar, 104 U. S. 786, 26 L. Ed. 779; Russell v. Farley, 105 U. S. 433, 26 L. Ed. 1060; Paper Bag Cases, 105 U. S. 766, 26 L. Ed. 959; Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 527, 26 L. Ed. 1157; Burns v. Rosenstein, 135 U. S. 449, 10 Sup. Ct. 817, 34 L. Ed. 193; Du Bois v. Kirk, 158 U. S. 58, 15 Sup. Ct. 729, 39 L. Ed. 895; Bank v. Hunter, 152 U. S. 512, 14 Sup. Ct. 675, 38 L. Ed. 534; Bank v. Cannon, 164 U. S. 319, 17 Sup. Ct. 89, 41 L. Ed. 451; Kittredge v. Race, 92 U. S. 116, 23 L. Ed. 488; Canter v. Ins. Co., 3 Pet. 307, 7 L. Ed. 688; 3 Eng. Ruling Cas. 243; 5 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 319. This is true, however, of those cases only in which the awarding of costs is in the discretion of the court below. In refusing to take jurisdiction, the courts all say the reason for declining is that the case is one in which the trial court has discretion to award or refuse costs. In 3 Eng. Ruling Cases, 243, the rule on the subject is stated as follows: "The general rule of the court of chancery, which is now confirmed and made absolute by the Judicature Act 1873, § 49, so far as relates to costs which are in the discretion of the court, that no appeal can be entertained upon a mere question of costs." This is the old rule of equity practice, simply declared or confirmed by statute. The reason given by the authorities in this country, where the judiciary act governing the present English practice has no application, is the discretionary power of the court below. "Whether costs shall be decreed by a court of equity is a question always addressing itself to the discretion of the chancellor, and the authority of an appellate court to correct his decrees is not without doubt." 5 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 218 (Cowles v. Whitman, Sanborn v. Kittredge, Howe v. Hutchison, Lake v. Shumate, Smith v. Shaffer, and Temple v. Lawson, all cited); Joslyn v. Parlin, 54 Vt. 670; Railroad Co. v. Bixby, 57 Vt. 548; Hastings v. Perry, 20 Vt. 272. The opinion in Temple v. Lawson, 19 Ark. 148, seems to have been very carefully prepared, and makes the clearest and most exhaustive presentation of the authorities to be found among the American decisions, and the conclusion announced is that costs are not always in the discretion of the chancellor, but that such costs as are in his discretion cannot be the subject of appeal. His conclusion is expressed in the following language: "The discretion which we have said resides in the court to award or give costs must be understood to relate only to those costs in a suit which are denominated 'general,' or properly 'costs in the cause,' and not such as may be said to be extraordinary, such as directing the costs of the suit to be paid out of a particular fund, or where the court, under special circumstances and a particular state of facts, developed by a proper course of pleading and demanded at the proper time, will direct counsel fees to be paid by a party either generally or out of a particular fund." The principle thus laid down is fully sustained by the English decisions from which the rule in this country was originally deduced, but in the specification of instances it stops short of many of the precedents. The tendency by the courts of this country is to limit, rather than extend, the exception to the general rule; in other words, it is to allow but one exception, namely, a decree for payment of costs out of the fund, on the theory that it is the only exception recognized in the old English practice. Thus, Mr. Justice Bradley, in Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 527, 26 L. Ed. 1157, said: "But it was held by Lord Cottenham in Angell v. Davis, 4 Myl. & Craig, 360, that when the case is not one of personal costs, in which the court has ordered one party to pay them, but a case in which the court has directed them to be paid out of a particular fund, an appeal lies on the part of those interested in the fund. Lord Cottenham, indeed, suggested other cases in which an appeal might lie from a decree for costs, as where the costs are part of the specific relief prayed, and where the whole of the facts distinctly appear upon the face of the proceedings themselves, so that it is not necessary, in determining the question, to enter into any investigation of the merits. But these suggestions have not met with subsequent approval, and in the case of Taylor v. Dowlen, Law Rep. 4 Ch. App. 697, the court declared that they were not disposed to extend the case of Angell v. Davis, and dismissed an appeal brought by parties ordered to pay costs, which they claimed should be payable out of a fund." In Taylor v. Dowlen, referred to by Mr. Justice Bradley as repudiating the suggestion made by Lord Cottenham in Angell v. Davis, the court said: "As to another exception, namely, where the facts distinctly appear upon the face of the proceedings, so that the question can be decided without going into the merits, it must be taken to refer to cases where there is some inconsistency in the decree, as there was in Angell v. Davis, where the costs of a trustee who had committed a breach of trust were given out of the trust fund." Hence, that decision seems to depend, not alone upon the fact that the costs were decreed out of the trust fund, but also upon the lack of discretion in the court to allow costs to a trustee who had committed a breach of trust; such allowance being contrary to a well-settled principle of equity, not a mere rule relating to costs. In Taylor v. Dowlen, the appeal was sought by a trustee from a decree requiring him to pay the costs of the suit, and the court refused to entertain it, because the act of the chancellor was discretionary. But a number of illustrations of want of such discretion is found in the English decisions. In Taylor v. Southgate, 4 Myl. & C. 203, a decree which involved principles of equity relating to the payment of costs was appealed from on the sole question of costs. Chappell v. Gregory, 2 De G., J. & S. 111, states the general rule to be that there cannot be a rehearing for costs alone unless some principle is involved in the mode of dealing with them. Rochester v. Lee, 2 De G., M. & G. 427, is a case in which the appeal was for costs alone, arising upon two or more trials of an issue out of chancery, and the court entertained it, and reversed the decree, because the error of the chancellor appeared upon the face of the record. In Chitty's Equity Index (4th Ed.) 4481, the rule is stated as follows: "The court of appeal refused to inquire into the various causes which may have influenced the decision of the court below in awarding costs, and therefore an appeal for costs will not generally be entertained; but where the judge of the court below placed on record on the face of the decree the reason why he ordered the party to pay the costs, and such reason was founded on the determination of a question of law, the court of appeal allowed the question of law to be argued on the appeal, that it might determine whether the reason embodied in the decree by the judge below was well founded. Walker v. French, 21 W. R. 493." The case cited as authority is not found in our library. Where a tenant by elegit had received rents and profits beyond the debt, and he was required to account for the excess and costs decreed against him, he was allowed to appeal as to the costs only. Owen v. Griffith, 1 Ves. 249. A decree for costs against an officer of the crown is against law, and an appeal from such a decree was allowed in Lord Advocate v. Douglass, 9 C. L. & F. 173. The right of a trustee to his costs, like that of a mortgagee, is a matter of contract, and is not in the discretion of the judge, although he may be deprived of them for misconduct. Therefore, the costs of a trustee are not within section 49 of the Judicature Act of 1873, and an appeal lies from a decision respecting them. Cotterell v. Stratton, 8 L. R. Ch. 295; Farrow v. Austin, 18 L. R. Ch. D. 58; Turner v. Hancock, 20 L. R. Ch. D. 303; Hill v. Spurgeon, 29 Ch. D. 348. Whether trustees have been guilty of such unreasonable conduct as to deprive them of costs is a question which the court of appeal will entertain. In re Sarah Knight's Will, 26 Ch. D. 82. Where the jurisdiction of the judge to order costs depends on the existence of a breach of an injunction or misconduct, an appeal lies against his finding that there has been such breach, although he inflicts costs only. Stevens v. Railway Co., 29 Ch. D. 60; Witt v. Corcoran, 2 Ch. D. 69.

For the most part, cases in this country illustrating the principle upon which appeals from decrees for costs are entertained are those in which there has been a decree of payment out of a fund in court. Thus, in Temple v. Lawson the plaintiff, in an interpleader suit, had obtained a decree for $200 as counsel fees to be taxed as part of his costs, and the court, on appeal from that part of the decree alone, reversed the action of the lower court. In Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 528, 26 L. Ed. 1157, the appeal was from an allowance of more than $60,000 to an agent out of a trust fund, which had been secured and preserved for the benefit of the parties who were entitled to it by his labor and expenditures. In Stuart v. Boulware, 133 U. S. 78, 10 Sup. Ct. 242, 33 L. Ed. 568, an appeal was entertained from a decree allowing a receiver, for his services and counsel fees paid by him, $6,500. In Grant v. Railway Co., 116 Cal. 71, 47 Pac. 872, an order fixing the compensation of a receiver, and taxing it as costs in the action against all the parties, and directing him to apply toward its payment the balance of the fund remaining in his hands as such receiver, was held to be appealable; the court saying it was, in legal effect, a final judgment upon a collateral matter, arising out of the action, and appealable by any party interested in the fund. The same principle had been declared in the case of Grant v. Superior Court, 106 Cal. 324, 39 Pac. 604. In Railway Co. v. Jones, 38 Mich. 303, an appeal from a decree refusing compensation was allowed to a receiver. The decree from which the appeal was taken was affirmed, but the case nevertheless shows an assertion of jurisdiction by the appellate court. It entertained the case, and affirmed the order of the lower court, refusing compensation.

It is perfectly apparent that cases of this class involve something more than discretion. What is awarded consists not of fees and ordinary court expenses, easily ascertainable by reference to mere rules concerning costs; it involves judicial investigation and determination. The allowance to a receiver for his services, or to an attorney or agent who has a lien upon a fund in court, is to be determined by the value of his services and the amount of his expenses. His right is a strong equity, analogous to an obligation founded upon an implied contract, and is not dependent upon the mere arbitrary discretion of the court, if his appointment was regular, and his conduct has been free from exception; and the ascertainment of the value of his services and the amount of expenses is the exercise of judicial power. To deny him compensation and expenses from some source would be as unjust and indefensible on principle as to refuse to enforce a contract or to give damages for its breach. There may be discretion as to the mode of compensation, as to how it shall be paid, and as to the amount, but clearly none as to whether any shall be paid. Here another apt English rule, not stated by our courts, but invariably observed by them, sustains this view. When the conduct of the trustee is brought in question in determining whether any compensation shall be allowed him, and the doubt is resolved in his favor and an allowance made, no appeal can be allowed; for if there was no misconduct, the decree is right, and if there was, the court has discretion to allow him costs. Charles v. Jones, 83 Ch. D. 80. The import of this is that, when there is no fault in the trustee, he cannot be deprived of his compensation. This is illustrative of the view that, where the appellate court can see that some principle has been violated in the allowance of costs, the decree is held to be not within the discretion of the court. Where an action is dismissed for total want of jurisdiction, the decisions say there is no power in the court to decree costs to the defendant. "Where a circuit court dismisses an appeal for want of jurisdiction it is without power to decree payment of costs and penalties." Bank v. Cannon, 164 U. S. 319, 17 Sup. Ct. 89, 41 L. Ed. 451. "If there were no jurisdiction, there was no power to do anything but to strike the case from the docket. In that view of the subject, the matter was as much coram non iudice as anything else could be, and the award of costs and execution were consequently void." Mayor v. Cooper, 6 Wall. 247, 18 L. Ed. 851. While no case has been found in which an appeal from a decree for costs under such circumstances was taken, it is apprehended that in such case the court would have to say such award was not in the discretion of the court below, because violative of law; and, if in any other case the record should disclose an error in legal principle in the awarding of costs, an appeal ought to lie. Just at this point, Hamilton v. Du Pre, 103 Ga. 795, 30 S. E. 248, is applicable. The plaintiff in certain proceedings in which a receiver had been appointed had utterly failed on the merits, but the trial court had decreed payment of all her costs, including the receiver's expenses and compensation, out of the proceeds of the plaintiff's property in the hands of the receiver, and the Supreme Court held the decree appealable, and reversed it, on the ground of an abuse of discretion on the part of the court below, which can only mean that the decree rendered was not a discretionary one. As the reason for immunity from appellate review and control is the discretion vested in the trial court, such immunity must cease when the reason ceases. When costs are not discretionary, an appeal lies. Therefore, it seems clear that, in the statement of the general rule on the subject by practically all of our authorities, the exception is ignored, though observed in the exercise of the jurisdiction. Accurately stated, it is that no appeal lies from a decree for such costs as are in the discretion of the chancellor. Ordinarily, the costs in equity are in his discretion.

What is here said respecting the want of discretion to disallow compensation to a receiver or trustee when his title is free from infirmity and his conduct from reproach, and he has performed his duties and accounted for the fund, is not to be taken to mean that the chancellor acts wholly without discretion in such cases. As to the amount of such compensation, he is not bound by the strict rules governing contract obligations. It is to be determined upon equitable, not legal, principles. Much latitude is allowed him in the adoption of the rule by which it shall be fixed. It may be by a commission on the amount of the fund, a lump sum, or a salary. Many cases say compensation to a receiver is in the sound discretion of the court, and therefore subject to review. Among them is a decision of this court in the case of Crumlish's Adm'r v. Railroad Co., 40 W. Va. 627, 22 S. E. 90, holding as follows: "There is no fixed rule in this state as to the mode of allowing compensation to a special receiver, whether by way of commission or a fixed sum. Usually when the fund is large, a lump sum is proper. The amount and mode of allowance are within the sound discretion of the court, under the circumstances of the particular case, subject to review on appeal." In the same case the court comes to the same conclusion as to the allowance to a receiver of counsel fees. The principle adopted and applied in that case fully sustains the position here taken as to the discretionary power of the court in such cases. It denies to the trial court the arbitrary discretion allowed in the case of ordinary costs, by saying the allowance is in all such cases subject to review. In that case the parties obtained in this court, upon other grounds than a decree for costs, a locus standi, and so much of the decree as related to costs and allowances came up incidentally; in other words, it was not an appeal from a decree for costs only, but the principles applied in the disposition of the questions relating to costs clearly deny to the trial court that broad discretion, from the exercise of which there is no appeal, and make it clear that in such cases an appeal may be entertained. The uniform practice of giving the parties a hearing in fixing the amount of compensation and expenses sustains the view that it is a collateral, rather than an incidental, exercise of judicial power; and the freedom with which appeals respecting such allowances are allowed speaks louder as to the nature of the function than the casual observations made by the courts in disposing of the questions raised.

As to the power of the court to decree the extraordinary costs in favor of one party against another (not the ordinary costs usually incident to litigation and the basis of its exercise), but little authority has been found. Practically all the cases reported deal with the propriety of the allowance to the receiver, trustee, or agent out of the fund. As to these parties, as has been indicated, there is little room for the exercise of discretion, such as to prevent appellate review. The appellate courts deal with them freely. Some observations made in Cutter v. Pollock, 4 N. D. 205, 59 N. W. 1062, 25 L. R. A. 377, 50 Am. St. Rep. 644, are to the effect that a decree of such costs from one party to another may be made; but it may be doubted whether what is said there is to be considered as an adjudication, since the decree was reversed because the court failed to adjudicate anything in respect to such costs. The language referred to is as follows: "If the receiver is allowed to pay and reimburse himself out of the moneys in his hands, the decree should provide whether the owner of such moneys shall be indemnified by the recovery of judgment against some other party to the case for this invasion of his property. Ordinarily, it would seem to us (but we do not decide the point) that the receiver should be protected by being permitted to look to the funds in his hands to save him against loss. This appears to have been done in this case. Such rule may, however, work great hardship in particular cases; and in some instances the receiver has, on this account, been compelled to look for indemnity to the party at whose instance he was appointed. See Weston v. Watts, 45 Hun, 219; French v. Gifford, 81 Iowa, 428; Verplanck v. Mercantile Ins. Co., 2 Paige, 438, 2 N. Y. Ch. R. Ann. 979. Certainly, if the court, in such case, allows him to pay himself out of the funds, it should compel the other party to the action to make good the loss thus occasioned to the successful litigant. It is impossible for a court to make an intelligent decree when property is in the hands of a receiver, and is to be disposed of by the decree, without settling in advance the rights of the receiver with respect to compensation and expenditures, and whether he shall be allowed to pay himself out of the funds in his hand."

Concerning provisional allowance out of the fund, 2 Daniel's Ch. Prac. p. 1410, says: "Where a party is entitled to his costs, but it has not been decided who ought ultimately to bear them, payment is often directed to be made out of a fund in court, or by one of the parties to the proceedings, 'without prejudice to the question how the same are ultimately to be borne.' The absence, however, of these words, or words of a like meaning, from an order directing payment of costs out of a fund in court, does not necessarily imply that the court has decided that the fund out of which the costs are paid is that which must ultimately bear them; and costs paid out of a fund, under an order from which those words are omitted, may be directed to be recouped out of another fund, which is primarily liable for that purpose." The substance of this is that the court may make a provisional allowance out of the fund, without losing its power to place the burden ultimately upon the party who ought to bear it. It affords no certain indication as to whether the power to award costs between parties or between one fund and another (which is substantially the same thing as between party and party) is so far within the discretion of the chancellor as to preclude review, and, if so, whether such discretion extends to all costs.

Abundant authority sustains the position that, under circumstances making it just and equitable to do so, the compensation of the receiver may be decreed against the plaintiff. In French v. Gifford, 31 Iowa, 428, the appellate court, modifying the decree of the lower court, gave the receiver by way of compensation $1,000 out of the fund and a decree against the plaintiff for $2,000, the balance of his compensation. In Radford v. Folsom, 55 Iowa, 276, 7 N. W. 604, the defendants demanded that two-thirds of the receiver's compensation be charged to the plaintiff, and the court, admitting the power to do so under proper circumstances, upon an examination of the record, held that the 'circumstances were not such as to make it equitable to do so. In Cutter v. Pollock, 7 N. D. 681, 76 N. W. 235, on the second appeal, the court affirmed a decree in favor of the defendants against the plaintiffs for three-fifths of the amount which the receiver had retained out of the funds which had been adjudged to belong to the defendants; the receiver having been appointed at the instance of the plaintiffs, who had failed at the hearing on the merits. In Cassidy v. Harrelson, 1 Colo. App. 458, 29 Pac. 525, the court held as follows: "A receiver having been appointed by the court, on application of the interveners in a cause wherein they were not entitled to intervene, the costs incident to the appointment were properly adjudged against them." In Highley v. Deane, 64 Ill. App. 389, the court held that "where a party, without probable cause, obtains the appointment of a receiver, he should be made to pay the entire expense thus by him created"; and the decision was affirmed in 168 Ill. 266, 48 N. E. 50. In Kerr v. Hill, 27 W. Va. 576, 616, the receiver's compensation and expenses were allowed out of the fund, to the prejudice of the defendants, who were subsequent lienors, entitled to the surplus, although the appointment was illegal, because without notice, and made at the instance of the plaintiff. In French v. Gifford, cited, the court said: "In cases like the one under consideration, we may attach the costs to one or either of the parties, or apportion them."

What principle, respecting the nature of the power to decree such costs as between parties, is deducible from these or other precedents cited? Has the chancellor irrevocable discretion? The many instances in which appeals have been entertained from decrees for such costs, turning on the sole question of who should pay them, answer the question in the negative. Although costs, when ascertained and fixed as to amount, they are not costs in the discretion of the chancellor. The title to such costs, as between parties, must be determined judicially upon equitable principles; else there is, in the language of the American authorities, an abuse of discretion, or, in the language of the English authorities, a lack of discretion to award them. In such cases, therefore, an appeal lies.

The decree appealed from gives costs to the prevailing party, in the absence of any attempt on the part of the defendant to show any reason why the general rule should be varied or departed from. The litigation was occasioned by an act of fraud on his part in the procurement of the deed, which made it necessary for the plaintiff to bring this suit in order to obtain what belonged to her. The case is not one involving the administration of a fund, such as a trust estate, a decedent's estate, or an estate of an insolvent person or corporation, in which both plaintiff and defendant have an interest, and out of which the costs must be taken, for the reason that they cannot be obtained from any other source. The controversy was one over the title to property. There was no middle ground—no community of interest. The whole fund belonged to one or the other. Upon obtaining it, the prevailing party was entitled to have along with it the necessary costs of the prosecution of the suit. No reason is perceived why, under such circumstances, any necessary costs of the litigation should be paid out of the property or funds of the successful party. The appointment of the receiver was without notice, it is true, but the defendants acquiesced in it by their failure to move for his discharge; and, had they procured his discharge on such ground, he would have been immediately reappointed, if the case was such, in its nature and circumstances, as to warrant the appointment of a receiver. The property he was to receive was not real estate, or the rents, issues, and profits thereof, but personal property; and in such case the statute does not forbid the appointment of a receiver in vacation without notice, and such appointment is voidable only, not void. High on Receivers, § 111 et seq. The defendants recognized the authority of the receiver, moved for an increased bond and acquiesced in his appointment by not asking for his discharge. Failure to give notice cannot afford any ground for withholding costs, for it was a mere irregularity, which has been waived. "No one, whether a party to the suit or not, who has recognized the authority of a receiver in any way, can attack the validity of the order appointing him for mere irregularities." 17 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 757; citing many authorities.

The ability of the defendants to make restitution of the value of the property is advanced as a substantial reason why no receiver should have been appointed. In many cases insolvency of the defendant must be alleged, but they are usually cases in which questions of title are not involved. Here, title alone is the bone of contention. It was not a claim for money, but to the title to oil—the royalty oil—and the bill alleged that the defendants' claim thereto was founded upon an act of fraud. It further appeared that, for the full and adequate protection of plaintiff's interest, the oil should be sold at such times during the pendency of the suit as the market might be favorable; and the discretion to say when such sales should be made should not be left to her adversaries. Our statutes and our decisions import that the title and rightful control of property must be adequately protected, and discountenance the view that no injury results if the owner may obtain its value in damages. The courts should protect his property from misappropriation, and preserve his title to it, so that he may use, retain, or sell it, and determine the time of sale, purchaser, terms, and the price; and when legal remedies are inadequate for such protection, equity supplies the defect. Peterson v. Hall (W. Va.) 50 S. E. 608; dissenting opinion in Zinn v. Zinn, 54 W. Va. 483, 46 S. E. 202. An injunction may be awarded to protect any plaintiff in a suit for specific property, pending either at law or in equity, against injury from the sale, removal, or concealment of such property. Code 1899, c. 133, § 1. The same chapter, at section 28, provides for the appointment of a receiver in any proper case pending in a court of equity in which the property of a corporation, firm, or person is involved, and there is danger of the loss or misappropriation of the same, or a material part thereof. Both remedies are extraordinary, and seem to be given for substantially the same purposes. Our opinion, therefore, is that there was not such want of cause as made the appointment useless and unjustifiable.

One other contention must be disposed of. Henry R. Smith and Gertrude Duncan were codefendants of Brown, and resisted the demand of the plaintiff by their joint answer, and by uniting in the second appeal. They claimed a one-fifth interest in the royalty oil. Though they were not parties to the original transaction under which Brown claimed, and subsequently obtained their interest from or through him, they claimed the benefit of his act. But the former decree gave general costs against all three, whereby these claimants of a one-fifth interest were made to pay two-thirds of said costs. The undue proportion thereof may, for aught that can be ascertained from the record, amount to one-fifth of the extraordinary costs. We have no taxation of it. In view of this, we see no reason for disturbing the decree, and it will therefore be affirmed.

BRANNON, P. (dissenting). I cannot see that Brown should pay the receiver's compensation. The general rule is that such compensation is paid out of the fund. Elk Fork Co. v. Foster, 99 Fed. 495, 39 C. O. A. 615; Kerr v. Hill, 27 W. Va. 616. There is no need of this large extra expenditure, because there is no danger of loss or suggestion of insolvency. It was only a conflict of title to oil. Freer v. Davis, 52 W. Va. 37, 43 S. E. 172, 94 Am. St. Rep. 910. If the plaintiff, having no legal ground for a receiver, chose to ask one, she should pay for his services. There was no emergency calling for the appointment of a receiver without notice. Notice is required before a receiver can be appointed in vacation. Batson v. Findley, 52 W. Va. 343, 43 S. E. 142; Ruffner v. Mairs, 33 W. Va. 655, 11 S. E. 5; Smith on Receivers, 14. But that was error only, and did not make the appointment void, so as to refuse commission. Alderson on Receivers, 157, 168. But can we not consider the fact that notice was not given, and that there was no need of a receiver, in exercising discretion as to piling the costs on Brown? Though the appointment was reversible for want of notice and good ground, we cannot reverse it, because appeal from that order is barred. I do not think there can be an appeal or writ of error resting alone on error as to costs. The Constitution (article 8, § 3) excludes costs, both as to sole ground of appeal, or as going to make up the sum for appeal. But what are costs under that clause? I think it means general costs, taxable under the statute, not special or extraordinary allowances, such as pay of a receiver. I think appeal lies as to such allowances. Crawford v. Fickey, 41 W. Va. 544, 23 S. E. 662. My reason is that they are not "costs" under said clause. Therefore, an appeal lies in this case.

(58 W. Va. 172)

STEWART v. DOAK et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 31, 1905.)

1. BOUNDARIES—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

When in a controversy over the title to land, dependent upon the location of a disputed boundary line, there are no monuments at the points in dispute, and these points cannot be located by measurements from known and undisputed corners of the tracts between which the line is, so that to render a verdict for either party the descriptions of the deeds must be departed from in respect to length of lines, a verdict supported by testimony of a witness, who swears he saw the monument called for at the points fixed by the verdict as corners, and evidence of acts of recognition by owners on both sides of the line, and other circumstances, cannot be disturbed by the appellate court as being contrary to the law and the evidence, in the absence of an admitted or clearly established controlling fact.

2. TRIAL—MISLEADING INSTRUCTIONS.

It is not error to refuse a misleading instruction.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Trial, §§ 569, 660.]

3. EVIDENCE—DECLARATIONS OF GRANTOR OF LAND.

Declarations of a living predecessor in title in disparagement thereof, made before he parted with it, is admissible evidence against the party claiming under him.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 20, Cent. Dig. Evidence, §§ 824, 825, 836.]

4. NEW TRIAL — NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE.

When such admissions on the part of a deceased former owner have been proved, newly-discovered evidence, of like or similar admissions, by another predecessor who is living, is cumulative, and affords no ground for a new trial; nor can the court say, as matter of law, that such new evidence ought to produce a verdict different from the one rendered.

5. SAME—APPLICATION—DILIGENCE.

An affidavit filed on a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence must show such facts relating to its discovery as will enable the court to see that it probably could not have been discovered before the trial by the exercise of due diligence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 37, Cent. Dig. New Trial, § 310.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Ritchie County.
Action by Peter Stewart against Isaiah Doak and another. There was judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Freer & Robinson, for plaintiff in error.
Duty & Fidler, for defendants in error.

POFFENBARGER, J. An action of ejectment, tried in the circuit court of Ritchie county, between Peter Stewart, plaintiff, and Isaiah and John R. Doak, defendants, in which the title to about six acres of land, dependent upon the location of a boundary line, was involved, having resulted in a verdict and judgment for the defendants, the plaintiff complains here, assigning as errors the failure of the court to set aside the verdict and permit a new trial on the ground that the verdict is contrary to law and the evidence; the refusal of the court to grant a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence; the refusal of the court to give, at the instance of the plaintiff, a certain instruction; and the giving, at the instance of the defendants, certain other instructions. An intelligent disposition of these several assignments necessitates a particular statement of the controversy and a review of the evidence.

On the 11th day of September, 1872, there was conveyed to the plaintiff, by James Taylor and wife, a tract of land, described as containing 209 acres, out of a 780-acre tract patented by Jacob B. Blair in 1851, which was described in the patent as bordering upon three lines of a 100-acre tract patented by John Lewman in 1822. The part of the Blair tract obtained by the plaintiff bordered upon two lines of the Lewman tract, described as follows: From a beech and cucumber N., 69 W., 170 poles, to a white oak, and thence N., 42 E., 100 poles, to a white oak. This last line is the one whose location is in controversy; the plaintiff claiming it to be at a point 170 poles from the beech and cucumber, and the defendants at a point 187½ poles, as ascertained by the survey made in this case. This difference of location makes controversy as to a parallelogram, containing about 12 acres, at the northwestern end of the Lewman tract. The northeastern end of this parallelogram is claimed and occupied by Henry Markle. Next to him lies a small triangle, purchased by Stewart, the plaintiff, from J. H. Marshall, a former owner of the Lewman tract. This action was brought against the defendants, who are now the owners by conveyance of the Lewman tract, less the portions sold out of it to the plaintiff and Markle and J. N. Collins. The Stewart 209-acre tract is irregular in form, and calls for seven lines of the original Blair tract, two of which are lines of the Lewman tract. These seven lines are described as follows: Beginning at pointers on the top of the ridge, thence S., 44 W., 14 poles, to a gum and hickory; thence S., 28 E., 112 poles, to a maple, corner to lands claimed by Manuel Lacy; thence N., 55 E., 112 poles, with a line of lands claimed by Rolly Haddox, to a gum; thence, with another of said Haddox's lines, S., 7 E., 164 poles, to a white oak; thence, with a line known as the "Beason's Survey," N., 42 E., 216 poles, to a beech and cucumber and corner of said Collins 180-acre tract (the Lewman tract); thence, with a line of same, N., 69 W., 170 poles, to a white oak; thence N., 42 E., 100 poles, to a white oak. Plaintiff's deed supposedly makes the point at which the last above-mentioned white oak stood the beginning corner of the tract thereby conveyed, and describes the lines running thence N., 60 W., 85 poles, to pointers, and corner of the tract of land owned by Neal Hammond; thence, with one of his lines, N., 60 W., 186 poles, crossing a run to a maple, also a corner of said Hammond; thence S., 78 W., 44 poles, to a stake; thence S., 10 W., 157 poles, to pointers, said to be a corner of lands owned, or formerly owned, by William Boreman, the pointer's corner called for in the Blair patent. Then follows substantially the calls of the patent as above given, the departures from the patent being as follows: The line S., 28 E., is made 114 poles and 15 links, instead of 112 poles; the line N., 55 E., is made 117 poles, instead of 112; the line S., 7 E., is made 184 poles, instead of 164; the line N., 42 E., 216 poles, is made 220 poles; the line N., 69 W., 170 poles, is made 64° 20' W., 174 poles, to a white oak, described as being down (one of the corners in controversy); and the other line N., 42 E., 100 poles, to the beginning, is made to run to a stone corner to lot of H. B. Collins, instead of to the white oak mentioned in the Lewman patent as well as in the Blair patent by reference to the Lewman tract. Collins, at the date of the plaintiff's deed, was the owner of the Lewman tract, and is described in the Blair patent as the occupant of said tract. Said Collins had also acquired the Blair 780-acre tract in 1856, which had been sold, under a decree of the circuit court of Ritchie county about the year 1858, to James Taylor, who was the grantor of the plaintiff, Stewart. The Lewman tract is a perfect parallelogram, the sides of which were originally described as being 170 poles and the ends 100 poles; the lines N., 69 W., 170 poles, on the southwestern side thereof, and N., 42 E., 100 poles, on the northwestern end thereof, were common to the Lewman tract and the Blair tract. As to the line N., 69 W., 170 poles, the description in the deed to the defendants follows that in the Lewman patent, as does also that given in the deed to Marshall, grantor of the defendants, and the deed to Henry B. Collins, from whom the land passed to Marshall, and in the deed to Henry Haddox from the patentee, John Lewman.

By the surveys made in this case, the lines of the Stewart tract were found to vary from the descriptions given in the Blair patent as follows: Line S., 44 W., 14 poles, is S., 46½ W., 14¾ poles; the line S., 28 E., 112 poles, is S., 25½ E., 114; the line N., 55 E., 112 poles, is N., 60½ E., 110; the line S., 7 E., 164 poles, is S., 4½ E., 184 poles; the line N., 42 E., 216 poles, is N., 46 E., 214½ poles; and the line N., 69 W., 170 poles, is N., 65 W., 170 poles, to the point claimed by the plaintiff as the corner, and 187½ poles, to the point claimed by the defendants as the corner. By actual measurement, the long lines of the Lewman tract are 170 poles, as described in the patent, to the points claimed as corners by the plaintiff, and 187½ poles, to the points claimed as corners by the defendants. This makes a difference, as stated, of 17½ poles. In what may be called the plaintiff's new lines of the Stewart tract, there is a discrepancy in length of about 18 poles in the first line. By commencing at the point claimed by the plaintiff and running to the maple corner, the distance is found to be 184 poles, instead of 171 poles, as called for in the deed. The others correspond in length with the calls of the deed, except that one line is 142½ poles long, instead of 157, as described in the deed.

Coupled with the fact that the surveys are based, in some instances, upon known and undisputed corners called for in the deeds, the plaintiff relies upon the close approximation of the measurements made to those described in the deed in support of his attack upon the verdict as being contrary to the evidence. He supplements this by the following recital in the defendants' deed, which is subsequent in date to that of the plaintiffs: Leaving the beech and cucumber, the defendants' line is described as running N., 69 W., 170 poles, to a white oak; "thence N., 42 E., about 43½ poles, to a stone and corner to a lot owned by Peter Stewart." As has been stated, Stewart, the plaintiff, owns a small triangular piece of land by purchase from Marshall, as part of the Lewman tract, and lying within the 12-acre parallelogram, bounded by the two locations of the northwestern Lewman tract line, and adjoining the 6 acres in controversy, which is also a part of said parallelogram. The Stewart corner, referred to in the deed of the defendants, is a corner of this triangle, and clearly not a corner of the Stewart 200-acre tract, purchased out of the Blair tract. Starting at the extreme western corner of the Lewman tract, as claimed by the plaintiff, and running on a course N., 42 E., the line would strike the southeastern corner of this triangle. Commencing at the corner of the Lewman tract, as claimed by the defendants, and running on the same course, the line would strike the northwestern corner of the Stewart triangle. About the only difference would be in the length of the lines from the two different points. The former would exceed the length called for in the deed by 23½ poles, and the latter by 13½ poles. Hence, considering the difference in length of the lines only, this recital of the deed seems to favor the contention of the defendants, rather than that of the plaintiff, and not to strengthen the other circumstances relied upon by the plaintiff. A further circumstance to which weight is attached is the former existence of marked trees on the line, as contended for by the plaintiff, which had been cut down and removed by the defendants in clearing up the land in controversy. One of the defendants admitted having seen some marked trees as claimed by the plaintiff, and another witness testified to having seen them, but neither could give any definite and accurate information as to the exact location of the trees, or the age or character of the marks.

The defendants rely upon the testimony of a witness who claims to have seen the white oak trees called for in the Lewman patent as the northwestern termini of its two long lines. M. D. Barnett testified to having seen both trees standing in the year 1857 at the points claimed as corners by the defendants, and said they were pointed out to him as corners by Henry B. Collins. Other witnesses testify that Collins, in his lifetime, pointed out to them as corners the points claimed by the defendants; but both trees had then disappeared. At the end of the line on the northeastern side of the Lewman tract, as claimed by the defendants, there is now a large stone, which Collins said was within two to four feet of the point at which the oak tree stood. J. E. Taylor, J. H. Marshall, William Ridgeway, and perhaps others, testify to the express recognition of this corner by the plaintiff, Stewart. A circumstance showing conclusively Stewart's belief, some eight or ten years before the trial of this case, in the location of the line as claimed by the defendants, is his purchase from Marshall, the then owner of the Lewman tract, of the small triangular piece of land hereinbefore described. He says he made this purchase under a misapprehension as to the location of the line, but the purchase is a fact in the nature of an admission, which was proper for the consideration of the jury in connection with the other evidence.

In arriving at the verdict for the defendants, the jury found it necessary to extend the lines of the Lewman tract 17½ poles. To have reached a verdict for the plaintiff, it would have been necessary to have extended his line from the beginning corner to the maple, about 13 poles. Hence, in either view, it was impossible to make the lines correspond in length with the calls of the deeds, and, as the corners were undisputed, as well as fairly established by the evidence, it became a question with the jury as to whose line should be lengthened. They made the solution of this question depend upon the evidence as to the location of the corners in question, because the locations of the disputed corners could not be ascertained by measurement or marks. This evidence consisted of the approximation of measurements, declarations of the deceased former owner, acts of recognition and acquiescence, the direct and positive testimony of a witness who said he had seen oak trees standing at the points contended for by the defendants, and the testimony of witnesses who said they had seen marked trees standing along the line as claimed by the plaintiff. No other mode of determining the question was open to them, and no ground is perceived upon which a verdict standing upon such evidence can be set aside by the court.

Enough has been said about the call in the defendants' deed for the plaintiff's corner to show that it could not control the force of the other evidence just referred to. That call is a corner of the triangle, purchased by the plaintiff as a part of the Lewman tract, and not of his purchase out of the Blair tract, which has no corner corresponding to the description, and the northwestern corner of the triangle on the line claimed by defendants fits the description better than the southeastern corner on the line claimed by the plaintiff. It has no controlling force. Moreover, plaintiff's deed calls for a stone as the beginning corner, and there is, and has been for a long time, a marked stone at the point contended for by the defendants, and none at the place contended for by the plaintiff, and that stone is described in the deed as the corner of the Henry B. Collins (Lewman) tract. This, no doubt, had great weight with the jury, as justly it might have had. The instructions given for defendants harmonize with these views, and were proper.

The instruction which it is said the court erroneously refused to give the jury at the instance of the plaintiff is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that the defendants' title paper, to wit, the deed from Marshall to Isalah and John R. Doak, calls for Peter Stewart's corner, and if the jury believe from the evidence that the said corner, so called for, is at point 10 on said plat on the line N., 46 E., 106 poles—at the figure 10—the jury will find for the plaintiff." It has already been observed and distinctly pointed out that the corner mentioned in the defendants' deed is not, and cannot be, a corner of the 209-acre tract, the line of which is in controversy. There is no controversy as to the lines of the small triangle, the corner of which is plainly referred to by this deed. If the deed called for the southeastern corner of the triangle, the recital would be favorable to the plaintiff; but not a word in the deed indicates which corner of the triangle is indicated. The northwestern corner, according fully with the contention of the defendants, meets this description just as well as the southeastern corner of the triangle, if not better. In view of these facts, the action of the court in refusing this instruction, which could have had no effect other than to mislead the jury in the interest of the plaintiff and to the detriment of the defendants, was clearly proper and right.

The newly-discovered evidence upon which an application for a new trial was based is set forth in the affidavit of Samuel R. Owens, as follows: "Worked for J. N. Collins two years about the years 1885 and 1886, and more or less before these dates and after, and, during the time I worked for said J. N. Collins, he owned and controlled the old 100-acre tract of land known as the old H. B. Collins tract, and during the time I worked for him, he wanted me to do a job of grubbing for him on the west side of the old 100-acre tract next to Peter Stewart's land, and showed me where his corner was next to Stewart, in a low place, at the foot of a steep bank, just above the first bench of the hill, and now represented on the plat at figure '9.' He also showed me his line leading out from 9 to 1. There was three old line trees leading out from 9 to 1; was a hickory center line and the other two was side lines. The marks on these lines was very old. J. N. Collins showed them to me, and said there was his line, and not to grub over that. I would further state that H. B. Collins told J. N. Collins in my presence not to cut the red oak tree. That was Peter Stewart's, and he would get into trouble." The figures "9" and "1," referred to in the affidavit, represent the corners, as contended for by the plaintiff. The red oak tree mentioned in it stood near the line as claimed by the defendants, and there was some evidence tending to show that it was regarded by H. B. Collins, and those who claimed under him, as a line tree. It had been cut down at some time before the trial.

An effort is made to sustain the action of the court on the ground that the testimony of Owens to an admission on the part of J. N. Collins, who is living, and might have been called, is inadmissible. This position is untenable. No decision of this court seems to come quite up to the question. In Harriman v. Brown, 8 Leigh, 697, Milburn, whose declaration was held admissible, was still interested in the land. High's Heirs v. Pancake, 42 W. Va. 602, 28 S. E. 536, deals with the admissibility of declarations and acts of deceased former owners and living parties, and does not seem to discuss admissibility of declarations of living predecessors in title in disparagement thereof. But Wigmore on Evidence, exhaustive, analytical, historical, and philosophical, perhaps beyond precedent, at section 1080, says: "The admissibility of such declarations is now firmly settled, although the recognition of it was slow, and the decisions were hesitant and vacillating until a comparatively recent date." This position he sustains by an array of authority, both English and American. The pith of his reasoning is as follows: "Having precisely the same motive to make correct statements, and being identical with the party, either contemporaneously or antecedently, in respect to his ownership of the right in issue, his admissions may, both in fairness and on principle, be proffered in impeachment of the present claim." In further elucidation of the theory, he quotes the following from Cowen and Hill's Notes to Phil. on Ev., No. 481, p. 644: "[The owner's] estate or interest in the same property, afterwards coming to another by descent, devise, right of representation, sale, or assignment—in a word, by any kind of transfer—whether it be the act of the law or the act of the parties, whether the subject of the transfer be real or personal estate, corporeal or incorporeal, chooses in possession or chooses in action, the successor is said to claim under the former owner; and whatever he may have said affecting his own rights before parting with his interest is evidence equally admissible against his successor claiming from him, either immediately or remotely. And in this instance it makes no difference whether the declarant be alive or dead; for though he be a competent witness, and present in court, his admissions are receivable. This doctrine proceeds upon the idea that the present claimant stands in the place of the person from whom his title is derived—has taken it cum onere—and as the predecessor might have taken a qualified right, or sold, charged, restricted, or modified an absolute right, and as he might furnish all the necessary evidence to show its state in his own hands, the law will not allow third persons to be deprived of that evidence by any act of transferring the right to another." But the declaration must have been made before the declarant parted with the land. See Wigm. Ev. § 1082, where a long list of authorities is given in the note, sustaining and illustrating the rule and its exception.

Though admissible if it had been offered on the trial, this newly-discovered testimony of Owens did not call for a new trial, because it is palpably cumulative. By two witnesses the plaintiff had proved the same kind of admissions by H. B. Collins, a deceased former owner, and father of said J. N. Collins. It is testimony of the same character, and to the same point. Upon newly discovered cumulative evidence a new trial cannot be allowed. State v. Betsall, 11 W. Va. 703; Swisher v. Malone, 31 W. Va. 442, 7 S. E. 489; Halstead v. Horton, 38 W. Va. 728, 18 S. E. 953; Grogan v. Railroad Co., 39 W. Va. 415, 19 S. E. 563; Sisler v. Shaffer, 43 W. Va. 769, 28 S. E. 721. Nor is it clear that this evidence ought on a new trial to produce a different result. This must appear to the court before the verdict can be set aside. Another essential requisite is that the affidavit of the party desiring a new trial show on its face such facts as will enable the court to see that he could not have discovered the evidence before the trial. The affidavit of Stewart only says he could not have discovered it by due diligence, and did not know of it. Under Swisher v. Malone, it may be doubted whether this is enough. See 31 W. Va. 448, 7 S. E. 489. Is it sufficient to state mere conclusions? Ought not some facts appear? Who determines the question of due diligence—the party or the court? The court must be able to see it in the facts stated, not in the mere opinion of the witness, based upon facts known to him, and not given to the court.

There is no error in the judgment, and it will be affirmed.

(58 W. Va. 233)

J. E. POLING & CO. v. MOORE.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 7, 1905.)

1. PLEADING—DECLARATION—PARTIES.

The parties to an action should be named with accuracy and particularity. However, when once named, they may thereafter be referred to as plaintiff and defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 39, Cent. Dig. Pleading, § 101.]

2. JUDGMENT—PLEADINGS TO SUSTAIN.

There can be no judgment upon a declaration in which no one is named as defendant, and the action should be dismissed, unless the declaration is so amended as to cure this defect.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 39, Cent. Dig. Judgment, § 36.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Tucker County.
Action by J. E. Poling & Co. against

John W. Moore, Jr. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs bring error. Reversed.

A. Jay Valentine, for plaintiffs in error.
W. M. Baker, for defendant in error.

SANDERS, J. This is an action of assumpsit, brought by the plaintiffs in the circuit court of Tucker county against the defendant, John W. Moore, Jr. The declaration contains the common counts, and two accounts are filed therewith, one in favor of the Union Manufacturing Company against the defendant, and by an indorsement thereon it appears to have been assigned to the Hendricks Company, Limited, and the other in favor of the Hendricks Company, Limited, against the defendant; but the declaration contains no averment of the assignment of these accounts, or either of them, to the plaintiffs. No issue was made up, and in this condition the case was referred to a commissioner, to take and state an account between the parties, and the commissioner, in obedience to the order of reference, reported, and upon his report the case was submitted to the court in lieu of a jury, and the court entered judgment that neither the plaintiffs nor defendant were entitled to recover. The plaintiffs assign many errors, and ask to have this judgment reversed.

The plaintiffs are not in a position to complain, even if the declaration averred an assignment of the accounts, and the proof showed them entitled to recover, because it does not appear from the declaration who the defendant is. The defendant is nowhere designated. The parties to the action must be set out in the declaration with certainty and accuracy. However, after once stating them, it is sufficient to designate them as plaintiff and defendant. Unless this is so, the declaration will be so defective that no judgment can be given upon it. Our statute provides that no action shall abate for want of form when the declaration sets forth sufficient matter of substance for the court to proceed upon the merits of the case. Section 9, c. 125, Code 1899. But this provision does not help this case, because judgment, according to the very right of the case, cannot be given unless there is a defendant against whom such judgment can be rendered. There must be some one complaining, and, likewise, some one against whom complaint is made. Therefore, no judgment could have been given upon this declaration in favor of the plaintiffs against Moore, he being nowhere named in the declaration, and not named defendant by the declaration. There being no declaration upon which judgment could be given, the court should not have adjudicated the rights between the parties and dismissed the action, but should have allowed the declaration to be amended. The judgment is therefore reversed, and the case remanded, with leave to the plaintiffs to amend their declaration, if they desire to do so.

(58 W. Va. 235)

DUDLEY v. BARRETT et al.(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 7, 1905.)1. ERROR—REVIEW—EVIDENCE.

In reviewing a judgment in an action at law upon a writ of error, where the evidence is not made a part of the record, this court will not consider assignments of error involving a consideration of the evidence, but will affirm the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, §§ 2911-2915.]

2. SAME—RECORD—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

Evidence taken down and transcribed by a shorthand reporter is not a part of the record, and can only be made so by a proper bill of exceptions. Tracy's Adm'x v. Coal Co. (W. Va.) 50 S. E. 825.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, § 2370.]

3. SAME.

Where a paper which is to constitute a part of a bill of exceptions is not incorporated into the body of the bill, it must be annexed to it, or so marked by letter, number, or other means of identification mentioned in the bill, or so described in the bill, as to leave no doubt, when found in the record, that it is the one referred to in the bill of exceptions.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Wood County.

Action by J. W. Dudley against J. R. Barrett and A. J. Hannaman. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

W. E. McDougale, Dodge & Via, and Ohas. D. Forrer, for plaintiffs in error. F. P. Moats and Leonard & Leonard, for defendant in error.

COX, J. In this action of assumpsit, by J. W. Dudley against J. R. Barrett and A. J. Hannaman in the circuit court of Wood county, there was a trial by jury and a verdict for plaintiff for $664.52, a motion by defendants to set aside the verdict, which motion was overruled, and defendants excepted, and judgment was entered for plaintiff, to which a writ of error was allowed defendants by a judge of this court.

Many exceptions were taken to the rulings of the court in the progress of the trial. All the errors assigned here involve a consideration of the evidence, and the evidence does not seem to be a part of the record. There is copied at length in the record what purports to be questions and answers of witnesses for plaintiff and defendants, respectively, upon the trial, to which is appended and copied what purports to be the certificate of John T. Harris, official stenographer of the circuit court of Wood county, to the effect that he made a report in shorthand writing of the testimony adduced and proceedings had at the trial of this action, and that the transcription thereof is a faithful and true translation of said report, etc. The record does not show that John T. Harris was appointed by the court to report the proceedings had and the testimony given in this case, under the statute, or that he qualified as official stenographer in this case. The whole evidence is not incorporated in any bill of exceptions. The only bill of exceptions which might be claimed to make all the evidence part of it is defendants' bill No. 4, the part of which, material to be considered here, is in the following language: "Be it remembered that upon the trial of this case, and after the plaintiff had closed his evidence, as shown by the certificate of evidence, the defendants, by their attorneys, moved to exclude all the evidence introduced by the plaintiff from the jury, which said evidence is here now referred to and made a part of this defendants' bills of exceptions, which said motion, being argued by counsel and considered by the court, was overruled." What certificate of evidence is there referred to? Can it be said that it is a certificate made by John T. Harris, rather than the certificate of any other person, when the record is silent as to the appointment or qualification of any stenographer to report this case? Where a paper which is to constitute a part of a bill of exceptions is not incorporated into the body of the bill, it must be annexed to it, or so marked by letter, number, or other means of identification mentioned in the bill, or so described in the bill, as to leave no doubt, when found in the record, that it is the one referred to in the bill of exceptions. Tracy's Adm'x v. Carver Coal Co. (W. Va.) 50 S. E. 825; McKendree v. Shelton, 51 W. Va. 516, 41 S. E. 909. There is nothing in the record to show that the certificate of evidence made by John T. Harris was annexed to this bill of exception, or that the certificate was so marked by letter, number, or other means of identification mentioned in the bill, as to identify such certificate of evidence as the one intended to be made a part of the bill. The cases cited clearly announce the doctrine applicable to the case under consideration, and we cannot treat the evidence as part of the record in this case.

Again, if the certificate of evidence made by John T. Harris could be considered as part of the record, it still does not appear that such certificate of evidence contains all the evidence adduced upon the trial, and therefore we must presume that there was evidence which fully sustained the verdict. State v. Ice, 34 W. Va. 244, 12 S. E. 695; Bank v. Bank, 3 W. Va. 386; Edgell v. Conaway, 24 W. Va. 747; Hunter's Ex'rs v. Stewart, 23 W. Va. 549; Smith v. Walker, 1 Call (Va.) 28; Willard v. Overseers, 9 Grat. (Va.) 139.

The evidence adduced on the trial of this action not being a part of the record, we cannot consider the assignments of error made, but must affirm the judgment. Tracy's Adm'x v. Carver Coal Co., supra; McKendree v. Shelton, supra; Cushwa v. Lamar, 45 W. Va. 326, 32 S. E. 10; Wustland v. Potterfield, 9 W. Va. 438; Laidley v. County Court, 44 W. Va. 566, 30 S. E. 109; Williamson v. Hays, 35 W. Va. 52, 12 S. E. 1092; Richmond v. Henderson, 48 W. Va. 389, 37 S. E. 653.

(58 W. Va. 226)

DIMMACK v. WHEELING TRACTION CO.(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 7, 1905.)1. APPEAL AND ERROR—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where a demurrer was interposed and not passed upon by the lower court, it will be treated by this court as having been overruled.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, § 3707.]

2. JURY — DISQUALIFICATION — INTEREST IN RESULT.

Upon a trial of an action where a corporation is a party, a juror is not disqualified to serve on the ground alone that he is in the employment of a stockholder or manager of such corporation.

3. SAME—VOIR DIRE EXAMINATION.

It is not error to refuse to allow questions to be asked a juror, when the sole purpose of such questions is to aid in the exercise of the right of peremptory challenge.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 31, Cent. Dig. Jury, § 563.]

4. SALES—PROPERTY INCLUDED—EVIDENCE.

Where a verbal contract for the sale of personal property is made, and a contest arises as to what property was embraced by the terms thereof, it is competent to prove the price paid therefor and the value of all the property claimed to have been purchased.

5. SAME.

If a verbal contract for the sale of personal property has been fully consummated, and subsequently thereto, and in compliance with the terms thereof, payment of the purchase price is made by check, taking a receipt therefor, no language or recitals contained in the check or receipt can be so construed as to alter the terms thereof; but where there is a contest as to what property was really embraced by the terms of the contract, and the check and receipt contain recitals defining the kind and quantity of property sold, they are competent evidence as tending to show what property was included in the sale.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Ohio County.

Action by Alfred Dimmack against the Wheeling Traction Company. There was judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

White & Allen, for plaintiff in error.
Erskine & Allison, for defendant in error.

SANDERS, J. This is an action of detinue, instituted by the plaintiff, Alfred Dimmack, in the circuit court of Ohio county, against the Wheeling Traction Company, for the recovery of the possession of certain railway rails and steel fittings. Judgment below was given for the defendant, to which the plaintiff applied for and obtained a writ of error and supersedeas.

The plaintiff purchased the property which he claims in this action from J. G. Crawford, who claims to have purchased the same from the defendant. Therefore the plaintiff's right to recover depends upon whether or not Crawford did make such purchase. The defendant had a lease on a baseball park ground on Wheeling Island, in the city of Wheeling, which was about to expire, and this controversy grows out of a sale by the defendant to Crawford of certain property which it had upon said baseball park ground. The property which it had upon this ground was such as fences, grand stand, buildings, etc., and, also, it had stored there the steel rails and fittings in question. The defendant claims to have sold Crawford all the baseball ground materials, but that the rails and fittings were not included in the sale, while Crawford claims to have purchased all the property which the defendant had upon the ground, including the rails and fittings.

The plaintiff's first assignment of error is that the demurrer to his declaration was not disposed of. The record does not show that the demurrer was passed upon, but the plea of non detinet was filed, and the case tried upon its merits. Therefore the demurrer will be treated as having been overruled. The rule is that, when the record does not disclose what the ruling of the court below was upon demurrer, this court will consider that the demurrer was overruled. I cannot see how the plaintiff can complain of the action of the court in not passing upon a demurrer to his declaration. The defendant makes no point in regard to it, and does not claim in this court that the declaration is not good. It is claimed that the court erred in refusing to permit the plaintiff, upon the impaneling of the jury, to inquire of them whether or not they were employes of the stockholders or managers of the defendant corporation. The fact that a juror is in the employment of a stockholder of a corporation does not disqualify him to serve, and is therefore no ground of challenge for cause; and, this being so, there is no duty resting upon the court to go into an inquisition, the sole purpose of which is to aid the defendant in determining whether he will challenge a juror peremptorily. Therefore the court committed no error in this respect.

The remaining assignments of error are numerous, but a treatment of them separately is entirely unnecessary, as a great many of them are tested by the same rules and principles and are somewhat cumulative in effect. Therefore they can be treated under three heads:

First. Did the court err in the admission or rejection of testimony? The fact that a verbal contract was made, that it was made at a certain time and place, that Crawford agreed to pay $200 for the materials, that a few days were given within which to make payment, and that he did make payment through Robinson and by his check, and took a receipt therefor is all agreed; and the only question is whether the steel rails and fittings were embraced in the terms of the contract, and upon this question there is a direct conflict in the evidence. Therefore, in arriving at the terms of the contract, it is necessary to look at all the facts and circumstances surrounding the parties, and which led to its consummation, and any evidence, however slight, that would in any way cast light upon the transaction is admissible. Complaint is made that the court permitted the defendant to prove the weight of the rails and fittings, and that they would sell in the market for so much per ton, and that Dimmack had hauled away a quantity of the rails before his act of so doing was discovered by the traction company, and that Shirley, the defendant's agent, was allowed to testify to the market value of the rails in February and April, 1901, and that the defendant company in October, 1900, sold some other old rails at $19 per ton. This evidence was plainly admissible in determining what was included in the contract. The amount paid by Crawford for the material which he claimed to have purchased being $200, and there being a direct conflict as to whether or not the rails and fittings were embraced in the contract, it was certainly proper to permit the defendant to prove that its agent, who made the sale, knew that the rails and fittings were stored upon the baseball ground, and that they were of certain value, especially when upon the whole evidence it appears that the rails were of the value of $1,200 or $1,400, many times the amount of Crawford's contract price. It is not probable, but highly improbable, that the agent would include these rails and fittings in the contract, when they were worth many times the amount Crawford agreed to pay, and therefore this evidence was directly pertinent, and was proper to go to the jury, to throw light upon what property was really embraced in the contract, and, if the evidence of the value of these rails as they were stored upon the ground was admissible, then evidence of the market value of the rails would also be competent as corroborating the agent's testimony, and in order to determine just what rails were left on the ground it was proper to inquire of Dimmack just how many he had hauled away. Then, again, the plaintiff says it was error for the court to permit the defendant, on the cross-examination of Robinson, to question him relative to the sale of certain property to Shafer & Moore, which had been purchased by Crawford under his contract with the defendant. This evidence is, if for no other reason, admissible as tending to show the value of the material which the defendant says it sold Crawford. In this sale Crawford excepts the iron and rails stored on the ball ground, and sells the remainder of the property which he claims to have purchased for $350. If the property is worth $350, and there is evidence going to show that it is, then it is another circumstance tending to show the improbability of the rails and fittings being embraced in the contract. The plaintiff also complains of the action of the court in refusing to permit him to give his judgment as to the value of these rails lying upon the ground in the condition they were when he first saw them on the baseball ground. This calls for the opinion of the witness some considerable time after the contract of Crawford with the traction company, and he is not asked what the market value of these rails and fittings was. But, even if the question should have been permitted to be answered, still it would not be such error as would call for a reversal of this case, because Dimmack himself shows, in a receipt exhibited with his evidence, that he purchased these rails from Crawford and agreed to pay $12 per ton, and in his declaration he lays his damages at $15 per ton, and there is very little dispute, if any, upon the whole evidence, as to the value of this property.

Second. Did the court err in giving and refusing certain instructions? The plaintiff asked for eight instructions, five of which were given and three refused. It is not argued by plaintiff's counsel here, although it is assigned as error in the petition, that there was any error in refusing to give No. 3. We see no good reason that can be urged in support of this instruction. It is plainly bad, and the court did right in rejecting it. As to plaintiff's instruction No. 6, the court refused it on the ground that it had been covered by another instruction, and upon an examination of the instructions which were given this is found to be correct. As to instruction No. 7, the jury are told that if they believe from the evidence that the defendant offered to sell to J. G. Crawford its material or property upon the baseball ground, and that the rails in question then belonged to the company and were upon said ground, and if they further believe from the evidence that Crawford agreed to purchase said material and property so offered, and did purchase the same, and that the rails were not in any way excepted from such offer and sale, then Crawford was entitled to all the property and material of the company upon said ground, including the rails in question. This instruction told the jury that, in making sale of its property, it was necessary for the company to except the rails. This is foreign to the controversy, because there is no claim by the company that it did expressly except the rails, but that it sold to Crawford certain materials which were upon the baseball ground, and that it did not include the rails in question; while Crawford claims that the company sold him all the material or property kept or stored upon the ground. The question, therefore, for the consideration of the jury, was which theory was correct, and not whether the company had sold to Crawford all the material upon the ground and excepted certain parts. If Crawford purchased all the material upon the ground, then the company could not except the rails and fittings, and, if did not sell Crawford all such material, but only certain portions thereof, which was expressly designated, as defendant claims, then it was not necessary to make any exception. Therefore this instruction was clearly calculated to mislead the jury.

The court, at the instance of the defendant, gave to the jury nine instructions, which appear to be correct and a proper presentation of the case. The plaintiff seriously complains of No. 5, but upon a careful examination of the instruction, having a proper understanding of the case, it is not prejudicial to him. It must be borne in mind that this contract is not in writing, but was made several days before payment and the giving of the receipt. Therefore the question is what was the contract between the parties? What was agreed upon? What property was embraced in it? And, when we correctly determine this question, the fact that the receipt may contain recitals or such language as would embrace other property cannot alter a contract which had already been made, and the only purpose for which the receipt and check could be used is to shed light upon what property was actually embraced by the terms of the contract, when that question is unsettled and in dispute between the parties. Now, this check and receipt, not being parts of the contract, cannot affect it, except for the purpose of defining what the terms of the contract really were, not making new terms when once those terms are ascertained. In referring to the receipt for the check, specifying with particularity the property purchased by using the words "for the grand stand, bleachers stand, fences, buildings, etc.," followed by the general language, "embracing all the property of the undersigned situated on said lot," the jury were told in this instruction that the general words were to be construed as restricted in meaning to things of the same kind as those which were specifically enumerated, and that the receipt is not of itself to be interpreted as including the steel rails as a part of the property. This part of the instruction cannot be erroneous, because the receipt is not of itself to be interpreted as including the steel rails as a part of the property sold, for the reason already given, that, if by the terms of the contract the property was not included, then in no way should the receipt be so construed or interpreted as to include it. Then the jury are further told that if they believe that the check was read in full by Shirley, and not merely casually examined for the purpose of ascertaining whether it correctly stated the amount in the receipt, then the receipt and check are to be taken together as defining the property sold, and the following words in the check, "including all property of said traction company stored or kept on said ball park," would require the said papers to be interpreted as including the iron, so far as the legal construction of those papers is concerned. But while the court instructs the jury that, under such a state of facts, the legal construction of the papers should be such as to include the rails, yet it is proper to tell the jury, as the court did here, that if the defendant's agent did not understand the rails to be included, which, of course, means at the time of the making of the contract, that then they should find for the defendant, because, no matter what the legal interpretation of the check and the receipt should be, yet they were given long after the contract was made, and could in no way alter or change it.

Our conclusion is that the court instructed the jury fully and fairly upon the law of the case, and we see no error in its rulings in this respect.

Third. Should the court have set aside the verdict of the jury, and granted the defendant a new trial? As has been observed, the evidence in this case is in direct conflict. As this is so, it is purely a jury question, and, inasmuch as the jury has found a verdict in favor of the defendant, we cannot disturb it, unless it is so manifestly contrary to the evidence as to show that it was the result of bias, prejudice, or misapprehension of the facts. This we cannot say.

Therefore the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

(53 W. Va. 253)

CLAYTON v. GILMER COUNTY COURT.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 7, 1905.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN—COMPENSATION—REMEDY OF PROPERTY OWNER—INJUNCTION.

Injunction lies against a county court to prevent it from taking private property for a public road, without having paid, or secured payment of, compensation therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 18, Cent. Dig. Eminent Domain, §§ 762, 768.]

2. SAME—SCOPE OF ISSUES—DETERMINATION OF TITLE.

A controversy as to the title of the property so taken, or sought to be taken, turning on the construction of plaintiff's deed, constitutes no obstacle to such jurisdiction, and the court may determine in such case the question of title by construing the deed.

3. EVIDENCE—PAROL—AMBIGUITY IN DEED.

When ambiguity in the terms of a deed renders the meaning uncertain, parol evidence of the conditions under which it was executed and the character and situation of the property may be considered, in connection with its terms, in arriving at the intention of the parties, which is the test by which to determine its legal effect.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 20, Cent. Dig. Evidence, §§ 2129-2133.]

4. DEEDS—CONSTRUCTION—REPUGNANCY.

In construing a deed, words which are repugnant to and irreconcilable with other terms clearly applicable to admitted and established facts recited in the deed must be rejected, and all other words must be given some effect.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 16, Cent. Dig. Deeds, § 268.]

5. SAME—PROPERTY CONVEYED.

When a deed conveys a tract of land, and gives to the grantee, as an appurtenance thereof, the right to open and use a private road along one side of it, it will be presumed that the grantor did not intend to retain a very long and narrow strip of land between the tract conveyed and the road so provided for; and, when such road is described as intended to run between the tract of land conveyed and an adjacent tract belonging to a third party, it will be presumed, in the absence of anything on the face of the deed, or in the circumstances and situation and property, indicating the contrary, that the grantor did not intend to retain a strip of land between the road and the lands of such third party, so narrow as to be of no practical use to him.

6. BOUNDARIES—DESCRIPTION.

When a road so designed and provided for is described as an extension of an existing road, lying between a portion of the land conveyed and a lot belonging to R., so as to run between the land conveyed and a tract of land belonging to O., and at the corner of the lands of R. and O. there is a slight angle, made by their lines running to the corner from nearly opposite directions, the road will follow said two lines, and have, at the corner aforesaid, a corresponding angle, notwithstanding the deed, calling for one of the lines of the road as a boundary of the land conveyed, describes that boundary as a single line between two monuments, and as running with "line of alleys." In such case, the use of the word "alleys" will be deemed to refer to the old road as one alley, and to the extension thereof as another, and to signify intent to locate the road and the boundary line so as to run with the lines of the two adjacent tracts of land, and leave, between the tract conveyed and the adjacent lands, only sufficient space for the road.

7. EASEMENTS—PRIVATE WAY—TITLE TO FEE.

A deed which calls for the line of a private road as a boundary of the tract by it conveyed, and gives to the grantee the right to open and use such road, does not pass to the grantee the title in fee to any part of the road.

8. EMINENT DOMAIN—RIGHTS TO COMPENSATION—INJURY TO EASEMENT.

When a private right of way is enlarged into a public road by the joint action of the owner of the fee and the public authorities, the easement or right of way is neither injured nor destroyed, and no right to compensation or damages on account thereof accrues to its owner.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Gilmer County.

Action by Dora A. Clayton against the county court of Gilmer county. From a decree perpetuating a preliminary injunction, defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

L. H. Barnett and R. F. Kidd, for appellant. A. L. Holt and Hamilton & Morris, for appellee.

POFFENBARGER, J. Dora A. Clayton obtained a preliminary injunction against the county court of Gilmer county, restraining it from taking and interfering with a portion of a certain piece of land belonging to her and certain rights of way appurtenant thereto, which injunction was afterwards made perpetual, and said county court has appealed from the decree by which the court refused to dissolve the injunction and perpetuated it.

The object of the injunction was to prevent the establishment and maintenance of a public road on the land in question, on the ground that the plaintiff, having title thereto, could not be deprived of it until compensation therefor had been paid or secured to her, and on the further ground that the order establishing said road was invalid, because made at a special term, the notice of which did not specify the establishment of said road as one of the purposes for which said term was called. The county court, in its defense, asserted that the road was not located upon any portion of the plaintiff's land, but upon a strip of land, described as an alley, belonging to S. H. Whiting, adjacent to complainant's land, and over which she had a private road or way, by virtue of an express grant thereof in her deed from Whiting, from whom she had purchased the land to which this private way was appurtenant. On the 24th day of May, 1902, two deeds were made by which this alley seems to have been created or provided for. One was made between S. H. Whiting and wife, parties of the first part, W. D. Whiting and wife, parties of the second part, and D. U. O'Brien and wife, parties of the third part, effectuating two or three exchanges of land among the parties. Either by these, or some other one, Mellie O'Brien, wife of D. U. O'Brien, obtained title to a tract of land lying adjacent to a certain other tract owned by S. H. Whiting, and this deed gave to S. H. Whiting the use, for himself and his vendees, of a 16-foot road, formerly provided for and possibly opened, which came up to the corner of the two adjacent tracts of S. H. Whiting and Mellie O'Brien. The other deed was from S. H. Whiting to Dora A. Clayton, and conveyed to her the Whiting land lying adjacent to that of Mellie O'Brien, and on the south side thereof, except the said alley, which was left between them. The quantity thus conveyed was estimated to be four acres, and the deed conferred upon the grantee, Dora A. Clayton, "the right to open, make, maintain, and use for herself and vendees the 16-foot road described in deed between the grantors herein and W. D. Whiting, bearing date herewith, and the right to extend the said road with like privileges between Mellie O'Brien's lot and the lot hereby conveyed, and the said road to run between the said two lots the full length of the lot herein conveyed." The extension so contemplated is mentioned in the description of the land conveyed as a 16-foot alley. The description reads as follows: "Beginning at a stake, corner to 14-foot alley, and running thence N. 28 $\frac{1}{4}$ ° E., 275.8 feet, to a stake; N. 22 $\frac{1}{4}$ ° E., 104.5 feet, to a stake; N. 54 $\frac{1}{2}$ ° W., 400 feet, to a stake above the old sheep shed; S. 28 $\frac{1}{4}$ ° W., 485.6 feet, to a stake at 16-foot alley; thence, with line of alleys, 70 $\frac{3}{4}$ ° E., 406.6 feet, to the beginning, containing 4 acres, by surface measure."

The beginning corner, "corner to 14-foot alley," is well established by the evidence. If there is any evidence against that location as the beginning corner, it is so slight in quantity and light in character as to be not worthy of notice. Commencing there, and following the calls of the deed, the closing line intersects the first line at a point within the beginning corner several feet. This is due to an error in the course of that line as described in the deed, which should have been, if a straight line to the beginning corner was intended, "S. 68½° E." instead of "S. 70¼° E." The surveyor accounts for this discrepancy by saying he did not ascertain the course, but took it for granted that it was the same as the line of Melle O'Brien, and that the course of her line was S. 70¼° E. Melle O'Brien's land, or the part of it fronting on the alley, was then under fence, so that the location of her line was apparent and its course easy of ascertainment. If the intention was to leave the 16-foot alley or road, and nothing more, between the two tracts of land, the road could not run from the beginning corner clear through without an angle at a point some distance west of the beginning. The 16-foot road already provided for, the extension of which was contemplated, ran past the beginning corner of the Dora Clayton land, probably 100 feet or more—how far is immaterial—up to the corner of the O'Brien land, following the line of a lot known as the "Riddle Lot." At that corner, the division line between the O'Brien land and the Whiting land purchased by Mrs. Clayton took a course slightly different from the line between the Riddle lot and the Clayton land, so that an angle at that point in the road became necessary, if the intention was to leave a strip no more than 16 feet wide between the Clayton lot and the O'Brien lot, and the last line of the Clayton lot could not be a straight line. It was necessary to make an angle in it to correspond with the angle at the corner of the Riddle and O'Brien lots, so that her line would run S. 68½° E. to that point, and thence S. 74½° E. to the place of beginning.

Assuming that, upon a proper construction of the Clayton deed, her line would be straight from the stake at the 16-foot alley to the beginning point, the county court opened its road along that line on the south side thereof. If that be a proper construction of the deed, and the deed does not confer title to any part of the alley, then no part of her land has been taken; but if, under a proper construction of that deed, the alley is not straight, but runs with the Riddle line to the O'Brien corner, and then with the O'Brien line, the road is built partly on the Clayton tract. It takes a triangular strip, ascertained to be from 4 to 7 feet broad at the widest point. The course called for on the line in dispute, S. 70¼° E., must be discarded, for the reason that the survey cannot be closed without discarding it, or lengthening the 485.6-foot line, so as to throw the last corner over in the inclosed land of Melle O'Brien. Under such circumstances, the rule is to ignore the course and close the survey by a straight line between the two corners. Ruffner v. Hill, 31 W. Va. 428, 438, 7 S. E. 13. Palpably erroneous and irreconcilable calls for course and distance may always be rejected, and the survey closed by lines run according to the established monuments. Teass v. St. Albans, 38 W. Va. 1, 17 S. E. 400, 19 L. R. A. 802; Wendell v. Jackson, 22 Am. Dec. 635; Myers v. Ladd, 28 Ill. 415; Vose v. Bradstreet, 27 Me. 156; Kruse v. Wilson, 79 Ill. 233; Bond v. Fay, 12 Allen (Mass.) 86; Seaman v. Hogeboom, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 398; Eggleston's Lessee v. Bradford, 10 Ohio, 312; Hull v. Fuller, 7 Vt. 100.

If nothing in the circumstances disclosed by the evidence in the case and the deed exhibited with the bill, and under which the plaintiff claims, militated against the operation of this rule, the deed would have to be so construed; but it says the road is to be extended between the two tracts of land, and describes it as a 16-foot alley, and the last line of the Clayton tract is described thus, "Thence with line of alleys" to the place of beginning, not with the line of one alley, but with the "line of alleys," and the two deeds mentioned and described herein, as well as all the testimony in the case, shows that there were in point of fact two of these 16-foot roads, one between the Clayton land and the Riddle land, which the parties intended to extend between the Clayton land and the O'Brien land, and which could not be extended without making an angle at the Riddle and O'Brien corner. Strictly speaking, the alley as adopted by the county court is not an extension of the 16-foot road first mentioned. It begins back 100 feet or more at the intersection of a 14-foot alley with the 16-foot road, and put the old 16-foot road partly on new ground from that point, instead of commencing at its terminus at the Riddle and O'Brien corner. A circumstance tending strongly to support this view is the fact that any strip intended to be left, either between the road and the O'Brien land, or between the Clayton land and the road, would have been in quantity as well as in form useless to anybody except Mrs. Clayton or Mrs. O'Brien, but would belong to Whiting. What purpose could he have had in retaining a triangular strip more than 400 feet long and not more than 7 feet broad in the widest part between Mrs. O'Brien's land and the road? It is not to be supposed for a moment that he retained this strip between the road and Mrs. Clayton's land, for it would be unreasonable and absurd to suppose that she would accept the deed under such circumstances. Was there to be but one point at which she could reach the road, the use of which was granted to her? Was she to be limited to a mere way of necessity to the road over this strip retained by Whiting? On the other hand, did he propose to cut Mrs. O'Brien off from the road by retaining such a strip? Of what earthly use could it be to him, except a means of forcing Mrs. O'Brien to purchase a right of way through him or purchase the land? This is not to be supposed or assumed, because their relations seem to have been friendly and their efforts to have been directed along the same line. In a deed, to which Mrs. O'Brien and Whiting were both parties and in which exchanges of property were made, and bearing even date with that of Mrs. Clayton, the 16-foot road is mentioned, and it is quite likely that, if she had suspected any such intention on the part of Whiting, she would have provided against it in this deed.

To break the force of these circumstances and the terms of the deed, plainly disclosing intent on the part of the grantor to leave only a 16-foot road between the two tracts, the county court relied upon a plat of other lands showing the 16-foot road up to the O'Brien and Riddle corner, with a dotted line on the north side thereof, indicating, in their opinion, a purpose to make the angle at the 14-foot road, instead of at the Riddle corner. But the surveyor who made the plat says the dotted line was not run, but that the straight line on the south side of the 16-foot road, disclosing the opposite intent, was run, and according to that line Riddle holds his lot, and not according to the dotted line. The evidence of intent afforded by this plat is entirely too slight to overcome the weighty evidence above referred to. Hence the conclusion is that a 16-foot road, following the Riddle line up to the O'Brien corner and then the O'Brien line to the end thereof, was intended; that the line of the Clayton tract follows the north side of said 16-foot alley; and that a portion of the road, as opened by the county court, is clearly on the land of the complainant.

Intention of the parties to a deed is the test by which to determine its legal effect; and this rule applies to the description, as well as to other parts of the instrument. When ambiguity in the terms used renders the meaning uncertain, resort may be had to the circumstances and conditions under which the deed was executed. Dev. Deeds, §§ 839, 840. "Although parol evidence is not admissible to prove that the parties intended something different from that which the written language expresses, or which may be the legal inference and conclusion to be drawn from it, yet it is always competent to give in evidence existing circumstances, such as the actual condition and situation of the land, buildings, passages, water courses, and other local objects, in order to give a definite meaning to language used in the deed, and to show the sense in which particular words were probably used by the parties, especially in matters of description." Chief Justice Shaw, in Salisbury v. Andrews, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 250, 252. "Generally, it will not be presumed that a party granting land intends to retain a long narrow strip next to one of his lines." Western M. & M. Co. v. Cannel Coal Co., 8 W. Va. 406. It is presumed that he does not, unless an intent so to do is manifest. Id.; Brown Oil Co. v. Caldwell, 35 W. Va. 95, 99, 18 S. E. 42, 29 Am.

St. Rep. 793. Repugnant and impossible words are to be discarded, and every other word given some effect, and the deed reconciled to admitted and established facts and circumstances. The conclusion above expressed accomplishes this, and no other one will do it. Making an angle in the line in controversy violates no rule. "Law will not declare in favor of a straight line between monuments, when the language of the deed shows that a different line was intended." Pratt v. Woodward, 91 Am. Dec. 573. This must be especially true when the language, importing intent to the contrary, is aided by circumstances.

In so far as the injunction prohibits the maintenance of the road on said triangular strip shown on plat No. 2, filed with the deposition of R. L. Ruddell, the court below properly overruled the motion to dissolve and perpetuated it. The jurisdiction in equity to prevent the taking of private property for public purposes without payment of compensation therefor, or security for the same having been given, is undoubted, and not disputed in this case. Foley v. County Court, 54 W. Va. 16, 46 S. E. 248.

Mrs. Clayton claims one-half of the alley, upon the theory that, as it is made the boundary line of her property, the conveyance carries title in fee to one-half of the alley. For this she relies upon the general rule that, where a public highway or a stream not navigable is made a boundary of the tract conveyed, the line is in the middle of the highway or stream. Hutchinson, Land Titles, p. 292, citing a large number of authorities: Devlin on Deeds, § 1024, giving a long list of decisions. In this assumption her counsel has overlooked the fact that the deed does not make the alley, but only the lines thereof, a boundary of her land. If this alley were a public highway, she could not claim to the center of it under a deed showing an intent that the line of the alley, and not the alley itself, should define the limits of her land. Lough v. Machlin, 40 Ohio St. 332; Insurance Co. v. Stevens, 87 N. Y. 287, 41 Am. Rep. 361; Lee v. Lee, 27 Hun. 1; Railroad Co. v. Helsel, 38 Mich. 62, 31 Am. Rep. 306; Smith v. Slocumb, 9 Gray (Mass.) 36, 69 Am. Dec. 274; Brainard v. Railroad Co., 12 Gray (Mass.) 407; Murphy v. Copeland, 51 Iowa, 515, 1 N. W. 691; Hanson v. Campbell's Lessee, 20 Md. 223; Perrin v. Railroad Co., 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 65; Cottle v. Young, 59 Me. 105. In all such instances, the title to the fee in one-half of the street, road, or stream stands upon the presumption that the grantor did not intend to retain the narrow strip between the street or road line or bank of the stream and the middle thereof; but this presumption cannot exist when there is anything on the face of the deed indicating a contrary intention, and the authorities universally hold that when the deed says to the line of the street or the bank of the stream, the line or bank and not the road or stream is the boundary.

and the deed carries nothing beyond the boundary line, except the easement and rights appurtenant to property abutting upon a public highway. Devlin on Deeds, § 1025. As to which lines of the alley were intended, north lines or south lines, there is but one answer. If the south, what need was there for the grant of a right of way to Mrs. Clayton? If the south, she took title to the whole of the alley, and needed no permission to use it. If the north, she took no title to it, and her convenience demanded a road along the side of the land she bought. This is the only interpretation consistent with the terms of the deed.

A further contention is that the easement in and over the alley, vested in Mrs. Clayton by her deed, will sustain this injunction as to the alley, as well as in respect to the strip of land belonging to her and not included in the alley. It is difficult to see how this claim can be supported, in view of the many decisions of this court which hold that an injunction does not lie to prevent mere damage to property by a work of internal improvement authorized by law, unless it be so great as to amount to a taking thereof. Watson v. Railway Co., 49 W. Va. 528, 39 S. E. 193; Arbenz v. Railway Co., 83 W. Va. 1, 10 S. E. 14, 5 L. R. A. 371; Spencer v. Railway Co., 23 W. Va. 406; Mason v. Bridge Co., 17 W. Va. 396. In such case an action at law for the damages to the property is deemed adequate to protect and vindicate the right of the abutting property owner. In the cases referred to the easements involved were such as an owner whose property abuts upon a highway has in the highway; but this is an important and valuable easement or right, distinct from the public easement. Pence v. Bryant, 54 W. Va. 263, 46 S. E. 275.

But, as invalidity of the order establishing the road is advanced as another basis for the injunction, another conclusive reason for the untenableness of the position taken by counsel for the appellee in respect to the easement will be given. No compensation can be had where there is no injury. If property is not taken, no compensation for it can be demanded; and if it is not injured, there can be no claim for damages. The transformation of this private road into a public highway neither destroys nor injures the easement. It amounts only to an enlargement of the use to which the land is subjected by the deed. By that instrument, the use of it for purposes of ingress and egress is given to the grantee and her tenants. When it is converted into a public highway, she and her tenants still have that use of it and are in better position, because the public authorities maintain and keep it in repair. As to whether the owner of such an easement is entitled to compensation, when the land is taken for the purposes of a public highway, not much authority has been found, but such as there is plainly indicates the contrary. Murphy v. Bates (R. I.) 41 Atl. 1011, propounds the doctrine that a private way becomes merged in the public way when both are upon the same ground. To the same effect is Ross v. Thompson, 78 Ind. 90. The authorities do not seem to deem it necessary to proceed against anybody but the owner of the fee in enlarging the private way into a public way. Elliott on Roads, § 5; Abbott v. Stewartstown, 47 N. H. 223. Though merged in the public use, the easement is not destroyed, for discontinuance of the highway works a dissolution of the merger and leaves the easement still in the hands of its owner. Pence v. Bryant, 54 W. Va. 263, 46 S. E. 275; Holloway v. Southmayd, 139 N. Y. 390, 34 N. E. 1047, 1052; Showalter v. Railway Co., 49 Kan. 421, 32 Pac. 42; Challiss v. Railroad Co., 45 Kan. 398, 25 Pac. 894; Railroad Co. v. Patch, 28 Kan. 470.

Agreeably to the foregoing conclusions, the decree will be so modified as to limit its operation and effect to so much of the land included in the road, mentioned and described in the bill and proceedings, as lies within the limits of the plaintiff's deed as herein construed and given effect, and, as so modified, the same will be affirmed, and costs in this court decreed to the appellant, as the party substantially prevailing.

(72 S. C. 516)

HUGHES v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 31, 1905.)

1. TELEGRAM—DELAY IN DELIVERY—DAMAGES.

Where a telegram announcing the death of a relative was delivered too late for the recipient to attend the funeral because of delay of the company, it does not confer a cause of action because he was deprived of the consolation of attending such burial; but if the telegram shows a probability that he would have arrived in time, and would have gone if the message had been promptly delivered, the company is liable for the pain caused by being deprived of such privilege.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 45, Cent. Dig. Telegraphs and Telephones, § 70.]

2. SAME.

Delay in delivering telegram announcing death of a relative, where it appears that there was a probability that the recipient would have arrived in time to attend the funeral but for the delay, and that he would have gone, renders the company liable for anxiety caused by such delay, though as a matter of fact the funeral had been fixed at a time at which the recipient could not have arrived, where he had no notice of such time.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 45, Cent. Dig. Telegraphs and Telephones, § 70.]

3. SAME—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—LEX FORI.

The measure of damages for delay in delivering a telegram to a person in the state is not governed by the laws of the foreign state from which it is sent.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Lancaster County; Watts, Judge.

Action by W. Alonzo Hughes against the Western Union Telegraph Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth paragraphs of the complaint are as follows:

"(6) That if said message had been promptly transmitted and delivered to plaintiff by defendant, as it was its duty to do, plaintiff could have wired to his family at Coleman when he would arrive there, and could have left on an afternoon train on December 18, 1903, and arrived at Coleman at 2:45 p. m., on December 19, 1903, in plenty of time to have attended the funeral of his said dead brother, which consolation said delay in delivering said telegram deprived him of. That on receipt of said telegram, as before stated, plaintiff immediately sent a telegram to his said sister, at Coleman, but same was not received by her until after plaintiff's brother had been buried.

"(7) That after receiving said delayed message by him, as aforesaid, plaintiff left on the earliest train for Coleman, Fla., leaving Heath Springs, which was not until about 11 a. m. on Sunday, 20th December, 1903, and by traveling the quickest and shortest route he did not reach Coleman, Fla., until the afternoon of December 21, 1903, two days after the plaintiff's brother had been buried, to his great mental pain, distress, and anguish.

"(8) That by reason of defendant's willful, wanton, and gross negligence in not transmitting and delivering promptly said message, plaintiff, on arriving at the nearest railroad station to the place where his dead brother's family resided, was not met with a conveyance by any member of his said brother's family and his own family, as would have been the case had said message been promptly delivered, and in consequence thereof had to walk a distance of one mile and one-half through deep sand, which very much fatigued and discommoded plaintiff, especially after his long and tedious trip by rail from Heath Springs to said railroad station.

"(9) That by reason of this wanton, willful, and gross negligence of defendant in failing to promptly transmit and deliver the said message, as aforesaid, the plaintiff was not only fatigued and jaded by his said walk through the deep sand, as stated above, but he was caused great mental anguish, pain, and suffering not to have had the privilege of seeing his dead brother's face for the last time, and of being with the family before the burial, and of attending the burial, all to his damage in the sum of $1,990."

The fourth request of the defendant, and modification, is:

"(4) The court charges you that if it appears from the testimony in this case that, even if the message in question had been promptly delivered to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff by going the shortest and quickest route and using all possible diligence could not have reached and have been with his family before the burial, could not have seen his brother's face before the burial, and could not have arrived in time to have attended the burial, then the plaintiff cannot recover compensatory damages for any mental anguish caused by his not being able to attend the funeral,' etc. I charge you that in this connection, if you believe that was the facts of the case, or if you believe that the plaintiff here didn't intend to telegraph or didn't telegraph, and if he had telegraphed, if you believe they wouldn't have waited, then I charge you that as good law."

From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals on the following exceptions:

"(1) Because his honor, the circuit judge, erred in refusing to charge the defendant's third request to charge, the same being as follows, to wit: 'Sections 8 and 9 of the complaint set out the injury and damage plaintiff claims to have suffered as follows: [Here read the eighth and ninth sections of the complaint.] The court charges you that, before the plaintiff is entitled to recover for mental anguish, he must show (1) not only that the defendant telegraph company did not exercise reasonable diligence or ordinary care in delivering the message, but (2) that, had it been delivered without the unreasonable delay alleged, the plaintiff, after receiving it, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, could have seen his dead brother's face, and have been with the family before the burial, and could have attended the burial of his deceased brother, and that he not only could have done so, but that he would have done so.' Error consisting in that the said request contained a correct statement of the law applicable to the facts in issue.

"(2) Because his honor, the circuit judge, erred in refusing to charge the jury defendant's sixth request to charge, the same being as follows, to wit: 'The court further charges you, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff can only recover as compensatory damages for such consequences as were within the contemplation of the parties to the contract at the time of the sending of the telegram; that is to say, for such consequences as naturally and reasonably flow from a breach of the contract or from negligence in performing any duty imposed by the contract. The court, therefore, charges you that the telegram constituting the written contract out of which this action arose is not sufficient to put within the contemplation of the defendant telegraph company the possibility of a postponement of a funeral or burial. The telegram is the simple announcement of death. The plaintiff, therefore, is not entitled to recover damages in the way of compensation for mental anguish on account of not being able to see his dead brother and attend his burial, as alleged, on the ground alone that if he had received the said message promptly he could have had the funeral postponed.' Error consisting in that the said request embodied a correct statement of the law applicable to the facts in issue in said cause.

"(3) Because his honor, the circuit judge, erred in refusing to charge defendant's seventh request to charge, the same being as follows, to wit: "That the question of what compensatory damages, if any, plaintiff is entitled to recover, that is to say, the measure of damages, is governed in this case by the law of the state of Florida, where the contract for sending the message involved was made. Under the law of Florida, any mental anguish which does not accompany or proceed from a physical injury, as a consequence of such physical injury, is not an element of damage, and cannot be recovered on account of a breach of contract or negligence. I therefore charge you that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover compensatory damages in this case for the mental anguish he claims to have suffered in not seeing his dead brother and attending the funeral, as alleged, due to any breach of contract by the telegraph company, or negligence in transmitting and delivering the telegram involved." Error consisting in that the said request embodied a correct statement of the law applicable to the facts in issue."

Geo. H. Fearons, Willcox & Willcox, and J. H. Marion, for appellant. R. E. Wylie, for respondent.

GARY, A. J. This is an action for damages arising out of the alleged negligence and willfulness of the defendant in failing to deliver a telegram addressed to the plaintiff, announcing the death of his brother. At 12:30 p. m., on the 18th of December, 1903, the sister of the plaintiff filed with the defendant at Coleman, Fla., the following message, addressed to Alonzo Hughes, Heath Springs, S. C.: "John killed at Panasoffkee at mill this morning. [Signed] Dora Hughes." It is alleged that the message was not delivered to the plaintiff until 2 o'clock p. m. on the 19th of December, 1903, although it was received by the defendant at its office in Heath Springs at 8 o'clock a. m. on the 19th of December, 1903. Some time during the afternoon of the 19th of December the plaintiff sent the following telegram to his sister at Coleman, Fla.: "Telegram received at 2 p. m. Will come if possible. [Signed] Alonzo." The sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth paragraphs of the complaint will be set out in the report of the case; also, the defendant's fourth request to charge, together with the modification thereof by his honor, the presiding judge; also the appellant's exceptions. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $700. In considering the exceptions, we will refer to them by their numbers.

1. First and second exceptions: Section 2223 of the Code of Laws of 1902 is as follows: "All telegraph companies doing business in this state shall be liable in damages for mental anguish or suffering even in the absence of bodily injury, for negligence in receiving, transmitting or delivering messages. Nothing in this section shall abridge the rights or remedies now provided by law against telegraph companies, and the rights and remedies provided for by this section shall be in addition to those now existing. In all actions under this section the jury may award such damages as they conclude resulted from negligence of said telegraph companies." It will be well to bear in mind at the outset that it was not the object of the statute, in a case where a telegraph company negligently fails to deliver a telegram announcing the death of a person, to confer upon the addressee of the message a right of action based upon the fact that he was thereby deprived of the consolation of seeing the face of the dead, being present with the family in the trying hours of sorrow, or taking part in the funeral ceremonies. These facts may be introduced in evidence, in a proper case, for the purpose of showing mental suffering, but they form no part of the cause of action, and are merely evidentiary. Harrison v. Telegraph Co., 71 S. C. 386, 51 S. E. 119. The intention of the statute was to give a right of action for mental anguish suffered by the addressee as a direct and proximate result of the negligent delay in delivering the message. If, when such telegram is received by the addressee, he knows that he could not have arrived in time, then there is no legal foundation for mental anguish arising from the failure to deliver promptly. But, on the contrary, if he would have gone, and it appears upon the face of the telegram that there was a probability for him to have arrived in time, in case it had been promptly delivered, then the thought of being deprived of this privilege would naturally and reasonably be expected to produce anxiety and pain, and may fairly be said to have been in contemplation of the contracting parties. The fact that the parties in charge of the funeral rites may have seen proper to fix a time when it would not have been possible for him to have attended, even if the message had been delivered in time, does not prevent the suffering of mental pain before he had knowledge of such fact, when the telegram showed that there was a probability he would have been able to go in time, if it had been promptly delivered. This interpretation of the statute is just and fair both to the telegraph company and the addressee, as it makes the liability dependent upon facts existing at the time of delivery and which can be made certain, instead of being based upon circumstances that are uncertain, and subject to the caprice of others not parties to the contract. Furthermore, the request set out in the first exception was substantially the same as the request hereinbefore mentioned, which the presiding judge charged, except as modified, and the modification was too favorable to the appellant.

2. Third exception: The question presented by this exception has been adjudicated in the recent cases of Hellams v. Telegraph Co., 70 S. C. 83, 49 S. E. 12, and Harrison v. Telegraph Co., 71 S. C. 386, 51 S. E. 119.

It is the judgment of this court, that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

WOODS, J., concurs in the result.

JONES, J. (concurring). In this action plaintiff recovered a judgment for $700 for alleged negligence and willfulness in failing to promptly deliver a telegram addressed to plaintiff by his sister, Dora Hughes, in these words: "John killed at Panasoffkee at mill this morning." "John" was a brother of the plaintiff. The message was filed with the defendant at Coleman, Fla., at 11:45 a. m., December 18, 1905, according to the testimony of one of plaintiff's witnesses, or at 12:30 p. m. of that day, according to the time of filing as entered by the defendant on the message blank. This was Central time, which, according to the evidence, is one hour earlier than Eastern time prevailing in South Carolina; that is to say, the message was filed with defendant company at 12:45 p. m., or 1:30 p. m., December 18, 1905, for transmission to plaintiff at Heath Springs, S. C. The message arrived at Heath Springs at 8 o'clock a. m., December 19, 1905, and was not delivered to the plaintiff, residing in Heath Springs, until 2 o'clock p. m., of that day. The burial took place at Adamsville graveyard, 3 miles from Coleman and 1½ miles from the home of the deceased, between 3 and 4 o'clock p. m., December 19th, Central time, or between 2 and 3 o'clock p. m., Eastern time. The funeral was, therefore, had in Florida a few minutes after the delivery of the telegram in South Carolina. The plaintiff, some time during the afternoon of December 19th, one hour after the receipt of the message, as he testified, but at 5:11 p. m., according to the time of receiving entered on the message, sent his sister the following message: "Telegram received at 2 p. m. Will come if possible." The plaintiff testified that he hesitated about wiring at that time, as he thought the funeral would probably be over with then. He further testified that, if the message had been promptly delivered to him on the 18th, he would have immediately wired that he was coming, and that if it had been delivered to him before 3 p. m. of that day he could have taken a train leaving Heath Springs that afternoon and could have reached Coleman, Fla., the next day on train due to arrive there at 2:35 p. m., according to his testimony, but according to the testimony of Mr. R. A. Long, for the defendant, at 3:05 p. m. The train did not actually arrive at Coleman, Fla., on the 19th of December, until after the funeral, which took place between 3 and 4 o'clock. Miss Dora Hughes testified that the burial was not postponed for the arrival of plaintiff because she failed to hear from him, and did not know whether he was coming or not; that she expected hourly a reply from plaintiff as to when he would come on, but no message was received from plaintiff until the afternoon of December 19, 1903, after the burial; that she sent a conveyance two or three times to the nearest railroad station to meet plaintiff, whom she expected by every train. The plaintiff left Heath Springs, S. C., for Coleman, Florida, on the morning of the 20th, and arrived on the afternoon of the 21st, two days after the funeral. The complaint alleged that, if said message had been promptly transmitted and delivered, plaintiff could have wired to his family at Coleman when he would arrive there, and could have left on an afternoon train on December 18, 1903, and arrived at Coleman at 2:45 p. m. on December 19, 1903, in plenty of time to have attended the funeral of his dead brother, of which consolation he was deprived by said delay in delivering the message; that by reason of this willful, wanton, and gross negligence of defendant, in failing to promptly transmit and deliver the said message, plaintiff was caused great mental anguish, "not to have had the privilege of seeing his dead brother's face for the last time, and of being with the family before the burial, and of attending the burial." The foregoing statement will enable us to better understand the application of defendant's requests to charge, which were refused by the circuit court, and to which exceptions have been taken.

1. First exception: The defendant requested the court to charge the jury as follows: "The court charges you that before the plaintiff is entitled to recover for mental anguish, he must show (1) not only that the defendant telegraph company did not exercise reasonable diligence or ordinary care in delivering the message; but (2) that, had it been delivered without the unreasonable delay alleged, the plaintiff, after receiving it, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, could have seen his dead brother's face, and have been with the family before the burial, and could have attended the burial of his deceased brother, and that he not only could have done so, but that he would have done so." It is alleged that this is a correct statement of the law and applicable to the facts in issue. It is a well understood rule that, when a request to charge is presented to the court containing both sound and unsound propositions of law, it is not the duty of the court to separate the charge and instruct the jury as to that portion of the charge which is correct, but the court may, without committing reversible error, refuse the request. While the proposition of law contained in the first clause of the above request is undoubtedly correct, that contained in the second clause is not wholly free from error. The complaint alleged three matters the deprivation of which caused mental suffering: (1) The privilege of seeing his dead brother's face for the last time; (2) of being with the family before the burial; (3) of attending the burial. The deprivation of any one of these privileges or consolations, if due to the negligent conduct of defendant, would have afforded ground of recovery for resulting mental suffering; but the request to charge made recovery dependent on the deprivation of all said privileges. Damages for mental anguish are recoverable when such damages are the natural and proximate result of the negligence charged. It is, therefore, doubtless true that mental suffering cannot be said to so arise, if the sufferer by the use of the means and instrumentalities available after prompt delivery of a telegram could not have secured to himself the privilege the deprivation of which caused him mental suffering, or, if he could have secured such privilege by the use of available means, that he would not have availed himself of such means. In such a case, the mental suffering arising from such deprivation is not due to the negligence of the telegraph company, but to an efficient intervening cause for which the telegraph company is in no wise responsible. Whether in this case the failure to postpone the burial for the arrival of plaintiff on the first train that would have been available, if the telegram had been promptly delivered, was the natural and proximate result of the negligent delay in delivering the telegram, is a question that may more properly be noticed in considering the next exception.

The second exception is based upon the refusal to charge the following request: "The court further charges you as a matter of law that the plaintiff can only recover as compensatory damages for such consequences as were within the contemplation of the parties to the contract at the time of the sending of the telegram; that is to say, for such consequences as naturally and reasonably flow from a breach of the contract or from negligence in performing any duty imposed by the contract. The court, therefore, charges you that the telegram, constituting the written contract out of which this action arose, is not sufficient to put within the contemplation of the defendant telegraph company the possibility of the postponement of the funeral or burial. The telegram is the simple announcement of the death. The plaintiff is, therefore, not entitled to recover damages in the way of compensation for mental anguish on account of not being able to see his dead brother and attend his burial, as alleged, on the ground alone that if he had received the said message promptly he could have had the funeral postponed." This request to charge is subject to criticism in assuming that the rule as to damages is precisely the same whether the action is upon a contract or in tort. In actions for damages for breach of contract, it is usual to say that compensatory damages may be recovered for such consequences as are within the contemplation of the parties to the contract at the time of contracting; but in an action in tort it is usual and proper to say that compensatory damages may be recovered for such consequences as naturally and proximately result from the negligence of performing a duty imposed by law. In this case the action is by the addressee of the telegram, and his right of action is based upon a breach of duty imposed by general law, although such duty springs out of a relation arising from the contract, and the defendant is, therefore, responsible in damages for mental anguish that naturally and proximately resulted from breach of duty imposed by law to promptly deliver the telegram. It may be that damages may result as a natural and proximate consequence of an act or omission, and yet not be within the actual contemplation of the parties at the time of the contract, unless it be true that a party must be conclusively presumed to contemplate whatever naturally and proximately results from his act or omission. But, waiving this criticism of the request to charge, we are disposed to respond to the question sought to be raised, viz., when it appears that the plaintiff, seeking recovery for mental anguish on account of not being able to attend a relative's funeral, could not have been present at the funeral even if the message involved had been delivered in due time, can such plaintiff recover on the ground that if the message had been reasonably delivered he could have telegraphed and had the funeral postponed? Appellant submits that he could not unless (1) the tenor of said message was such as to put the telegraph company on notice that there was reasonable probability of the postponement of the funeral or burial; and (2) unless it appears that he would have had the funeral postponed for the purpose of attending it.

With reference to the second reason suggested above, we may remark, as already stated, that there was evidence that plaintiff would have telegraphed of his coming if the message had been delivered in due time, and that the funeral would have been postponed until his arrival on December 19th if notice of his coming had been received. So that the real question presented is whether the tenor of the message was such as to put the telegraph company on notice that there was reasonable probability of the postponement of the funeral, or, more accurately stated, whether the failure to postpone the funeral was a natural and proximate result of the defendant's failure to deliver the message in seasonable time. Appellant cites to sustain its contention the case of W. U. Tel. Co. v. Stone (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 144, the syllabus of which is: "In an action for delay in delivering a telegram announcing the death of plaintiff's mother, plaintiff cannot recover for mental suffering resulting from not being able to attend the funeral, where it appears that he could not have reached the place where it was held in time had the message been promptly delivered, though he testified that he would have wired to have it put off." To the same effect, appellant cites from Texas, W. U. Tel. Co. v. Linn (Sup.) 28 S. W. 490, 47 Am. St. Rep. 58; W. U. Tel. Co. v. Motley (Sup.) 27 S. W. 52; W. U. Tel. Co. v. Redinger (Civ. App.) 53 S. W. 156; Swearingen v. W. U. Tel. Co. (Sup.) 78 S. W. 491. The foregoing principle may be correct, if the evidence went no further than to show that plaintiff would have wired to have the funeral postponed. This would fall short of showing that the funeral would have been postponed in consequence of the telegram, a deficiency of evidence in the Texas cases which was supplied in the present case. On the contrary, in Telegraph Co. v. Zane (Tex. Civ. App.) 25 S. W. 722, it was held that (quoting from the syllabus): "A telegram stating that J. is dangerously sick is sufficient to notify the company that J. was a relation of the addressee, that it was sent to enable him to go to J., and that that would be the probable action taken on its receipt." In the case of Swearingen v. Tel. Co., supra, cited by appellant, it was held that (quoting from the syllabus) "damages from a father's failure to be present at his son's funeral on account of delay in the transmission of a telegram reading, 'Come, Frank is dead,' are within the contemplation of the parties to the contract of transmission, and are recoverable, though a reply message from the father would have been necessary to secure a postponement of the funeral, so as to admit of his reaching the place of interment in time." The only difference between that case and this case is that the telegram in the Swearingen Case contained the word "come" in addition to the notification as to death. But we do not regard the difference as essential in principle. When the message relates to the serious illness or death of a person, a telegraph company is bound to take notice that the addressee has an interest in the subject of the message, and that in the case of a near relative the probability is that the addressee will follow the promptings of nature and respond to the message, and, if possible, at once set out to attend the sick bedside or the funeral, as the case may be. The telegraph company is bound to know that mental suffering may be the result of failure to deliver a death message, and whether it thinks of it or has it in actual contemplation at the time of the contract of transmission is of no consequence, provided the mental suffering results naturally and proximately from its negligence in doing its duty.

In the case of Harrison v. Berkley, 1 Strob. 525, 47 Am. Dec. 578, a slave's death was held to be the natural and proximate result of the sale of liquor to him in violation of law, which produced intoxication, which resulted in exposure, from which he died. In the case of Pickens v. Railroad Co., 54 S. C. 504, 32 S. E. 567, it was held proper to submit to the jury whether the injury to the plaintiff from exposure to a sudden storm, after she left the depot because of the defendant's failure to provide transportation according to contract, was the natural and proximate result of such breach of duty. In this case there was some evidence tending to show that the failure to postpone the funeral was the result of the failure of plaintiff to telegraph as to his coming, and that plaintiff's failure to so telegraph and to take the train for Coleman, Fla., on the afternoon of December 18th, was the result of the long delay of defendant in delivering the telegram; that is to say, had the telegram been promptly delivered, plaintiff would have wired at once that he was coming, and would have taken a train which would have enabled him to have reached the place of the funeral in time. A postponement of the funeral for one hour would have been sufficient. Had the judge charged as requested, he would have taken from the jury a question which properly belonged to them; it being their province, where there is any evidence at all tending that way, to determine whether the injury alleged is the proximate result of the negligence charged.

2. The third exception imputes error in refusing to charge the following request: "The question of what compensatory damages, if any, plaintiff is entitled to recover—that is to say, the measure of damages—is governed in this case by the law of the state of Florida, where the contract for sending the message involved was made. Under the law of Florida, any mental anguish which does not accompany or proceed from a physical injury is not an element of damage, and cannot be recovered on account of a breach of contract or negligence. I therefore charge you that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover in this case for the mental anguish he claims to have suffered in not seeing his dead brother and attending the funeral, as alleged, due to any breach of contract by the telegraph company, or negligence in transmitting and delivering the telegram involved." The action not being based upon a Florida contract, but being in tort for a breach in this state of a duty imposed by the laws of this state, it was proper to refuse the request. Hellams v. Telegraph Co., 70 S. C. 83, 49 S. E. 12; Harrison v. Telegraph Co., 71 S. C. 386, 51 S. E. 119.

The exceptions are overruled, and the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

(72 S. C. 411)

JENNINGS v. EDGEFIELD MFG. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 7, 1905.)

1. APPEAL—REVIEW—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action for personal injuries, there was no motion of nonsuit as to the cause of action for punitive damages, and no request to charge that the plaintiff was not entitled under the evidence to recover the same, the Supreme Court cannot inquire if there was any evidence to warrant a finding of the same.

2. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

That the court in his charge states an admitted fact does not make the charge one on the facts.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Trial, §§ 432-434.]

3. SAME—NECESSITY OF REQUEST.

Where modifications of instructions are desired, requests submitting such modifications should be submitted.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Trial, § 623.]

4. SAME.

An instruction as to elements of damage in an action for personal injuries which have universal judicial recognition is not a charge on the facts, where the fact of injury was not in dispute.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT—DANGEROUS APPLIANCES.

The law imputes to the master the knowledge of danger, though latent, in the use of appliances which he provides for his servant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, § 246.]

6. SAME.

The test of a master's duty in furnishing appliances is whether he furnished such as were reasonably safe, and not whether they were of the character "ordinarily in use."

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, §§ 173, 178.]

7. APPEAL—REVIEW—EXCEPTIONS TO EVIDENCE.

Exceptions to the admission of evidence will not be considered, where no grounds are stated in the printed case or the argument.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, § 4259.]

8. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—REPETITION.

Where the court has already charged that a master is not liable for injury due to the ordinary hazards of the business or the negligence of the servant, failure to repeat the instruction in plaintiff's request as to the master's duty to furnish safe appliances is not error.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Trial, §§ 651-659.]

9. SAME.

Where all the main issues in the cause are covered by the charge, failure to charge a proposition not covered by request is not error.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Trial, §§ 627, 630.]

10. MASTER AND SERVANT—DEFECT IN APPLIANCES—KNOWLEDGE OF MASTER.

Where a master supplies an appliance, and has knowledge of a defect therein, he cannot escape liability for injury to a servant from the defect, on the ground that the duty of the servant was to inspect the machinery, and that he failed to discover the defect, where he gave no notice of the same.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, § 299.]

52 S.E.—2

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Edgefield County; Purdy, Judge.

Action by A. H. Jennings against the Edgefield Manufacturing Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The following are the defendant's exceptions:

"(1) Excepts because his honor erred in charging the jury that 'it was the duty of the defendant company to keep the means and appliances and machinery in proper condition, to keep them in proper repair,' whereas he should have charged the jury that it was the duty of the defendant company to furnish proper machinery and appliances to the engineer, to plaintiff herein, to enable him to operate the machinery, and it was the duty of the engineer to use said appliances in such a manner as to keep the machinery and appliances in proper repair and in a reasonably safe condition.

"(2) Excepts because his honor erred in charging the jury as follows: 'Where a person in the employment of another is injured through the default or neglect of the master who employs him, and the injury is due to said fault or neglect, then the party can recover.' It is respectfully submitted that this is a charge upon the facts and in violation of the Constitution, in that the judge assumes that there was an injury.

"(3) Excepts because his honor erred in charging the jury that they 'might give punitive damages in this case,' when there is no testimony showing willfulness, recklessness, wantonness, and disregard of the servant's rights.

"(4) Excepts because his honor erred in charging the jury as follows: 'Was his injury due to the negligence of the defendant, the ordinary negligence of the defendant, in the situation in which the plaintiff was placed?' It is respectfully submitted that this is a charge upon the facts, and in violation of the Constitution, in that the judge assumes that the plaintiff was injured.

"(5) Because his honor erred in charging as follows: 'Was his injury due to the negligence of the defendant, the ordinary negligence of the defendant, in the situation in which the plaintiff was placed? If so, he can recover such actual or compensatory damages as may be entitled'—whereas he should have charged that if the defendant was negligent and the plaintiff did not contribute to that negligence of the defendant, was the sole and proximate cause of the injury, if there was an injury, then he could recover actual damages.

"(6) Because his honor erred in charging the jury in reference to punitive damages; there being no testimony upon which the jury could infer or conclude that the defendant acted in a reckless, willful manner, or in utter disregard of the plaintiff's rights.

"(7) Because his honor erred in charging the second request of the plaintiff; that is: 'It is the duty of the master to provide suits-ble machinery and appliances and keep them in proper repair, and the employé has the right to assume that the master has discharged his duty in this respect, and is not bound to exercise care in ascertaining whether the master has so acted.' The judge should have charged in this case that it was the duty of the plaintiff, acting as engineer in charge of this machinery and appliances, to keep the same in proper repair.

"(8) Because the judge erred in charging the jury the third request of the plaintiff; that is: 'A master is liable for injury to his servant caused by his own negligence or the negligence of any person representing him, and the person employed to do anything which is the master's duty to do is the master's representative.'

"(9) Because the judge erred in charging the fifth request of the plaintiff: 'If there is a defect in appliances, inclusive of a place to work, then whether a servant is guilty of contributory negligence by remaining in the employ of the master after knowledge of such defect is a question for the jury.'

"(10) Because the judge erred in charging the sixth request of the plaintiff; that is to say: 'There can be no assumption of risk by an employé without knowledge of the risk, as the doctrine of the assumption of risk depends upon agreement or waiver, which depends upon such knowledge.'

"(11) Because the judge erred in charging the eighth request of the plaintiff; that is: 'It is the duty of the master, when a servant is set to work in a dangerous place or with dangerous machinery, material, or other appliances, where he knows or ought to know that the servant is not aware of the danger, to notify him of the same.'

"(12) Because the judge erred in charging the ninth request of the plaintiff; that is: 'The physical and mental pain and suffering which the plaintiff has already endured by reason thereof, and also that which he is likely to experience in the future by reason thereof, the impairment of health, resulting from such injury or sickness, the pecuniary loss sustained up to the trial of the case, and the pecuniary loss to earn in the future'—because this is a charge upon the facts and is a violation of the Constitution.

"(13) Because the judge erred in charging the tenth request of the plaintiff; that is: 'If the jury find that the plaintiff was injured by wantonness or recklessness on the part of the defendant, and that such wantonness and recklessness was the proximate cause of the injury, then he would be entitled to punitive damages, the amount being in the discretion of the jury'—there being an entire absence of any testimony showing recklessness or wantonness on the part of the defendant towards the plaintiff, it being the special duty of the plaintiff to look after this special machinery and appliance, and because the charge does not limit the jury to the amount fixed in the complaint.

"(14) Because the judge erred in charging the jury the twelfth request of the plaintiff; that is: 'The law imputes to the master the knowledge of the danger, even though latent, in the use of instrumentality with which he provides the servant. He cannot escape liability by showing he is ignorant of the fact, unless he could further show that by use of due diligence he could not have discovered the danger.'

"(15) Because the judge erred in refusing to charge the defendant's request to charge No. 6, as same was written, but by elimination therefrom the words, 'and of the character ordinarily in use'—the said request as written being as follows: '(6) It is not the duty of the employer to furnish the best machinery and appliances that are obtainable. His duty is discharged when he furnishes machinery and appliances which are reasonably safe and suitable, for the intended use and of the character ordinarily in use, having regard for the character of the services required.'

"(16) Because his honor erred in permitting the plaintiff's attorney to ask the following question, and the same over objection: 'Q. You did not accept $30 to pay for your damages? A. No, sir.'

"(17) Because the court erred in allowing J. T. Robinson to testify 'that he saw Mr. Sossaman taking it out once' (take the pipe out once), and allowed the witness to testify, over objections of the defendant, with reference to taking up a pipe by Mr. Sossaman, three or four years prior to the accident.

"(18) Because the judge did not allow the witness of the defendant, J. H. Walker, to answer the following question, on objection by plaintiff's attorney: 'Q. If Jennings allowed the fireman to stop up the pipe, whose carelessness would it be?'

"(19) Because his honor erred in charging the first request of the plaintiff to charge as follows: 'The master is bound to use ordinary care in providing a reasonably safe place in which, and reasonably safe and proper appliances and instruments with which, the servant may do his work. Appliances include a place to work'—without adding the proper qualification, that the ordinary hazards of business are excepted, and that the plaintiff (servant) must not rashly and deliberately expose himself to unnecessary and unreasonable risks.

"(20) Because his honor erred in his general charge as a whole in not instructing the jury, in the light of the circumstances of this case, that among the assumptions of risks of an employé incident to the business are the carelessness of those at least in the same work or employment, with whose habit, conduct, and capacity he has in the course of his duties and opportunities become acquainted, and against whose negligence or incompetence he may take such precaution as his inclination or judgment may suggest.

"(21) Because his honor erred in his general charge in not making clear to the jury the distinction between the duty of a master and servant, with reference to third parties and the neglect of the servant to do the very thing required of him in his duties, and in not charging the jury that if in this case it was the duty of the plaintiff as servant, as engineer, to look after the engine room and its fixtures and pipes, and the plaintiff, as such engineer, failed to look after the same, and if the negligence brought about the conditions which resulted in his injury, if he was injured, then he could not recover."

Tompkins & Wells, Sheppard Bros., N. G. Evans, and Mordecai & Gadsden, for appellant. J. Wm. Thurmond, S. McG. Simkins, and Jas. H. Tillman, for respondent.

WOODS, J. The plaintiff, who was an engineer at defendant's mill, in charge at night of the engine and boiler and of the pipes attached to them, was injured while going from the engine to the pump by stepping into a pool of hot water, made by the breaking of a defective underground pipe. The judgment was for the plaintiff, and the defendant appeals.

Gardner, master mechanic of the mill, under whom plaintiff worked, testified his own duties "were to keep up the machinery and to see that everything was in running condition." His testimony, and that of other witnesses for plaintiff, was to the effect that before the accident he had twice seen the pool of hot water, and his attention had been called to the defective pipe, and, instead of repairing it, being "pushed up with work," he "poked in cinders" to stop the hole, and "just let it go." He stated also that he had talked to the superintendent about the defective pipe a few days before the accident. This witness further says, upon examination after the accident, he found the pipe "corroded and eat up with rust; little bubbles, holes, all through it." The plaintiff was on duty only at night, and testified he had no information before the accident that there had been a leak or that the pipe was defective. There were two ways of going from the engine to the pump used by the employees of the mill—one through the door, and the other through a window. The plaintiff was injured on the way that led to the window, whereas, if he had gone through the door, the accident could not have occurred. The superintendent, Spencer, testified he had given both Gardner and Jennings specific instructions not to allow any one to use the way through the window. He denied the knowledge imputed to him by Gardner, the master mechanic, of the defects which were alleged to have caused the injury. There was evidence on the part of defendant to the effect that the pipe was stopped at its vent by clinkers dumped there by the fireman, who was working under the direction of the plaintiff, and that the steam and hot water would not have escaped and made the pool, but for this stoppage. The foregoing statement indicates the issues of fact with sufficient clearness for an understanding of the questions of law made by the appeal.

1. The record furnishes no ground for this court to inquire whether there was any evidence to warrant a verdict for punitive damages. There was no motion for a nonsuit as to the cause of action for punitive damages, and no request to charge that under the proof the plaintiff was not entitled to such damages. In the absence of such action on the part of the defendant, it was not reversible error for the circuit judge to charge the general law applicable to that cause of action. This disposes of the third, sixth, and thirteenth exceptions.

2. The second and fourth exceptions fail because it is too manifest for anything more than mere statement that when the circuit judge said, "Where a person in the employment of another is injured through the default or neglect of the master who employs him, and the injury is due to said fault or neglect, then the party can recover," he announced a proposition of law and did not charge on the facts. Plaintiff's injury was no more in dispute than his name, and, as has been often said by this court, it was not error for the circuit judge to assume the fact in his charge.

The fifth exception cannot be sustained, because the charge fully and clearly stated the law as to contributory negligence as requested by defendant.

3. The appellant fails to state in what respect the propositions taken from the charge in the eighth, ninth, tenth, and eleventh exceptions are erroneous. They are as follows:

"A master is liable for injury to his servant caused by his own negligence or the negligence of any person representing him, and the person employed to do anything which is the master's duty to do is the master's representative.

"If there is a defect in appliances, inclusive of a place to work, then whether a servant is guilty of contributory negligence by remaining in the employ of the master after knowledge of such defect is a question for the jury.

"There can be no assumption of risk by an employé without knowledge of the risk, as the doctrine of assumption of risk depends upon agreement or waiver, which depends upon such knowledge.

"It is the duty of the master, when a servant is set to work in a dangerous place or with dangerous machinery, material, or other appliances, where he knows, or ought to know, that the servant is not aware of the danger, to notify him of the same."

No one will dispute that these are correct general statements of the law. If instructions were desired as to what constitutes representation of the master and what the duties of the master are, or when assumption of the risk may be presumed from remaining in the employment of the master after knowledge or notice of the defect and of the danger, and as to when such notice or knowledge will be imputed, requests should have been submitted covering the modification or elaboration desired. State v. Kendall, 54 S. C. 192, 32 S. E. 300; Crosswell v. Association, 51 S. C. 103, 28 S. E. 200; State v. Adams, 68 S. C. 421, 47 S. E. 676, and authorities cited.

4. The defendant insists by his twelfth exception that a charge on the facts was contained in the following instruction: "If the jury believe from all the evidence that the defendant is liable to the plaintiff for damages in this case, in estimating the same you may consider the following elements of damages, if you find them to exist in this case: Loss of time to the plaintiff; expense incurred by reason of injury or sickness, if there was any, the physical and mental pain and suffering which the plaintiff has already endured by reason thereof, and also that which he is liable to experience in the future by reason thereof; the impairment of health resulting from such injury or sickness; the pecuniary loss sustained up to the trial of this case by reason of such injury or sickness, and the pecuniary loss to the capacity to earn in the future." As these elements of damage have universal judicial recognition, we can conceive of no view, and counsel have suggested none, in which this can be regarded a charge "in respect to matters of fact"; the fact of injury not being in dispute.

5. The charge as to the duty of the master to use due diligence to discover latent defects, quoted in the fourteenth exception, is in accordance with the rule laid down in Chase v. Electric Co., 64 S. C. 215, 41 S. E. 899.

6. The test of a master's duty in furnishing appliances is whether he furnished such as were reasonably safe and suitable, not whether they are "of the character ordinarily in use," and therefore the words just quoted from the defendant's request on this subject were properly stricken out. Lowrimer v. Palmer Mfg. Co., 60 S. C. 153, 38 S. E. 430.

7. In the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth exceptions defendant complains of the admission and the exclusion of certain evidence, but no grounds are stated either in the printed case or the argument; hence we are unable to consider these exceptions, and assume they are regarded of no importance.

8. The circuit judge having already charged in effect that the master was not liable for an injury due to the ordinary hazards of the business, or the rashness or negligence of the servant himself, the failure to repeat the instruction as a modification of plaintiff's request as to the master's duty to furnish safe appliances and a safe place obviously was not error. The nineteenth exception is overruled.

9. The twentieth and twenty-first exceptions complain of error in not charging certain propositions of law. The circuit judge made a general and comprehensive charge, embracing all the issues as they had been made to appear to him in the course of the trial. He then charged every request submitted by the defendant, with the slight modification above referred to in discussing the fourteenth exception. These requests did not include the proposition which it is now submitted should have been charged. It is manifestly too late to submit them now.

10. The defendant strenuously urges that the first and seventh exceptions should be sustained. They are as follows: "(1) Except because his honor erred in charging the jury that 'it was the duty of the defendant company to keep the means and appliances and machinery in proper condition, to keep them in proper repair,' whereas he should have charged the jury that it was the duty of the defendant company to furnish proper machinery and appliances to the engineer, to plaintiff herein, to enable him to operate the machinery, and it was the duty of the engineer to use said appliances in such manner as to keep the machinery and appliances in proper repair and in a reasonably safe condition. * * * (7) Because his honor erred in charging the second request of the plaintiff; that is: 'It is the duty of the master to provide suitable machinery and appliances and keep them in proper repair, and the employé has the right to assume that the master has discharged his duty in this respect, and is not bound to exercise care in ascertaining whether the master has so acted.' The judge should have charged in this case that it was the duty of the plaintiff, acting as engineer in charge of this machinery and appliances, to keep the same in proper repair."

It might be sufficient to say that the modifications now suggested were not presented to the circuit judge; but, if they had been, it would have been error to adopt them. The defendant's position is that it was the duty of the plaintiff to see that the pipes were in repair while he had charge. Assuming this to be the duty ordinarily incident to plaintiff's employment, manifestly the defendant, as master, would not be allowed to supply an appliance which it knew to be defective, and then escape liability for injury to its servant (the plaintiff) due to the defect, on the ground that he was intrusted with the repair of the appliance and failed to discover the defect. Good faith in such case imposes on the master the duty to make known the defect. From the statement of the issues of fact made at the beginning of this opinion, it will be seen there was testimony to the effect that the defendant, through its superintendent, was fully advised of the defect, yet it failed to make the defect known to the plaintiff, and he was in entire ignorance of it. It is true the superintendent denied the knowledge imputed to him, but upon this point the testimony raised a vital issue of fact. To have charged without qualification that it was plaintiff's duty to keep the pipe in repair would have placed upon him responsibility to discover and repair a defect not known to him as servant, without respect to the duty of the defendant, as master, to impart to him, as servant, the actual knowledge of the defect imputed to it by some of the witnesses. These exceptions are therefore overruled.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(73 S. C. 434)

PROVIDENCE MACH. CO. v. BROWNING et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina, June 30, 1905. On Rehearing, Oct. 7, 1905.)

1. EVIDENCE—DECLARATIONS.

A conversation between two partners as to taking in a third person as partner, in his absence, is inadmissible on the question of partnership.

2. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

Error in the exclusion of evidence is harmless, where testimony substantially the same as that excluded was afterwards admitted.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, §§ 4200-4205.]

3. EVIDENCE—QUESTION OF FACT.

Evidence of a contracting party as to whether he consented to a variation of the contract involved is a question of fact, and not of law, and admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 20, Cent. Dig. Evidence, §§ 2150, 2151.]

4. PARTNERSHIP—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

There cannot be a partnership without an agreement, express or implied, and a person cannot be a partner unless he agrees to embark in the undertaking and to share in the profits and losses.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 38, Cent. Dig. Partnership, §§ 4, 27.]

5. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—POWERS OF AGENT.

Where an agent is appointed solely to rent the land of his principal, or to do whatever he pleased with it, he has no authority to bind his principal, so as to make her a party to a partnership involving the use of the land.

6. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

Failure to charge is no ground for an exception, where there was no request to charge.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Trial, § 627.]

7. APPEAL—EXCEPTIONS—REFUSAL OF NEW TRIAL.

Where an exception assigns error in refusal to grant a new trial, on the ground that the uncontradicted evidence showed defendant was a partner, it cannot be sustained, where the facts mentioned in the exception were susceptible of more than one inference, and there was testimony tending to show that defendant was not a partner.

8. GUARANTY—DISCHARGE OF GUARANTOR.

A guaranty provided that if the debtor should fail to pay any notes, when due, given in "payment" of the debt, the guarantors would make good the amounts which might be due the creditor in accordance with his contract with the debtor. Thereafter the creditor sent a letter acknowledging the receipt of two notes, and continuing, "Inclosed please find statement in settlement." The statement set forth the amount due and credited the debtor with receipt of two notes. To the statement was added, "Settled as above." Held, that it was incumbent on the guarantors to establish the fact that the words "in settlement" in the letter and statement were used in a different sense than the word "payment" in the guaranty.

9. SAME.

Where guarantors had agreed to become liable if a debtor failed to pay for certain machinery bought, the taking of negotiable paper from the debtor did not discharge the guarantor, where the agreement with the guarantor looked to the execution thereafter of negotiable notes by the debtor.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Laurens County; Watts, Judge.

Action by the Providence Machine Company against M. E. Browning and others. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

N. B. Dial and F. P. McGowan, for appellant. Ferguson & Featherstone and H. J. Haynesworth, for respondents.

GARY, A. J. Upon the third trial of this case, the jury rendered a verdict in favor of the defendant Mrs. M. E. Browning. The facts of the case are fully set out in the opinions of the court upon the former appeals, reported in 68 S. C. 1, 46 S. E. 550, and 70 S. C. 148, 49 S. E. 325.

1. The first exception is as follows: "(1) Because his honor, Judge Watts, erred in excluding the testimony offered at the trial by the plaintiff, as follows: Striking out or excluding the following statement of L. W. C. Blalock, a witness for the defendant, on cross-examination: 'Q. Had you any conversation with your father about the mills? A. Yes, sir. I told him my idea about building a mill, and he wanted me to make a larger mill. Told me if I would make it a 10,000 spindle mill, he would help me if I took sister in'—the object of the testimony being to show the conduct of James and L. W. C. Blalock, two of the partners, in projecting the enterprise on the plan of associating Mrs. Browning as a partner; the error being in excluding circumstantial evidence bearing upon the formation and identity of the members of the partnership of the Goldville Manufacturing Company." Mrs. Browning was not present when the conversation took place, and the testimony was therefore irrelevant. Furthermore, it tended to show that she was not a member of the partnership at the time of the conversation.

2. The second exception is as follows: "(2) Excluding the testimony of L. W. C. Blalock, a witness for the defendant, on cross-examination, as to the management of Mrs. M. E. Browning's land at Goldville, and the disposition of her land, crops, and material in connection with organizing, building, and equipping the cotton mill of the Goldville Manufacturing Company, the object of the testimony being to show that Mrs. Browning's property, with her knowledge and consent, was applied to the organization, building, or equipping of the Goldville Manufacturing Company; the error of the exclusion being to prevent the plaintiff from showing the existence of a silent or a dormant partner, by contribution to the capital stock." Testimony substantially the same as that mentioned in the exception was afterwards introduced in evidence without objection, and really the facts do not seem to have been in dispute. Under these circumstances there was no prejudicial error.

The third exception is as follows: "(3) Excluding the testimony of L. W. C. Blalock, a witness for the defendant, on cross-examination, as to how much stock Mrs. Browning was to have in the corporation of the Goldville Manufacturing Company, the object being to show the relation of Mrs. Browning to the partnership, by her relation to the company, upon the principle of connection between effect and cause; the error being prejudicial in excluding circumstantial evidence tending to show her relation to the partnership." His honor, the presiding judge, permitted the introduction of the testimony for the purpose which the appellant contended rendered it admissible.

The fourth exception was abandoned.

The fifth exception is as follows: "(5) In excluding the testimony of L. W. C. Blalock, on cross-examination, as follows: 'Q. What was the indebtedness of the corporation (Goldville Manufacturing Company)?—the object of the testimony being to show the amount of debts at the time of incorporation and the identity of projectors of the corporation who contracted debts; the error being the exclusion of circumstantial evidence relating to the partnership.' The question arose as follows: 'Q. I believe you said, a while ago, the Goldville Manufacturing Company went through bankruptcy—don't you know the Goldville Manufacturing Company was sold? A. Yes, sir. Q. So that corporation is not now in existence at all? A. No, sir. Q. What was the indebtedness of that corporation?' The question had reference to the indebtedness at the time of its bankruptcy, and not to indebtedness at the time of incorporation as set out in the exception.

3. The sixth exception is as follows: "(6) in permitting Mrs. Browning, as a witness, to answer the following question, against plaintiff's objection: 'State whether or not you consented to the variation of this contract, if there was a variation?'—the error being the assumption of the existence of an issuable question of law and not of fact, and propounding to the witness a question of law and not of fact." Consent may be given in express terms, or it may be implied from facts and circumstances. The question evidently related to the giving of consent in express terms, and this involved a question of fact.

The seventh exception was abandoned.

4. The eighth exception is as follows: "(8) Because his honor, Judge Watts, erred in charging the jury as follows: 'If there was no agreement between Mrs. Browning and Mr. Blalock, as alleged in the complaint, if there was no mutual agreement to embark in an undertaking, and if she did not agree to enter into a contract with them and go into business with them and share profits and losses, then she was not a partner'—the errors being (a) that there was an allegation of a partnership agreement in the complaint; (b) that it left the impression upon the jury, which was prejudicial, that it was necessary to the status of partnership that a mutual agreement should be entered into between the parties specifically stipulating that they should go into business and share the profits and losses as between them; (c) that, while such specific and express agreement would constitute partnership, such a status could exist between two or more persons without any agreement to that effect, as by contributing labor, capital, or skill to some lawful undertaking for the common benefit of the persons interested." There cannot be a partnership without an agreement, express or implied. Furthermore, that part of the charge mentioned in the exception must be construed in connection with the entire charge, which shows that there was no error.

5. The ninth exception is as follows: "(9) He erred in charging the jury as follows: 'But if she simply turned a plantation or a house or anything of that sort over to him to let him rent it or collect the rent, or anything of that sort, then she could not be bound by anything that he did which was in excess of the authority. If Mrs. Browning was owner of a tract of land, and did not give Mr. Blalock authority more than to take charge and rent the land out or to do what he pleased, and that was the extent of his authority, then she could not be bound by anything he did for her, other than within the scope of that authority. You cannot make any one a partner against their will'—the errors being (a) a charge upon the facts, or in respect to matters of fact proven in the case, in violation of article 5, § 26, of the state Constitution, and making a hypothetical statement of a part of the testimony in the case and drawing a conclusion therefrom that Mrs. Browning was not a partner, in regard to the use of her lands, products and materials by her agents, L. W. C. and Jas. S. Blalock, in contributing to the capital stock of the Goldville Manufacturing Company." The charge contained a correct proposition of law, and the statement of the facts therein mentioned was not prejudicial to the appellant.

6. The tenth, eleventh, and twelfth exceptions merely assign error in the failure to charge the propositions therein mentioned, and cannot be sustained, for the reason that there were no requests to charge.

7. The thirteenth exception is as follows:

"(13) Because his honor erred in refusing plaintiff's motion for new trial: (a) In that the verdict was against the testimony and unsupported by it, both as to the alleged partnership and as to the guaranty. The testimony of the defendant showed that Mrs. Browning's money, land, products and material contributed to the capital stock of the partnership before the corporation was formed. The documentary evidence, the guaranty, notes, and settlement sheet, all showed that the parties did not contemplate a change or release of the guarantor's liability for the debt. (b) The verdict was manifestly against the weight of the evidence both as a partnership and the guaranty, because the verdict was manifestly against the charge of the presiding judge, when the uncontradicted testimony showed that Mrs. Browning's land, money, products, and materials were used in building and equipping the plant of the Goldville Manufacturing Company for the common benefit of the Blalock family. The presiding judge charged that the contribution of labor, capital, or skill to a lawful undertaking constituted relation to partnership. The presiding judge charged that (c) a jury should find for the plaintiff, if there was no agreement of the parties upon a new and valuable consideration to extend the time of the performance of the contract, or unless there was an agreement or understanding of the parties that the notes were received in extinguishment or satisfaction of the debt, and there was no such testimony, and only one inference could be drawn from the testimony, and that inference was that the notes were received as security for the debt, and that the account was credited by the notes, or that they were received by the plaintiff 'in payment' of the debt as stipulated by the parties in the guaranty." In so far as the exception assigns error in the refusal to grant a new trial, on the ground that the uncontradicted testimony showed that Mrs. Browning was a partner and that the verdict of the jury was against the charge of the presiding judge, it cannot be sustained, because (1) the facts mentioned in the exception were susceptible of more than one inference, and (2) because there was other testimony tending to show that Mrs. Browning was not a partner.

8. We will next consider whether there was error in refusing the motion for a new trial, on the ground that there was no testimony tending to show an agreement of the parties upon a new and valuable consideration to extend the time for the performance of the contract, or that the notes were received in extinguishment or satisfaction of the debt, otherwise as contemplated in the original contract. The defendant in her answer set up as a defense that the notes materially changed the terms of the original contract, by extending the time of payment, and also as a defense that the notes were accepted in satisfaction of the indebtedness created by the guaranty. There was no testimony whatever tending to prove the facts which the former opinion (70 S. C. 148, 49 S. E. 325) showed were necessary to sustain the first defense. But the fact that there was no testimony tending to establish the first defense would not entitle the plaintiff to a new trial, if there was testimony tending to sustain the other defense, as the verdict would be referred to the latter defense. The defendant contends that the words "in settlement," used in the letter and statement, furnished evidence of an intention to extinguish the indebtedness created by the guaranty.

The guaranty was as follows:

"Whereas, the Goldville Manufacturing Co., Goldville, S. C., have purchased machinery from Providence Machine Co., Providence, R. I., amounting to $9,104.52, payable one-half cash, one-fourth in six months, one-fourth in twelve months; deferred payments to be secured by bankable notes bearing interest at six per cent. per annum: We hereby agree to indorse the said notes, and should the Goldville Manufacturing Co., fail to pay for the said machinery on terms of contract made between themselves and Providence Machine Co., dated July 30, 1900, or shall fail to pay any notes when due which are given in payment, we, the undersigned, do hereby bind and obligate ourselves, jointly and severally, each with the other and the Providence Machine Co., to make good and pay to Providence Machine Co. the amounts which may be due them in accordance with the contract above mentioned. Goldville Manufacturing Co., per J. S. Blalock. J. S. Blalock. L. W. C. Blalock. M. E. Browning. Goldville, S. C., Sept. 7, 1900."

The letter and statement were as follows:

"Providence, R. I., May 6, 1901. Goldville Manufacturing Co., Goldville, S. C.—Gentlemen: Two notes duly to hand. Enclosed please find statement in settlement. The item of $81.94 is for interest on $4,552.26, or one-half of account, from due date, January 12th to May 1st, date of notes (would refer you to your letter of April 22). We trust you will find it correct. Yours truly, W. C. Pierce, Treas."

"Providence, R. I., May 1, 1901.

"Goldville Manufacturing Co. to Providence Machine Co., Dr.

Terms cash. Office 564 Eddy street.

1900. For account rendered.
Dec. 12. For merchandise, per bill rendered.....	$9,104 52
1901. Cr.
Jan. 31. By cash.....	4,552 26
	$4,552 26
108 days interest from Jan. 12th to May 1st.....	81 94
	$4,634 20
May 6. By note May 1, 6 mos.....	2,317 10
By note May 1, 12 mos....	2,317 10
	$4,634 20

"Settled as above May 6, 1901.

"Providence Machine Co., by F. Pierce,"

This court, in delivering the opinion upon the former hearing (reported in 70 S. C. 148, 49 S. E. 325), used this language: "Merely construing the language of the warranty, it is manifest that the parties did not contemplate that the giving of the notes 'in payment' of the indebtedness should be 'in settlement' of the liability resting upon the obligors under the terms of the warranty. Therefore, if the words 'in settlement,' in the letter and statement, were used in the sense of the word 'payment,' as intended by the parties in the guaranty, then they do not show that the plaintiff intended to release the defendant from her obligation as a guarantor. Whether the words were so used presents a question of fact for the jury." The words "in payment," used in the guaranty, and the words "in settlement," mentioned in the letter and statement, are of similar import and meaning. It was therefore incumbent on the defendant to establish the fact that the words in the letter and statement were used in a different sense from similar words in the guaranty. She, however, failed to introduce any testimony tending to prove this fact.

The defendant also contends that the acceptance of the notes was prima facie evidence of an intention to extinguish the liability existing under the guaranty. Ordinarily, when a creditor takes new negotiable paper from the debtor, the guarantor is prima facie discharged; but the understanding of the parties at the time of the transaction will, of course, prevail. 27 Enc. of Law, 491; Morse v. Ellerbe, 4 Rich. Law, 600. When, however, there is an agreement looking to the execution thereafter of negotiable notes, and notes, in form such as the parties contemplated, are delivered, the presumption is that they were intended to carry into effect the terms of the original contract, and it is incumbent on the party contending otherwise to show that they were delivered for a different purpose. The guaranty in this case contemplated the giving of negotiable notes as additional security, and the presumption is that the notes were so intended. In this case the burden rested upon the defendant to rebut the presumption. After careful examination of the record, we are unable to find any testimony tending to prove the facts necessary to establish the second defense.

As there was no testimony tending to sustain either defense, it was error to refuse the motion for a new trial.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. After careful consideration of the petition for a rehearing, the court is satisfied that no material question of law or of fact has either been disregarded or overlooked.

It is therefore ordered that the petition be dismissed, and that the order heretofore granted staying the remittitur be revoked.

(72 S. C. 453)

KAYLOR et al. v. HILLER et al.
(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 7, 1905.)

1. JUDGES—POWERS OF SUCCEEDING JUDGE—FILING ANSWER.

An order of a judge allowing defendant time within which to file an answer after default is an administrative order, as distinguished from a final order, and does not involve the merits, so that a succeeding circuit judge has power to modify it by permitting an answer to be filed after a second default.

2. SAME—DOCKETING CASE.

A succeeding circuit judge may cause a case to be placed on its appropriate calendar, as the docketing of the case appertains to the orderly conduct of the business of the court and takes the place of notice of trial.

3. TRUSTS—ACTION—TRUSTEE AS PARTY.

Where plaintiff makes a trustee a party as such, and alleges that he is interested in the subject of the action, it was within the discretion of the court to require him to answer for the protection of his beneficiary.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Richland County; Purdy, Judge.

Action by Felicita Rosetta Kaylor and others against Louis P. Hiller and others. From an order permitting defendants to answer after default, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

De Pass & De Pass and D. W. Robinson, for appellants. W. S. Monteith and Thomas & Thomas, for respondents.

JONES, J. In this action to recover possession of real estate, the defendants failed to answer the complaint within 20 days after service of summons, and moved Judge Watts for leave to file an answer. Judge Watts, by an order, dated July 7, 1904, allowed defendants to file their answer within 20 days thereafter, upon payment to plaintiffs of $10. The defendants failed to comply with this order. They then, on November 18, 1904, served notice of a motion to be made November 21, 1904, before Judge Purdy, for leave to file answer. When the motion was called, 8 days after notice, upon objection of plaintiffs' counsel to hearing the same for want of proper notice, the court of its own motion set November 24, 1904, as the day for hearing, over objection of plaintiffs' attorneys. The motion was heard on that day, and an order was granted by Judge Purdy allowing defendants to answer within 5 days, upon the same terms as imposed by the order of Judge Watts. In this order Judge Purdy on his own motion required Louis Paul Hiller, who was made defendant, both in his individual capacity and as trustee, to also file answer as such trustee. The plaintiffs in their appeal from this order present three questions: (1) Whether sufficient notice of the motion before Judge Purdy had been given. (2) Whether Judge Purdy had the right to allow answer to be filed after the expiration of the time fixed in the order of Judge Watts. (3) Whether Judge Purdy erred in ordering Louis Paul Hiller to file answer as trustee, on his own motion.

1. The exception as to want of sufficient notice was not alluded to in argument, and for that reason should probably be deemed abandoned. Appellants, however, have no ground for complaint, as the motion was not heard until six days after the notice thereof, when four days' notice was sufficient.

2. We think Judge Purdy had the right to allow defendants to file answer after the expiration of the time fixed in the order of Judge Watts. The order of Judge Watts belongs to the class of administrative orders as distinguished from final orders. The order does not involve the merits and makes no determination which would authorize plaintiffs to have judgment against defendants; hence cases along the line of Brown v. Easterling, 59 S. C. 479, 88 S. E. 118, do not apply. That case held that a succeeding circuit judge has no power to permit the plaintiff to serve an amended complaint after expiration of the time prescribed therefor, in an order sustaining the demurrer to the complaint and granting leave to serve an amended complaint. The judgment on demurrer was a determination of the merits and authorized dismissal of the complaint upon failure to comply with the terms offered. For the same reason it is held that an order requiring security for costs to be filed by a day stated, or in default thereof that the plaintiff be nonsuited, cannot be reviewed or reversed by a succeeding circuit court (Bomar v. Railroad Co., 30 S. C. 458, 9 S. E. 512; Cummings v. Wingo, 31 S. C. 432, 10 S. E. 107); the ruling resting upon the ground that the judgment of nonsuit became final upon failure to comply with the alternative. But in the present case the order authorized no judgment to be rendered in favor of plaintiffs upon failure to answer within the time prescribed. Indeed, as the action was to recover real estate, it falls within that class of cases, although there is default of answer, wherein the "relief to be afforded plaintiff shall be ascertained by the verdict of a jury," etc., as provided in section 267, Code Civ. Proc. 1902. The fact that the case was left docketed on calendar 3, upon failure to comply with Judge Watts' order, is not a material circumstance, as such docketing could not unalterably fix the status of the case. A succeeding circuit judge may cause a case to be placed upon its appropriate calendar, as the docketing of a case appertains to the orderly conduct of the business of the court, and takes the place of notice of trial. Bank v. Thompson, 46 S. C. 499, 24 S. E. 334. The order of Judge Watts being administrative instead of final, it was such an order as Judge Purdy in his discretion could modify.

3. No reason appears for disturbing the order of Judge Purdy in requiring, on his own motion, that defendant Louis Paul Hiller should answer in his capacity as trustee. The plaintiff made him a party as trustee, and alleged in the complaint that he is interested in the subject of the action as trustee.

Under this allegation, a trustee seems to be a proper and necessary party to the complete determination of the controversy, and it was clearly within the discretion of the court to require the trustee to answer for the protection of the cestui que trustent.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

(140 N. C. 115)

ROSS v. DOUBLE SHOALS COTTON MILLS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 28, 1905.)

1. NEGLIGENCE—RES IPSA LOQUITUR—EFFECT.

The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not relieve plaintiff of the burden of the issue, nor raise a presumption in plaintiff's favor, but merely carries the case to the jury, permitting it to infer negligence and find on all the evidence whether plaintiff has sustained his burden of proof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 37, Cent. Dig. Negligence, §§ 218, 225, 235.]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURIES TO SERVANT—DEFECTIVE MACHINERY—EVIDENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY—RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

While plaintiff was operating a machine in a cotton mill, it became clogged, and he stopped the machine by shifting the belt to a loose pulley, and attempted to remove the cotton. While so engaged the machine suddenly started from a cause unknown to plaintiff, and he was injured. There was evidence that the belt shifter fork was wider than the belt, and that this had been corrected by placing a piece of wood in the same, which might have fallen out and permitted the belt to shift to the tight pulley. Held, that the happening of the accident was of itself sufficient evidence of negligence to take the case to the jury, under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, § 1003.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Cleveland County; Justice, Judge.

Action by M. C. Ross against the Double Shoals Cotton Mills. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Action for personal injury sustained by plaintiff while operating a lapper in defendant company's mill. Plaintiff introduced Alfred Gilliam, who testified that he was 67 years of age, had worked at defendant's mill since he was 15 and up to two years ago. The lapper was purchased and put in mill six or seven years ago; examined, and found to be very good; nothing wrong with it; was not new. It was a 36-inch lapper, had been taken out of a mill to give place to a 40-inch one. It run very well. The worm gear gave out, and it gave trouble—a good deal first and last. The shaft, the coupling from the evenner plates, broke once—was off when left there. The belt shifter fork was wider than the belt, and put on a piece of wood to make it correspond with the width of the belt. Think put the piece of wood next to the tight pulley—am not certain. Have worked in cotton mills 52 years. Was superintendent of defendant mill 32 years. Nothing wrong with the machine. Evener plates under the feed rolls, then the beater bars—two arms or bars. Beater shaft revolves 1,400 or 1,500 times a minute. Bars cannot be seen when cap is down—arched cap on hinges. Could not get hurt when cap is down. Worm gear has no connection with beater or belting. If plaintiff got hurt by beater bars, the worm gear could not have affected it. Stop motion rod has no connection with beater bar. Beater bars are stopped by throwing the belt from the tight to the loose pulley by means of the belt shifter. There is no danger of operating machine that know of. The shaft, pulleys, belt, and beater shifter were brought into court, and used by witness in explaining testimony to jury. Plaintiff testified that he was hurt July, 1904, working for defendant. Had been a card hand. Ran machine an hour and a half, when it choked down, and belt ran off big pulley. Carded the belt off, and put belt grease on it to prevent belt from running off. Ran five or ten minutes and choked again. Moved the belt shifter, stopped machine, and carried two loads of cotton back to the hopper. Jim Champion came along; went to opposite side and raised cap from beater, and the plaintiff put his hand into the beater bars to get cotton out. Machine started by some means, and tore off my arm to my elbow; knocked me numb or paralyzed. Had run lapper three months before I was hurt. Belt ran off pulley, which runs beater, when I got hurt. Am certain that I changed belt shifter and stopped machine when it choked, but cannot tell how it started. When I went to unclog it, know of nothing that could have put the belt on tight pulley." At the close of the evidence defendant demurred, and moved the court to dismiss the action. Motion allowed. Judgment and appeal.

Webb & Mull and D. F. Morrow, for appellant. O. F. Mason and Ryburn & Hoey, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the case). We did not have a model of the machine or any of its parts before us by which to illustrate the testimony and argument. The plaintiff in the employment of defendant was on the day of the injury operating a lapper in defendant's cotton mill. The motive power was applied by a belt running over a pulley on the machine, attached to another pulley overhead, working upon shafting connected with the power. When it was desired to stop the machine for any purpose, the belt was removed or shifted from the tight to the loose pulley by means of the belt shifter. If the machine became choked with the cotton passing through the beater, and it became necessary to clean it, or remove the cotton, it is stopped by throwing the belt from the tight to the loose pulley; this being done by a shifter. If in proper condition, it will remain motionless until the belt is thrown back on to the tight pulley. While machine is in motion, there are parts in which the hand of the operator may be put without injury. There are other parts in which the beater shaft revolves very rapidly. Plaintiff's witness Gilliam says that two years ago, when he left the mill, the lapper was all right and in good condition. The plaintiff says: That on the 11th day of July, 1904, he was operating the lapper. That it became choked, and "the belt ran off the big pulley." That he carded the belt off, and put belt grease on it to prevent belt from running off. In five or ten minutes it choked again. That he stopped the machine with the belt shifter, and carried some cotton back to the hopper. Champion went to the opposite side, raised the cap from the beater, and the plaintiff put his hand into the beater bars to get the cotton out. The machine, by some unknown means, started, and tore his arm off. The plaintiff's witness refers to some defects in parts of the machine, which he says could not have had any connection with the plaintiff's injury. The immediate cause of the injury was that by some means the belt was thrown back on the tight pulley. The only testimony which throws any light on the condition of the belt shifter is that of Gilliam, who says "the belt shifter fork was wider than the belt, and I put on a piece of wood to make it correspond with the width of the belt." There is no suggestion as to what effect, if any, this would have on the movement of the belt.

With the light afforded us, but one of three possible explanations of the unexpected starting of the machine occurs to our minds. Either Champion accidentally struck the shifter and threw the belt onto the tight pulley, or the plaintiff, in moving about the machine, did so, or there was some defect in the belt or shifter. It is elementary learning that the defendant is not liable for the movement of the belt, unless, either by the negligent conduct of some employé not a fellow servant, or by some defect in the condition of the shifter, it worked back and threw the belt onto the tight pulley. In this condition of the case, what shall be done? The defendant has charge of the machinery and its operation, except in so far as the plaintiff, in the discharge of his duty, had such charge. The plaintiff is suddenly and unexpectedly caught in the machine, struck dumb, his arm torn off, paralyzed. Conceding that there is no direct evidence of a defect in the machine or any of its parts, is the plaintiff driven to a nonsuit, or may he, upon the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, have his case submitted to the jury to say whether there be actionable negligence which is the proximate cause of his injury?

To prevent any misconception of the circumstances under which or the manner in which this principle applies in the trial of causes, we wish to restate what was said in Womble v. Grocery Co., 135 N. C. 474, 47 S. E. 493: "The principle of res ipsa loquitur in such cases carries the question of negligence to the jury, not relieving the plaintiff of the burden of proof, and not raising any presumption in his favor, but simply entitling the jury, in view of all the circumstances and conditions as shown by the plaintiff's evidence, to infer negligence and say whether, upon all of the evidence, the plaintiff has sustained his allegation." It does not in any degree affect or modify the elementary principle that the burden of the issue is on the plaintiffs. Walker, J., in Stewart v. Carpet Co., 138 N. C. 60, 50 S. E. 562, clearly states the law in this respect: "The doctrine does not dispense with the requirement that the party who alleges negligence must prove the fact, but relates only to the mode of proving it. The fact of the accident furnishes merely some evidence to go to the jury which requires the defendant to 'go forward with his proof.' The rule of res ipsa loquitur does not relieve the plaintiff of the burden of showing negligence, nor does it raise any presumption in his favor." The suggestion has been made in argument of cases at this term that, when the rule applies, it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury that proof which calls the rule into action constitutes a prima facie case or raises a presumption of negligence. This is a misapprehension, both of the principle upon which the rule is founded and its application. It must be conceded that expressions are used in cases, some of which are cited in the opinion in Womble's Case, supra, which give color to the suggestion. These cases were cited as illustrations of the rule. The author of the opinion was not advertent, as he should have been, to this inaccuracy. The conclusion which is drawn from the cases and quoted herein does not contain the error. Mr. Justice Walker, in Stewart's Case, puts the subject in its true light. So learned and accurate a jurist as Judge Gaston, in Ellis v. Railroad, 24 N. C. 138, being the first time that we find the rule declared in this court, refers to it as making out, when applicable, a prima facie case. Smith, C. J., in Aycock v. Railroad, 89 N. C. 323, quotes with approval the language used in Ellis' Case, supra. The correct application of the rule is as stated in Stewart's Case, supra. In Haynes v. Gas Co., 114 N. C. 203, 19 S. E. 344, 26 L. R. A. 810, 41 Am. St. Rep. 786, the court held that permitting a live wire to lie upon the street was negligence—a breach of duty. In that case it was not necessary to invoke the rule. The defendant, by permitting the live wire to be upon the street, became liable for any injuries sustained thereby, unless it showed that it was there through no fault of its agents and servants. The learned justice writing in that case was of the opinion that the rule applied. When, as in that case, a breach of duty is shown, which is the proximate cause of the injury, a verdict follows for the plaintiff, unless exculpatory circumstances are shown. It is only, as here, when there is no direct evidence of a defect in the machine, and the physical conditions surrounding the transaction do not ordinarily produce injury, that the occurrence speaks for itself. Such conditions are shown to exist in this case. A machine operated as this one, with the adjustment of the belt, etc., does not ordinarily resume its motion after being disconnected with the motive power. The evidence shows that it did start suddenly, and, so far as the plaintiff is able to say, from some unknown cause. The defendant says that it was an accident. That may be true, and, in the absence of any other testimony, a jury would be justified in so finding. But, on the other hand, the jury may infer that this is not a satisfactory explanation; that the difference between the width of the belt fork and the belt in some way caused the machine to start; that the piece of wood put upon it to make it correspond had worn or dropped out, and that caused the movement of the belt on the pulley. We do not suggest that either of these hypotheses is true. We are not sufficiently advised to have any opinion in regard to it. We merely say that a properly adjusted belt, removed from the tight pulley on to a loose pulley, does not usually get back on to the tight pulley and start the machine at so rapid movement as to tear a man's arm off. It is for this reason the law says that the plaintiff is entitled to have a jury pass upon the physical facts and condition, and to say whether in their opinion he has made good his allegation of actionable negligence. The defendant may or may not introduce evidence, as it is advised. By failing to do so, it admits nothing, but simply takes the risk of nonpersuasion. This is what is meant by going forward with testimony. He, by this course, says that he is willing to go to the jury upon the plaintiff's evidence.

While the rule has not been, in express terms, often applied in this state, it is by no means new or of unusual application. Professor Wigmore says that, for a generation at least, in England it has been conceded to exist "for some classes of cases at least." In 1865 Erle, C. J., in Scott v. London Dock Co., 3 H. & C. (Com. L. R. U. S. 134), said: "There must be some evidence of negligence, but when the thing is shown to be under the management of the defendant or his servants, and the accident is such that, as in the ordinary course of things, does not happen, if those who have the management use the proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendants, that the accident arose from want of care." The limitations governing the application of the rule are thus stated by Wigmore (section 2509): "(1) The apparatus must be such that in the ordinary instance no injurious operation is to be expected, unless from a careless construction, inspection, or user. (2) Both inspection and user must have been, at the time of the injury, in the control of the party charged. (3) The injurious occurrence or condition must have happened, irrespective of any voluntary action at the time by the party injured." The underlying reason for the rule is that usually the chief evidence of the true cause of procedure is practically accessible to the defendant, but inaccessible to the person injured. Stewart's Case, supra. It is for this reason that in some cases the Legislature has made the fact of injury "presumptive evidence," and in others a "prima facie" case. Aycock's Case, supra.

The learned counsel for defendant insisted that the plaintiff cannot recover, because there is no evidence that, if defective, the defendant had notice or could by reasonable care have known of such defect. It is well settled that this is essential to the plaintiff's recovery. The question is not, in the present condition of the record, presented. We cannot tell in what respect, if at all, the jury would find the shifter or other part of the machine defective. Their attention would be directed to this element in the plaintiff's case, either by a specific issue or by instruction. Hudson v. R. R., 104 N. C. 491, 10 S. E. 669. Other questions will probably arise upon the trial. If the belt was thrown upon the tight pulley by an accidental contact with the plaintiff or some other person, or if it was the result of the negligence of a fellow servant, the court would instruct the jury in respect to the law. The question of the plaintiff's own conduct and its effect upon his right to recover are to be presented by proper instructions. Our ruling is confined to the one question, whether the case should have gone to the jury upon the physical conditions disclosed by the evidence. It does not appear what the plaintiff proposed to show by the rejected question. Hence we cannot pass upon the exceptions to his honor's rulings.

The judgment of nonsuit must be set aside, and a new trial had.

New trial.

(129 N. C. 333)

MABRY v. NORTH CAROLINA R. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 31, 1905.)

INJURY TO EMPLOYÉ—FELLOW SERVANTS—RAILROADS.

The doctrine of fellow servants, so far as concerns liability of railroads, is abolished by Priv. Laws 1897, p. 83, c. 56, § 1, providing that recovery may be had of a railroad company where any employé is injured or killed in the course of his employment by the negligence of any other of its employés.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, §§ 354-356.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by J. C. Mabry against the North Carolina Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Civil action to recover damages for personal injuries caused by alleged negligence of the Southern Railway Company. The ordinary issues in actions for negligence were submitted. There was evidence of plaintiff tending to show that plaintiff, an employé of the Southern Railway Company, operating the defendant's road under a lease, while in discharge of his duty as such employé, was seriously injured by the negligence of two fellow servants, also in service of the same company, and so engaged at the time. There was evidence of defendant adverse to the claim of plaintiff. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff, and defendant excepted and appealed.

King & Kimball, for appellant. Stedman & Cooke, for appellee.

HOKE, J. It has been settled by repeated and well-considered decisions of this court that defendant company is responsible for actionable negligence of the Southern Railway Company done in the operation of the road under defendant's lease and in the exercise of its franchise. Aycock v. Railroad, 89 N. C. 321; Logan v. Railroad, 116 N. C. 940, 21 S. E. 959; Harden v. Railroad, 129 N. C. 354, 40 S. E. 184. The statute (Priv. Laws 1897, p. 83, c. 56, § 1) enacts: "That any servant or employee of any railroad company operating in this state, who shall suffer injury to his person, or the personal representative of any such servant or employee who shall suffer death, in the course of his service or employment with said company, by the negligence, carelessness or incompetency of any other servant, employee or agent of the company, or by any defect in the machinery, ways or appliances of the company, shall be entitled to maintain an action against such company." One effect of this statute is to abolish, so far as railroads are concerned, the doctrine known as the "fellow servant doctrine," and make the company responsible for the negligent acts of its employés in the course of their service or employment, when by reason of such negligence a fellow servant or other employé is injured. We have carefully examined the record and the exceptions presented for our consideration, and find no reversible error in the charge of the court or the conduct of the trial. The jury have accepted the version of the occurrence given by the plaintiff, and, taking this to be true, the plaintiff had a clear cause of action.

There is no error, and the judgment below must be affirmed.

(139 N. C. 448)

WALKER et al. v. MILLER.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 7, 1905.)

1. EVIDENCE — PAROL—LATENT AMBIGUITY—DEED—FIRM NAME AS GRANTEE.

After the death of J. and C., constituting the firm of J. W. & Bro., their heirs and distributees, with the approval of the administrators of J. and C., who were selected to manage the business, continued it in the old firm name till the goods and store were sold. They then appointed A. to collect debts owing J. W. & Bro., and he with money so collected, for the purpose of collecting from M., a debtor of J. W. & Bro., bought land at foreclosure of a mortgage given thereon by M. to a third person, taking deed to J. W. & Bro. Thereafter the heirs and distributees of J. and C. deeded the land to plaintiffs. Held that the use of the firm name as grantee created a mere latent ambiguity, removable by parol evidence showing that the owners of the assets of the old firm, the heirs and distributees of J. and C., were intended to be described by such name.

2. PARTNERSHIP — REAL ESTATE — FIRM AS GRANTEE.

At least an equitable title is conveyed by a deed describing the grantees by a firm name.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 38, Cent. Dig. Partnership, § 105.]

3. PARTIES—BRINGING IN NEW PARTIES.

The court, to the end that substantial justice be done, may before or after judgment direct the bringing in of new parties.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 37, Cent. Dig. Parties, § 76.]

4. JUSTICES—ACTION ON EQUITABLE TITLE.

One may sue on an equitable title in a justice's court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 31, Cent. Dig. Justices of the Peace, § 184.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by C. T. Walker and others against W. J. Miller. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Civil action for the recovery of crops, instituted in justice court, brought by appeal to the superior court, and heard by his honor Judge Peebles, who by consent found the facts respecting the title to the land upon which the crops were grown. For some time prior to 1893, Jas. Webb, Jr., and Jos. C. Webb were engaged in mercantile business as copartners, under the firm name and style of Jas. Webb, Jr., & Bro. Jos. C. Webb died in the year 1893, leaving a last will and testament, properly executed and proven to pass real and personal estate, naming Jas. Webb, Jr., executor, who duly qualified. He bequeathed and devised his entire estate to his widow, Alice Webb. With the full knowledge and consent of said Alice Webb, the surviving partner and executor continued to conduct the said mercantile business under the same name and style. Mrs. Webb did not become a member of the firm, but permitted and consented that the executor should use her husband's estate to carry on the business as it was done prior to his death. James Webb, Jr., died in February, 1904, intestate, leaving as his heirs at law and distributees Mary Webb, his widow, and

Brown R. Webb and J. C. Webb, his sons. The estate of Jos. C. Webb was not settled at the time of the death of said Jas. Webb, Jr. A. J. Ruffin and H. W. Webb were appointed and duly qualified as administrators of Jas. Webb, Jr., deceased. T. N. Webb and J. Cheshire Webb were appointed administrators with the will annexed of Jos. C. Webb, deceased. On the 15th day of February, 1904, the said administrators joined in the publication of a notice to debtors of the firm of Jas. Webb, Jr., & Bro. to make prompt payment, concluding: "We take great pleasure in assuring the old friends and patrons of this firm that the business is to be continued indefinitely under the same style and management, and we earnestly solicit the continuance of your valued patronage, promising to give you at all times the best possible values, together with the most courteous treatment." Neither of the administrators put any money into the business, nor did they intend to form a new firm, but did intend to give notice that the business would be continued, under the firm name and style of Jas. Webb, Jr., & Bro., with the funds belonging to the estates of the deceased partners, which had been invested in said business. This action was taken with the full knowledge and consent of the heirs, distributees, devisees, and legatees of both of said deceased partners. On July 18, 1904, the property and assets of the firm of Jas. Webb, Jr., & Bro. were sold to H. W. and J. C. Webb. The old firm was continued for the sole purpose of collecting the debts and settling the business. J. Cox Webb was appointed agent to collect the debts due the firm. Jas. Webb, Jr., & Bro. held a judgment against defendant Miller, duly docketed in Orange county. D. S. Miller held a mortgage on the lands of defendant W. J. Miller, which he duly foreclosed under power of sale therein. The crops in controversy were growing on the lands at the time of the sale. J. Cox Webb became the purchaser at the sale, paying the purchase price from money collected by him on account of the debts due Jas. Webb, Jr., & Bro., and took deed therefor to Jas. Webb, Jr., & Bro. Soon thereafter Alice H. Webb, widow of Jos. C. Webb and B. R. Webb, J. Cox Webb, children, and Mary B. Webb, widow of Jas. Webb, Jr., executed a deed for said land to plaintiffs. The land brought at said sale an amount in excess of the mortgage debt. In an action brought by defendant, W. J. Miller, the administrators of Jas. Webb, Jr., and Jos. C. Webb intervened. The said Miller claimed and recovered, on account of his homestead interest in said land, $112.75; the balance, $55, being applied to the judgment held by said administrators. His honor was of the opinion, upon the foregoing facts, that, as the title to the land did not pass by the deed from D. S. Miller to Jas. Webb, Jr., and Bro., the plaintiffs acquired none by the deed of Mrs. Alice Webb and others. He rendered judgment dismissing the action. The plaintiffs excepted and appealed.

Jno. W. Graham, for appellants.

CONNOR J. (after stating the case). His honor was of the opinion that there was no such person or partnership in existence as Jas. Webb, Jr., & Bro. at the time of the sale of the land, and upon the elementary proposition that, to constitute a valid deed of conveyance, there must be a grantor, grantee, and thing granted, the deed or paper writing having the form of a deed was inoperative. It is, of course, common learning that the death of a partner, in the absence of any stipulation in the articles of copartnership to the contrary, works an immediate dissolution; that the title to the assets vests in the surviving partner, impressed with a trust to close up the partnership business, pay the debts, and turn over to his personal representative the share of the deceased partner. We speak only of the personality in this connection. The facts found by his honor show that, upon the death of Jos. C. Webb, his widow, sole legatee, permitted the surviving partner, who was also executor of her husband, to continue the business under the name of the old or original firm. This condition, with her consent, continued for nine years. The only persons interested in the assets, other than creditors, were Jas. Webb, Jr., and Mrs. Alice Webb. His honor finds that Mrs. Alice Webb did not become a member of said firm, so as to be personally responsible for debts incurred after her husband's death. We do not see how this is material to the questions presented upon this appeal, and we do not express any opinion regarding her liability to creditors, notwithstanding her purpose or intention. Certainly she and the executor were the real, beneficial, and only owners of the property and the profits accruing from the business. Upon the death of Jas. Webb, Jr., the same arrangement was made and continued by all of the parties in interest. They were all sui juris, and we can see no reason why, inter sese, it was not competent for them to permit their property, with the consent and co-operation of the administrators, to remain in common and used for their joint benefit, adopting any name or style agreeable to them for more easily and conveniently carrying out their purpose. The fact that they chose to carry on the business under the name of the old firm does not change their rights. They could, if they had so preferred, have selected any other name. Of course, the old firm, as originally constituted, was dissolved by death of the partners. Whether the parties so intended or not, the legal effect of what they did was to create a new and original arrangement for carrying on business, the capital of which was contributed by the beneficial owners of the property. The fact that they selected the administrators of the deceased partners to manage the business so far as the questions presented upon this record, is immaterial. It may be that, if debts were contracted, liabilities not contemplated would have attached.

For the purpose of this appeal, the transaction consisted of an arrangement between the distributees and legatees, with the approval of the administrators, to use the property for a joint and common benefit. The widows and children of the deceased partners were the owners, and the administrators were their agents. Viewed from this standpoint, we have parties conducting business in a manner which, in a limited, if not absolute, sense, constituted a partnership adopting a name which, by reason of being well known and enjoying the confidence of its customers, was valuable to them. It was entirely proper, and not unusual, that they should do so. There was no concealment of the personal status of the parties. They gave notice of the death of the original partners. It is not uncommon for a business which, by reason of the credit and reputation for integrity of the founders, possesses value, to be conducted after their death under its original name. In such cases it is the business of the living owners, and contracts made by or with them, under the name adopted, have all the force and effect as if made in the names of the individuals to whom it belongs. A man, if he chooses, may carry on business in a name other than his own, or, as is said by Erle, C. J., in Maughan v. Sharpe, 112 E. C. L. 443: "It is clear that individuals may carry on business under any name and style which they may choose to adopt." That a deed to a partnership, in which the partners are not named, is valid, is abundantly established by this and many other courts. In Murray v. Blackledge, 71 N. C. 492, the deed was made to "Murray Ferris & Co." To the objection that the deed was inoperative, because there was no grantee, Rodman, J., said: "But a deed for land is not for that reason void any more than a bond for the payment of money is. It is a latent ambiguity, which may be explained by parol." Institute v. Norwood, 45 N. C. 65. In Morse v. Carpenter, 19 Vt. 614, the mortgage was made to "Morse & Houghton, of Bakersfield." Parol evidence was received to show that two persons were doing business in Bakersfield under that firm name. Royce, C. J., referring to descriptions ambiguitas patens, said: "There is, however, an important difference between a description which is inherently uncertain and indeterminate and one which is merely imperfect, and capable, on that account, of different applications. To correct the one is, in effect, to add new terms to the instrument; while to complete the other is only to ascertain and fix the application of terms already contained in it." The distinction between a patent and a latent ambiguity is pointed out with his usual clearness by Pearson, C. J., in Institute v. Norwood, supra. In Wakefield v. Brown, 38 Minn. 361, 37 N. W. 788, 8 Am. St. Rep. 671, it is said: "If the true owner conveys by any name, the conveyance, as between the grantor and grantee, will transfer title, and in all cases evidence aliunde the instrument is admissible to identify the actual grantor. The admission of such evidence does not change the written instrument or add new terms to it, but merely fixes and applies terms already contained in it." The same principle controls when the uncertainty or ambiguity is regarding the grantee. The same is held in Blanchard v. Floyd, 88 Ala. 53, 9 South. 418; Coleman, J., saying: "If the proof shows that Blanchard & Burrus, a partnership, were the purchasers of the land, they owned as tenants in common an equitable interest in the land." In Menage v. Burke, 43 Minn. 211, 45 N. W. 155, 19 Am. St. Rep. 235, a mortgage to "Farnham & Lovejoy" was held valid; Dickinson, J., saying: "While it is necessary to the legal validity of such instruments that there be a grantee having a legal existence, capable of taking and certainly designated, or so designated that his identity can be certainly ascertained, these conditions are complied with in this case; resort being had, as may be done, to facts beyond the instrument for the purpose of applying the description or designation of the persons named to the persons so described." 1 Jones on Conveyances, 244. In Maughan v. Sharpe, supra, the deed was executed to "The City Investment & Advance Company." It was objected that, as there was no such corporation, the deed was void. Erle, C. J., said: "The bill of sale under which the defendants claim purports to convey the property to the City Investment & Advance Company, and not to the defendants by name; and it was contended for the plaintiffs that the goods could not pass to Sharpe & Baker. * * * It is clear that individuals may carry on business under any name and style which they may adopt, and I see no reason why the defendants may not do so under the name of 'The City Investment & Advance Company.' * * * As between these parties the company are Sharpe & Baker, and the conveyance in question is a conveyance to those individuals. I cannot, therefore, say that the deed was inoperative on this ground." Williams, J., said: "In this case I apprehend the meaning of the grant is plain. The deed purports and intends to convey the goods to those persons who use the style and firm of the City Investment & Advance Company. They may or may not be a corporation; but, where it is ascertained that those who carry on business under that name are the defendants, the deed operates to convey the property to them." Sheppard's Touchstone, 236.

His honor in his judgment cites the case of Neal v. Nelson, 117 N. C. 393, 23 S. E. 428, 53 Am. St. Rep. 590, in which it is held that a deed to "A. and his heirs," A. being dead, is void. This decision is put upon the ground that "heirs" is a word of limitation, and not of purchase. It is said that a deed to "A. or his heirs" would be good, A. being dead, if his heirs could be ascertained. It is well settled that a deed to "A. and his children" is valid to vest the title in them as tenants in common. His honor was of the opinion that "after July 18, 1904, when the goods and store were sold to H. W. Webb and J. C. Webb, no one constituted the old firm of Jas. Webb, Jr., & Co. It then ceased to exist." He therefore concluded that the deed from D. L. Miller conveyed nothing, leaving the legal title in Miller in trust for the administrators. If it be conceded, as his honor concluded, that the old firm ceased to exist, certainly the assets belonged to some one. Jos. C. Webb was appointed agent to collect them. There were no debts to pay. The assets then belonged to the legatees and distributees of the deceased partners. When J. Cox Webb, in executing the trust reposed in him to collect the assets, purchased the land with the money of his principals, and directed title to be made in the name of the old firm, it is manifest that it was his purpose to put the title in the persons who paid the purchase money. They ratified his act, treating the land as theirs by selling to the plaintiffs. The defendant, W. J. Miller, recognized the status of the title by suing for and receiving from the purchase money his homestead interest. We can perceive no reason why, both upon reason and authority, in the light of the fact found by his honor, the latent ambiguity in the description of the parties in the deed is not removed and the true owners, ascertained to be the grantors of the plaintiffs. Lowe v. Carter, 55 N. C. 383; Ryan v. Martin, 91 N. C. 464; Simmons v. Allison, 118 N. C. 776, 24 S. E. 716. It is sometimes said that only an equitable title is conveyed in such cases. The better view, we think, is that which we find sustained by the authorities cited—that the ambiguity is latent and open to explanation by which the real party is disclosed and the deed treated as if the name were inserted. If, however, the other view be adopted, the same result would follow in this case. It is well settled, under our judicial system, that a party may recover in ejectment upon an equitable title. Clark's Code, § 177, and cases cited at page 102. The mortgagee, D. S. Miller, has sold under the power and received the purchase money more than sufficient to pay the mortgage debt. The mortgagor, W. J. Miller, has received his interest in the surplus. The administrators turned over the assets of the late firm of Jas. Webb, Jr., & Bro. to J. C. Webb to collect for the benefit of the owners. He has in the discharge of his agency applied their money to the purchase of the land and procured a deed to be made, as he understood and intended, to them. They, acting upon the belief that the land was theirs, have sold for a valuable consideration to the plaintiffs. We cannot see how a more perfect equitable title could vest in the plaintiffs. If, as the learned judge thought, the naked legal title still remained in D. S. Miller, certainly no one, save the plaintiffs, can call for it.

There are no unadjusted questions between the administrators and the grantors of the plaintiffs, or between W. J. Miller and either of the parties to the transactions. He does not suggest any reason why the plaintiffs should not recover, save that they are not the real parties in interest. We think that they are the real and only parties in interest, and are entitled to recover the crops. If, however, D. S. Miller was a necessary party, we can see no reason why he should not be brought in now to perfect the record. The action should not have been dismissed. The court may at any time, before or after judgment, direct other persons to be made parties, to the end that substantial justice be done. While it is true that a justice has no power to administer an equity, the owner of an equitable title may sue in the justice's court. Lutz v. Thompson, 87 N. C. 334. Many of the difficulties which obstructed the courts in the administration of justice and necessitated the dismissal of suits because of a divided jurisdiction between courts of law and courts of equity, or the failure to sue out the writ applicable to the right to be enforced, are avoided by the reformed Codes of Procedure. Courts now seek to ascertain the facts and administer the right to the real party in interest. Amendments are liberally made to enable the court to so mold the judgment that substantial justice is administered.

Upon the facts found by his honor, judgment should have been entered that the plaintiffs are the owners of the crops in controversy. Judgment will be entered accordingly in the superior court of Orange.

Error.

(129 N. C. 457)

TUSSEY et al. v. OWEN.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 7, 1905.)

1. WILLS—CONTRACTS TO DEVISE—PERFORMANCE OF CONDITIONS.

The contract of an adult child with her old and afflicted father to remain with and work for him during his lifetime, he, in consideration, to will her one-fourth of his property, requires her, unless prevented by him or those acting for him, to remain with and serve him till his death.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 49, Cent. Dig. Wills, § 173.]

2. SAME—PREVENTING PERFORMANCE.

A child who had agreed to remain with and serve her father till his death, he in consideration to will her one-fourth of his property, and who married and voluntarily removed from his home 15 months before his death, never returning, is not shown to have been prevented by him from performing the contract by her testimony that she did not go back after her marriage; "they did not want me to go back." Something prior to, so as to justify her apparent abandonment of her contract, must be shown.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 49, Cent. Dig. Wills, § 173.]

3. SAME—PARTIAL PERFORMANCE—IMPLIED CONTRACT.

A contract of a child to remain with and serve her father till his death, he in consideration to will her one-fourth of his property, is entire and indivisible, and so includes no implied contract to pay for the benefit conferred by her partial performance.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 49, Cent. Dig. Wills, §§ 171, 173.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Davidson County; Long, Judge.

Action by J. A. Tussey and another against L. A. Owen, executor, etc., to recover on a specific contract or agreement, set out in the complaint, for services rendered by the feme plaintiff to her father, Anderson Owen. The material allegations of the complaint are denied in the answer. The issues and responses are as follows: "(1) Did the testator, Anderson Owen, make the agreement with the plaintiff Della Owen to pay her at his death for her services, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes. (2) Did the plaintiff Della render the services to her father agreeably to said contract as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes. (3) What, if any, is the value of such services? Answer: $1,500." From the judgment rendered, defendant appealed. Reversed.

E. E. Raper, for appellant. Watson, Buxton & Watson and Walser & Walser, for appellees.

BROWN, J. The cause of action as stated in the complaint, as well as by counsel for plaintiff on the argument, is substantially that plaintiff Della Tussey, the daughter of Anderson Owen, she being then of age and unmarried, agreed to remain with her father and work for him during his lifetime, and that in consideration thereof he agreed that at his death he would devise her one-fourth of all his lands and personal estate, and that she performed the contract on her part, and that her father made a will carrying out the contract on his part, but afterwards added a codicil in which he revoked the will, so far as he had willed the said property to the feme plaintiff, and devised all his estate to his wife and his two sons, thereby failing to carry out the contract. The complaint fails to allege in specific terms that the feme plaintiff fully performed the contract upon her part, or that she was prevented from performing it by the testator or by those duly authorized to act for him. Therefore, if it is deemed advisable to try this case again, the complaint should be redrafted as to those particulars, or properly amended. There is some objection to the form of the third issue. It should be, "What sum, if any, is plaintiff entitled to recover?"

If the contract, as alleged in the complaint, be established, its breach is admitted by the facts stated in section 6 of the answer; but the burden is still on the plaintiff to establish the performance of it on her part, or else that she was prevented from performing it by the testator or those acting for him. That the feme plaintiff, Della, did not perform the contract is fully established by all the evidence, including her own. A fair interpretation of the contract set out required her to remain with her father and serve him until his death, as he was old and afflicted. She failed to do that. On the contrary, she was married March 11, 1903, and immediately removed to Chattanooga, and returned only after her father died. He lived for 15 months after her marriage and removal to Chattanooga, and only added the codicil to his will after that event, viz., on January 18, 1904. In view of these facts, the plaintiff can only recover upon the contract by showing some legal excuse, as that she was prevented from performing the contract by her father or those authorized to act for him. As the marriage and removal to Chattanooga were voluntary acts upon her part, the evidence that she was prevented from performing the contract would have to antedate such events, so as to justify her apparent abandonment of it. The feme plaintiff testified: "I did not go back after I got married. They did not want me to go back." That statement alone would not justify a finding that she was prevented by her father from performing the contract.

The pleadings have been framed and the case tried upon the theory that a specific contract—not an implied one—had been entered into between the plaintiff and her father, but she performed it, and that there was a breach of it upon her part. Therefore it is unnecessary to review the numerous cases which have come before this court as to when a contract will be implied between parent and child that the former will pay the services rendered by the latter after attaining full age. The jury have found the first issue as to the agreement in favor of the plaintiff, and there was evidence to support such finding. But the record fails to disclose any evidence whatever to justify the response to the second issue, to wit, that she performed the contract upon her part. "The proposition is too plain to need any reference to authority in its support, that a party to a contract cannot maintain an action for its breach without averring and proving a performance of his own antecedent obligations arising on the contract, or some legal excuse for a nonperformance thereof." Smith, C. J., in Ducker v. Cochrane, 92 N. C. 597. His honor instructed the jury: "If you find that the contract was that he would pay her one-fourth of his estate, at his death, for her services, you will consider all the evidence offered on that question and determine what the value of the one-fourth of the estate is, and make your answer to the third issue from the facts as you find them to be. The defendant excepted. This instruction cannot be sustained, in view of the fact that the plaintiff failed to perform the contract. Under the form of the third issue it is practically a judicial determination that the value of her services equals one-fourth of the testator's estate.

There is a class of cases where, under some circumstances, the rigor of the common-law rule has been relaxed, and a person has been permitted to recover the actual value of his services, although failing to perform the entire contract on his part. In some cases the law implies a promise to pay such remuneration as the benefit conferred is really worth. Dermott v. Jones, 23 How. (U. S.) 220, 16 L. Ed. 442. But we know of no authority to support the claim that the plaintiff could recover the full contract price unless she had performed the contract. Chief Justice Smith quotes a number of such cases in Chamblee v. Baker, 95 N. C. 100, but he also quotes, with approval, from the opinion in Munroe v. Phillips, 8 Ellis & Black. 739: "The inclination of the courts is to relax the stringent rule of the common law, which allows no recovery upon a special unperformed contract, nor for the value of the work done, because the special includes an implied contract to pay. In such case, if the party has derived any benefit from the labor done, it would be unjust to allow him to retain that without paying anything. Accordingly restrictions are imposed upon the general rule, and it is confined to contracts entire and indivisible, and when, by the nature of the agreement or by express provision, nothing is to be paid till all is performed." The general rule is laid down in Outler v. Powell, 2 Smith, L. C. 1: "But, if there has been an entire executory contract and the plaintiff has performed a part of it, and then willfully refuses without legal excuse, and against the defendant's consent, to perform the rest, he can recover nothing, either in general or special assumpsit." This rule has been repeatedly recognized and acted on by this court. Thigpen v. Leigh, 93 N. C. 47; Lawrence v. Hester, 93 N. C. 79.

For these reasons, we think the motion to nonsuit should have been allowed.

Error.

(129 N. C. 523)

BILES v. SEABOARD AIR LINE RY. CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1905.)

1. TRIAL—MOTIONS FOR NONSUIT—CONSTRUCTION OF EVIDENCE.

On a motion for nonsuit or direction of verdict for defendant, the evidence of plaintiff must be accepted as true, and construed in the light most favorable to him.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Trial, §§ 374, 402.]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURIES TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE OF MASTER—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action against a railroad for injuries to a brakeman, who was shaken off the pilot of an engine which did not have a bar to which the brakeman could hold, evidence held to make a case for the jury on the question of the railroad's negligence.

3. SAME—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—DANGEROUS WORK.

The mere fact that a servant works in the performance of a dangerous duty, such as riding on the pilot of an engine without having any rod by which to hold, while it may charge him with the assumption of the risk, does not render him guilty of contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, § 754.]

4. SAME—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—DEFECTIVE APPLIANCES—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under Priv. Laws 1897, p. 83, c. 56, giving a right of action to any employé who is injured by defects in the machinery, ways, or appliances of a railroad, and declaring any contract or agreement by an employé to waive the benefits of the statute void, a railroad cannot defend an action for injuries to a brakeman, caused by a defective engine or appliance, on the ground that the brakeman assumed the risk of the defect.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, § 554.]

5. SAME—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

While, under Priv. Laws 1897, p. 83, c. 56, a railroad employé is not precluded, on the ground of assumption of risk, from recovering against the railroad for injuries caused by a defective engine or appliance which makes the performance of his duty obviously dangerous, yet he must act with due care and circumspection under the circumstances, and cannot recover if he is careless in such manner as to amount to contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, §§ 663, 674.]

6. SAME—VIOLATION OF MASTER'S RULES.

The violation by a railroad brakeman of a known rule of the company, made for the protection and safety of employes, which rule is alive and enforced, will usually bar a recovery for injuries to the brakeman proximately caused by such violation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, §§ 759-775.]

7. SAME—ABROGATED RULES.

A rule of a master, promulgated for the protection and safety of servants, which is habitually violated to the knowledge of the master or those who stand towards him in the position of vice principals, or which has been violated so frequently and openly and for such a length of time that the master could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have ascertained its nonobservance, will be deemed waived or abrogated, and a failure of a servant to observe the same will not preclude him from recovering for injuries sustained by reason of such nonobservance.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, §§ 287, 763.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Anson County; Ward, Judge.

Action by David Biles against the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Civil action to recover damages for an injury caused by alleged negligence on part of defendant company. The three ordinary issues in actions of this character were framed for submission to the jury: (1) As to the negligence of defendant; (2) as to contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff; (3) on the question of damages. At the close of the testimony, on an adverse intimation of his honor, both on the first and second issues, the plaintiff submitted to a nonsuit and appealed.

H. H. McLendon and J. A. Lockhart & Son, for appellant. John D. Shaw and Adama, Jerome & Armfield, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the case). In Hopkins v. Railroad, 131 N. C. 464, 42 S. E. 902, Douglas, J., delivering the opinion said: "It is well settled that on a motion for nonsuit, or its counterpart, the direction of a verdict, the evidence of the plaintiff must be accepted as true and construed in the light most favorable for him." Applying this rule to the facts set forth in the case on appeal, we are of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to have his cause submitted to a jury. The plaintiff himself testified that he was a brakeman on a freight train of defendant company, and on the night of November 29, 1902, was injured by having his foot run over and crushed by the engine of the train with which the plaintiff was then working; that the injury occurred as the train was entering on the yard at Hamlet, N. C., where there were a great many tracks and switches; that it was a part of the plaintiff's duties at such times to keep a lookout in front of the engine, and his proper placing for the purpose was on the pilot of the engine.

Selecting a portion of his testimony from the notes of the evidence sent with the case in the form of questions and answers we find this statement: "Q. Go on and state how you were hurt. A. I was on the front part of the engine on the standard step, where I always had to ride, going into a yard. Q. Why did you ride there going into the yard? A. To look out for the switches and loose cars. Q. Why did you ride there to look out for switches? A. That was my duty. Q. To look out for switches and cars? A. Yes; loose cars would roll down sometimes, and we would change the switches right quick. I would always have to head, so I could throw the switch. Q. What do you mean by throwing the switch? A. Changing the switch from one track to another. Q. That is, you kept the switches in their proper place and order? A. Yes." At another point the plaintiff testified that he could not properly perform the duties, unless he was stationed in front on the pilot, and that the defendant would not keep a man who could not keep the train moving, but was so slow that he would require it to stop to enable him to do his work; that in order to enable employes, charged with this duty, to hold their positions, there was usually a short step on the face of the pilot, eight to ten inches long and wide enough for the placing of one foot, and a bar or rod along the beam of the pilot, by which the brakeman could hold on with reasonable safety when the train was in motion; that this particular engine had the step, but did not have the rod or other means to enable the plaintiff to hold properly, and, as the engine was going into the yard, it jostled or careened in some way—probably by a depression in the rail; that the plaintiff's foot was jarred from its position on the step, and, not being able to hold, his foot slipped under the fore wheel of the engine, was crushed as stated, and finally had to be amputated, etc. If these facts are established, there would seem to be a case of negligent injury, not unlike that of Coley v. Railroad, 128 N. C. 534, 39 S. E. 43, 57 L. R. A. 817, 83 Am. St. Rep. 720; and unless the facts are successfully controverted, or the plaintiff himself has failed to exercise proper care in the matter, there would be an actionable wrong.

The judge below also expressed an intimation adverse to the plaintiff on the issue of contributory negligence. Without going into a detailed statement of the testimony, we are of opinion that on this issue, also, the case should be submitted to the jury under proper instructions. The plaintiff has stated in one place that it was a dangerous duty, and he had looked for some one to get hurt in performing it. But, so far as the mere working on in the performance of a dangerous duty is concerned, this, while sometimes spoken of as contributory negligence, is usually and more properly classed and considered under the head of assumption of risk, and, being a contractual defense, where it is allowed, is not open to the defendant by reason of the statute. Priv. Laws 1897, p. 83, c. 56, § 1. This statute provides that any employé who is injured by any defect in the machinery, ways, or appliances of a railroad company shall be entitled to maintain an action; and section 2 provides that any contract or agreement, express or implied, made by any employé to waive the benefit of the aforesaid section, shall be null and void. If, in answer to the first issue, the jury should find that the plaintiff, while in the performance of his duty, was injured as the proximate consequence of a defective engine or defective appliance, then the defense of assumption of risk is not open to the defendant. Coley v. Railroad, supra; s. c., 129 N. C. 407, 40 S. E. 195, 57 L. R. A. 817. While the mere working on in the presence of known and dangerous conditions, but in the honest effort to discharge his duty faithfully, usually treated under the head of assumption of risk, shall not be considered in bar of the plaintiff's recovery, this does not at all mean that in cases of the kind we are now considering the plaintiff is absolved from all care on his own part. Except in extraordinary and imminent cases, like those of Greenlee and Troxler, 122 N. C. 977, 30 S. E. 115, 41 L. R. A. 399, 65 Am. St. Rep. 734, and 124 N. C. 189, 32 S. E. 550, 44 L. R. A. 313, 70 Am. St. Rep. 580, he is still required to act with that due care and circumspection which the presence of such conditions require, and if, apart from this element of assumption of risk, the plaintiff has been careless in a manner which amounts to contributory negligence, his action must fail.

There is evidence here tending to show that the plaintiff, at the time of the injury, in taking his position on the pilot of the engine, was acting in violation of the rules of the company. While the disposition of the present appeal does not require that we consider evidence making for the defense, we deem it well to note that the violation of a known rule of the company, made for an employé's protection and safety, when the proximate cause of such employé's injury, will usually bar a recovery. This is only true, however, of a rule which is alive and enforced, and does not obtain where a rule is habitually violated to the knowledge of the employer or of those who stand towards the employer in the position of vice principals, or when a rule has been violated so frequently and openly, and for such a length of time, that the employer could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have ascertained its nonobservance. Under such circumstances the rule is considered as waived or abrogated. 5 Thompson, Law of Negligence, § 5404; Beach, Cont. Neg. § 373.

There was error in the ruling of the court below, and the plaintiff is entitled to have his cause submitted to the jury.

New trial.

CLARK, C. J. and WALKER, J., concur in result.

(139 N. C. 470)

KEARNS v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1905.)

1. TRIAL—NONSUIT—WHEN GRANTED.

It is the duty of the judge to nonsuit a plaintiff when the evidence is not legally sufficient to justify a verdict in his favor.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Trial, § 360.]

2. SAME—QUESTIONS FOR COURT AND JURY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The measure and quantity of proof and its sufficiency in law is a question for the court, while its weight and sufficiency to establish a fact is for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Trial, §§ 332-345.]

3. SAME.

Where the evidence fails to establish, either directly or by rational deductions, all the facts which go to make up the issue, as where there is a failure of evidence in respect to any material fact involved in the issue, the evidence is not legally sufficient to sustain a finding upon such issue, and it is the duty of the trial judge to instruct the jury accordingly.

4. RAILROADS—INJURIES AT CROSSINGS—ACTIONS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action against a railroad for injuries to a traveler on the highway, caused by a collision at a railroad crossing, the burden is upon plaintiff to show, not only the negligence of the railroad, but that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 41, Cent. Dig. Railroads, §§ 1117, 1123.]

5. NEGLIGENCE—PROXIMATE CAUSE—CHARACTER OF PROOF REQUIRED.

The relation of negligence to injury as proximate cause thereof must be established by a clear preponderance of proof, which must be of such strength and character as to warrant the inference that the negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, and evidence which merely raises a surmise or conjecture of such fact is legally insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 37, Cent. Dig. Negligence, § 273.]

6. RAILROADS—INJURIES AT CROSSINGS—ACTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

In an action against a railroad for injuries caused by a collision with a team at a crossing, evidence held insufficient to show that the alleged negligence of the engineer in not stopping his engine sooner than he did was the proximate cause of the injury.

Clark, C. J., and Hoke, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Davidson County; Long, Judge.

Action by Alexander Kearns against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This action was commenced on December 7, 1904, to recover damages for an injury alleged to have been received by plaintiff on August 17, 1902, by coming in contact with a train of the defendant at Lexington. At the conclusion of the evidence, his honor, Judge Long, being of opinion that the plaintiff had failed to make out a case of actionable negligence, sustained defendant's motion to nonsuit, and dismissed the action. The plaintiff appeals.

McCrary & Ruark, for appellant. Manly & Hendren, for appellee.

BROWN, J. The duty of the judge to nonsuit, when the evidence is not legally sufficient to justify a verdict for the plaintiff, is too well settled to admit of dispute. It is the law in this state, long since declared by this court and recognized by the General Assembly. It is also a rule of practice in every court where the practice and principles of the common law prevail. "We would be recreant to our duties as judges were we to fail to declare the law with respect to the question whether there is any evidence for fear of offending the jury. This question the jury do not decide." Connor, J., in State v. Smith, 136 N. C. at page 687, 49 S. E. at page 337. Evidence has a twofold sufficiency, a sufficiency in law and a sufficiency in fact. Of the former, the court is the exclusive judge; of the latter, the jury is. The measure and quantity of proof is a question for the court. When submitted to the jury, its weight and sufficiency to establish a fact is for them.

An issue is made up of one or more facts. Where the evidence fails to establish all these facts, either directly or by rational deductions, as where there is a failure of evidence in respect to any material fact involved in the issue, then the evidence is not legally sufficient to justify a finding upon the issue it is offered to sustain, and it becomes the plain duty of the judge to instruct accordingly, for in such case the jury has no duty to perform. We agree with his honor that the plaintiff in this action has failed to make out a case of actionable negligence. To establish actionable negligence, the plaintiff must show, by the greater weight of evidence, not only that the engineman was guilty of some negligent act, but also that such negligent act was the proximate cause of the injury. As clearly expressed by Mr. Justice Walker: "There must always, in actions of this kind, be a causal connection between the alleged act of negligence and the injury which is supposed to have resulted therefrom. The fact that the defendant has been guilty of negligence, followed by an injury, does not make him liable for that injury, which is sought to be referred to the negligence, unless the connection of cause and effect is established; and the negligent act of the defendant must not only be the cause, but the proximate cause, of the injury." Byrd v. Express Co. (at the present term) 51 S. E. 851.

The burden of proof is therefore upon this plaintiff to show that the alleged negligence of the engineman, in not stopping his train sooner than he did was not only the cause, but the proximate cause, of the injury. The law requires him to establish that fact by a clear preponderance of proof, as much so as it does the fact of negligence. The proof must be of such strength and character as to warrant the inference that the failure to stop caused the injury, and not merely to raise a surmise or conjecture that such was the fact. Evidence which merely shows that it was possible that such was the result, or raises a conjecture that it was so, is legally insufficient, and should not be submitted to the jury. State v. Vinson, 63 N. C. 335; Brown v. Kinsey, 81 N. C. 245. "The plaintiff must do more than show the possible liability of the defendant for the injury. He must go further, and offer at least some evidence which reasonably tends to prove every fact essential to his success." Byrd v. Express Co., supra. Applying these well-settled principles, we have concluded that the plaintiff has failed to show that the alleged negligent act of the engineman in not stopping his train sooner than he did caused the injury, and therefore he cannot recover.

The facts, as gathered from the testimony of the plaintiff and his witness, Elliott, who alone testified as to the occurrence, are these: On August 17, 1902, plaintiff, driving his horse and top buggy, crossed the defendant's track in the town of Thomasville. After he had gotten across, and when distant from 15 to 40 feet from the track crossing, and about the time the engine passed the crossing, the horse began to back, and continued backing, and backed into the cars, about the second or third coach. Plaintiff testifies: "I had just crossed the track, and the horse began to cut up and ran back, and backed the right wheel against the cars, and threw me between the shafts and the horse, under his feet. The first time I saw the train the horse wheeled right around towards Lexington and cut up, and I could not see anything. I was something over the length of the horse and buggy when train came along the track." Plaintiff states that then the horse began to back, and he urged him forward. "I do not know as I said my horse was an old fool, but she was an old fool, or else she would not have run back that way." Elliott testified, in substance, that about the time the engine passed the crossing the horse began to back, and kept on backing, and backed into the train. The engineman was looking out at plaintiff and his horse. He slackened up the speed of the train. It was going at a very slow rate of speed. The engine, tender, and several cars had passed before plaintiff's buggy struck the train. He also testified that the train stopped very quickly, but he did not hear the brakes applied, being 150 feet distant. The train was going very slowly, and, after plaintiff's buggy struck it, stopped very quickly. He further stated that the engineman shut off steam and slowed up when he saw the horse backing. The engineman could not have seen the horse "cut up" before the engine got on the crossing, because the horse did not begin to back and "cut up" until then. Witness said that he could see engineman looking out of his window. "He was going very slowly, looking at this man. Stopped very quickly. Went about 10 or 15 feet, apparently holding his train under control, looking at this situation."

In view of the fact that the engineman was on the crossing with his engine when he saw the horse commence to back, and brought his train to a standstill in 15 feet of the crossing, according to the witness, Elliott, and within two or three car lengths, according to plaintiff, it is very doubtful if there is any negligent conduct upon the part of the engineman disclosed by the evidence. But, assuming there is such evidence, in our opinion there is nothing which tends to prove that the alleged negligent conduct caused the damage to the plaintiff or his buggy. This is not a case where the train ran over or backed into the plaintiff, but where the plaintiff backed into the train. While there is no evidence offered that the engineman could have stopped his train any sooner than he did after first seeing the horse "cut up" yet, assuming that he could have done so, and that the train was at a standstill at the moment the horse backed the right buggy wheel into the car, we think no rational inference can be drawn that the result to the plaintiff and his buggy would have been otherwise than it was. There is no affirmative proof whatever that the stopping of the train a moment sooner would have prevented the contact with the buggy wheel or the resultant injury. In view of the lack of evidence, to submit that question to the jury would be to refer it to the domain of guesswork and conjecture for solution. The engine was on the crossing when the horse began to back. That was the earliest moment that the engineman could have discovered plaintiff's situation. Suppose he had stopped his engine and train instantaneously (although we do not know it to be possible); what would have been the evident consequence to the plaintiff? His horse would have backed his buggy into a hissing and steaming engine, a much more dangerous predicament. There is no evidence that the engineman could have so quickly reversed his engine as to back it out of plaintiff's way, and that was hardly possible in so short a time. There is not the slightest evidence that the car steps caught into the wheel and dragged the buggy any distance, or that the wheel struck the steps, as alleged in the complaint. When the frightened horse backed the right hind wheel against a very slowly moving car, it was well calculated to "smash the wheel" and pitch the plaintiff out between the shafts and horse by the force of the impact alone, and not because the car was moving. The same result would doubtless have happened, had the horse backed with the same force against a stone wall. If the train had been moving rapidly, its momentum might possibly have drawn the buggy and its occupant under it when the horse backed the buggy into it. On the contrary, it was moving with such exceeding slowness that it came to a full stop very quickly, almost immediately after the contact, so that some person safely alighted and got hold of the horse's head, and the plaintiff was pitched forward, instead of backwards, or alongside or under the cars. The plaintiff has failed to establish by evidence any circumstances from which it can be fairly inferred that there is reasonable probability that the accident resulted from the failure of the engineman to stop the train sooner than he did, assuming that he could have done so, which is by no means certain. The plaintiff has failed to show that the alleged negligence was, in the expressive language of Mr. Justice Hoke, "the cause that produced the result in continuous sequence, and without which it would not have occurred, and one from which any man of ordinary prudence could have foreseen that such a result was probable under all the facts as they existed." Ramsbottom v. Railroad, 138 N. C., at page 41, 50 S. E., at page 449.

We are of opinion that the proximate cause was (to quote the language of the plaintiff) "the old fool horse."

Affirmed.

HOKE, J. (dissenting). I differ from the court in its decision of this case, and, while no question of law is seriously involved, the difference as to its application to the facts before us is sufficiently pronounced to justify some statement of the reasons for my dissent. It is accepted law in actions of this character that, when two men of fair minds can come to differing conclusions on the question of actionable negligence, the jury must determine the issue, and that this applies, not only to the negligent act, but to the question of proximate cause. It is also the better doctrine that, where the negligent act has been established or admitted, it is only in clear and exceptional instances that the question of proximate cause should be withdrawn from the jury and determined by the judge. Shearman & Red. Neg. vol. 1, § 52; Thompson's Com. on Law of Neg. vol. 1, § 181. Another position may be considered as established—that, when a judge withdraws a case from the jury by directing a nonsuit, the evidence favoring the plaintiff must be taken as true. Hopkins v. Railroad, 131 N. C. 464, 42 S. E. 902; Biles v. Railroad (at this term) 52 S. E. 129. The court does not seem to have been altogether advertent to this last principle; for in the opinion apparent consideration is given to evidence favoring the defendant in certain phases of the case, where there was other evidence, contradictory or qualifying, which was more favorable to plaintiff. This matter is not dwelt upon at much length or in greater detail, for the reason that, in any aspect of the case, I am of opinion that the ruling of the judge below cannot be sustained.

Applying the above rules to the facts before us, as I understand them: Here was a man, over 80 years of age, in a top buggy, who had just driven over a crossing of defendant's railroad, when a passenger train of defendant company passed the crossing, going north. The railroad ran about north and south here. The plaintiff had just driven over, being something over the length of the horse and buggy, as he states it—was from 15 to 20 feet from crossing, as the witness Elliott states it—and, as the train went by the crossing, the horse commenced backing the buggy towards the train. The road sloped upward some towards the crossing, and as the train moved on, going the distance of several car lengths, the horse continued to back the buggy up the slope till the train and the buggy collided. The right hind wheel of the buggy was crushed down, and the old man thrown from his seat onto the forewheel, falling under the shafts, between the horse's heels, and receiving severe injuries, from which he still suffers. During the time the horse was backing the engineer was looking directly at him. A collision was evidently imminent, for some one jumped from the train and caught the horse by the bridle in an effort to avoid the catastrophe, "but the train moved on." The witness Elliott, a merchant in Thomasville, who had no interest in the matter, so far as appears, and who had the entire occurrence in full view, at a distance of not more than 134 feet from the center of the crossing, testifies in part as follows: "To the best of my recollection, about the time the engine passed the crossing the horse began to back, and kept on backing, and backed into the train. I saw the engineer looking out of the window, and some one else stepped from the train. The engineer was looking at Mr. Kearns and his horse. He apparently kind of slacked up the speed of the train. It seemed so. Then he kept looking back after the engine had passed, and just after he struck the train he put on brakes and stopped the train. It was going at a very slow rate of speed. The engine, tender, and several cars had passed before he struck it. I don't know the manner in which the train was stopped. I know it stopped very quickly. * * * The train was going along very slowly, not trying to make good time, and after it struck it stopped very quickly. * * * It seemed that he slowed up after he saw the horse start to backing. He kind of shut off steam, apparently. The train stopped very quickly after he was hit. I saw Kearns. I do not know how badly he was hurt. * * * I live on the south side of the track. That is the side the engineer was on. I could see him looking out of his window. He was going very slowly, looking at this man. He stopped very quickly. He went about 10 or 15 feet. He was apparently holding his train under control, looking at this situation. * * * The horse's head was pointed south, and when he commenced going back he gave a cut and went back against the train. His head was in a westerly direction. The horse and buggy were going backward. * * * It is just an incline—I do not know what degree—10, 15, or 20 degrees. It was a gradual incline down to where the horse was." There are several points in the testimony of this witness which may be noted as a help to the true understanding of the matter. Thus, "I saw the engineer looking out of the window, and some one else stepped from the train. * * * The engineer was looking at Kearns and his horse. He apparently kind of slacked the speed of the train. It seemed so. Then he kept looking back after the engine had passed, and just after he struck the train he put on brakes and stopped the train. * * * The train stopped very quickly after he was hit. * * * He stopped very quickly. He went about 10 or 15 feet. He was apparently holding the train under control, looking at this situation." These facts make out a clear case of negligence. The engineer, in the exercise of ordinary prudence, should have stopped the train when he saw that a collision was imminent; and it is almost equally as clear that the movement of the train had something to do with the nature and extent of the injury.

The opinion substantially admits that there was negligence in not stopping the train outright, and sustains the ruling of the court below on the ground that there is no evidence that the motion of the train had anything to do with causing the injury, and that this is so clear there can be no two opinions about it among fair-minded men. A dissertation on the momentum possessed by bodies of vast weight and tremendous power, though moving slowly, might be of service here; but I find it difficult to discuss this last position with that seriousness which is always becoming when making final deliverance on the rights of parties, and which the great respect entertained for my Brethren always prompts. To hold that the movement of the train, though negligent, had nothing to do with causing or contributing to the plaintiff's hurt, to my mind involves the proposition that when a 400,000-pound train, in motion, collides with a 300-pound buggy and a 900-pound horse, also in motion, in which the wheel of the buggy is crushed down and the occupant thrown from his seat, causing him to fall beneath the horse's heels, the motion of the train had nothing whatever to do with intensifying the shock or increasing the damage, and that this is so clear that there can be no two opinions about it. The reasons given in support of the position are no more satisfying than the position itself. It is urged that the train was going "slowly, very slowly." This is a comparative term, and does not mean the same thing, when speaking of trains, as in slower methods of locomotion. Thus the witness Elliott says at one place, "It was going along very slowly, not trying to make good time." However this may be, it was going forward faster than the horse was backing, for it had gone three or four car lengths, while the horse had backed from 15 to 40 feet. It is also suggested that there is not the "slightest evidence that the car steps caught in the wheel and dragged the buggy any distance, or that the wheel struck the steps, as urged in the complaint." No; the evidence is silent on these points. No one seems to have noted just what part of the car came in contact with the buggy, nor which way the wheel was dragged. The first point was probably considered of no consequence, and any evidence on the second was more than likely effaced in the crush and wreck of the offending wheel.

It is also repeated, in aid of the defendant's engineer, that after the collision the train was stopped very quickly; but I cannot see how that can help the defendant. The train had gone 10 or 15 feet beyond the point of contact, and stopping it quickly only tended to show that the engineer had his train under full control, and could readily have stopped in time to avoid the injury, if he had so desired. As to the plaintiff, the injury had been already done, and the train could have proceeded on its way north, and not added one whit to the plaintiff's grievance or his injury. It might be suggested in support of plaintiff's position, as a matter of common observation, that under all the conditions described by this testimony a buggy could have backed up that incline at the rate described against a stationary object, and it would not have crushed a buggy wheel of ordinary strength 1 time out of 10, or even 100. The only other element present was the motion of the train, and the strong probability is that this motion either caused or greatly intensified the injury. It would seem almost to permit the application of the principle "res ipsa loquitur," and that neither evidence nor further argument is required. I agree with my Brethren that there cannot well be two opinions on the question, but the conclusion should be the other way.

CLARK, C. J., dissenting, concurs in what is so admirably said by Mr. Justice HOKE. Whether the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury was his owning a "foolish" little horse, over which he lost control, and which backed the buggy and its occupant up a steep hill against the car, or whether it was the act of the defendant's servant in crushing into the buggy with the energies of steam and the weight of a heavy train of cars, which, notwithstanding, he had under perfect control, and with full knowledge that the plaintiff could not control his horse, was a matter of fact eminently for a jury to decide. If "only one inference could be drawn," it would be that the proximate cause was the vastly greater power of steam, which was under the control of the defendant's servant. In this collision between the backing horse and the moving train, not only was the impact of the latter the greater force, but there was negligence on the part of the defendant, and none on the part of the plaintiff. How much of the damage was due to the neglect and default of the defendant was a matter which only a jury can determine. If there had been no negligence by the defendant, the injury would have caused it no liability, but the defendant's negligence is clear. In Craft v. Railroad, 136 N. C. 49, 48 S. E. 519, the court holds that "on a motion for nonsuit the evidence of the plaintiff must be taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to him, and, if there is more than a scintilla of evidence tending to prove the plaintiff's contentions, the question must be left to the jury, who alone can pass upon the weight of the testimony and the credibility of witnesses." To the same purport are Cox v. Railroad, 123 N. C. 604, 31 S. E. 848; Coley v. Railroad, 129 N. C. 407, 40 S. E. 195, 57 L. R. A. 817; Hopkins v. Railroad, 131 N. C. 463, 42 S. E. 902, and Butts v. Railway, 133 N. C. 82, 45 S. E. 472. In Purnell v. Railway, 122 N. C. 832, 29 S. E. 953, the court holds that "a motion of nonsuit is substantially a demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence. * * * Every fact which the plaintiff's evidence proved or tended to prove must be taken by the court to be proved. It must be taken in the strongest light as against the defendant." The same view is taken in Printing Co. v. Railroad, 126 N. C. 516, 36 S. E. 33; Gibbs v. Lyon, 95 N. C. 146; Springs v. Schenck, 99 N. C. 551, 6 S. E. 405, 6 Am. St. Rep. 552. And in Snider v. Newell, 132 N. C. 614, 44 S. E. 354. Connor, J., speaking for the court, says: "The demurrer to the evidence admits the truth of the plaintiff's testimony, together with every reasonable inference to be drawn therefrom most favorable to the plaintiff. Brittain v. Westhall, 135 N. C. 492, 47 S. E. 616."

The theoretical proposition that the only inference which could reasonably be drawn was that the causa causans lay with the little horse, backing buggy and driver up hill, is met by the fact that two members of this court draw a different inference. There is no place to apply a theory, when the foundation fact, which would deprive the plaintiff of the sacred right of trial by jury, is lacking. Const. art. 1, § 19, declares that "the ancient mode of trial by jury is one of the best securities of the rights of the people, and ought to remain sacred and inviolable." The guaranty of the right of trial by jury is traced back with pride to the words of Magna Charta, "Legale iudicium parium suorum." The disparity of power between John and his armed barons was not great, and, indeed, at Runnymede the latter were the stronger. If the right of trial by a jury of one's peers should have been guaranteed between the barons against the King, certainly it should be still more sacred when the controversy, as here, is between a citizen of humble means, more than 80 years of age, on the one hand, and on the other a powerful corporation, with its roads extending into many states, with (as we know from the official reports of both state and federal governments) nearly $50,000,000 of annual receipts, more than $16,000,000 of which are in excess of its operating expenses, and with influence extending to every sphere of activity, state and federal. If ever the right of trial by jury should be held sacred, it is between litigants of such disproportionate power. Constitutional guaranties, like that of trial by jury, are the necessities of the weak and humble. The great and powerful can get their dues (if not more) without such aid. Therefore such right should be always sacredly guarded and never dispensed with. If a judge can dispense with a jury trial because he thinks that upon the evidence the verdict ought not to be in favor of the plaintiff, then the judge, not the jury, tries the case and weighs the evidence, whether it is "reasonably sufficient" to justify a recovery. Why carefully forbid the judge to express an opinion "whether a fact is fully or sufficiently proved" (Code, § 413), if the judge can decide that the "evidence is not sufficient" to justify a verdict for the plaintiff and refuse to submit the cause to the jury.

The ancient landmark was that, if there is "any evidence beyond a scintilla," either party has a right to have the jury pass upon the evidence, leaving it to the judge, in the interest of justice, to set aside the verdict, if palpably erroneous. Jordan v. Lassiter, 51 N. C. 133. This was fully debated and reiterated in Wittkowsky v. Wasson, 71 N. C. 451, where Bynum, J., with great foresight and to his lasting honor, in a dissenting opinion of great force, combated the "new and dangerous proposition," as he termed it, which was intimated by the majority opinion, that "any evidence" could be construed to mean such "as reasonably to satisfy the jury." As he clearly perceived and earnestly insisted, this would take the right of trial by jury out of the rank of a constitutional guaranty and make it discretionary with the judge. "Power is ever stealing from the many to the few." Here two out of five members of this court are of opinion that there was not only evidence, but, indeed, that the weight of the evidence was, in favor of the plaintiff. The counsel for the defendant railroad evidently thought that the jury would also find the facts against him, else he would not have been so anxious to prevent their being submitted to the jury. In the differing opinion of the members of this court as to what the evidence proves, the actual and real result is that the defendant is exonerated by the opinion of a bare majority of five men as to the weight of evidence, and the plaintiff does not receive the benefit of his constitutional right to have the weight of the evidence passed upon by a jury of twelve men "of the vicinage." Yet, in cases of any doubt, the citizen should always be granted the protection claimed.

(129 N. C. 608)

STATE v. HORNER.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1905.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—VOLUNTARY CONFESSION.

In a prosecution for murder, statements of the prisoner as to the occurrences leading up to the shooting, which are voluntarily made while under arrest, without any inducements or threats, are properly admitted in evidence as showing a confession.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 14, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, §§ 1146, 1167.]

2. SAME—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL—ABUSIVE LANGUAGE.

In a prosecution for murder, reference by the prosecution to the prisoner as an "outlaw" in his argument to the jury was not prejudicial, where the evidence considered most favorable to the prisoner made him guilty of manslaughter.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 15, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, § 3127.]

3. HOMICIDE—SELF-DEFENSE—RESISTING ARREST.

In a prosecution for the murder of an officer attempting an arrest, where the prisoner knew that deceased was an officer and had a warrant for his arrest, and was avoiding, if not resisting, arrest when he killed deceased, his plea of self-defense was not sustained, and the court properly instructed that he was at least guilty of manslaughter.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 26, Cent. Dig. Homicide, § 144.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Ward, Judge.

James K. Horner was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

R. B. Boone, S. M. Gattis, P. C. Graham, and J. W. Graham, for appellant. The Attorney General and Winston & Bryant, for the State.

CONNOR, J. Prisoner was charged with the murder of one Nichols, a deputy sheriff. Deceased was endeavoring to arrest prisoner, having in his hands a warrant for a misdemeanor. After a verdict of murder in the second degree, followed by a judgment, prisoner appeals, assigning a number of errors in his honor's ruling. It is not necessary to consider all of the exceptions, because, if there is no element of self-defense disclosed in the testimony, his honor correctly instructed the jury that they should find the prisoner guilty of manslaughter at least. There is no exception pointed to instruction in regard to murder in the second degree.

The first exception is directed to the admission of evidence tending to show a confession. The state introduced one G. C. Ray, who testified that he assisted in bringing prisoner to jail. He had been shot by those who arrested him. Did not seem to be suffering very much from the shot. After traveling two or three miles, prisoner began the conversation. Two men were with him in the wagon, three or four others following on horses and in buggy. He was tied, but had stated that tying did not hurt him. There was a bed in the wagon and he seemed to be comfortable. No inducements were offered him and no threats made. He did not seem to be excited. Dr. Jordan was called, who testified that he examined prisoner after he was arrested and found that his neck was peppered with small shot; seemed to be suffering some pain; was feeble from having been in the woods for some time without nourishment. He was complaining of dislocated shoulder. Witness set his shoulder and had food provided for him. After the arrest he was kindly treated, no indignities were offered him; seemed to be perfectly sound in mind; did not seem to be afraid when the guard started with him to jail. The court found that the statement was voluntary. Witness Ray was asked to state what he said. Prisoner objected, objection overruled, and prisoner excepted. Witness stated that prisoner asked when Nichols died and what part of his body he was shot. He said that Nichols acted too hastily in following him, and that he had acted too hastily in shooting him; that Nichols had lost his life, and he would now lose his. He said that he told Nichols that he was not going to be arrested by him; that Nichols said he would arrest him; that he told Nichols that if he followed him he would shoot him; that Nichols did follow him; and that when he got within five or six feet of him he turned and shot. Witness asked him who shot first, and he said that some of them told him that Nichols shot at him first with a pistol. The exception cannot be sustained. This court has uniformly refused to permit confessions, obtained by threats made, or inducements held out, to persons under arrest, or surrounded with a number of pursuers or otherwise so situated as to render it doubtful whether they were freely and voluntarily made, to be used against a person charged with crime. We have no disposition to depart from or weaken the salutary and humane principle upon which the decisions are based. We fully approve the language of Mr. Justice Reade in State v. Dildy, 72 N. C. 325, in regard to the admissibility of confessions. We think, however, that the confession made in this case comes directly within the exception "when he voluntarily opens the door and invites us in." The testimony of Ray and Dr. Jordan brings the case clearly within the decisions of this court in State v. Whitfield, 109 N. C. 876, 13 S. E. 726; State v. Daniels, 134 N. C. 641, 46 S. E. 743; State v. Exum, 138 N. C. 599, 50 S. E. 283.

The next exception is directed to the language used by the counsel for the state referring to the prisoner as an "outlaw." It appears that counsel, assisting the solicitor in his opening speech, argued that from the evidence prisoner was an outlaw, to which no objection was made. Counsel for prisoner replied vigorously to the language used by counsel for state. The solicitor in his closing argument referred to the criticism of the counsel for prisoner, and argued that upon the evidence prisoner was an outlaw. Prisoner's counsel objected and asked the court to hold that such language was improper. His honor did not respond to this request. The solicitor then stated that, as he understood it, an outlaw was a man who put himself beyond and outside the reach of the law, that prisoner admitted that he had been indicted in the state and federal courts, and that when the officer came to arrest him, he would not go with him, etc., and he submitted to the jury that from these facts the imputation that he was an outlaw was not an unjust one, but was warranted from all the facts and circumstances of the case. To these remarks prisoner excepted. As has been frequently said by the court in passing upon exceptions to language used by counsel, it is difficult to define the line between that which rests in the sound discretion of the presiding judge and that which as a matter of law is subject to revision upon exception and appeal. The exception was duly and in apt time taken, and the question is fairly presented whether the language of the solicitor falls within the prohibited domain of debate as being prejudicial to the prisoner. Reade, J., in Jenkins v. Ore Dress- ing Co., 35 N. C. 563, says: "It is difficult to lay down the line further than to say that it must ordinarily be left to the discretion of the judge who tries the cause; and this court will not review his discretion unless it is apparent that the impropriety of counsel was gross, and well calculated to prejudice the jury." It is settled by this court that unless exception is taken, either at the time the language is used or by request to the court to instruct the jury that they must disregard the objectionable language, it cannot be assigned as error. The cases are collected and discussed in State v. Tyson, 133 N. C. 692, 45 S. E. 838.

The solicitor did not apply the term "outlaw" to the prisoner in the sense in which it is used in the statute, as one who was to be dealt with otherwise than by the procedure provided for the trial of those charged with crime. It is not very clear in what way or for what purpose the term was used or intended to impress the jury. The fact that he was being tried according to the forms of law excluded the idea that it was contemplated that the jury should convict otherwise than as they were sworn and charged according to the law and the evidence. It would seem that counsel were indulging in that kind of license which poets claim and are permitted to indulge in. We cannot think that the jury, in the light of the charge of the court, supposed that they were trying the question submitted to them by the solicitor, whether upon the evidence the argument that he was an outlaw was justified. There is a difference between arguments addressed to the jury which are either illogical or irrelevant and the use of abusive and degrading epithets or characterization of parties or witnesses. The former may be disposed of in reply or either of its own motion or upon request by the court. They are usually disposed of by the common sense and intelligence of the jury. Abusive epithets or denunciatory characterizations, unless counteracted, are calculated to prejudice the minds of jurors, arouse their passions, and unsettle their judgments. It is a matter of common observation that a charge made against a man without foundation will make but little and only temporary lodgement in the mind of others, whereas an odious or degrading name or term of reproach once attaching to a person will follow and degrade him for years. No one was contending in this case nor was it material to the guilt of the defendant to maintain the proposition that the deputy sheriff would have been justified upon the testimony in shooting the prisoner. The question whether he had placed himself beyond or outside the protection of the law was not involved in the issue. It was, rather, whether, assuming that the officer unlawfully shot at him, the prisoner's attitude and conduct was such that he could, even in self-defense, take the life of the officer. In many cases the attitude of both parties precludes a successful defense when charged with felonious homicide. While it would have been eminently proper for the judge in his charge to have said to the jury that they should discard from their minds all that was said in regard to the prisoner being an outlaw, and doubtless he would have done so, it is manifest that, in his opinion, that and very much more of the argument became irrelevant because of the instruction which he gave in regard to the law of the case. While we do not commend the use of any term of reproach in regard to a witness, and certainly not to a defendant on trial, we cannot say that the breach of privilege is gross or manifestly prejudicial. The prosecuting officer is in a sense, and in a very important sense, a judicial officer and aids the court and jury in the administration of the criminal law. He should use a sound judicial discretion, both in respect to the evidence he will offer and the arguments he will use, to aid the jury in arriving at a correct verdict. Representing the people of the state, he wishes no verdict against the citizen unless it is the result of truthful, competent testimony, considered in the light of fair, legitimate argument. We are sure such is the rule by which the prosecuting offices of the state are guarded. While we do not think that upon principle and decided cases the language used and the course pursued would entitle the prisoner to a new trial, it is manifest that, in the light of the instruction given the jury, no harm in this respect was done the prisoner.

His honor instructed the jury that the testimony, considered in the light most favorable to prisoner, made him guilty of manslaughter at least. The exception to this instruction is based upon the contention that in certain aspects of the testimony, if believed by the jury, the homicide was se defendendo. For the purpose of passing upon this exception, the testimony of prisoner in his own behalf, together with other testimony from which the most favorable inferences could be drawn, should alone be considered. The state introduced A. W. Brees, a deputy sheriff, who testified: That deceased had a warrant for prisoner charging him with a misdemeanor. That witness went with deceased to make the arrest; drove into the yard; no one in house; saw prisoner's wife and sister in the yard. Deceased searched the house; did not find prisoner; started towards the house of prisoner's son, when deceased said: "Yonder is Knapp now." He was squatted down behind a tree with a gun in his lap. Deceased said he would go and talk with him. Just as he got to him deceased said: "If you will meet me at Squire Terry's tomorrow at 2 or 3 o'clock, I will summon witnesses and go back home." Prisoner said: "I will go with you nowhere—no such trash as you are, and, if you follow me, I will shoot you."

Deceased called to witness to come on. Prisoner walked further back into the woods. Witness got out of buggy and fastened mule. "Just as I got last trace undone, heard both shots fired at same time. I started in a run and met Nichols about ten steps on side next to road." Witness described condition of deceased, his language in regard to the extent of his wounds, that he was bound to die, etc., and, further, that he said: "Defendant, Horner, shot first, and he shot next; that Horner ran after he shot; that they were not five steps apart. He said he did not try to hit defendant, and that defendant just flung his gun around and shot." He further testified in regard to seeing the warrant and finding pistol in pocket of deceased, one chamber empty, etc. It was in evidence that defendant had gone to prisoner's house with warrant before, but had not arrested him. Prisoner testified: "I was in the woods; dog had treed a squirrel. Nichols and Breez came on down the road. Nichols called to me and I answered. He said come on and go with me; had a warrant; he read it. I said I am not going to do it; he said if I would promise to be at Squire Terry's tomorrow at three o'clock I will go. I refused. He came on me and said to me (with an oath), if you do not go with me, I am going to shoot you. Then I picked up gun and walked off; he shot at me; I ran about fifty yards; he shot again and I threw gun around and shot. I was going away from him; was out there for a squirrel. I ran against a tree when he was after me; knew that deceased was a deputy sheriff." Witness also testified: That deceased came to his house that morning with the warrant, and that he (prisoner) said that he had done nothing; wanted to see the prosecutrix who had sworn out the warrant and fix it up. That he went into the house to get his shoes and came back; deceased drew his gun on him and cursed him, saying that he was going to kill him. Prisoner had no gun when he came out of the house; deceased had a gun. There was other testimony in regard to the conduct and language of the parties at the prisoner's house in the morning, also by witnesses who heard the two shots in the woods.

Taking the testimony of the prisoner to be true, and we find nothing in the other testimony more favorable to him, we concur with his honor that the plea of self-defense cannot be sustained. He admits the homicide with a deadly weapon, thereby taking upon himself the burden of showing that he was acting in self-defense. The deceased was acting strictly in the line of his duty in endeavoring to make the arrest, and the prisoner was, upon his own showing, avoiding, if not resisting, arrest. The principle governing the case is thus stated by Pearson, C. J., in State v. Garrett, 60 N. C. 145, 84

Am. Dec. 359: "When a man puts himself in a state of resistance and openly defies the officers of the law, he is not allowed to take advantage of his own wrong, if his life is thereby endangered, and set up the excuse of self-defense." The application of this principle to prisoner's testimony sustains his honor in saying to the jury that he was guilty of manslaughter at the least. 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. 122; Tolbert v. State, 71 Miss. 179, 14 South. 462, 42 Am. St. Rep. 454; State v. Shaw, 73 Vt. 149, 50 Atl. 863. State v. Alford, 80 N. C. 445. The prisoner knew that deceased was a deputy sheriff and that he had the warrant for his arrest. It was his duty to submit to arrest, and in resisting it, with a gun in his hand, it is not open to him to say that he acted in self-defense. Conceding that as he was going away from the officer, refusing to submit to arrest, the officer was not justified in shooting him to make the arrest, does not affect his right to kill. If there was a necessity to shoot the deceased to save his life, it was the result of his unlawful act in resisting the mandate of the law. The position of the prisoner is similar in this respect to one who brings on or provokes a difficulty and in the progress of it kills. It is not se defendendo, because he brought on the necessity. This is elementary and uniformly sustained by numerous cases in our own and other jurisdictions. The learned counsel for the prisoner calls to our attention many authorities, discussing and defining the power and right of the officer in making arrests. We concur with his views upon that question, but, as we have said and his honor held, that is not the test of the prisoner's guilt. It may be that the prisoner was right in saying that both acted hastily, but he was in the wrong in refusing to submit to arrest, and the law fixes the responsibility for the homicide upon him. If the killing is of malice, it is murder; if premeditated, it is murder in the first degree. In no aspect is it in self-defense.

This view renders it unnecessary to consider the numerous exceptions to the refusal of his honor to give special instructions, many of which were correct propositions of law, but not applicable to the testimony. His honor correctly instructed the jury in respect to the difference between manslaughter and murder and the different degrees of murder. We have examined the record with the care which the result of our conclusion demands. His case was argued by counsel by a wealth of learning and ability. He chose to resist arrest for a misdemeanor, and brought upon himself the awful crime of which, upon his own testimony, he stands properly convicted. It must be certified that there is no error.

No error.

(139 N. C. 442)

LANE v. ROWAN COUNTY COM'RS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 7, 1905.)

LICENSES — OCCUPATION TAX — EMIGRATION AGENTS.

An officer of a foreign corporation, who comes into the state to procure laborers to work under himself in another state on work which he superintends and manages for the corporation, and who receives no consideration or compensation for carrying the laborers out of the state, and the laborers procured by whom are not employed in any other business or under the management of any other person than himself, is not engaged in the business of an emigrant agent, within the statute exacting a license tax from persons engaged in such business.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rowan County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by C. W. Lane against the commissioners of Rowan county. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Civil action begun in justice's court, and upon appeal heard in the superior court on an agreed statement of facts. The plaintiff is, and was at the times hereinafter mentioned, a resident of the state of Virginia. He is, and was at said times, one of the four stockholders, and a director, and the secretary of Lane Bros. Company, a corporation doing railroad construction work in the states of Virginia and West Virginia. The work of the company at —, W. Va., is, and was at said times, under the immediate control and management of the plaintiff. He alone hired employees to labor for the company at —, W. Va., and he alone had authority to discharge them. The three other members of the company severally had entire charge of the construction work in three different places in said states. On July 18, 1905, the plaintiff was in Rowan county, N. C., and then and there procured laborers for employment for Lane Bros. Company to work under himself at —, W. Va., on certain railroad construction which he superintended and managed for the company. None of the laborers were used or employed in any other business, or under the management of any person other than the plaintiff. The plaintiff came to Rowan county for this purpose. They were not carried to West Virginia for any other purpose. The plaintiff received no consideration or compensation for carrying the laborers out of the state from any person or corporation. He received, as such manager and secretary, a regular salary from Lane Bros. Company, and the company paid the transportation of the laborers to West Virginia. He has not solicited laborers to leave this state to be employed in any business, and under no management, except as above. At the time he paid the emigration license tax, as hereinafter set forth, it was not his purpose to carry laborers from North Carolina, except to be used as above and under his personal direction. The plaintiff is not an emigrant agent, unless the above facts constitute him such. Before taking the laborers away, the sheriff of Rowan county required him to pay an emigration license tax of $200. The tax was paid under written protest, and to avoid being detained and interrupted in his business; the plaintiff contending that the collection thereof was illegal, invalid, and unauthorized, and that the tax impairs the privileges and immunities of the citizens of one state in another state. Within 30 days after paying the $200 license tax, he demanded in writing of the proper state and county officers that the amount be refunded to him, in accordance with section 30, c. 558, Pub. Acts 1901, and the officers refused to refund it or any part thereof. Judgment for plaintiff. Appeal by defendant.

T. C. Linn, for appellants. Overman & Gregory, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the case). The defendants contend that the facts set forth bring the case within the decision in State v. Roberson, 136 N. C. 587, 48 S. E. 595. It will be noted that the jury in that case found by a special verdict that the defendant "did engage in the business of procuring laborers for employment out of the state, to wit, for one R. H. Jones, in the state of Georgia, without having paid," etc. This finding brought the defendant clearly within the language and spirit of the statute. This case in our opinion, comes within the principle of Carr v. Commissioners, 136 N. C. 125, 48 S. E. 597; the only difference between the two cases being that in one the plaintiff hired hands for himself, while in the other he hired for a corporation of which he was director and manager in respect to the work for which the hands were employed. In neither case can it be said the plaintiff was "engaged in the business of hiring hands," etc. We cannot perceive any distinction between the cases, because of this difference. As we said in both cases (following Moore's Case, 113 N. C. 697, 18 S. E. 342, 22 L. R. A. 472, and Hunt's Case, 129 N. C. 686, 40 S. E. 216, 85 Am. St. Rep. 758), the statute is a revenue measure, imposing a tax upon the business of hiring hands, etc. Its validity can be sustained only upon this view. We do not intend to hold that a corporation, engaged in business in another state, may employ an agent to come into this state and "engage in the business" of hiring hands without being amenable to the tax. We simply hold that an officer of a foreign corporation, coming here under the circumstances set forth in this record and hiring hands for employment by himself as the officer of the corporation, is not "engaged in the business," etc. It may be difficult to draw the line in advance, so as to make the demarcation clear. We can only decide each case as it comes to us, keeping in view the general principle announced in Moore's Case and in Hunt's Case, supra.

We concur with his honor. The judgment must be affirmed.

(1st N. C. 1)

WRIGHT v. COTTEN.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1905.)

1. TRIAL—SUBMISSION OF ISSUES—FORM.

In the submission of issues it is only requisite that the court submit issues in such form as, when decided either way, they may be the basis for its judgment.

2. BANKRUPTCY—ACTION BY TRUSTEE—SUFFICIENCY OF ISSUES.

In a suit by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover a sum which it was alleged the bankrupt, when insolvent and within four months of the filing of the petition, had paid to another, who had knowledge of the insolvency, there being an intention to give an unlawful preference, the court submitted as issues whether the payment was with intent on the part of the bankrupt to delay or defraud creditors, whether defendant received or purchased in good faith for a present fair consideration, whether the bankrupt while insolvent and within four months before the filing of the petition paid such sum, and whether the one receiving the payment had reasonable cause to believe that the bankrupt intended by such payment to make a preference over other creditors, and the sum plaintiff was entitled to recover. Held, that the issues submitted were fully sufficient to develop the whole case.

3. SAME—PREFERENCE—FRAUD AS ELEMENT.

The bankrupt act (Act Cong. July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60, 30 Stat. 562 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3445]) defines a preference to consist in the payment by a debtor to one creditor of a greater percentage of his debt than he is able to pay to all other creditors of the same class, and denounces the penalty imposed on the giving of a preference to be that, if such preference has been made and the person receiving it or his agent acting in the matter for him had reasonable cause to believe that a preference was intended, the same is voidable and made recoverable by the trustee. Held, that the making of the preference and incurring its penalty are independent of any actual fraud.

4. SAME—TRANSFER OF PROPERTY—PAYMENT OF MONEY.

A payment of money is a "transfer" of property within the bankrupt act.

5. SAME—CREDITOR'S KNOWLEDGE OF PREFERENCE—BELIEF IN INSOLVENCY.

A creditor must have reasonable cause to believe that his debtor is insolvent in fact as a foundation for reasonable cause to believe that an unlawful preference in favor of such creditor is intended within the bankrupt act.

6. SAME—KNOWLEDGE OF AGENT—AGENT'S INSOLVENCY.

The knowledge of a son, who acted as the general financial agent of his father, that the bankrupt was insolvent, was the knowledge of the father in receiving an alleged fraudulent preference.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanly County; Bryan, Judge.

Action by J. C. Wright, trustee, against J. F. Cotten. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The following issues were submitted: "(1) Was the payment by the bankrupt, C. L. Cotten, of $3,000 to his father, John F. Cotten, made with the intent and purpose on the part of C. L. Hinton to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors, or any of them? A. Yes. (2) Did John F. Cotten, the defendant, receive or purchase in good faith the $3,000 for a present fair consideration? A. No.

(3) Did C. L. Cotten, bankrupt, while insolvent and within four months before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy against him, pay to his father, John F. Cotten, or his agent acting in the matter for him, $3,000? A. Yes. (4) If so, did the person receiving the payment, or the defendant, Cotten, or his agent acting in the matter for him, have reasonable cause to believe that the bankrupt, C. L. Cotten, intended by said payment to prefer his father over other creditors, as alleged in the complaint? A. Yes. (5) What sum, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to recover of the defendant? A. $3,000 with interest." From the judgment rendered the defendant appealed.

Theo. F. Klutts and J. R. Price, for appellant. John N. Wilson and King & Kimball, for appellee.

BROWN, J. The plaintiff sues to recover $3,000, which he alleges that C. L. Cotten, a bankrupt, at the time insolvent, and within four months of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy against him, paid to John F. Cotten, his father, in money, and that at the time John F. Cotten had knowledge that C. L. Cotten was insolvent, and intended thereby to give him an unlawful preference, and that his purpose in making said payment was to hinder, delay, and defraud his creditors. The defendant, administrator of John F. Cotten, denied the several material allegations of the complaint, but admitted that the $3,000 was paid to John F. Cotten by C. L. Cotten in payment of a debt, and within the four months as alleged. The evidence discloses the following uncontradicted facts: On March 27, 1901, the bankrupt's store at Albemarle was destroyed by fire. His goods were insured in the sum of $8,000—$2,000 in the North Carolina Home, $4,000 in the Traders' Insurance Company, and $2,000 in the Virginia State. On February 21, 1902, he compromised the policy in the North Carolina Home for $1,000 cash. On February 13th, previous, his attorney compromised the $4,000 Traders' policy and received $2,500. The attorney retained $500 for services and paid the bankrupt $2,000, which money or check for the same he deposited in the Cabarrus Savings Bank of Albemarle on February 19, 1902, to the credit of John F. Cotten and in his name. The cash the bankrupt received from the North Carolina Home he deposited in the Davis-Wiley Bank, Salisbury, on February 22, 1902, in the name of and to the credit of John F. Cotten. On April 7th an involuntary petition in bankruptcy was filed, and on April 25th he was adjudged a bankrupt and the plaintiff elected trustee in bankruptcy. There are several exceptions appearing in the record, which we have carefully examined, but deem it unnecessary to notice, except to say that they are without merit.

The only exceptions we desire to notice more at length are those relating to the issues and the burden of proof. We think the issues submitted are more than sufficient to develop the whole case and give plaintiff and defendant full scope to present to the jury evidence upon every issue raised by the pleadings. Issues arise upon the pleadings, and not upon evidential facts. All that is requisite is that the court shall submit issues in such form as when, decided either way, they may be the basis for its judgment. Cumming v. Barber, 99 N. C. 332, 5 S. E. 903. In his very able argument, as well as in his brief, Mr. Kluttz, counsel for defendant, laid almost entire stress upon the alleged errors of the trial judge in charging upon the burden of proof in respect to the first and fourth issues. In the view we take of this case it is unnecessary to consider the charge in detail in reference to the three issues. The bankrupt act (Act Cong. July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60, 30 Stat. 562 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3445]) defines a preference (a) to consist in the payment by a debtor to one creditor of a greater percentage of his debt than he is able to pay to all other creditors of the same class; and (b) the same section denounces the penalty imposed on the giving of a preference to be that if such preference has been made, and the person receiving it or his agent acting in the matter for him had reasonable cause to believe that a preference was intended, then the same is voidable and made recoverable by the trustee. From the reading of this section it is clear that the making of the preference and incurring its penalty are wholly independent of any idea of fraud whatever, the statutes simply saying in plain terms what a preference is, and in terms equally plain the penalty of it.

A payment of money is a transfer of property under the definition of the word "transfer" as used in the sections of the bankrupt act. Pirie v. Trust Co., 182 U. S. 438, 21 Sup. Ct. 908, 45 L. Ed. 1171; In re Fixen, 102 Fed. 295, 42 C. C. A. 354, 50 L. R. A. 605; Sherman v. Luckhart (Mo. App.) 70 S. W. 388. To make a transfer voidable within the provisions of the act, it is necessary to establish four facts: (1) The insolvency of the transferor; (2) the obtaining by the creditor of a larger percentage of his debt than any other creditor of the same class; (3) the giving of a preference within four months before the filing of a petition in bankruptcy; (4) reasonable cause upon the part of the creditor to believe that a preference was intended. Sebring v. Wellington, 63 App. Div. 493, 71 N. Y. Supp. 788. We think his honor should have instructed the jury, upon the entire evidence and in any reasonable view of it, if found to be true, that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the $3,000, and that they should answer the issues as the jury did answer them. The jury, having found all the issues in favor of the plaintiff, thereby declared that they found the facts to be as testified to by the witnesses, inasmuch as the defendant offered nothing in contradiction. The uncontradicted evidence establishes each of the four essential facts necessary to a recovery, and we do not see that any other inferences can be reasonably drawn from it. The insolvency of the bankrupt at the time he made the alleged payment is an irresistible conclusion from the evidence. His indebtedness amounted to from $12,000, to $16,000, and his assets, "exclusive of property transferred or conveyed in fraud of creditors," amounted to $18,000. Hence it follows that the admitted payment of the $3,000 within the four months was a much larger percentage of John F. Cotten's debt than could be paid any other creditor of the same class.

This brings us to consider the fourth essential fact. We admit, as broadly as the defendant contends for, that the creditor must have reasonable cause to believe the debtor insolvent in fact as a foundation for reasonable cause to believe that an unlawful preference was intended. In re Eggert, 98 Fed. 843, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 541; Grant v. Bank, 97 U. S. 80, 24 L. Ed. 971. We think the uncontradicted and unexplained evidence establishes that at the time of and before the preferential payment C. L. Cotten, the bankrupt, was the general confidential financial agent of his father, John F. Cotten, and that he practically made such payment to himself as his father's agent. The testimony of several witnesses tends to prove conclusively that for some time prior to his failure C. L. Cotten had charge of all the business of John F. Cotten in Albemarle, that he was his financial agent there, that people generally transacted business with C. L. Cotten for John F. Cotten, and that he collected and paid out money for his father. The evidence shows that C. L. Cotten had control of the bank account of John F. Cotten from 1900 till the latter's death, that he drew checks against it, and signed them "John F. Cotten, by C. L. Cotten," and that such checks were paid by the bank. The officers of the bank recognized him and did business with him for several years, and at the time when the payment was made, as the generally accredited financial agent of John F. Cotten. In fact, C. L. Cotten drew on this very insurance money, deposited to his father's credit by such checks, and they were always honored. A review of the entire evidence tending to prove the agency is unnecessary and would be tedious. Suffice it to say, it establishes the agency most conclusively, and there is nothing to contradict it. The only witness offered by the defendant was the daughter of John F. Cotten, whose evidence tended to contradict nothing and to prove no material fact, except that John F. Cotten learned speedily of the fire which destroyed his son's property. It being established that C. L. Cotten at the time of the payment was his father's general financial agent and that he practically paid himself for his father, it follows that his personal knowledge of his own utter insolvency is imputable to his principal, and that the father is affected by all knowledge possessed by the son, his agent.

It is not necessary for the plaintiff to show a fraudulent intent upon the part of John F. Cotten or that John F. Cotten did not give a present fair consideration for the $3,000. Therefore the first and second issues were unnecessary, although found for the plaintiff. The two vital issues are the third and fourth. If the effect of this transaction is to give John F. Cotten a greater percentage of his debt than others of the same class get, it is voidable, and the money may be recovered, provided John F. Cotten had reasonable cause to believe that it was intended as a preference. Crooks v. Bank, (Sup.) 61 N. Y. Supp. 604, 8 Am. Bankr. Rep. 243; Blakey v. Bank, 95 Fed. 267, 2 Am. Bankr. Rep. 459. There is no evidence that John F. Cotten personally knew of or participated in this transaction. His son, who acted in the dual relation of debtor and general financial agent, did all that was done. In his capacity as financial agent he received the money for his father from himself as debtor, and as agent checked on it and paid it out. This agent debtor, C. L. Cotten, evidently knew he was hopelessly insolvent, and he therefore hurried to compromise his insurance policy and deposited the proceeds to his father's credit, and thereby gave him an unlawful preference over the other creditors. No other inference can be reasonably drawn from the uncontradicted evidence. It is an old and well-established rule that the principal is bound by any notice acquired by his agent during the course of the agency. It is a familiar maxim of the law that "notice to the agent is notice to the principal." Reinhard on Agency, § 354. This rule of constructive notice to the principal is based upon the identity of principal and agent, and upon the theory that the agent has discharged his duty by giving information to his principal. Therefore it is held that where the agent had reasonable cause at the time to believe the debtor insolvent, and knew that the transaction was in fraud of the bankrupt law, it is the same as if the creditor had himself taken part therein, with the same cause to believe and the same knowledge. Sage v. Wyncoop, 21 Fed. Cas. 147; Id., 104 U. S. 819, 26 L. Ed. 740; Rogers v. Palmer, 102 U. S. 263, 26 L. Ed. 164; Collier on Bankruptcy, 425. The authorities are uniform and abundant that any knowledge possessed by the agent of the creditor may be imputed to the latter.

We thus see that every essential element of proof necessary to a recovery is disclosed by the uncontradicted evidence. No counter-proof was offered, and no explanation, and as but one inference can reasonably be drawn from all the evidence the court would have been justified in instructing the jury that in any view of the evidence, if the jury found it to be true, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the $3,000.

Affirmed.

(129 N. C. 533)

SHEPPARD v. NEWTON.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1905.)

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF—COLLATERAL PROMISES—LIABILITY OF THIRD PERSON.

In order to bring a promise within Code, § 1552; requiring a special promise to answer the debt, default, or miscarriage of another to be in writing, it must be shown that the debt is that of a third person, who continues liable for the same; and if the debt is an original obligation of the promisor, or if the creditor, in accepting his promise and in consideration thereof, has released the original debtor, the statute is without application.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 28, Cent. Dig. Frauds, Statute of, § 18.]

2. SAME—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

In an action for rent, whether defendant was liable for the rent as the original or present debtor, so as to take his promise to pay the same out of Code, § 1552, requiring promises to answer for the debt of another to be in writing, held, under the evidence, a question for the jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; Bryan, Judge.

Action by B. J. Sheppard against Jerry Newton. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Civil action to recover $81, alleged to be due for the rent of a house, tried on appeal from a justice of the peace. The defendant denied any and all liability on the issue as to indebtedness. Both sides offered testimony as follows: The plaintiff testified: "I claim $81 and interest from the defendant as house rent. The defendant had rented the house for two or three years. The house was rented at first to Rufe Ogburn. He occupied it over a year, and then exchanged houses with the defendant, Newton, and Newton and his father's family went into the house. Ogburn and Newton exchanged houses in 1898. I never rented the house to the defendant's father. The defendant paid me $200 or $300 on account of rent, and no one else ever paid any rent. The house rented for $9 per month. The defendant paid the rent. His last payment was December 4, 1901, and that was paid after the defendant gave up the house—two months after. Sometimes the defendant would pay in cash, and sometimes through Lipfert, Scales & Co. The defendant worked with them. I rented the house to Rufe Ogburn; never rented it to any one else, except through Ogburn. I never rented it to the defendant, except through an agent. The father and mother of the defendant lived there in the house, I suppose. I collected rent from the defendant, and he said he would be responsible for it. There is still a balance of $81 due from the defendant for rent." Frank Lipfert, for plaintiff, testified: "The defendant worked for me. I paid the plaintiff money for the defendant several times, and charged it to the defendant's account." Rufus Ogburn, for the defendant, testified: "I rented the house 12 months, and exchanged it with Mrs. Newton, and she went in there. I received the rent from Mrs. Newton. Jerry Newton lived there until he was married there. I never said a word to him about it." The defendant, as witness for himself, testified: "I never rented from Sheppard or promised to pay him anything; don't know who rented the house. I paid Sheppard for my mother. I boarded with her. I boarded there some time. I don't know that I paid the rent after I left there. I think I paid some after I quit boarding there. After I left there I paid, I think, what was paid. I don't know who rented the house from Sheppard, nor how much it rented for. I never promised to pay the rent. Sheppard kept writing to me about it so sharp I just concluded that I would not have any more to do with it." The plaintiff then testified as follows: "I would get after Newton and urge him to pay me this balance of $81, and he would tell me he would pay it as soon as convenient. On one occasion he promised to pay me, but said he was then building a house and was hard up for funds." On motions made in apt time by the defendant, there was judgment dismissing the action as on nonsuit, and the plaintiff excepted and appealed.

Lindsay Patterson, for appellant.

HOKE, J. (after stating the case). His honor below directed a nonsuit, holding that on the foregoing testimony recovery by the plaintiff was prevented by the statute of frauds (Code, § 1552), which provides, among other things, that no action shall be brought to charge any defendant upon a special promise to answer the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person, unless the agreement shall be in writing. When a defendant has made a contract or promise of this character, otherwise binding, and seeks protection under the provisions of this statute, it must be shown that the debt is that of a third person, and that such person continues liable for the same. If the debt claimed is an original obligation of the defendant, or if the creditor, in accepting the obligation or promise of the defendant, and in consideration therefor, has released a third person who was the original debtor, the statute has no application. This instance of the doctrine is well expressed by Butler, J., in Packer v. Benton, 35 Conn. 350, 95 Am. Dec. 248, where the promise to which this feature of the statute applies is thus defined: "An undertaking by a person not before liable, for the purpose of securing or performing the same duty, for which the party for whom the undertaking is made continues liable." A statement on the same subject, somewhat more extended and very satisfactory, will be found in Clark on Contracts, p. 67, as follows: "There must either be a present or prospective liability of a third person, for which the promisor agrees to answer. If the promisor becomes himself primarily, and not collaterally, liable, the promise is not within the statute, though the benefit from the transaction accrues to a third person. If, for instance, two persons come into a store, and one buys, and the other, to gain him credit, promises the seller, 'If he does not pay you, I will,' this is a collateral undertaking, and must be in writing; but if he says, 'Let him have the goods, and I will pay,' or 'I will see you paid,' and credit is given to him alone, he is himself the buyer, and the undertaking is original. In other words, whether the promise in such a case is within the statute depends on how the credit was given. If it was given exclusively to the promisor, his undertaking is original; but it is collateral if any credit was given to the other party." To like effect are the decisions of our own court. Whitehurst v. Hyman, 90 N. C. 487; White v. Tripp, 125 N. C. 523, 34 S. E. 686.

Applying these principles to the foregoing statement of the evidence, the court is of opinion that there was error in directing a nonsuit, and the plaintiff is entitled to have his cause submitted to the jury on the question whether the defendant is not answerable as the original or present debtor on the plaintiff's demand.

New trial.

(124 Ga. 300)

ARMOUR PACKING CO. v. CLARK, Sheriff, et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1905.)

TAXATION—PROPERTY SUBJECT.

A New Jersey corporation, with its principal office in Missouri, had also a place of business in Richmond county, Ga., in charge of an agent of limited authority. The goods used in the business were shipped to Augusta from the Missouri headquarters, and were then sold, either in broken or unbroken packages. Some of the sales were on credit, and to parties living both in Georgia and South Carolina; the notes taken in the course of the business being forwarded to the principal office, and paid either there or through the Augusta agency; and when the notes and accounts were collected in Augusta the amounts realized were sent immediately to the principal office. Held, that these notes and accounts were subject to state and county taxation in Richmond county.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Action by the Armour Packing Company against J. W. Clark, sheriff, and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Felder & Rountree and C. D. Dunbar, for plaintiff in error. Lamar & Callaway and O. R. Eve, for defendants in error.

CANDLER, J. The Armour Packing Company is a New Jersey corporation, having its principal office and place of business in Kansas City, Mo. It also has a place of business in Augusta, Ga., in charge of an agent, who, it is alleged, is clothed with no discretion whatever, "has no right to purchase property to be used in said business, or to exercise a general management of the same, * * * but is simply an employé of [the packing company], and acts in all matters pursuant to instructions received from" it. The products of the packing house are shipped to the Augusta agency in bulk, and are stored in bulk until they are sold. They are then shipped from Augusta, either in original packages or after the packages have been broken. A considerable portion of the business done by the Augusta agency is upon orders from South Carolina, and many of these orders are filled by the shipment of original packages which have not been broken since their shipment from the packing house. In the conduct of its business from its Augusta agency both cash and credit sales are made. When notes are taken, they are listed and forwarded to the principal office; payments being made either directly or through the Augusta office. When cash sales are made, the amounts realized are remitted promptly to the principal office in Kansas City; and when the sales are on credit the sums realized from collections are also immediately sent forward to the principal office. The question for our decision is whether the notes and accounts representing these credit transactions are liable for state and county taxation in Richmond county.

We do not hesitate to decide this question in the affirmative. The cases of Armour Packing Co. v. Savannah, 115 Ga. 140, 41 S. E. 237, and Armour Packing Co. v. Augusta, 118 Ga. 552, 45 S. E. 424, 98 Am. St. Rep. 128, decide squarely the question here presented, with reference to the right of a municipal corporation to tax notes and accounts such as are involved in the present case. It will not be contended that the power of a city to levy taxes is greater than that of the state which created it; so that the only question left to decide is whether, as a matter of fact, the state has exercised its power in this respect and made this class of property subject to state and county taxation. Pol. Code, § 767, declares that "all real and personal estate, whether owned by individuals or corporations, resident or nonresident, is liable to taxation." Section 769 declares specifically that all the property of nonresidents, whether real or personal, must bear its burden of taxation, not greater than that imposed on the property of residents of the state. Section 776 provides that "bonds, notes, or other obligations for money" of nonresidents, whether individuals or corporations, "are the subjects of return and taxation in this state." In the face of these plain provisions of the Code, it is difficult to see how it can seriously be contended that there has been no effort in this state to subject this class of property to taxation.

But it is contended by counsel for the plaintiff in error that the Savannah and Augusta Cases to which reference has been made are in conflict with the earlier cases of Collins v. Miller, 43 Ga. 336; Cary v. Edmondson, 44 Ga. 651, and City Council of Augusta v. Dunbar, 50 Ga. 387, and for that reason should not now be followed. In Armour Packing Co. v. Augusta, 118 Ga. 553, 45 S. E. 424, 98 Am. St. Rep. 128, those very cases were considered and discussed, and the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Cobb, said: "These cases have little bearing on the question now in hand. It is conceded, of course, that tangible personal property is taxable wherever it is situated, and that for purposes of taxation the maxim that personal property follows the owner does not apply. It is claimed, however, that it does apply in all cases to intangible personal property, such as notes, bonds, accounts, etc. We do not agree that this is a universal rule, even as applied to that class of property, and we are not, as was suggested by the able counsel for the plaintiff in error, alone in this opinion. * * * The ground upon which we rest our decision in this case is that when a nonresident goes into another state for the purpose of doing business, and employs an agent there to transact his business, receive money due him, contract debts for him, purchase property to be used in the business, and exercise a general management of such business, he cannot escape the burden of taxation, which his property of every description situated in this state ought to bear, by invoking the fiction that intangible property has its situs where the owner resides."

We do not lose sight of the fact that, according to the allegations of the petition in this case, the authority of the plaintiff's agent in the city of Augusta is much more restricted than that of the agent in the case from which we have quoted; but we fail to see that this alters the principle involved in any degree. The plaintiff shipped its meats from Kansas City, but its business was conducted in Augusta. Its agent had only a limited authority; but there is no escape from the important fact that, regardless of any considerations as to the point from which it obtained its stock of goods or the extent to which its agent was authorized to act for it, the plaintiff was engaged in conducting a business in the city of Augusta, and in the conduct of that business the fact of his nonresidence gave him no more favored position than that occupied by resident dealers of like character. The Savannah and Augusta Cases heretofore mentioned were both decided by less than a full bench, but the reasoning upon which they rest seems to us to be irresistible, and to apply with peculiar force to the case now under consideration. There was no error in the ruling of the court below, complained of in the bill of exceptions.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 84)

WRIGHT v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

1. JURY—COMMISSIONER DE FACTO—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

Even if a person be ineligible to hold the office of jury commissioner, yet, if he is appointed to such office and acts therein, he is, while so acting, a jury commissioner de facto, and the official acts of the board of jury commissioners wherein he participated are valid, and cannot be collaterally attacked upon the ground that such person was incompetent to hold the office of jury commissioner.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 31, Cent. Dig. Jury, §§ 269.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL.

The evidence fully warranted the verdict, and there was no error in refusing to grant a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of La Grange; Frank Harwell, Judge.

Henry Wright was convicted of gaming, and brings error. Affirmed.

E. T. Moon, for plaintiff in error. Henry Reeves, for the State.

FISH, C. J. The plaintiff in error was tried by a jury in the city court of La Grange, under an indictment charging him with the offense of playing and betting at cards. When the panel of jurors was put upon him, he challenged the array, in writing, upon the ground that Olin Carlton, one of the jury commissioners, "who helped prepare the jury list from which the jury box was prepared, from which said panel of jurors was drawn, was, at the time of his appointment as jury commissioner and at the time he helped prepare said jury list, a duly elected, qualified, and acting justice of the peace of said county," and that therefore the whole proceeding by the jury commissioners in preparing the list of jurors for the jury box was illegal. In answer to this challenge, the state, by its solicitor, admitted the facts alleged therein, but denied that they constituted any sufficient ground for challenge to the array. The court overruled the challenge, and the accused excepted pendente lite. Upon the trial the jury returned a verdict finding the accused guilty. He made a motion for a new trial upon the general grounds, which was overruled, and he excepted, assigning error in his bill of exceptions, both upon the overruling of this motion and upon the overruling of his challenge to the array of the jurors.

1. County officers are not eligible for appointment and service on the board of jury commissioners. Pen. Code 1895, § 813. It is contended that a justice of the peace is a county officer, and for the purpose of this decision this contention may be admitted. We assume, then, that Carlton, the justice of the peace, was, while holding that office, ineligible for appointment as a jury commissioner. The fact that he was ineligible to hold the office of jury commissioner did not prevent his being a jury commissioner de facto. A case precisely in point and conclusive of the question before us is Smith v. Bohler, 72 Ga. 546, where it was held that a person ineligible to hold a particular office is, while de facto in such office, competent to act therein. A ruling to the same effect was made in Hinton v. Lindsay, 20 Ga. 746, where it was held that "a justice of the peace who, notwithstanding his removal to an adjoining district, continues to act under his former commission, is an officer de facto, and his acts as such are not void, so far as the public and third persons are concerned. Neither can they be invalidated in a proceeding to which he is not a party." In Pool v. Perdue, 44 Ga. 454, it was held that one holding a commission from the Governor as notary public and ex officio justice of the peace, and acting as such, is a de facto officer, and his official acts cannot be collaterally attacked, on the ground that his appointment was not authorized by law. But, aside from these cases and other Georgia cases which are, in principle, to the same effect, the question presented in the present case is settled by Pol. Code 1895, § 223. Under the law as there laid down, although a person may be absolutely ineligible to hold any civil office whatever in this state, yet his official acts, while holding a commission as a public officer, are valid as the acts of an officer de facto. It is well settled that the acts of an officer de facto cannot be collaterally attacked, and the above-cited cases so hold. It follows that there was no error in overruling the challenge to the array of jurors.

2. The evidence fully warranted the verdict, and there was no error in refusing to grant a new trial.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 79)

PITTS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS—ILLEGAL SALE—EVIDENCE.

Where an indictment charged the accused with the offense of selling whisky without a license in a given county upon a named date, the state was not confined to proof of the commission of the offense upon the date named, but had the right to prove its commission in such county upon any date within two years prior to the finding of the indictment. Green v. State, 41 S. E. 642, 115 Ga. 254.

2. CRIMINAL LAW—CERTIORARI.

There was no error in refusing to sanction the petition for certiorari.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Putnam County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

Dick Pitts was convicted of an illegal sale of liquor, and brings error. Affirmed.

Green F. Johnson, for plaintiff in error. J. B. Pottle, Sol. Gen., and S. L. Wingfield, for the State.

FISH, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 80)

PETERS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—NEW TRIAL—OBJECTIONS TO EVIDENCE.

A ground in a motion for a new trial, alleging that the court erred in admitting certain evidence, will not be considered when the motion fails to show that any objection was made to such evidence upon the trial of the case, or, if stating that objection was made, fails to disclose what such objection was.

2. SAME—MISCONDUCT OF PROSECUTING ATTORNEY.

Nor will a ground of such a motion, alleging error in allowing the prosecuting attorney to make, in the presence of the jury, a statement in reference to what he wanted to prove by a witness, be considered, when it does not appear what such statement was.

3. WITNESSES—CHARACTER—EVIDENCE.

A statement by a witness, tending to show the confidence reposed in his integrity by his employer, is irrelevant and inadmissible.

4. SAME—EVIDENCE.

The evidence was sufficient to support the verdict, and there was no error in refusing to grant a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Douglas County; A. L. Bartlett, Judge.

One Peters was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

W. A. James, for plaintiff in error. W. K. Fielder, Sol. Gen., for the State.

FISH, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 91)

ELLIS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—NEW TRIAL—ARGUMENTS OF COUNSEL.

The refusal of the court to declare a mistrial because of the language used by state's counsel in argument to the jury was not cause for a new trial.

2. FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Where a tenant leaves the premises at the end of his term, the landlord, though not in actual occupancy, is to be regarded as in possession, and a third person who enters without the landlord's consent, and violently keeps possession, with menaces, force, and arms, and without authority of law, is guilty of forcible detainer. To constitute such offense it is not necessary that the person who has so taken possession should actually assault the landlord; but if, when the landlord seeks to re-enter, the conduct of such person in keeping possession and the circumstances connected therewith be such as are reasonably calculated to cause the landlord to believe that, if he should persist in the attempt to re-enter he would be subjected to physical violence the offense would be complete.

3. SAME—EVIDENCE.

The evidence authorized the verdict, and the court did not err in refusing a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Fayetteville; W. B. Hollingsworth, Judge.

Mrs. K. C. Ellis was convicted of forcible detainer, and brings error. Affirmed.

Mrs. K. C. Ellis was tried for the offense of forcible detainer, and the jury returned a verdict finding her guilty. She made a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and she excepted. Upon the trial Mrs. L. B. Stewart, the prosecutrix, testified as follows: "My husband, W. B. Stewart, is dead. I know the land in controversy. My husband had tenants in possession of it about five years before he died, and he died on the 16th day of June, 1901, and since that time the tenants under me have been cultivating it and paying rents to me. W. J. Farmer was the first tenant put in by Mr. Stewart, and he stayed until about two years ago, and then H. Henson went in as tenant; making about seven years that Mr. Stewart, my husband, and I have received the rents from the place. Mr. Henson, the tenant for the last year, moved away from the place, and on or about the 30th day of December, 1904, I went to the place and found Mrs. K. C. Ellis in the house and her husband with her. She had one bedstead in the house and some other furniture, consisting of a bureau, chairs, etc., and I noticed that she had a shotgun setting up by the front door and a rifle by the bed, near where she was. I asked her whose furniture it was, and she said it was hers; and I asked her where our folks were that were here, and she said they had moved over to G. W. Clark's. I asked her what the furniture was doing there, and she said it was her furniture, and that she had moved there; and I asked her why she did so, and she said the place was hers, and she intended to keep it until 12 men decided it was not hers. I asked her for the key, and she said she had the key, but would not give it to me. I then left her and told her I would see her again. I went back on the 4th day of January, 1905, and saw Mrs. Ellis again, the defendant, and asked her for the key, and she told me that I would never get the key until 12 men decided it was my place; said she would lie in jail six months before she would give it to me. I told her that I did not think she had treated me right, and she said it was her place, and she would die before she got out, and got excited, and when she said that she came down with one hand into the other, this way [witness holding one hand up and the other out, and bringing one hand down into the other]. Her husband walked up and told her to be quiet and not to get excited. The place is in this county. While I was talking to her, her husband and children came up, and I asked her husband why he did not have his wife move back to her place, and he said she claimed the place and was living there because she claimed it. I then told her she would regret this. I then went around and took some nails and nailed up the windows, and as I went around to nail them up she told me that she had saved me the trouble, as she had already nailed the windows down. I could not nail up the front door. I could not get her out. I did not put my hands on her, as I did not want any trouble. Mrs. Ellis did not make any effort to strike me, and I did not try to take hold of her to put her out, nor did I put any of the things out. My husband, W. B. Stewart, died the 16th day of June, 1901, leaving me and five children, all minors except one. When I first went to the house, Mrs. Ellis and one of her children were there, and in a short time the child left, and Mr. Ellis and the children came up, and all came in there. I had my little daughter with me, and of course I could not put them out. I had sent a man down, the man I rented to, over there before. So they went in without my consent or knowledge and hold the same against my will and consent." The husband of the accused testified that he slept in the house at night, and that the accused stayed there during the day, and sometimes with him at night. It was also shown that the property in question was, in February, 1902, duly set apart to Mrs. Stewart and her minor children, from the estate of her deceased husband, as a year's support.

J. F. Gollightly, for plaintiff in error. J. W. Culpepper, Sol., A. O. Blalock, and J. W. Wise, for the State.

FISH, C. J. 1. During his argument to the jury, counsel for the state remarked: "Gentlemen of the jury, if you fail to do your duty, it has a tendency to make people disregard the law and seek to protect themselves." Counsel for the accused at once moved for a mistrial on account of this language. A mistrial was refused, the court at the time directing state's counsel to confine himself to the law and the evidence in the case. The court also instructed the jury that the improper remarks of counsel should not influence their verdict, but that the verdict should be based on the law and the evidence. Granting that the remarks of the state's counsel were not within the legitimate bounds of argument, the action taken by the court relative to the matter, in the direction given to the state's counsel and the instructions to the jury, must have removed from the minds of the jury any influence harmful to the accused that the language objected to may have had. The court, therefore, did not err in refusing to declare a mistrial.

2. The other grounds of the motion for a new trial were that the verdict was contrary to the law and the evidence and to certain specified charges of the court. As will be seen from an examination of the statement of evidence which precedes this opinion, Mr. Stewart, and, after his death, his widow, through their tenants, had been in possession of the premises in question for some seven years or more; and when Mrs. Stewart's tenant, Henson, moved out in the latter part of 1904, Mrs. Ellis, the accused, soon thereafter took possession, without the consent of Mrs. Stewart. When Henson removed from the premises, Mrs. Stewart, his landlord, though not in actual occupancy, was in law deemed to be in possession. Porter v. Murray (Cal.) 12 Pac. 425; Walser v. Graham, 60 Mo. App. 323. Mrs. Stewart on two occasions, December 30, 1904, and January 4, 1905, went to the premises and demanded possession of Mrs. Ellis, by asking for the key of the house, which was then occupied by Mrs. Ellis, who refused each time to surrender the possession. On the last occasion she declared, very emphatically and excitedly, that she would die before she would get out of the house, accompanying the declaration by bringing one hand down into the other. She had nailed down the windows. From the small amount of furniture in the house and the fact that, while Mrs. Ellis stayed there during the day, only her husband usually occupied the house at night, the jury could infer that Mr. Ellis and family did not occupy the house as their regular home, but that the husband and wife stayed there, by turns, to prevent Mrs. Stewart from taking possession. When Mrs. Stewart first went to the house, only Mrs. Ellis and one of her children were there. In a short while this child left, and Mr. Ellis and the children came up, and all went into the house. From these facts it might be inferred that Mr. Ellis and the children came to assist Mrs. Ellis in keeping possession. On the first occasion there were two guns in the house, one near the front door and the other by the bed, near where Mrs. Ellis was. Mr. Ellis, who appears to have testified for the accused without objection on the part of the state, swore that one of these guns was a single-barrel shotgun, which belonged to one of his boys, and the other gun had no tubes in it and could not be used, and his wife made the same statement to the jury. Still the question arises, why, if the family had not moved to this house and were not occupying it as their regular home, were both of these guns carried to this house and kept there? Considering all the circumstances, and the conduct and declarations of Mrs. Ellis when she refused to surrender possession of the premises to Mrs. Stewart, we cannot say that the jury were not authorized to find that they were reasonably calculated to impress Mrs. Stewart with the fear that, if she should attempt to take possession, she would be subjected to severe physical violence. If this were true, it would suffice to warrant a conviction. In order to make out the offense of forcible detainer, it is not necessary to prove that the accused made an actual assault upon the former possessor, to prevent him from re-entering. If, at the time the effort to re-enter is made, there be an exhibition, by words, acts, or circumstances calculated to intimidate the former possessor, and to impress on him an intention on the part of the person unlawfully detaining the premises to hold possession of them by force and violence, the offense is complete. Only a show of force is necessary. Minor v. Duncan, 54 Ga. 517. See, also, Williams v. State, 120 Ga. 488, 48 S. E. 149, and cases cited.

3. As the evidence warranted the verdict, the court did not err in refusing a new trial. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 100)

POLLARD v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

1. HOMICIDE—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—INSTRUCTIONS—MUTUAL COMBAT.

Where, in the trial of one charged with offense of assault with intent to murder, there was evidence from which the jury would be authorized to find mutual intent to fight, though no mutual blows were exchanged, it was not error to give in charge to the jury section 73 of the Penal Code.

2. SAME—VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

And when upon that trial there was, beside the evidence tending to establish the existence of a mutual intent to fight, further testimony that the party who was shot started towards the accused, threatening at the same time to make him jump from the train, the court properly charged the law of voluntary manslaughter.

3. CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS—HARMLESS ERROR.

Inasmuch as death did not result from the assault with which the accused was charged, of course the jury should not have been charged, "If you believe, from the evidence in the case and the law given you in charge, that the defendant is guilty of the offense of murder, you should so find." But this instruction was so manifestly inapplicable to the facts in the case that the jury could neither have been misled nor influenced by the same, and the error committed was harmless.

4. SAME—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR.

In a ground of a motion for a new trial complaining that the court erred in charging section 73 of the Penal Code in such a way "as to confuse it with the other law of homicide and make it applicable to the same theory or state of facts, the theory of the defense being that he shot under the fears of a reasonable man," the movant should specify and point out how the law contained in said section is in the charge confused with the other law of homicide, and he should also point out or indicate with what other law of homicide the court's charge confused section 73; otherwise, the assignment of error is too general and indefinite to raise any question for decision.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; H. O. Hammond, Judge.

Henry Pollard was convicted of assault with intent to kill, and brings error. Affirmed.

Pollard was charged with the offense of assault with intent to murder. Upon the trial of the case substantially the following evidence was introduced: "Henry Pollard was standing near the water cooler, and Capt. Thomas told him to take a seat, and he and the fellow that was shot commenced quarreling, and a woman asked me to hand her her satchel, and I heard this fellow that was shot say to Henry Pollard, 'I'll make you jump off this train,' and he says, 'No, you won't,' and the fellow raised up with his left hand towards me, and I could not see the other man. As the fellow raised up, Henry [the defendant] shot him one time. [The man wounded] turned and started toward Henry Pollard before Henry shot him." Other witnesses gave practically the same testimony, except the man who was shot, who testified that the accused started quarreling with him about a seat, and that he was just getting up out of the seat and out of the defendant's way when he was shot. He admitted that he had been drinking just prior to the time of the shooting. The defendant in his statement said that, after being told by the conductor to take a seat, he went to the nearest vacant seat, upon which there was a box. There was a man occupying half of the seat, and defendant requested him to move the box. The man replied it was not his, whereupon the man who was shot, who was sitting in an adjoining seat, exclaimed with an oath, "Don't you move that box!" Defendant turned to him and said: "Capt. Thomas told me to come up here and get a seat. Move the box, whomsoever it belongs to." At this the man who was shot, after exhausting his powers of invective, assured the defendant that if he moved the box it would be at the peril of his neck. "When he said that," says the defendant, "he jumped up and threw his hand behind him like he had something to shoot me with, and I grabbed my pistol out of my breast coat pocket and shot him. * * * I didn't do it with the intention to kill him, but just to keep him from doing me injury." The jury returned a verdict of guilty, whereupon the defendant made a motion for a new trial upon the general grounds, and because the court erred in charging section 73 of the Penal Code in reference to mutual combat, such charge being irrelevant and not supported by the evidence, and tending to confuse the minds of the jury upon the law of homicide; the theory of the defense being that defendant shot while under the fears of a reasonable man. Error was further assigned because the court failed to charge the law of assault and battery, and because it did charge the law relating to voluntary manslaughter. Error was also alleged to have been committed because the court charged the jury as follows: "If you believe, from the evidence in the case and the law given you in charge, that the defendant is guilty of the offense of murder, you should so find. If you find that the defendant while not guilty of the offense of murder, yet is guilty of the offense of manslaughter, it would be proper, and you should so find"—the error of such charge being that it was not warranted by the indictment, and because it unduly influenced the minds of the jury. Upon his motion being overruled the defendant excepted.

Austin Branch and A. L. Franklin, for plaintiff in error. J. S. Reynolds, Sol. Gen., and Jno. M. Graham, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 95)

COX v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

1. WITNESSES—IMPEACHMENT—CONTRADICTIONARY STATEMENTS.

Where a witness has testified to a material fact, prior declarations of his which appear to be inconsistent with the facts related by him on the trial are competent for the purpose of impeachment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 50, Cent. Dig. Witnesses, §§ 1220-1227.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW—NEW TRIAL—MISCONDUCT OF JUROR.

The judge occupies the place of a trier in passing on a ground of a motion for a new trial based on an alleged expression of opinion or other misconduct on the part of a juror; and where evidence is submitted in support of this ground of the motion, and also to dis-prove the same and sustain the impartiality of the juror, a finding that the juror was competent will not be disturbed, unless the facts show an abuse of discretion.

3. HOMICIDE—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL.

The evidence relied on by the state was sufficient to show the defendant's connection with the crime committed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fayette County; E. J. Reagan, Judge.

R. S. Cox was convicted of assault with intent to kill, and brings error. Affirmed.

J. W. Wise, M. W. Beck, and A. O. Blalock, for plaintiff in error. O. H. B. Bloodworth, Sol. Gen., for the State.

EVANS, J. Bob Cox and two others were jointly indicted for the offense of assault with intent to murder upon the person of one John T. Hewell, Jr. The defendants severed, and on the trial of Cox it appeared from the state's evidence that Hewell, while traveling at night in a buggy with a companion, was attacked by the accused and shot. Hewell and his companion swore that the defendant did the shooting. It occurred about 8 o'clock at night, and the defendant was recognized by them. He set up the defense of alibi, and offered several witnesses, among them M. G. Cox, in support of the same. He was found guilty, and made a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and he excepted.

1. One of the witnesses offered to prove the defense of alibi, M. G. Cox, a brother of the defendant, testified that the defendant was at his mother's house, some $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles distant from the scene of the shooting, at about 8 o'clock on the night the crime was committed. This witness denied that he ever said in the presence of one Woolsey, in front of his father's house, during the course of a quarrel with the defendant, that the defendant shot or shot at John Hewell, and ought to be in the chain gang. Woolsey, a witness for the state, was permitted to testify that on that occasion M. G. Cox did say to Bob Cox: "You shot or shot at John Hewell, and you ought to be in the chain gang." This testimony was objected to on the ground that it was immaterial and incompetent, because it was a mere declaration made by M. G. Cox in anger, and was inadmissible for any purpose. The court ruled that the evidence was competent to impeach the witness Cox and error is assigned on this ruling; the defendant insisting that, even if this evidence tended to impeach the witness, it was as to an immaterial fact. The purport of the testimony of M. G. Cox was that the defendant was $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles away from the scene of the crime at the time of its commission. This was equivalent to an assertion by the witness that he had personal knowledge of facts which excluded the possibility of the defendant's guilt. That the witness, during a quarrel with the defendant and when not actuated by a desire to shield him from detection and punishment, charged him with having shot or shot at Hewell, was a circumstance wholly inconsistent with his testimony on the trial to the effect that the defendant could not have had any connection with the crime, because he was at the time of its commission in company with the witness at the home of his mother, several miles away. The accusation against the defendant, made by his brother in anger, indicated that he either knew or had some reason to believe that the defendant was one of the assailants of Hewell, and was irreconcilable with the testimony which the witness delivered on the stand, which, if true, showed conclusively that he knew positively that his brother was not one of these assailants. The testimony of the witness was exculpatory. His previous declaration was inculpatory. The two were in direct antagonism. What this witness swore bore directly upon one of the vital issues in the case, and the effort made to impeach him was, not to show that he had testified falsely concerning an immaterial matter, but to establish to the satisfaction of the jury that his testimony concerning that vital issue was not worthy of belief. 1 Gr. Ev. (16th Ed.) § 462a.

2. The fourth and fifth grounds of the amended motion for a new trial relate to the disqualification of one of the jurors impaneled to try the case; movant alleging that this juror had formed and expressed an opinion to the effect that the accused was guilty of the offense with which he was charged. Affidavits in support of these grounds of the motion were offered by the defendant, while the state submitted counter-affidavits tending to show that the juror was impartial and had neither formed nor expressed any opinion concerning the guilt of the accused. The court, after considering the conflicting evidence thus presented, announced the conclusion that the juror was competent, and overruled these special grounds of the motion. The evidence submitted in behalf of the state fully warranted this finding of fact. It has been expressly ruled that the judge occupies the position of a trier, in passing upon evidence submitted pro and con upon the question presented by a motion for a new trial in which complaint is made that one of the jurors was not impartial; and his finding that the juror was competent to serve will not be disturbed, unless it appears that the discretion of the judge was manifestly abused. Jones v. State, 117 Ga. 710, 44 S. E. 877; Vann v. State, 83 Ga. 59, 60, 9 S. E. 945, and cit.

3. The only disputed question in the case was that of identity; and the evidence on this subject being sufficient to show that the defendant was one of the persons guilty of the attempted assassination, and the judge being satisfied with the verdict returned by the jury, a new trial will not be ordered.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except BECK, J., disqualified.

(124 Ga. 162)

JOINER v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

1. LARCENY—EVIDENCE OF VALUE.

When a theft of money is charged, and a national bank bill is produced on the trial and identified as part of the money alleged to have been stolen, the bill itself is sufficient evidence that it is worth its face value.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 82, Cent. Dig. Larceny, § 155.]

2. SAME—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence connecting the defendant with the crime, though circumstantial, was sufficient to establish his guilt.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Griffin; E. W. Hammond, Judge.

Barney Joiner was convicted of theft, and brings error. Affirmed.

Jos. D. Boyd and Lucien P. Goodrich, for plaintiff in error. T. E. Patterson, Sol., for the State.

EVANS, J. The defendant was charged with the offense of larceny from the house, the subject-matter of the larceny being alleged to be "thirty dollars in lawful currency of the United States, of the value of $30.00, to wit, one twenty dollar bill and one ten dollar bill." On the trial of the case a witness identified a $20 bill issued by Potter's National Bank, East Liverpool, Ohio, No. 2,544, national currency of the United States, as one of the bills stolen. Upon this proof the bill was admitted in evidence.

1. It is urged that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence, because there was no proof of the value of the money alleged to have been stolen. There was no proof on this subject other than the production on the trial and identification of the $20 bill issued by Potter's National Bank. National bank notes are redeemable in treasury notes, and treasury notes are lawful currency of the United States and legal tender for the payment of debts. Their value is fixed by law, and their introduction in evidence is sufficient proof that they are worth their face value. Keating v. People, 160 Ill. 486, 43 N. E. 724. As to United States coin, it has been held by this court that judicial cognizance will be taken of the value of the same, and that in a larceny case the value of such coin need not be specifically shown. Ector v. State, 120 Ga. 543, 48 S. E. 315. National bank notes are a part of the currency of the United States, and judicial cognizance will likewise be taken of their value.

2. The evidence connecting the defendant with the crime, though circumstantial, was sufficient to establish his guilt. No error of law having been committed, and the judge being satisfied with the verdict, it should be allowed to stand.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(24 Ga. 121)

WATSON v. AUGUSTA BREWING CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

1. NEGLIGENCE—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

A manufacturer who makes and bottles for public consumption a beverage represented to be harmless and refreshing is under a legal duty not negligently to allow a foreign substance which is injurious to the human stomach, such as bits of broken glass, to be present in a bottle of the beverage when it is placed on sale; and one who, relying on this obligation and without negligence on his own part, swallows several pieces of glass while drinking the beverage from a bottle, may recover from the manufacturer for injuries sustained in consequence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 37, Cent. Dig. Negligence, § 25.]

2. DAMAGES—MENTAL SUFFERING.

One who, under the circumstances stated in the preceding headnote, swallows several pieces of glass, which are subsequently removed from his stomach, leaving apparently no permanent injuries, may recover on account of mental suffering caused by the fear of death while the glass was in his stomach; but a vague fear, after the removal of the glass and he has been restored to health, that at some time in the future he may again suffer as a result of his injuries, cannot be made an element of damage in a suit against the manufacturer of the beverage.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Action by E. W. Watson against the Augusta Brewing Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

The allegations of the petition were substantially as follows: The Augusta Brewing Company is a Georgia corporation engaged in the manufacture of certain drinks, among them soda water, which it sold as a refreshing and harmless drink. On a named date it sold to a merchant in Thomson, Ga., some of its soda water, which the merchant placed on sale, "relying on the implied warranty of defendant that said soda water was suitable for salable purposes as a refreshing and harmless drink. Some of this soda water was, with the permission of the merchant mentioned, taken from his stock by the plaintiff and drunk from the bottle. "While drinking said soda water, * * * plaintiff swallowed three pieces of glass, or perhaps more, without knowing it, and one large piece of glass lodged in plaintiff's throat. * * * Said glass which plaintiff swallowed and the said piece of glass which lodged in plaintiff's throat were in the said soda water which plaintiff was drinking." Plaintiff immediately went to a physician, who extracted from his stomach three pieces of glass; plaintiff having previously ejected from his throat the piece of glass which had lodged therein. The bottle from which plaintiff drank the soda water was in good condition, and had no rough edges or other peculiarities which could put plaintiff on notice of the presence of the glass inside the bottle. The pieces of broken glass which he swallowed were in the bottle when it was filled, and the defendant was grossly negligent in leaving fragments of glass in the bottle and in offering for sale for drinking purposes soda water containing pieces of broken glass. The defendant, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have known of the presence of the glass in the bottle, while plaintiff did not know and had no means of knowing it. Plaintiff was entirely free from fault, and drank the soda water, thinking it was safe to do so. Plaintiff suffered great physical pain while the glass was in his stomach and in having it extracted therefrom, "and plaintiff suffered untold mental agony between the time he drank the soda water, when he swallowed the said glass, and before he could have the said glass taken from his stomach, fearing that an untimely death would be the result of the glass cutting him on the inside; and plaintiff still fears that he may yet suffer torture from injuries sustained by the glass cutting him on the inside, or, perhaps, from some of the glass which might not have been taken from his stomach and which is still in plaintiff's stomach, and which may yet cause plaintiff's death. The suspense and agony which plaintiff suffers from what may yet be the dreaded results of this injury are great, and render plaintiff almost paralyzed with fear." Damages were laid in the sum of $2,000. By amendment it was alleged that it was customary to drink bottled soda water from the bottle, and that the defendant was aware of this custom. The defendant demurred generally and specially—the grounds of special demurrer being that the petition endeavors to join inconsistent causes of action, one an action on an implied warranty and the other an action in tort; that no physical injury is alleged; that the petition fails to allege the size or kind of glass that it is alleged was swallowed; that it does not appear whether the plaintiff was a purchaser or a donee of the bottle of soda water drunk by him; that there is no allegation as to the manner, time, or place of defendant's negligence, nor that the defendant intended the bottles containing the soda water to be used as drinking vessels; and that the allegations as to the plaintiff's apprehensions of what might have existed or developed, or might in the future exist or develop, "were irrelevant and illegal." The court sustained the demurrer generally, and dismissed the petition, whereupon the plaintiff excepted.

J. L. Callaway Thomson, for plaintiff in error. W. H. Barrett, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. (after making the foregoing statement). 1. When a manufacturer makes, bottles, and sells to the retail trade, to be again sold to the general public, a beverage represented to be refreshing and harmless, he is under a legal duty to see to it that in the process of bottling no foreign substance shall be mixed with the beverage which, if taken into the human stomach, will be injurious. The case of Woodward v. Miller, 119 Ga. 618, 46 S. E. 847, 64 L. R. A. 932, 100 Am. St. Rep. 188, is hardly in point; for in that case the manufacturer knew of the defect and fraudulently concealed it from the purchaser. Blood Balm Co. v. Cooper, 83 Ga. 457, 10 S. E. 118, 5 L. R. A. 612, 20 Am. St. Rep. 324, while differing somewhat as to its facts, furnishes strong reasoning to support the principle announced. The composition of patent or proprietary medicines is usually shrouded in mystery, and it is generally understood that many such remedies contain ingredients which, if taken in sufficient quantities, will produce injurious results upon the person taking them. If, then, one who buys a patent medicine may rely upon the obligation of the manufacturer not to place therein ingredients which, if taken in the prescribed doses, will injure his health, certainly the purchaser of an alleged harmless and refreshing beverage should have the right to rest secure in the assumption that he will not be fed on broken glass. It does not matter that the plaintiff in the present case did not buy the soda water from the defendant, or that there was no privity of relationship between them. The duty not negligently to injure is due by the manufacturer, in a case of the particular character of the one under consideration, not merely to the dealer to whom he sells his product, but to the general public for whom his wares are intended. On this subject, see, also, Blood Balm Co. v. Cooper, supra.

2. It follows from what has been ruled that the court below erred in sustaining the general demurrer. We are equally clear that many of the grounds of the special demurrer are without merit. While the petition contains the wholly unnecessary allegation that the dealer who purchased the soda water from the defendant relied upon its implied warranty that the drink was harmless, the suit cannot by any possibility be construed as one upon a warranty, as it is plainly an action in tort. While there is no distinct allegation of permanent disability, the physical suffering of the plaintiff, growing out of the swallowing of the glass and its removal from his stomach, was set out with sufficient definiteness to furnish a basis of recovery; and there was no lack of the required definiteness as to the time, place, and manner of the defendant's negligence. In the latter particular the case differs from Hudgins v. Coca Cola Bottling Co., 122 Ga. 695, 50 S. E. 974, in that there the petition was entirely silent as to what constituted the negligence complained of, while here it is distinctly alleged that the defendant was negligent in leaving glass in the bottle when it was filled. A somewhat peculiar ground of demurrer is the one which seeks to place upon the plaintiff the onus of showing "the size and kind of glass" that he swallowed. Courts have gone far in requiring particularity of pleading; but we are not aware of any rule which would require a man who has unconsciously swallowed several pieces of glass to make a note of the shape, size, color, and character of the pieces after they have been removed from his stomach, in order to describe them in bringing suit to recover from the one who is responsible for his having swallowed them. It was not necessary to allege that the defendant intended that the bottles containing its soda water should be used as drinking vessels. It is sufficient for the purpose of this suit that such was the custom and it was cognizant thereof.

The only remaining point to be considered is whether or not the plaintiff in this case can recover for mental suffering growing out of his injury, and, if so, to what extent. It is a familiar principle that, where a physical injury has been sustained, the person injured may recover for mental suffering caused by or growing out of his bodily hurt. One may not recover, however, for mental suffering which is not reasonable, or which is merely fanciful. It can hardly be disputed that a reasonable fear of death constitutes mental suffering of a very keen sort. It is not unreasonable, we think, for one who has swallowed several pieces of glass to entertain a very vivid and poignant apprehension of an untimely end; and the mental anguish caused by this dread may constitute an element of damage in a suit for damages on account of the physical injury. But after the glass has been removed from his stomach, and he is apparently restored to his former condition of health and vigor, his fears, so far as a damage suit are concerned, should cease. He may not continue for an indefinite period to vex his soul with dread on account of having been "cut on the inside," and hold the defendant liable for his apprehensions. It follows, therefore, that so much of the petition as seeks to recover on account of mental suffering endured since the glass was removed from the plaintiff's stomach should be stricken; and direction is given that, when the case is tried again, the special demurrer be sustained in so far as it attacks this portion of the petition.

Judgment reversed, with direction. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 131)

WILSON v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 10, 1905.)

TELEGRAPH COMPANIES—FAILURE TO DELIVER TELEGRAM—ACTION FOR DAMAGES—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

In a suit for compensatory damages, where the damages alleged were not proximately caused by an act of the defendant, a demurrer to the petition was rightly sustained.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Waycross; J. O. Reynolds, Judge.

Action by J. H. Wilson against the Western Union Telegraph Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

A suit for damages was brought by J. H. Wilson against the Western Union Telegraph Company, the plaintiff basing his right to recover upon the following allegations of fact: During the year 1904, he resided at No. 51 Jane street, in the city of Waycross, about 800 yards from the office of the defendant company in that city, and was employed in the shops of the Atlantic & Birmingham Railway Company at that place. The defendant is a corporation engaged in the business of receiving and transmitting telegraphic messages, and charged with the duty of promptly delivering the same, having an office and agent in the city of Waycross during the year 1904, as well as an office and agent at Burlington, N. C., and a continuous line for the transmission of telegraphic messages between these points. During the past 25 years plaintiff has been engaged in the regular occupation of a bridgeman, in which work he is skilled and his services have been in demand. He had been previously in the employ of the Carolina Steel Bridge & Construction Company, a thoroughly reliable and responsible corporation of Burlington, engaged in the manufacture and construction of steel bridges and other structural work, and its officers and agents were well acquainted with his competency for doing the kind of work in which that company was engaged. This company, desiring to again employ plaintiff to engage in performing the work of constructing certain railroad bridges then being erected by the company in North Carolina, did, on March 12, 1904, file in the office of the defendant company, at Burlington, with its agent or operator, a message bearing that date and addressed to "J. H. Wilson, Bridgeman, Waycross, Georgia," duly signed and containing this inquiry: "Can you commence work next week? Answer." There had already been an understanding between plaintiff and the sender of this message that "his services could be procured in connection with said work, when wanted, at a salary of $80" per month, together with board for himself, worth $20 per month. The message addressed to the plaintiff was immediately transmitted by the operator at Burlington, and was on the same date duly received at the office of the defendant at Waycross; but, notwithstanding the plaintiff resided within a short distance of its office in that city, and was at the time engaged at work in the railroad shops where he was employed, the message, owing to the neglect of the company's employes, was not delivered to the plaintiff with promptness and dispatch, as the duty imposed and devolving upon the company required it to do, either at his residence or at his place of business, although the message could and should have been delivered to him within a few minutes after it was received by the operator at Waycross. On account of the negligence of the company and its failure to diligently perform the duty then and there required of it, the message was not delivered to plaintiff until 10 days had elapsed from the date of its reception. Immediately upon getting the message, plaintiff notified the Carolina Steel Bridge & Construction Company that he accepted its offer of employment and stated that he was ready to at once commence and enter upon the work that company desired him to engage in, upon the terms as understood between them; but the company informed him, by another message sent from Burlington, dated March 23, 1904, that the position in its service he had expressed his willingness to accept had been filled. The plaintiff alleged that, because of the want of diligence on the part of the company in delivering to him the original message from the Carolina Steel Bridge & Construction Company, he lost employment with that company on the terms above stated; and, inasmuch as such employment would have continued for the period of at least nine months after entering into its service, he had suffered actual loss and damage in the difference between the amount of $2 per day, or $52 per month, received from the Atlantic & Birmingham Railway Company for his work in its shops, and the total sum of $100 per month for that period, covering his salary and board, which he would have received from the Carolina Steel Bridge & Construction Company, amounting in the aggregate to $432, in which sum the defendant company was liable to him on account of his loss and damage aforesaid. To this petition the defendant filed a general demurrer, which was sustained by the court, and the plaintiff excepted.

J. L. Sweat, for plaintiff in error. Osborne & Lawrence, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. (after stating the facts). In support of the judgment sustaining the demurrer, it was urged that in no case can an addressee recover of a telegraph company damages resulting from a negligent delivery of the message. The case of Brooke v. W. U. Tel. Co., 119 Ga. 694, 46 S. E. 828, is cited to sustain this contention. This case was not decided by a full bench, and therefore is not conclusive of the question. The present action is not based on contract, but is founded on a breach of duty owing by the telegraph company to the addressee. The writer thinks that both on principle and authority an addressee of a telegram may recover of a telegraph company damages for injury proximately caused by its negligent delay in delivery. But it is not necessary to pass on this question; for, conceding the right of the addressee to recover damages in a proper case, the petition does not set forth a cause of action.

Where a breach of duty is alleged, the addressee cannot recover compensatory damages unless the facts show an injury proximately resulting from the tortious act. The plaintiff does not allege a binding contract between himself and the bridge and construction company, but only an understanding that the bridge company could procure his services, when wanted, at a stated salary. The telegram, in connection with his averments on this subject, would not evidence a closed deal. The telegram was interrogative. Suppose it had been promptly delivered, and the addressee had replied in the affirmative; still there would have been no contract between the bridge company and the plaintiff. All the transaction could amount to would be an inquiry as to the preparedness and willingness of plaintiff to work with the bridge company at that particular time. The bridge company was under no obligation to hire the plaintiff, even had the company received a prompt affirmative response to its telegraphic inquiry. This being so, the plaintiff had no contract with the bridge company, and it cannot be presumed that it would have made one, had the telegram been promptly delivered. The failure to get employment with the bridge company was not proximately caused by the delay in the delivery of the telegram. See Clay v. W. U. Tel. Co., 81 Ga. 285, 6 S. E. 813, 12 Am. St. Rep. 316; Richmond Hosiery Mills v. W. U. Tel. Co., 123 Ga. 216, 51 S. E. 290; W. U. Tel. Co. v. Watson, 94 Ga. 202, 21 S. E. 457, 47 Am. St. Rep. 151. In W. U. Tel. Co. v. Hines, 96 Ga. 688, 23 S. E. 845, 51 Am. St. Rep. 159, it appeared that the plaintiff had an understanding with his former employer that, should the latter secure a contract then in contemplation, the former was to return and engage in the same work under the new contract, until it was completed, at a certain salary. His employer secured the contract and telegraphed him: "Have work. Come at once." This telegram would have closed the contract with the plaintiff's former employer, and it was accordingly held that the telegraph company was liable to the plaintiff in such damages as arose from its negligence in failing to deliver the message to him in due time. The dissimilarity in the facts of this case and the one in hand is glaringly apparent. The allegations set out in the plaintiff's petition did not entitle him to recover compensatory damages for the injury alleged to have been sustained.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except BECK, J., who did not preside.

(124 Ga. 135)

JACKSON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 10, 1905.)

TRESPASS — CRIMINAL PROSECUTION — EVIDENCE.

An indictment for trespass, under Pen. Code 1895, § 220, charging that the accused did enter upon the lands of A., after being personally prohibited so to do by the said A., the person entitled to the possession of the land for the time being, is not supported by evidence that the accused trespassed upon the lands of B., that A. had no title or estate in the land, and that he was in possession merely in a representative capacity as agent or manager for B.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Trespas, § 181.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Baldwin County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

William Jackson was convicted of trespass, and brings error. Reversed.

Hines & Vinson, for plaintiff in error.
J. E. Pottle, Sol. Gen., for the State.

CANDLER, J. The accused was convicted in the county court of Baldwin county of the offense of trespass. He took the case to the superior court by certiorari, which was overruled, and he excepted. The indictment on which he was tried charged that he did "enter, go upon, and pass on the cultivated lands of C. J. Booker, after being personally prohibited so to do by C. J. Booker, the person entitled to the possession of the said land for the time being." The evidence was to the effect that the accused went upon the cultivated land of Bowen, Jewel & Co.; that Booker was in possession of the land only as the agent and manager of Bowen, Jewel & Co., under a contract which provided for the payment of a salary to him as manager and for a commission on all profits of the plantation above a specified sum; and that Booker had previously notified the accused not to go upon the land.

We are clear that the certiorari should have been sustained. There was a total failure to support the allegations of the indictment that the trespass charged was committed upon the land of C. J. Booker, or to show that Booker was the person entitled to the possession of the land for the time being. It is unnecessary to consider whether the conviction would have been warranted, had it appeared that Booker was in possession as tenant under Bowen, Jewel & Co. What does appear from the undisputed evidence is that Booker individually was not in possession at all. He was merely the agent of the owners, with no estate whatever in the land, and whatever physical occupancy or control he may have exercised was in his representative capacity, and merely went to constitute the possession of his principals. In Mitchell v. Georgia & Alabama Ry., 111 Ga. 760, 36 S. E. 971, 51 L. R. A. 622, it was held that, while mere possession of a chattel will give a right of action for any interference therewith, such possession must be in the plaintiff's own right, and not as servant of another. Certainly a less rigid rule should not apply in criminal than in civil cases, nor in regard to real than personal property.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 136)

WILLIAMS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 10, 1905.)

MASTER AND SERVANT—CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT—VIOLATION.

Where an accusation in a city court, under the act of 1903, charged that the accused did, "after contracting with Mrs. M. E. Drake to perform services for her as wood cutter, procure from her money and goods," etc., a conviction was not sustained by evidence showing that the defendant was employed by W. E. Drake, and that loss or damage was done to the latter. Nor is the evidence satisfactory as to whether this minor procured advances with a fraudulent intent, or in good faith, and was afterwards compelled to abandon his contract by his mother.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Albany; D. F. Crosland, Judge.

Joe Williams was convicted of a breach of a contract of employment, and brings error. Reversed.

Clayton Jones, for plaintiff in error. Jno. D. Pope, for the State.

LUMPKIN, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 136)

SINGLETON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 10, 1905.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—NEW TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

A charge to the jury, which intrenches upon their province with reference to determining the facts in the case and the credibility of the witnesses, is error, requiring the grant of a new trial.

2. INFANTS—CAPACITY TO COMMIT CRIME.

An infant under the age of 10 years cannot be convicted or found guilty of any crime or misdemeanor. If the accused is over 10, but under 14, years of age, he may be capable of crime; but the burden is upon the state of establishing the fact of his capacity therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 27, Cent. Dig. Infants, § 172.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Cartersville; A. M. Fonte, Judge.

Pearce Singleton was convicted of larceny, and brings error. Reversed.

The accused, Pearce Singleton, was tried in the city Court of Cartersville on an indictment charging him with the offense of simple larceny. The property alleged to have been stolen was "two bushels of coal, of the value of thirty cents, the property of the Seaboard Air Line Railroad Company." There was much evidence for and against the defendant. His mother and father testified as to the time of his birth, and their testimony, if taken as true, would have established the fact that he was not 10 years old at the time of the alleged unlawful act. But there was evidence from which the jury might have inferred that the prisoner was between 10 and 14 years of age. The defendant was convicted, and he made a motion for a new trial, based upon the general grounds and also upon the further grounds: "(4) Because said verdict was rendered in the face of and in defiance of section 34 of the Criminal Code of Georgia, the uncontradicted [evidence] of the father and mother of said defendant being that said defendant was not 10 years of age at the time said alleged offense was committed by him, as movant alleges. (5) Because movant alleges that it was error in the court not to have directed a verdict finding said defendant not guilty, as soon as it appeared from the evidence that the defendant was under the age of 10 years at the time it was alleged that he committed said offense. (6) Because it was manifest error in the court to submit the issue of the guilt or innocence of the defendant to the jury when it appeared from the uncontradicted evidence of the father and mother of said defendant that he was under 10 years of age at the time it was alleged that he committed said offense, as movant alleges; and movant alleges that the action of the court in submitting the question of the guilt of said defendant to said jury was in violation of and disregard of section 34 of the Criminal Code of Georgia under the instructions as given by the court. (7) Because the court erred in refusing to give in charge to said jury the following written request of defendant, without qualification, to wit: 'If you believe from the evidence the defendant was under the [10] years of age at the time he was charged with having committed said offense, then I charge you that he was incapable of committing any crime, and you should find him not guilty.' (8) Because movant alleges that the court, after reading to the jury as a part of its charge section 34 of the Criminal Code of Georgia and charging as follows, to wit: 'In connection with that, gentlemen, I charge you that, if you believe from the evidence that this defendant was under the age of 10 years when the alleged crime was committed, then you would not be authorized to convict'—erred in adding the following language, to wit: 'But you will consider, in connection with this, all the evidence, the interest of the principal witnesses for the defendant, the appearance for the defendant, and all the circumstances incident to the case.' The main question for your determination is this: Under the evidence, was this defendant 10 years old at the time of the commission of the alleged crime? If he was, and you believe from the evidence that he is guilty as charged in this bill of indictment, you ought to find him guilty.' Movant alleges that the part of said charge herein excepted to is not the law of Georgia, and it was hurtful error for the court to give such a charge to the jury. Movant alleges the reference by the court to the principal witnesses for defendant was calculated to discredit said witnesses before the jury, whom movant alleges were his father and mother, and did have that effect, and was therefore error. Movant further alleges that said charge herein excepted to is and was error in instructing said jury: 'If you believe the defendant was 10 years old, and you believe from the evidence that he is guilty as charged in the bill of indictment, you ought to find him guilty.' Movant alleges that said charge last quoted is not the law of Georgia, and it was therefore error to give it as it was given, even if said defendant had been proven to be 10 years old and under 14 years of age. Movant alleges that it was not true that every person, whose acts would amount to a crime, that is 14 years of age, is a crime when committed by a person between the ages of 10 and 14 years. Movant alleges that children between the ages of 10 and 14 years must be shown by the evidence for the state to possess sufficient intelligence to know good from evil before they can be convicted of any crime charged against them." The court overruled the motion, and the defendant excepted.

Jas. B. Conyers, for plaintiff in error. L. C. Milner, Sol., for the State.

BECK, J. (after stating the facts). 1. As we view this case, it is necessary to consider and discuss only one ground of the motion for a new trial. It will be observed that movant does not allege positively that the court refused the written request to give the charge set forth in the seventh ground, but the complaint is that he did not give it without qualification. What qualification the court added is left to conjecture, unless we search for it in other parts of the record; and this we will not undertake to do. But it seems to us that in the extract from the court's charge set forth in the eighth ground of the motion manifest error appears. The court, after instructing the jury correctly as follows: "I charge you that, if you believe from the evidence that this defendant was under the age of 10 years when the alleged crime was committed, then you would not be authorized to convict"—added the following, to wit: "But you will consider, in connection with this, all the evidence, the interest of the principal witnesses for the defendant, the appearance of the defendant, and all the circumstances incident to the case. The main question for your determination is this: Under the evidence was the defendant 10 years old at the time of the commission of the alleged crime. If he was, and you believe from the evidence that he is guilty as charged in this bill of indictment, you ought to find him guilty." In the first place this part of the court's charge is open to the criticism that it is repugnant to the law forbidding the court in the trial of any case to intimate to the jury his opinion "as to what has or has not been proved." The language,

"You will consider, in connection with this, all the evidence, the interest of the principal witnesses for the defendant," not only singles out and calls attention to the infirmity in the testimony of the father and mother of the accused, but would necessarily be construed by the jury as an intimation by the court that that testimony was the testimony of interested witnesses; and while every man of sense and experience knows full well that each juror was as fully aware as the judge himself of the intense interest that the "principal witnesses for the defendant" had in the result of this case, the vice in the instruction objected to is not thereby cured, for the jury are apt to be influenced by any intimation of opinion by the court even in regard to matters about which their own experience has been as thorough, as long, and as varied as that of the judge. Besides, the law is imperative that, where there has been a violation of the rule that the court should not intimate or express an opinion of what has or has not been proved, a new trial must be granted.

2. Counsel for the state contended that by the evidence it successfully carried the burden incumbent upon it of proving that the accused had sufficient mental capacity to commit crime, because the father of the prisoner testified that the defendant knew the difference between right and wrong. But, with this evidence in, it was still a question for the jury to determine whether the boy on trial had the capacity ascribed to him by his parent and the determination of that question was completely taken from them when the court instructed them without qualification that "if he was 10 years of age, and you believe from the evidence that he is guilty as charged in this bill of indictment, you ought to find him guilty." This charge the jury no doubt construed to mean that if the accused was 10 years of age and committed the acts alleged in the indictment, he was guilty of the crime charged without reference to his mental capacity, while the law is that, if the accused was between 10 and 14 years of age, prima facie he was incapable of crime, and the jury should be instructed that the burden is on the state to establish his capacity therefor, it being their privilege alone to pass upon this evidence; and their province was directly invaded when the judge directed them, after correctly instructing as to their duty in case they found the defendant to be under the age of 10 years, in the language of the charge complained of in the ground of the motion now under consideration and last quoted. The jury should have been informed in terms direct and clear that, if the infant on trial was between 10 and 14 years of age, his capacity to commit crime must be made to appear from the evidence, or from the facts and circumstances of the case; and this is not going as far as some courts and many text-writers have gone, where they have laid down the rule that the capacity to commit crime in infants under the age of 14 years should be made to appear "only by the strongest and clearest evidence." "There is uncontradicted evidence in the record that plaintiff in error was little more than 11 years of age when the homicide was committed. This evidence was not contradicted, but was virtually conceded by the eighth instruction asked and given for the people. If this was true, and the evidence tended to prove it, the rule required evidence strong and clear, beyond all doubt and contradiction, that he was capable of discerning between good and evil; and, the legal presumption being that he was incapable of committing the crime for want of such knowledge, it devolved on the people to make the strong and clear proof of capacity before they could be entitled to a conviction." Angelo v. People, 96 Ill. 209, 36 Am. Rep. 134, and cases cited. See, also, Bish. New Cr. L. 219.

3. Except in the grounds already noticed, no material error is made to appear in the various grounds of the motion for a new trial.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 150)

NUGENT v. WATKINS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 10, 1905.)

EASEMENT — PRESCRIPTIVE RIGHT — ACTION FOR OBSTRUCTION.

Where one has acquired a prescriptive right to a private way, whether the prescription be of common-law or statutory origin, the right to the way presumably passes with the land to which it is appurtenant; and in an action by one holding the land under a deed from the prescriber, to require the removal of obstacles erected in the way, it is not necessary to allege that the way was laid out by the petitioner, or that the defendant had knowledge that the way was laid out, used, and enjoyed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Action by E. A. Nugent against Sarah E. Watkins. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Mrs. Nugent filed her petition in the court of ordinary of Richmond county, alleging that Sarah E. Watkins, of said county, had obstructed a private way running on, over, and between certain improved lands of said Sarah E. Watkins and certain other improved lands formerly belonging to Wilson Watkins and now the property in part of petitioner and in part of Salem Dutcher; that continuously, for more than seven years prior to the obstructions referred to, the lands on, over, and between which the way ran were, and now are, improved lands, and the way has occupied, and now occupies, one and the same location, and has been and is of the same width, to wit, a width not exceeding 15 feet, and has been continuously kept open and in repair by Wilson Watkins and petitioner, his grantee; and that the obstructions referred to have injured petitioner in a manner and to an extent set forth. The petition prayed an order directing Sarah E. Watkins to remove the obstructions, or, in the event of her failure to do so, that a warrant issue requiring the sheriff to remove them. By amendment it was alleged that the lands of Wilson Watkins were conveyed to him in the years 1866, 1867, and 1868; that in 1897 he conveyed to petitioner his improved lands, together with all and singular the rights, easements, ways, members, and appurtenances thereunto belonging, reserving to himself a life estate in the property so conveyed; that continuously and uninterruptedly, for more than seven years prior to this deed, the private way in controversy ran on, over, and between the lands of Wilson Watkins and Sarah E. Watkins, during all of which time the lands in question were improved, and occupied one and the same location, and was of the same width, to wit, not exceeding 15 feet, and was worked and kept open by Wilson Watkins, and was in constant and uninterrupted use, without any steps being taken to abolish the way; that Wilson Watkins remained continuously in possession of the life estate referred to until his death in February, 1902; and that on the death of Wilson Watkins Mrs. Nugent became the owner in fee of all the property conveyed by the deed executed in 1897. Mrs. Watkins demurred to the petition generally, and on the grounds (1) that it was not alleged that the way was ever laid out by the petitioners; (2) that it was not alleged that the defendant ever had knowledge that the way was laid out, used, and enjoyed; and (3) that it appears that Salem Dutcher is one of the owners of the property appurtenant to which the way is claimed, but it does not appear how much or in what manner he owns, or why he is not a party to this suit. The ordinary sustained the demurrer and dismissed the petition, whereupon the plaintiff carried the case by certiorari to the superior court of Richmond county. The certiorari was overruled, and the plaintiff excepted.

Salem Dutcher, for plaintiff in error. Austin Branch, for defendant in error.

CANDLER, J. (after making the foregoing statement). In the able brief of counsel for the defendant in error a distinction is drawn between private rights of way by prescription at common law and under the Georgia statute. It is insisted that at common law a private right of way could be acquired by prescription only by reason of adverse possession accompanied by a claim of right while under the act of 1872, as codified in Pol. Code, § 678 et seq., prescription may ripen through the permissive use of the way for the required seven years; and it is contended that on this account the statutory prescriptive way is personal to the prescriber, and expires with the limitation of his estate. Applied to the case at bar, the contention is that, even if Wilson Watkins had a prescriptive way over the lands of Sarah E. Watkins, it ceased to exist at his death, and that his successor in title could not tack Wilson Watkins' prescription to her own occupancy of the way, so as to set up a prescriptive title in herself. We cannot concede the soundness of this position. Granting that the act of 1872 changed the common law in making more liberal provisions for the acquisition of a private way by prescription, we fail utterly to see how it can be said to follow that the prescriptive right, when once acquired as provided by the statute, is any less complete than it would have been if obtained under the more rigid requirements of the common law. Prescription is prescription, whether it be acquired at common law or by statute. The right itself has not been changed, but merely the method of obtaining it.

The argument that section 672 of the Political Code, providing that "when a person has laid out a private way, and has been in the use and enjoyment of it as much as seven years, of which the owners have had six months knowledge without moving for damages, his right to use becomes complete, and such owners are barred of damages," was intended as a check, or balance, against the greater liberality allowed by the act of 1872, is, we think, untenable. A complete answer to it is that the alleged "check" was in existence before the act which it is claimed it was intended to check. This section was carefully construed and fully explained by our present Chief Justice in the case of Watkins v. Country Club, 120 Ga. 47, 47 S. E. 538, wherein it was held that the section in question was intended to apply only to private ways and laid out under statutory proceedings, and not to a prescriptive way, such as the one now under consideration. While we recognize that what was there said is not binding in the present case, for the reason that it was not necessary to the decision rendered, the argument made is entirely convincing, and we are satisfied with the correctness of the conclusion there announced. It follows, then, that under the allegations of the petition a prescriptive right to the private way in controversy had ripened in Wilson Watkins before his death, and presumably this right passed with the land to the plaintiff; for, as was held in Taylor v. Dyches, 69 Ga. 456: "Private ways are never presumed to be personal when they can be construed to be appurtenant to the land. They are in the nature of covenants running with the land." See, also, Duggan v. Cox, 78 Ga. 158, 1 S. E. 428; Cunningham v. Elliott, 92 Ga. 160, 18 S. E. 365.

In this view of the case, it was not necessary, as contended by counsel for the defendant in error, that the petition should allege that the way was laid out by the plaintiff, or that the defendant had six months' notice that the way was laid out used, and enjoyed. It follows that the position that it is necessary to set out the nature of the title of all the adjacent landowners, and make them parties to the suit, in order for the plaintiff to assert her right to the way, is untenable. Our conclusion is that the ordinary erred in sustaining the demurrer to the petition, and that the superior court should have sustained the certiorari.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 216)

HALEY v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 13, 1905.)

INDICTMENT—ALTERNATIVE ALLEGATIONS.

An accusation which charges, in the alternative, that on a certain day the person accused did "unlawfully play and bet for money or other thing of value at a game of skin or other game played with cards," is bad as against a special demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 27, Cent. Dig. Indictment and Information, § 195.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Elberton; P. P. Proffitt, Judge.

Tom Haley was convicted of gambling, and brings error. Reversed.

Haley was tried in the city court of Elberton on an accusation which charged him and others with the offense of misdemeanor, for that on a day named they did "with force and arms unlawfully play and bet for money or other thing of value at a game of skin or other game played with cards." The defendant demurred to the indictment because it was in the alternative and did not with sufficient certainty charge the defendant with a single offense. The court overruled the demurrer, but stated in his order that the state should be restricted to proof of the game alleged to be "skin" and also to the proof of betting for money. After conviction the defendant excepted.

Sam L. Olive, for plaintiff in error. T. J. Brown, Sol., for the State.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts). The accusation employs the alternative form of expression in describing the offense. It charges that the persons accused did play and bet "for money or other thing of value." Where an offense can be committed in more than one way, it is not good pleading to charge it as having been committed in one method or the other, in the alternative. Sanders v. State, 86 Ga. 717, 12 S. E. 1058; Grantham v. State, 89 Ga. 121, 14 S. E. 892; Langston v. State, 109 Ga. 153, 35 S. E. 166, 779; Henderson v. State, 113 Ga. 1148, 39 S. E. 446. Wharton's Crim. Pl. & Pr. §§ 161-162. As to the employment of the conjunctive or disjunctive form of expression, see Hubbard v. State, 123 Ga. 17, 51 S. E. 11. The decision in Brand v. State, 112 Ga. 25, 37 S. E. 100, furnishes no authority for the contention on behalf of the state in regard to this ground of the demurrer. In that case the indictment charged that the accused "played and bet for money and other things of value," conjunctively. It has been held that "the cases of Johnson v. State, 8 Ga. 453, and Hinton v. State, 68 Ga. 322, are no authority to the contrary; the precise question not being made and determined in either of those cases." Grantham v. State, supra. See, also, Oglesby v. State, 123 Ga. 506, 51 S. E. 505. The accusation was subject to the special demurrer on the ground that it stated the offense in the alternative. The accusation being demurrable, it could not be cured by the statement of the court that he would confine the state to proof to show that the game was "skin" and the thing bet was money.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 141)

SCANDRETT v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 10, 1905.)

1. SUNDAY — VIOLATION OF SUNDAY LAW — EVIDENCE.

Where it appeared from the evidence that the defendant sold on the Sabbath day articles of refreshment, such as candy and "coca cola," at a "stand," and it further appeared that several times on Sunday at different churches he had conducted a similar business, the jury trying the case would be authorized to find the defendant guilty of a violation of Pen. Code 1895, § 422.

2. NEW TRIAL — DEFECTS IN INDICTMENT — MOTION IN ARREST.

"Defects in an indictment afford no ground for a new trial. Exceptions which go merely to the form should be made before the trial. For matters affecting the real merits, the remedy, after trial, is by motion in arrest of judgment."

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 15, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, §§ 2152-2153, 2445-2462.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Griffin; H. W. Hammond, Judge.

Lump Scandrett was convicted of violation of a Sunday law, and brings error. Affirmed.

Thos. W. Thurman, for plaintiff in error.
T. E. Patterson, for the State.

BECK, J. The defendant was tried in the city court of Griffin on an accusation in which it was charged that he, "on the 23d day of July, 1905, did with force and arms unlawfully pursue his ordinary business, or the work of his ordinary calling, on the Lord's day, and did sell a quantity of coca cola and candy." The defendant was convicted, and moved for a new trial upon the general grounds, and also on the further ground that the "state did not charge or prove the work or business was not a work of necessity or charity." The court overruled the motion for a new trial, and the defendant excepted.

1. There was no evidence in this case to show that during the week the defendant had any other business or calling than that of a farmer, but the undisputed testimony conclusively proved that on the Sunday set out in the accusation the defendant did, at a "stand" kept by him, vend articles of refreshment, such as candy and "coca cola," and that he had on other Sundays conducted a similar business. It is not necessary, under the issues made in the case, for us to pass upon the question as to whether or not the proof of a single sale on the Sabbath day would support a charge of violating Pen. Code 1895, § 422; but where there is a series of acts, of the nature of those charged in this accusation, the jury would be authorized to find the defendant guilty under that section. Reed v. State, 119 Ga. 562, 46 S. E. 837.

2. Besides the general grounds, plaintiff in error based his motion for a new trial upon the ground that the "state did not charge or prove the work or business was not a work of necessity or charity." It is true that the state did not allege that the acts charged were not works of necessity or charity; but, if this allegation was necessary to make a perfect indictment, a failure so to charge should have been taken advantage of by a special demurrer to the accusation. But the defendant did not demur to the accusation, and permitted evidence to go to the jury which showed conclusively that the acts charged were neither works of charity or necessity. "Defects in an indictment afford no ground for a new trial. Exceptions which go merely to the form should be made before trial. For matters affecting the real merits, the remedy, after trial, is by motion in arrest of judgment." White v. State, 93 Ga. 47, 19 S. E. 49. See, also, Wise v. State, 24 Ga. 31.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 143)

NEW v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 10, 1905.)

CRIMINAL LAW — APPEAL — CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

The evidence against the accused was entirely circumstantial, and at most authorized a mere suspicion of his guilt; whereas, to warrant a conviction, the evidence should have been sufficient to exclude every reasonable hypothesis save that of his guilt. The court, therefore, erred in refusing a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 15, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, §§ 2297, 2298.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Carrollton; W. O. Hodnett, Judge.

Howard New was convicted of crime, and brings error. Reversed.

Hamrick & Smith, for plaintiff in error.
C. E. Roop, Sol., and W. F. Brown, for the State.

FISH, C. J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 142)

CENTRAL OF GEORGIA RY. CO. v. COX.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 10, 1905.)

RAILROADS — KILLING STOCK — ACTION FOR DAMAGES—EVIDENCE.

There was no error in the admission of testimony, and the evidence warranted the verdict.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Sandersville; P. R. Talliaferro, Judge.

Action by S. H. Cox against the Central of Georgia Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Howard & Jordan, for plaintiff in error.
Evans & Evans, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. 1. Ordinarily, on the trial of an action for damages growing out of the killing by a railway company of stock upon its track, the fact that the same train ran over other stock at a different point on the track cannot illustrate the question whether or not the servants of the company in charge of the train exercised due care in endeavoring to prevent injury to the stock for the killing of which suit is brought. But when the engineer testifies, in effect, that he neither saw nor could have seen any stock on the track until his engine rounded a curve and approached to within 200 yards of the plaintiff's cattle, when he immediately applied brakes and used every effort to prevent injury to them, it is competent for the plaintiff to prove that the version of the occurrence given by the engineer is untrue, by introducing testimony tending to show that the engineer in fact saw a cow belonging to another upon the track, some 130 yards above the point where the plaintiff's cattle were standing, and between the engineer and the plaintiff's cattle; that the engineer blew the whistle of the locomotive when he saw this cow, but made no attempt to check the speed of his train at that time, or even after his engine had rounded the curve and he could have seen plaintiff's cattle upon the track. Whether the engineer did or did not see the cow on the track was material to the issue on trial, as throwing light upon his conduct subsequently, inasmuch as the company insisted he was maintaining a lookout and observed the plaintiff's cattle as soon as the engine rounded the curve and he came in view of them, whereupon he did everything in his power to prevent injury to these cattle; whereas, the plaintiff's theory of the case was that the engineer's attention was distracted by the killing of this cow, which he saw on the track before he rounded the curve, and that he did not give heed to the presence of plaintiff's cattle, which were 130 yards beyond where this cow was run over, nor did he make any effort to prevent injury to them at any time after they could have been seen.

52 S.E.—11

2. In view of the testimony upon which the plaintiff relied as overcoming the evidence introduced by the defendant company to establish its diligence, a verdict in his favor was warranted, and the court below did not commit any abuse of discretion in refusing to grant a new trial.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 147)

ANDERSON v. ANDERSON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 10, 1905.)

1. ERROR—RECORD—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Affidavits and documents introduced in evidence on the hearing before the trial judge must be incorporated in the bill of exceptions seeking to review his judgment, or attached thereto as exhibits, duly and properly identified, or be embraced in an approved brief of evidence and brought up as record. The mere filing of affidavits and documents in the office of the clerk of the court does not make them parts of the record in the case. Civ. Code, §§ 5528, 5529; Hancock v. McNatt, 42 S. E. 525, 116 Ga. 297, and citations; Sayer v. Brown, 46 S. E. 649, 119 Ga. 539; Griffin v. Baxter, 46 S. E. 840, 119 Ga. 612; Eubanks v. Eastman, 48 S. E. 426, 120 Ga. 1048; Kelsoe v. Oglethorpe, 48 S. E. 366, 120 Ga. 957, 102 Am. St. Rep. 138.

2. SAME—REVIEW—ASSIGNMENTS.

Where the questions made by the assignments of error in the bill of exceptions necessarily involve a consideration of the evidence, and none of the methods above indicated have been adopted, but copies of affidavits and documents have been sent up as parts of the record, they cannot be considered.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Bulloch County; B. L. Rawlings, Judge.

Action between C. E. Anderson and D. E. Anderson. From the judgment, C. E. Anderson brings error. Dismissed.

J. J. E. Anderson and G. S. Johnston, for plaintiff in error. H. B. Strange, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. Writ of error dismissed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 229)

HODGES v. WATERS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 13, 1905.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT—DISPUTING LANDLORD'S TITLE—ESTOPPEL—ATTORNEY.

One who goes into possession of land as the tenant of another cannot set up title adverse to the landlord, from whom he thus obtained possession, until there has been a surrender of the premises by the tenant to the landlord. However, if a tenant thus in possession expressly agrees to pay rent to another for a given time, he will be bound by these terms, if founded upon a sufficient consideration; but, after the expiration of the time fixed in the express agreement, no promise to pay rent will be implied, and such person may deny liability for rent after that time, although he still remained in possession of the premises as the tenant of the person who placed him in possession.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Bulloch County; B. T. Rawlings, Judge.

Action by R. B. Waters against C. W. Hodges. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

R. B. Waters sued out a distress warrant against C. W. Hodges, claiming the sum of $100 as rent for the described premises. A counter affidavit was interposed; and the case, coming on for trial in the superior court on appeal, resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff for the amount claimed. The defendant made a motion for a new trial, which, in addition to the general grounds, assigned error on two special grounds: (1) That the court erred in charging the jury as follows: "If you find that C. W. Hodges ever at any time recognized or acknowledged R. B. Waters as his landlord, he cannot now attorn to any other person, if his possession was continuous from that time; that is to say, he cannot be heard to deny his obligation to pay rent to said R. B. Waters." (2) The second special ground assigned error upon the failure to charge the defendant's theory of the case, that he was the tenant of Mrs. Sarah Waters, and not the tenant of R. B. Waters, and also the failure to charge the provisions of section 8116 of the Civil Code of 1895, which declares: "When the title is shown in the plaintiff and occupation by the defendant, an obligation to pay rent is generally implied; but if the entry was not under the plaintiff, or if possession is adverse to him, no such implication arises." The motion for a new trial was overruled and the defendant excepted.

The evidence was in substance as follows: A warranty deed from Sarah Waters to the plaintiff, dated March 1, 1877, conveying the premises involved. A warranty deed between the same parties, conveying the same premises, dated February 4, 1896. The plaintiff testified that the defendant owed him the amount claimed in the distress warrant for rent of the place therein described for the year 1903; that he did not have a separate contract for that year, but the place was worth the amount it brought in the years 1896 and 1897; and that the land was worth $100 per year. Defendant had been in possession as tenant for about 23 years, and had never paid any rent until about 1896. That year he paid $100 under a written agreement under seal, which was renewed in writing under seal for the year 1897. These documents were introduced in evidence. There has been no written contract since 1897, but defendant has paid rent along since, but only in one year as much as $100. Plaintiff agreed with his mother, Mrs. Sarah Waters, that she was to have a home on the place as long as he owned it. She remained in possession, and had the use of the place as a home under this agreement, until the place was sold, which was in the latter part of 1903. Plaintiff did not claim any rent for 14 years, but paid the taxes. The defendant supported plaintiff's mother most of that time, but plaintiff contributed to her support. The defendant testified that he did not owe Waters any rent, and did not agree to pay him anything; that he held the place under Mrs. Sarah Waters; that the agreement between Mrs. Waters and the plaintiff was that she was to have control and possession of the place as long as she lived, and defendant held under her. Defendant supported Mrs. Waters for the use of the place. This was the agreement between them. He had been in possession 23 years continuously under this arrangement. His wife was her youngest daughter. Waters never demanded rent until 1896. He attempted to sell the place about that time, and on account of Mrs. Waters objecting to the sale, she claiming that she had a right to occupy it during her life, the sale was not consummated; and plaintiff, being mad, demanded rent of defendant, threatening to eject him from the place unless he paid rent. He agreed to pay rent rather than have a lawsuit. He could not read or write, and signed the contract by his mark. He paid the rent for that year, and renewed the contract for the next year. Since that time he has not paid one cent; has not agreed to pay anything; denies any promise of making payment as testified to by defendant. Mrs. Sarah Waters testified that the agreement between her and the plaintiff was that she was to have the possession and use of the place during her life; that there was a mortgage on the place, and the plaintiff agreed that, if she would make him a deed, he would pay the mortgage and allow her the possession and control as long as she lived. She was in possession under this agreement until the plaintiff sold the place and put her off. He never denied the agreement until recently. He now claims that the agreement was that she was to have the place as long as he owned it; but that is not correct. No rent has ever been demanded of her, and none has ever been paid. The reasons for demanding rent from Hodges are stated by her substantially the same as by him. The deed of 1896 was made because plaintiff said it was necessary on account of an old homestead which had been taken years ago. He repeated his agreement to allow her the use of the place as long as she lived when the deed of 1896 was made. She objected to the defendant's paying rent, and did not consider him under any obligation to pay it. The defendant also introduced the answer of Waters in an equitable suit brought against him by Mrs. Waters, in which he stated that his mother was entitled to remain on the place as long as plaintiff owned it and was in possession of it; that he had demanded no rent, and had expected none from her.

Mrs. Anna Hodges testified that she knew of the agreement between the plaintiff and his mother, and that the same was to the effect that she was to have a home on the place as long as she lived, and was to be supported from the place.

Brannen & Booth, for plaintiff in error.
G. S. Johnston, for defendant in error.

COBB, P. J. The rule that one who goes into possession of land as a tenant of another is estopped to deny the title of him who occupies the relation of landlord in the agreement is familiar law. In the application of this rule it is immaterial whether the landlord is the owner or has any legal interest in the premises. It is sufficient, as between him and his tenant, that he claims ownership, and as a result of this claim the tenant is put in possession and allowed to occupy the premises. Grizzard v. Roberts, 110 Ga. 41, 35 S. E. 291. Upon the question as to whether this estoppel operates where the tenant, at the time the contract of rental is made, is already in possession through another and former landlord, or another claim of title, the authorities are at variance. In Franklin v. Merida, 85 Cal. 558, 95 Am. Dec. 129, the Supreme Court of California held that, if one in possession takes a lease from a stranger, the lessee so in possession is not estopped to deny the title of the lessor, since the latter parts with nothing, and the former has obtained nothing, by the transaction. This decision seems to follow an older decision, and in both cases one of the judges dissented. The better rule seems to be that laid down by the Supreme Court of Colorado, in Lyon v. Washburn, 3 Colo. 201, where it is said that an attornment by one in possession estops the tenant from denying his landlord's title, unless the attornment was brought about by fraud, force, or mistake of fact. In the opinion Wells, J., says: "To avoid the assertion of a hostile title, one may lawfully contract to pay for his own, and, if the threatened litigation be forborne, he is bound by his promise; and so the tenant, holding under a landlord whose title is unimpeachable, may, if he will, undertake to pay rent to every stranger who demands it. Such demand implies the threat of litigation and dis-possession if the demand be refused; and if made in good faith, and without fraud or other improper practice to induce concession, and if the tenant yield to it with a full understanding of all the facts which are material to the question of his liability, it is difficult to see why he should not be bound by his promise, even though he should become liable thereby to pay triple rent for the same premises." See, also, Carter v. Marshall, 72 Ill. 609; Lucas v. Brooks, 85 U. S. 436, 21 L. Ed. 779. In Hamilton v. Pittock, 158 Pa. 457, 27 Atl. 1079, an instruction that "a man may, if he sees fit, where there are conflicting titles, take a lease from each of the owners of it, and, if he is not deceived by assertions in regard to the matter, he would have to pay both," was approved as sound law.

Hodges, under his admissions, was a tenant of Mrs. Waters; the contract being that he was to have the use of the place, and the rent was to be paid by furnishing her with support. It is immaterial whether Mrs. Waters had any interest in the premises as between her and Hodges. He recognized her as his landlord, and he obtained possession from her; and as between them he cannot raise any question as to her title. By express agreement under seal, in the year 1896 as well as the year 1897, he recognized the plaintiff as his landlord, and agreed to pay him a stipulated amount as rent; the written agreement between the parties having all the formalities required to create the technical relation of landlord and tenant. So far as those years are concerned he occupied the relation of tenant to both plaintiff and his mother, and as against each he was estopped to deny this relation, certainly so far as the payment of rent was concerned. He could not defeat the claim of Mrs. Waters for rent by showing that the agreement between her and her son was invalid for any reason. Neither could he defeat the claim of her son for the rent of those years by showing that the title of the mother was superior. Having received possession of the land from Mrs. Waters, he could not by any act of his place himself in a position where, as against her, he could deny her title. So long as the possession thus acquired continued, he was estopped from denying her title as landlord. To deny her title it was necessary for him to surrender to her that possession which he had received from her, and re-enter after such surrender under some other person. Therefore an agreement to pay rent from year to year would arise between Hodges and Mrs. Waters until there had been an actual surrender of the premises to her. Hodges' possession having been in no way dependent upon any act of the plaintiff, to what extent the agreement between him and the plaintiff would create a liability for rent of the premises would depend upon the terms of the agreement. If Hodges, upon a sufficient consideration, agreed to pay the plaintiff rent for 1896 and 1897, he would be bound by this agreement, and must pay the rent. But after the expiration of the term fixed in the agreement, his obligation to pay rent depending upon the agreement alone, and his possession not having been obtained through the person to whom the promise was made, there would be no obligation upon him to attempt a vain and idle thing; that is, to surrender the premises belonging to one person to another who was not entitled to it. He was not compelled at the end of the year 1897 to abandon possession of the premises, which he at all times held under Mrs. Waters, in order to prevent a liability on his part to pay to her son rent in the future. Not having acquired possession from her son, the estoppel raised by the contract to pay rent was no broader in its operation than the contract provided for; and he was therefore not estopped from denying after 1897 that he was no longer liable to pay rent as a tenant to the son of Mrs. Waters. If, at the time the defendant had made the contract to pay rent to the plaintiff, the plaintiff had been in possession claiming title to the property as his own, and no other person's rights were to be affected, then his entering into a contract to pay rent would have made the defendant a tenant of the person to whom the rent was payable, and render him liable to all the incidents of such a tenancy. See Johnson v. Thrower, 117 Ga. 1007, 44 S. E. 846; Willis v. Harrell, 118 Ga. 906, 45 S. E. 794 (9).

The defendant was liable to the plaintiff for the rent of the years 1896 and 1897, which he expressly agreed to pay; the consideration for such promise being the quieting of his possession from the threat of eviction made by the plaintiff. The defendant having testified that he had never agreed to pay rent for any other year than those named, the judgment must be reversed upon that assignment of error which complained that the court erred in charging the jury that, if at any time the defendant had recognized the plaintiff as his landlord, he could never thereafter be heard to deny his obligation to pay rent so long as he remained in possession of the premises.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 236)

OVERSTREET v. SYLVANIA WATER SUPPLY CO. (two cases).

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 18, 1905.)
INJUNCTION—HEARING—AMENDMENT OF PETITION—NOTICE.

Where, upon the hearing of a rule upon a petition for injunction, the judge reserves his decision, it is error for him, pending the consideration of the case and before his decision is made, to permit the plaintiff to amend the petition in a material particular and submit affidavits in support of the petition as thus amended, without giving notice to the opposite party of such amendment and affidavits, in order that said party may meet the same if he should so desire.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Screven County; B. T. Rawlins, Judge.

Suit by G. M. Overstreet against the Sylvania Water Supply Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Overstreet applied to the judge of the superior court for an injunction against the Sylvania Water Supply Company, alleging in substance as follows: The defendant company, when it first commenced operations in the year 1904, gave notice to the citizens of Sylvania that its terms for supplying water would be "seventy-five cents per month for the first hydrant installed, and twenty-five cents for each additional hydrant used on the premises of the citizens of said city, with the privilege of using them as they should see fit around and in their dwellings, lots, and premises." Before putting in pipes or connecting with the waterworks of the defendant company, petitioner was informed by said company "that the water could not be used for watering flowers." Upon petitioner informing defendant company that he would not use its water without such privilege, it was agreed that he could use the water in his yard and for the purpose of watering flowers, "as petitioner should see fit," upon the terms stated above, provided petitioner would put in the pipes. Acting upon this agreement, petitioner alleges, he put in pipes and fixtures at an expense of $150 and also a hydrant in his yard, from which he has been watering his flowers, paying for the water according to the aforementioned terms. The defendant, shortly before the filing of this bill, gave petitioner notice that its rates for hydrants used to water flowers had been increased to $5 a month, and unless petitioner would pay that amount his pipes would be disconnected from the defendant's waterworks system. Petitioner alleges that, if the defendant company should be allowed to cut off his water, his loss would be irreparable. He prays that the said company be restrained from so doing. The judge granted a temporary restraining order, and required the defendant to show cause upon a certain date. On the day named the defendant appeared and demurred generally to the petition, on the ground that it was without equity and set forth no cause of action, and especially to the allegations in reference to the contract set out in the petition, for the reason that it was not therein alleged "the time for which the alleged rate was to be charged," and because the contract was not alleged to have been in writing, nor was the length of time "for which the alleged contract was to run" stated. Defendant further demurred on the ground that the petition did not show that the alleged damages would be irreparable, or that the defendant is insolvent. After filing its demurrer the defendant answered the petition as follows: It denied having made any contract with Overstreet, "but at the urgent solicitation and request of the plaintiff's wife defendant did put in a hydrant at that place for the purpose of watering flowers. * * * It was not a part of defendant's published rates that it would furnish water for the use of flower gardens, gardens, or lawns, but, on the contrary, defendant had stated generally that it would not furnish water for such purposes." Defendant admitted that its rates for water in dwellings was 75 cents per month for the first hydrant installed and 25 cents monthly for each additional hydrant, but denied that this rate applied to hydrants in flower gardens, etc. Defendant also admitted that it had received only 25 cents per month in payment for the hydrant in petitioner's flower garden, but averred that it rendered a statement charging $1.50 for the yard hydrant, which complainant's wife refused to pay, and that, "rather than have contention about the matter, defendant did not insist upon said charges. * * * The water to this hydrant was supplied at a cost to this defendant far in excess of the amount received; but, as defendant had only one other hydrant for the purpose of watering flowers, it voluntarily bore the expense and submitted to the injustice rather than have a difference with these two customers." Defendant further averred that, by reason of the hydrant in petitioner's yard being left running all night, as well as a great portion of the day, "the supply in the tank would become exhausted before daylight, to the injury and inconvenience of other customers and this defendant." After the filing of the answer a hearing was had, whereupon the judge announced that he would reserve his decision until further consideration of the case, and requested counsel for both parties to furnish him with additional legal authorities. Some time after the hearing the plaintiff offered an amendment to his petition and affidavits to support the amendment, the substance of which appear in the opinion, which were allowed by the judge without any notice whatever being given to the defendant. Shortly after this amendment was allowed the judge rendered his decision restraining the defendant until the final hearing of the case, to which the defendant excepted upon the grounds that the judgment was contrary to law and the evidence, and because the court erred in allowing the amendment and affidavits after the hearing and without notice to the defendant.

Phil P. Johnston and H. J. Fullbright, for plaintiff in error. E. K. Overstreet, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. (after stating the facts). No extended argument is required to show that the defendant in the court below was deprived of a material right. We do not know, in view of the state of the pleadings and the evidence when the case was closed at the time of the hearing at chambers, what the judge's decision in the exercise of his discretion would have been, had he rendered it upon the case as then made. But, instead of rendering his judgment then, he reserved his decision, and, pending the consideration of the cause, permitted defendant in error to file an amendment containing new and material averments. In the petition as it stood before the amendment was allowed the plaintiff below alleged and complained that the defendant company commenced operations in the year 1904, giving notice to the citizens of Sylvania at that time as to what its terms and charges would be, fixing them at a certain amount according to the number of hydrants used, fixing a charge for the first hydrant and a lower charge for each additional hydrant used on the premises of those citizens who should take water from said company. The plaintiff alleged, further, that before putting in pipes upon his premises, and before connecting with the waterworks system of the defendant company, he was informed by the company that the water could not be used for the purpose of watering flowers, whereupon petitioner informed the company that he would not take the water without the privilege of using it in his yard and for watering his flowers. The defendant company then, through its president, informed petitioner that, if he would put in pipes and take the water, he should have the privilege of using it in his yard and for the purpose of watering flowers as petitioner should see fit according to the terms already stated. The defendant company denied a part of the above allegations, but admitted that through its president it did say the charge for water would be 75 cents per month for the first hydrant and 25 cents per month for each additional hydrant; these charges, however, applying only to hydrants used in residences, and not to such as might be put in yards, flower gardens, etc. Both parties submitted evidence to support their contentions. In the amendment to the petition, the allowance of which is complained of, it is alleged that the defendant company, by its president, agreed to furnish water at "said rates" as long as the artesian well from which it obtained water would afford sufficient water for "such purpose" and for drinking purposes, only reserving the right to cease furnishing water in the event the well should fail to furnish a sufficient quantity for "such purposes; * * * that said well affords more than ample and sufficient quantity of water for the enjoyment of petitioner of his rights under said contract, as well for watering flowers as for all other purposes. In point of fact said well affords a sufficient quantity of water to more than many times supply the demands of the various customers of the Sylvania Water Supply Company." Affidavits were submitted to support the new averments in this amendment, and upon the case as made by the original petition, the defendant's demurrer and answer, and the amendment to the original petition, with all of the aforesaid affidavits, the judge made and rendered the decision now complained of. The effect of allowing this amendment was to open the case for further demurrer or answer. The opposite party should have been given notice of the amendment and allowed reasonable time to answer the same and to submit evidence supporting his answer. "An amended bill is considered as an original bill" (Carey v. Smith, 11 Ga. 540), and the right to contest the averments of the former is as complete as the right to answer and contest those of the latter. We must also agree with the contention of counsel for plaintiff in error that the judge erred in receiving and considering the affidavits filed after the hearing, for the reason that no application was made to have the case reopened for this purpose and no notice was given to the opposite party. In the case of Jowers v. Lott, 96 Ga. 333, 23 S. E. 189, this court reversed the judgment of the lower court, for receiving and considering an affidavit and denying to the opposite party an opportunity to submit counter affidavits. "The ruling of this court has gone to the extent of rejecting all affidavits not filed and of which no notice has been given to the adverse party." Huff v. Markham, 70 Ga. 284.

The plaintiff in error further excepts to the order allowing the amendment to the petition, on the ground that it sets forth a new cause of action, and to the three affidavits submitted after the hearing, on the ground that they were not entitled in the cause pending. We do not consider the questions raised by these exceptions as properly here for consideration, as the objections are here made for the first time; they not having been made before the trial judge. And that reason for not passing upon them is a valid one, although the plaintiff in error was denied an opportunity of making them below; for the presumption is that, when the objection is urged at the hearing, the ruling thereon will be in accordance with the law.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 250)

LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO. et al. v. KOHLRUSS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 18, 1905.)
RAILROADS—FIRES—DAMAGES.

The measure of damages for the negligent firing and destruction of the fencing and ornamental trees on the plaintiff's land by the railroad company in the operation of its train was the diminution in value of the premises resulting from the injury caused by such firing. The charge of the court could not have been reasonably misunderstood by the jury as presenting a different rule. The evidence fully supported the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 41, Cent. Dig. Railroads, § 1737.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Columbia County; H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Action by C. F. Kohlruss against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

Jos. B. & Bryan Cumming, P. B. Johnson, and G. M. Beasley, for plaintiffs in error. Henry C. Roney, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(104 Va. 619)

COSMOPOLITAN LIFE INS. ASS'N v. KOEGEL.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 23, 1905.)

1. INSURANCE—POLICY OF INSURANCE—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

A certificate issued by a fraternal mutual benefit society to a member, which provides that on the death of the member a specified sum will be paid to his wife out of the mortuary fund on condition of the payment by the member of fixed sums at fixed periods, is a life policy, within Code 1887, § 3251 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1711], providing what shall be a sufficient declaration in an action on a policy, and is not merely a certificate of membership in a beneficial society, within Acts 1897-98, p. 784, c. 688, defining and regulating fraternal beneficiary associations.

2. SAME—MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE—RE-INSURANCE.

A fraternal mutual benefit society issued a certificate to a member, providing for the payment of $2,000 on his death to his wife. After the death of the member an insurance company agreed for a certain consideration to assume all liabilities of the society on its certificates of membership on which death had been reported and were unpaid, and specifically assumed the payment of the certificate issued to the deceased member and contracted to carry out the provisions of the certificate. Held, that the insurance company's agreements were a reinsurance directly to the several holders of certificates, and especially a contract of reinsurance to the beneficiary in the certificate of the deceased member, and the certificate became its contract and the measure of its liability, and Code 1887, § 3251 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1711], providing what shall be a sufficient declaration in an action on a policy, was applicable.

3. SAME—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—CONSTRUCTION.

Acts 1897-98, p. 784, c. 688, defining and regulating fraternal beneficiary associations, and declaring that they shall be governed by the act and shall be exempt from the provisions of the insurance laws, does not apply to associations doing a life insurance business by issuing certificates providing for the payment of a specified sum to the beneficiary on the death of the members on the members paying fixed sums at fixed periods.

4. SAME.

Acts 1897-98, p. 784, c. 688, defining and regulating fraternal beneficiary associations and exempting them from the provisions of the insurance laws, does not impliedly repeal Code 1887, §§ 3251, 3252 [Va. Code 1904, pp. 1711, 1712], providing what shall be a sufficient declaration in an action on a policy, and declaring when a failure to perform conditions of the policy shall not be a defense; sections 3251, 3252, being no part of the insurance law and being enacted to meet cases where companies seek to escape liability on technicalities in pleading.

5. SAME—ACTIONS—DECLARATION—SUFFICIENCY.

Code 1887, § 3246 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1708], provides that no action shall abate for want of form where the declaration sets forth sufficient matter for the court to proceed on the merits. Section 3272 [page 1722] requires the court on a demurrer to disregard any defect in the pleadings, whether deemed misleading or insufficient pleading, unless there be omitted something essential to the action. The declaration in an action for the amount of a benefit certificate set forth the undertaking of defendant to pay the certificate issued by a beneficiary association on the life of a member, alleged his death, and the consideration for defendant's undertaking and the failure to pay the amount of the certificate. Held, that the declaration was a sufficient declaration in assumpsit as against a demurrer.

6. CONTRACTS — PARTIES — RIGHTS ACQUIRED BY THIRD PERSON.

A beneficiary association issued a certificate to a member, binding it to pay a specified sum on his death to a beneficiary designated. The member died, and subsequently defendant agreed, in consideration of the assets of the association turned over to it, to pay, among other debts, this certificate, and thereafter it specifically agreed to pay this certificate. Held, that the beneficiary in the certificate was entitled to sue defendant, though she was a stranger to the consideration for the agreement.

7. INSURANCE — MUTUAL BENEFIT CERTIFICATE — ACTIONS — DEFENSES — SUICIDE OF MEMBER — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY.

Where, in an action on a mutual benefit certificate stipulating that no benefit should be payable on account of the death, accident, or disability of a member by his own hands, whether sane or insane, the evidence did not show a single circumstance surrounding the death of the member that was not as consistent with accident as with suicide, a finding that the member did not commit suicide would not be disturbed on appeal.

Error to Circuit Court, Roanoke County.

Action by Mrs. Louie M. Koegel against the Cosmopolitan Life Insurance Association. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Archer A. Phleager, for plaintiff in error.
Smith & King, for defendant in error.

CARDWELL, J. On the 12th day of October, 1897, the Royal Tribe of Joseph, calling itself a fraternal mutual benefit society, incorporated by the laws of Missouri, issued a certificate of membership to John Jacob Koegel, which provided that upon satisfactory proof of his death and surrender of the certificate $2,000 would be paid to Louie M. Koegel, his wife, out of the Ideal Division of the Mortuary Fund of the Royal Tribe of Joseph, upon condition that the laws of the society relating to such certificate were complied with, and that it was issued and accepted upon the terms and conditions of the laws of the society then in force or which might thereafter be adopted.

John Jacob Koegel died August 29, 1903, in the county of Roanoke, Va., from a wound inflicted by a pistol in his hand, whether intentionally or accidentally is unknown. Before and at the time of his death, section 233 of the laws of the society was in force, and provided among other things, that "no benefit shall be payable on account of the death, accident, or disability of any member by his own hands, whether sane or insane."

On the 17th of October, 1903, after the death of Koegel had been reported to the society, the Royal Tribe of Joseph and the Cosmopolitan Life Insurance Association, a corporation of Illinois, entered into a contract in writing "for consolidation of the two societies," as stated in the contract, whereby, in consideration of the transfer to it of the assets of every kind, business, and good will of the Royal Tribe of Joseph, the Cosmopolitan Life Insurance Association, among other things, assumed "all liabilities of the said Royal Tribe of Joseph on certificates of membership upon which death had been reported and which were at the date of said contract unpaid"; and this assumpsit included the liability, if any, upon the certificate of Koegel. Thereafter the Cosmopolitan Life Insurance Association in writing specifically assumed the payment of certificate No. 7,216, issued by the Royal Tribe of Joseph on the life of Koegel, and contracted to carry out the provisions thereof in accordance with its terms, etc.

On the first Monday in March, 1904, Louie M. Koegel filed in the circuit court of Roanoke county a complaint in writing against the Cosmopolitan Life Insurance Association, such as is provided by section 3251 of the Code of 1887, as amended by Acts 1895-96, p. 707, c. 649 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1711], and filed therewith the said certificate issued by the Royal Tribe of Joseph.

The said complaint sets out the foregoing facts and also avers that for a valuable consideration the Royal Tribe of Joseph issued the said certificate as an insurance policy on the life of John Jacob Koegel, by which the Royal Tribe of Joseph agreed to pay, on the death of said John Jacob Koegel, to the plaintiff, who was the wife of said John Jacob Koegel, the sum of $2,000; that in consideration of the transfer to the defendant of the assets, business, and property of the Royal Tribe of Joseph the defendant expressly agreed to pay and did assume to pay all liabilities which the said Royal Tribe of Joseph on its policies of insurance was under to its policy holders, and especially assumed and agreed to pay the liability of the Royal Tribe of Joseph to the plaintiff under said policy No. 7,216; and that the plaintiff thereby became and is entitled to demand and recover of the defendant the sum of $2,000, with interest thereon from the 29th day of August, 1903, which by the terms of said policy of insurance the said Royal Tribe of Joseph did agree to pay her, and which, by the terms of the agreement and transfer aforesaid between said Royal Tribe of Joseph and the defendant, the defendant did agree to pay her. It further avers that the said John Jacob Koegel and she, the plaintiff, have performed all the conditions of said policy and violated none of its prohibitions; yet, notwithstanding this, neither the Royal Tribe of Joseph nor the defendant has paid to the plaintiff the said sum of $2,000 and interest aforesaid, nor any part thereof, but, on the contrary, although requested so to do, hath hitherto wholly refused to pay the said sum, or any part thereof, and that therefore the plaintiff files this her complaint, and prays that judgment may be entered against the defendant for the sum of $2,000, with interest as aforesaid, etc.

To this complaint the defendant demurred, assigning as grounds of demurrer (1) that the certificate filed with the complaint was not a policy of insurance within the meaning of sections 3251 and 3252 of the Code of 1887 [Va. Code 1904, pp. 1711, 1712], and (2) that the assumption by the defendant of the liabilities of the Royal Tribe of Joseph did not give a right of action against the defendant under section 3251, but it could only be sued on its undertaking to pay the debt of the Royal Tribe of Joseph, if it was indebted to the plaintiff.

The demurrer was overruled, and thereupon the defendant tendered three pleas, which, on motion of the plaintiff, were rejected; and thereupon the defendant pleaded non assumpsit and filed with its plea a statement of its grounds of defense, the third of which was the same matter in different form as was alleged in one of the pleas rejected, and on motion of plaintiff this ground of defense was stricken out. The defendant then filed two other pleas, issue was joined on these pleas and the plea of nonassumpsit, and a trial resulted in a verdict and judgment against the defendant for $2,000, with interest as claimed in the complaint.

We are asked to review and reverse this judgment on the grounds (1) That the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the complaint; (2) the rejection of pleas Nos. 1 and 2; and (3) because of the refusal of the court to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial as being contrary to the law and the evidence.

All that need be said as to pleas Nos. 1 and 2, rejected, is that they raise the same questions presented by the demurrer to the complaint or declaration, viz.: (1) Does section 3251 of the Code of 1887 apply to suits on certificates of membership such as was filed in this case? and (2) whether, if the certificate is a policy of insurance, the defendant could be sued thereon, as it was no party thereto?

Was the certificate filed with the complaint or declaration a policy of insurance, such as is contemplated by section 3251 of the Code of 1887 as amended? is the first question to be considered.

In Logan v. Fid. & Gas. Co., 146 Mo. 114, 47 S. W. 948, the opinion says: "The calling of a contract of insurance by any other name that may be adopted for business or conventional uses cannot make an agreement to pay to another a sum of money designated, upon the happening of an unknown or contingent event depending upon the existence of life, less a policy of insurance on life." See, also, Toomey v. Sup. L. K. of P., 147 Mo. 129, 48 S. W. 936; Aloe v. Fid. Mut. L. Ass'n, 164 Mo. 675, 55 S. W. 993.

In Goodman v. Jed. Lodge, etc., 67 Md. 117, 9 Atl. 13, 13 Atl. 627, it is said: "If a company organized for social purposes chooses to go into the insurance business, they must expect courts to deal with and adjudicate the rights of the policy holders upon the same principles they apply in the usual cases of life insurance."

"In some societies, the certificate issued by the supreme authority is to pay a certain amount to a designated beneficiary upon the death of a member. Where this is the case the certificate is in legal effect a policy of life insurance, governed by the rules of pleading applicable to ordinary actions on policies." Elkhart N. B. & A. Ass'n v. Houghton, 103 Ind. 286, 2 N. E. 763, 53 Am. Rep. 516.

After reviewing a great number of decisions distinguishing benefit societies from life insurance companies, Bacon, in his work on Benefit Societies & Life Insurance (Section 52, vol. 1), says: "It follows from the foregoing adjudications that all benefit societies, whether corporations or mere voluntary associations, are, strictly speaking, insurance organizations whenever, in consideration of periodical contributions, they engage to pay the member, or his designated beneficiary, a benefit upon the happening of a specified contingency. Although they may also partake of the nature of clubs or fraternal societies, and although they are often technically not called insurance companies, we must admit that, whether the benefit be paid for sickness, or to provide burial, or to accumulate a fund out of which payments are to be made to beneficiaries of deceased members, the contract falls within the definition of an insurance contract, viz.: 'An agreement by which one party for a consideration (which is usually paid in money, either in one sum, or at different times during the continuance of the risk) promises to make a certain payment of money upon the destruction or injury of something in which the other party has an interest.' It may also be asserted as a general principle that wherever or whenever a benefit society, paying a benefit to the beneficiaries of its deceased members, claims to be exempt from the operation of certain laws applicable to persons or companies doing a life insurance business, it can only safely base such claim upon express provisions of its charter or of the statutes exempting similar organizations from such liability. The association may be benevolent and charitable, and only incidentally provide benefits for its members or their beneficiaries, but nevertheless, when it contracts to pay a certain sum to the appointees of its members upon their decease while in good standing, in consideration of certain contributions made by such members while living, it is doing a life insurance business. We shall find, as we proceed further to discuss the questions concerning the contracts and liabilities of benefit societies, that many of the principles of the law of life insurance are applied to these societies because they are in some respects simply life insurance companies doing business on a plan only partially different from that of regular life insurance organizations." See, also, Commonwealth v. Wetherbee, 105 Mass. 149; Bank of Washington v. Hume, 128 U. S. 195, 9 Sup. Ct. 41, 32 L. Ed. 375.

The rule sanctioned by the foregoing authorities in defining what is a life insurance policy, and not a mere certificate of membership in a purely benevolent society, is that a contract by which a company or association agrees to pay a certain sum of money on the death of a member, in consideration of the payment by the member of fixed sums at fixed periods, is a life insurance policy, by whatever name it may be called; and, measured by this rule, the certificate filed with the complaint in this cause is clearly a policy of insurance, within the meaning of section 3251 of the Code, as amended, and not merely a certificate of membership in a benevolent society or beneficial association, within the purview of chapter 688, p. 734, Acts 1897-98.

With reference to the second ground of demurrer, while the defendant was not a party to the contract between the Royal Tribe of Joseph and John Jacob Koegel, as evidenced by the certificate filed with the complaint or declaration in this case, the complaint or declaration sets out the contract between the defendant and the Royal Tribe of Joseph of October 17, 1903, whereby the defendant specifically and definitely agreed in writing, for a certain consideration, to assume all liability of the Royal Tribe of Joseph on its certificates of membership upon which death had been reported and were unpaid at that date, and further avers, as we have seen, that the defendant thereafter in writing specifically assumed payment of the said certificate issued to John Jacob Koegel and contracted to carry out the provisions thereof in accordance with its terms, etc.

In Johannes v. Phenix Ins. Co. (Wis.) 27 N. W. 414, 57 Am. Rep. 249, A. was insured in the Standard Fire Insurance Company of London, and that company, desiring to withdraw from business in the United States, sold and turned over to the Phenix Insurance Company its entire business and the good will of that business in the United States, together with a large amount in bonds and other property, in consideration of which the Phenix Company reinsured all the risks of the Standard Company upon the property situated in the United States, and agreed that all losses arising under the policies of the Standard Company on such property after the date of the contract should be borne and paid and satisfied by the Phenix Company, and the Supreme Court of Wisconsin held that A. might maintain an action against the Phenix Company to recover a loss on the property covered by his policy in the Standard Company. That was a fire insurance policy, but upon a review of a number of authorities cited the conclusion is reached that the principle applies as well in cases where the contract is an insurance of property as where it is an insurance of life.

Among the cases cited in the opinion in that case is Glen v. Hope Mut. L. Ins. Co., 56 N. Y. 379, where the defendant had agreed with the Craftsmen's Assurance Company to reinsure the latter company on all its risks "for which policies of the said party of the second part (Craftsmen's Assurance Company) are outstanding at this date, and hereby agree to insure all such policies and to pay the holders thereof all such sums as the party of the second part may, by force of such policies, become liable to pay, * * * the liability for death losses to be limited to such deaths as may occur on and after this date." It was held that the defendant was liable on the contract of reinsurance directly to the several holders of the policies for the whole amount insured thereby, and the action in that case was on the policies, and not on the contract of reinsurance. In that case, also, the death of the insured occurred after the reinsurance, while in the case under consideration it occurred prior to the contract entered into by the defendant assuming to pay the claim originally against the Royal Tribe of Joseph, based on the certificate of membership which the deceased held at the time of his death. The opinion says that on the death of the insured the Craftsmen's Company became liable to pay all its three policies, and the defendant, the Hope Mutual Life Insurance Company, by reason of its agreement also became liable for the same amount to the plaintiffs, who had made demand upon the defendant therefor, and that on the facts of the case it was the settled law that the plaintiffs might maintain their action against the defendant on the three policies which by its agreement it had assumed.

The contract of October 17, 1903, was but a reinsurance directly to the several holders of the policies or certificates of membership in the Royal Tribe of Joseph, and specifically a contract of reinsurance directly to the beneficiary of the holder of the policy held by John Jacob Koegel and sued on in this cause; and we are of opinion that the said policy or certificate became the contract of the defendant and the measure of its liability to the plaintiff the moment it signed the agreement of October 17, 1903, and that therefore section 3251 of the Code is applicable to a suit on that certificate or policy.

But it is argued on behalf of the defendant that by reason of the provisions of chapter 688, p. 734, Acts 1897-98, which defines and regulates fraternal beneficiary associations, orders, or societies, section 3251 does not apply, as the first section of that act provides that such orders or associations shall be governed by this act, and shall be exempt from the provisions of the insurance laws of this state, and that the Royal Tribe of Joseph was a fraternal beneficiary association within the provisions of the act.

We think that the contention is not well founded, as the definition of fraternal beneficiary associations excludes from the operation of the act associations of the class to which the Royal Tribe of Joseph belonged; it having been an association doing a life insurance business, and not a purely fraternal beneficiary association, within the definition of the act. Furthermore, sections 3251 and 3252 are no part of the insurance laws of Virginia, referred to in that act, but simply relate to the form of declarations and defenses in a certain class of actions. Morotock Ins. Co. v. Pankey, 91 Va. 259, 21 S. E. 487. The said act does not in terms repeal sections 3251 and 3252, nor are the two acts inconsistent. It was without doubt the object of the Legislature, in enacting sections 3251 and 3252 of the Code of 1887, to meet cases where insurance companies sought to escape liability upon technicalities in pleading.

But, whether this action is founded upon the original policy of insurance issued by the Royal Tribe of Joseph to John Jacob Koegel or not, we are of opinion that the demurrer to the so-called complaint filed by the plaintiff was properly overruled, as the complaint contains every essential averment of a declaration in assumpsit. It sets forth the undertaking of the defendant to pay the policy No. 7,216 on the life of John Jacob Koegel, his death, the consideration for the undertaking of the defendant, and the breach or failure to pay, and demands the amount of the policy.

In Austin v. Richardson, 3 Call, 205, 2 Am. Dec. 543, the opinion says: "As he [defendant] had entered into an express undertaking, if he failed to perform it, the general allegation of the demand and refusal was sufficient."

"The test of the sufficiency of a declaration is to inquire whether it contains sufficient matter for the plaintiff to state and prove his case under it, and to afford defense to another suit brought for the same cause of action." 1 Barton's Law Pr. 296; Roanoke National Bank v. Hambrick, 82 Va. 135.

Section 3246 of the Code of 1887 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1708] provides: "No action shall abate for want of form, where the declaration sets forth sufficient matter of substance for the court to proceed upon the merits of the cause."

And section 3272 [page 1722] is as follows: "On a demurrer (unless it be to a plea in abatement) the court shall not regard any defect or imperfection in the declaration or pleadings, whether it has been heretofore deemed misleading or insufficient pleading or not, unless there be omitted something so essential to the action or defense, that judgment, according to law and the very right of the cause, cannot be given."

The Royal Tribe of Joseph promised and agreed to pay to the plaintiff $2,000 on the death of her husband. Her husband died August 29, 1903, and the debt then became due and payable. Subsequently, on October 17, 1903, as the complaint of declaration avers, the defendant promised and agreed, in consideration of the assets of the Royal Tribe of Joseph turned over to it, to pay, among others, this debt, and, further, at a subsequent date, specifically promised and agreed to pay this debt to the plaintiff, evidenced by the certificate No. 7,216 of the Royal Tribe of Joseph.

But the defendant insists that, as the plaintiff is a stranger to the consideration for which that promise and agreement was made, she cannot maintain this action, and that it could be maintained by the Royal Tribe of Joseph alone, and this upon the theory that there must be a privity between the plaintiff and defendant in order to render the defendant liable to an action by the plaintiff on the contract. This is undoubtedly the general rule; but it has its exceptions, like many other general rules.

That rule, as stated by Metcalf, J., in Mellin v. Whipple, 1 Gray, 321, and Ross v. Milne, 12 Leigh, 204, 37 Am. Dec. 646, and many other cases which need not be referred to, was recognized with express approbation by Mr. Justice Gray in Carr v. National Security Bank, 107 Mass. 45, 9 Am. Rep. 6, and in Exchange Bank of St. Louis v. Rice, 107 Mass. 41, 9 Am. Rep. 1; but he also carefully considers the exceptions to the rule, and they were regarded to be as firmly established as the rule itself. The principal exception referred to consists of those cases in which the defendant has in his hands money which in equity and good conscience belongs to the plaintiff, as where one person receives from another money or property as a fund from which certain creditors of the depositor are to be paid, and promises, by his acceptance of the money or property without objection to the terms on which it is delivered to him, to pay such creditors. See note to 1 Chitty on Pl. p. 5, where a number of cases are cited as belonging to a class in which it is said "the law [in such cases] creates the privity and implies the promise."

In a lengthy note by Hare & Wallace, in 2 Am. Leading Cas., the authors, dealing with the rule of which we are speaking and the exceptions thereto, and citing a number of cases, as authority for the conclusion they reach, say, at page 182: "The authorities as a whole would seem to indicate that, when the intention of the parties is to confer a right of action on a third person who will be injured by the breach, the law will imply a promise in his favor, if the loss will fall primarily and exclusively on him, and the circumstances are such that a judgment in assumpsit will cover the whole ground and be adequate to the ends of justice."

Among the cases there reviewed as laying down the rule that privity is not essential in actions ex contractu is Brewer v. Dyer, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 339, where it is said by

Bigelow, J.: "It is well settled in this commonwealth that when one person, for a valuable consideration, engages with another by simple contract to do some act for the benefit of a third, the latter, who would enjoy the benefit of the act, may maintain an action for the breach of such engagement. Felton v. Dickinson, 10 Mass. 287; Hall v. Marston, 17 Mass. 575; Arnold v. Lyman, Id. 400, 9 Am. Dec. 154; Carnegie v. Morrison, 2 Metc. 382. In the latter case all the authorities are fully reviewed in the opinion of the court, and the rule of law clearly vindicated and established. It does not rest upon the ground of actual or supposed relationship between the parties, as some of the early cases would seem to indicate (Dalton v. Poole, 1 Vent. 218; 2 Walford on Parties, 1144), nor upon the reason that the defendant by entering into such an agreement has impliedly made himself an agent of the plaintiff, * * * but upon the broader and more satisfactory basis that the law operating on the acting parties creates the duty, establishes the privity, and implies the promise and obligation on which the action is founded."

In Hall v. Marston, supra, Parker, C. J., states that "it seems to have been well settled, heretofore, that if A. promises B. for a valuable consideration to pay to C., the latter may maintain assumpsit for the money," and further says: "The principle of this doctrine is reasonable, and consistent with the character of the action of assumpsit for money had and received."

In Dearborn v. Parks, 17 Am. Dec. 206, it was held that, if one person for a valuable consideration makes a promise to another for the benefit of a third, the latter may maintain an action upon it; the opinion saying that in cases of this description, although the promisor undertakes to pay the debt of another, yet he thereby pays his own debt, and that constitutes the operative mode and inducement by which he is actuated. To him it must be a matter of indifference whether he pays directly to his creditor or to his assignee. He pays no more, and he can be holden to pay but once.

The principle applied in the authorities just referred to is but analogous to that often applied by this court in that class of cases which Langhorne v. McGhee, 103 Va. 281, 49 S. E. 44, and the cases there cited belong, viz.: "Wherever one person has in his hands money equitably belonging to another, that other person may recover it by assumpsit for money had and received."

Says the opinion by Keith, P., in B. & O. R. Co. v. Burke & Herbert, cited in Langhorne v. McGhee, supra: "When the fact is found that the defendant has the plaintiff's money, and he can show neither legal nor equitable grounds for keeping it, the law creates the privity necessary to support an action on the part of the plaintiff to recover it." See, also, Gaines v. Miller, 111

U. S. 395, 4 Sup. Ct. 423, 28 L. Ed. 466

In the one class of cases the principle is applied where it is money that the defendant has which equitably belongs to the plaintiff, and in the other where the defendant has either money or property in consideration of which he has promised to pay the debt due the plaintiff by his debtor, from whom the defendant acquired such money or property and to whom the promise was made, and in either case the law creates the privity and implies the promise necessary to support an action on the part of the plaintiff to recover his debt of the defendant. The principle and reasoning applied in both apply with equal force to the case at bar.

A number of decisions by the appellate courts of the state of New York, in harmony with the decisions of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts which we have cited, might also be cited, but we deem it unnecessary to do so.

It follows that the plaintiff is entitled to recover in this action, unless the defendant is relieved from liability for the debt sued for by the breach of some condition upon which it entered into the contract of October 17, 1903, with the Royal Tribe of Joseph, and the only breach relied on is that clause of the by-laws of the Royal Tribe of Joseph which we have quoted above, the effect of which was to relieve the Royal Tribe of Joseph and the defendant from the payment of the amount due to the plaintiff if John Jacob Koegel met with his death by suicide.

This brings us to the consideration of the last assignment of error, which is to the refusal of the circuit court to set aside the verdict of the jury on the ground that it is contrary to the evidence; the suicide of Koegel being the only defense relied on, on the merits of the case.

It is not denied that the burden of proving the defense of suicide was on the defendant, and the law is well settled that, "where the evidence of self-destruction is circumstantial, the defendant fails unless the circumstances exclude with reasonable certainty any hypothesis of death by accident or by the act of another." Leman v. Man. of Life Ins. Co. (La.) 15 South. 388, 24 L. R. A. 589, 49 Am. St. Rep. 348; Cox v. Royal Tribe of Jos. (Or.) 71 Pac. 73, 60 L. R. A. 620, 95 Am. St. Rep. 752.

"The mere fact of the body of the insured being found with a pistol in his hand and a bullet wound in his head is not sufficient to prove suicide." Union Mut. L. Ins. v. Payne, 45 C. C. A. 193, 105 Fed. 172.

The defense of suicide, to avail, must show that every hypothesis of accidental death is excluded by the evidence." Boyn-ton v. Equitable L. A. Co. (La.) 29 South. 490, 52 L. R. A. 687; Brown v. Sun L. I. Co. (Tenn. Ch. App.) 47 S. W. 415, 51 L. R. A. 252.

In Standard L. & A. I. Co. v. Thornton,

100 Fed. 582, 40 C. C. A. 564, 49 L. R. A. 118, it is said: "Accidental death will be presumed, and this presumption must be overcome by the proof of facts which exclude every hypothesis of death except by suicide."

And in Mut. L. I. Co. v. Wiswell (Kan.) 44 Pac. 996, 35 L. R. A. 258: "Where the evidence as to whether the death was accidental or suicidal leaves the question in doubt, the presumption is in favor of accident."

To the same effect is 2 Bac. Ben. S. p. 849, where it is said that "the presumption of law is that, where a dead body is found and there is no direct evidence as to the cause of death, the death was not by suicide."

We only deem it necessary to say with reference to the evidence that it does not show a single circumstance connected with or surrounding the death of John Jacob Koegel that is not as consistent with accident as with suicide, and therefore it is clearly a case in which this court would not be warranted in disturbing the verdict of the jury.

Upon the whole case, we are of opinion to affirm the judgment of the circuit court.

(104 Va. 416)

GREAT FALLS POWER CO. v. GREAT FALLS & O. D. R. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.
Sept. 14, 1905.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN—EXTENT OF POWER—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Before the land of a corporation possessing the power of eminent domain can be taken under the right of eminent domain by another corporation under Va. Code 1904, p. 576, c. 46a, § 1105e, subd. 52, which provides that no corporation shall take by condemnation property belonging to another corporation possessing the power of eminent domain, unless the State Corporation Commission shall certify that a public necessity or public convenience shall so require and shall give its permission thereto, and in no event shall one corporation condemn any property owned by and essential to the purposes of another corporation possessing the power of eminent domain, it must be made to appear that public necessity or an essential public convenience requires that the land shall be taken and that the land is not essential to the purposes of the corporation owning it.

2. SAME.

Since, prior to Va. Code 1904, p. 576, c. 46a, § 1105e, subd. 52, authorizing one corporation to condemn the land of another corporation possessing the power of eminent domain, it could not be done, the right conferred by the statute should not be extended beyond the explicit requirements thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 18, Cent. Dig. Eminent Domain, § 107.]

3. SAME—PUBLIC USE—TAKING OF LAND BY A RAILROAD FOR A PARK.

A taking of land belonging to a corporation possessing the power of eminent domain by a railway company for a park at its terminal, attractive to pleasure seekers because of its scenic features, is not taking of land for a public use within Va. Code 1904, p. 576, c. 46a, § 1105e, subd. 52.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 18, Cent. Dig. Eminent Domain, § 60.]

Appeal from State Corporation Commission.
Application by the Great Falls & Old Dominion Railroad Company for leave to acquire by condemnation proceedings lands owned by the Great Falls Power Company. From an order granting the application, defendant appeals. Reversed.

William H. White, for appellant. R. Walton Moore and D. S. Mackall, for appellee.

HARRISON, J. This is an appeal from an order of the State Corporation Commission, granting an application made by the appellee railroad company to be allowed to acquire by condemnation proceedings certain lands owned by the appellant power company situated in the county of Fairfax.

The Great Falls Power Company was incorporated by an act of the General Assembly of Virginia approved March 3, 1894, as amended by an act approved March 5, 1894 (Acts 1893-94, pp. 669-782), for the purpose of acquiring, holding, improving, and using water power at the Great Falls in the Potomac river, and for constructing dams therein, canals, and other hydraulic and auxiliary steam works, and for the selling and leasing of water power and using the same for manufacturing, etc., generating, transmitting, selling, and leasing electricity, electric power, and light for railway and canal, as well as other purposes.

The appellant owns on the Virginia side of the Potomac river a tract of land containing between 700 and 800 acres, procured at a cost of $500,000, for the purposes contemplated by its incorporation and has expended a large sum in perfecting elaborate plans for contemplated improvements. This tract of land is shown by the appellee to be "as wild as the Rocky Mountains."

The Great Falls & Old Dominion Railroad Company was incorporated by an act of the General Assembly of Virginia, approved January 24, 1900, as amended by an act approved March 29, 1902 (Acts 1899-1900, p. 148; Acts 1901-02, p. 457), with power to locate, build, and operate a railroad, commencing at some point on the Potomac river, in Alexandria county, opposite the District of Columbia, and running thence by the most practicable route to a point on the Potomac river in Fairfax county or Loudoun county, Va. The record shows that this railroad line has been located from the Aqueduct Bridge, in Alexandria county, opposite the District of Columbia, to a point in Fairfax county on the Potomac river at the Great Falls, a distance of some 14 miles, and that the work of building an electric railway has been begun and prosecuted to the extent of reconstructing the Aqueduct Bridge and making roadbed, bridges, and culverts in Alexandria county at an outlay of about $300,000. Both of these companies, the appellant and the appellee, are given under their respective charters the power of eminent domain.

This proceeding was inaugurated, under section 52 of the act concerning corporations, to obtain from the State Corporation Commission a certificate, in accordance with the provisions of that section, authorizing the appellee to condemn the following three several parcels of land belonging to the appellant, located in the county of Fairfax, at the Great Falls, on the Potomac river, namely: Parcel No. 1, containing .98 acres; No. 2, containing 7.68 acres; and No. 3, containing 9.4 acres: The point sought to be condemned is shown to be "very rough and rugged—rocky; about as wild a piece of property as there is anywhere in the state of Virginia."

Section 52 provides as follows: "No corporation shall take by condemnation proceedings any property belonging to any other corporation possessing the power of eminent domain, unless after hearing all parties in interest, the State Corporation Commission shall certify that a public necessity or that an essential public convenience shall so require, and shall give its permission thereto; and in no event shall one corporation take by condemnation proceedings any property owned by and essential to the purposes of another corporation possessing the power of eminent domain." Va. Code, 1904, p. 578, c. 46a, § 1105a, subd. 52.

It is clear from this statute that before the land of the appellant can be condemned by the appellee two facts must be made to appear: (1) That a public necessity, or that an essential public convenience, requires that the land shall be taken; and (2) that such land is not essential to the purposes of the appellant.

Prior to the present law, under which this proceeding was taken, the land of appellant could not have been condemned by the appellee, because it had no legislative permission to take the property of another corporation. Alexandria, etc., R. R. Co. v. A. & W. R. R. Co., 75 Va. 780, 40 Am. Rep. 743; R. F. & P. R. R. Co. v. Johnston, 103 Va. 456, 49 S. E. 496.

The right, therefore, of one corporation to condemn property already devoted to the public use by another, should not be extended by construction beyond the explicit requirements of the statute giving that power.

The evidence tends very strongly to show that the land sought to be condemned is essential to the appellant for the development of its water power and that, if taken, the power company would be compelled to change its plans entirely; that there is a physical conflict between the use contemplated by the appellee and that designed by the appellant. It is not necessary, however, in the view we take of the case, to pass upon or to consider this question.

Its legislative grant of power authorized the appellee to establish a railroad from some point on the Potomac river in Alexandria county to some point on that river in either the county of Fairfax or the county of Loudoun. It would meet the requirements of the charter for the terminal of the road to be located at any point on the river within the limits of the counties mentioned. The appellee owns land on the river above and adjoining that owned by the appellant. Above and adjoining the land of appellant it owns a tract of 30 acres, which appears to have been bought with a view to the use now sought to be made by condemnation of the land of appellant. The property in question, however, covers a commanding view of the Great Falls of the Potomac river, which is shown to be one of the grandest pieces of natural scenery in this country, second only in beauty and attractiveness to the Falls of Niagara.

It clearly appears that this land is sought by appellee as a terminal point on account of the rare scenic features it affords, and because of the attractions it would hold out to pleasure seekers from the city of Washington. In other respects the location possesses none of the advantages ordinarily accruing to a railroad, and but for the beauty of the scene would most likely have been avoided as offering no inducements to such an enterprise. It is further clear from the record that the quantity of land sought to be condemned is far beyond any necessity for mere terminal purposes of an electric railway extending a distance of 14 miles from the city of Washington. It is manifest from the evidence that the location was selected with no reference to the public use of the road in the matter of freight or the accommodation of the traveling public along the route, but that the real purpose of the condemnation is to establish a park overlooking the Great Falls of the Potomac, for the comfort and pleasure of sight-seers and curiosity seekers, and to thereby add to the revenues of appellee by making the point an attractive place of resort.

To justify the Corporation Commission in taking the action here complained of, it must not only appear that the land sought to be condemned is for public use, but it must affirmatively appear that a public necessity or an essential public convenience requires that the land of the appellant shall be taken.

What is a public use is said to be incapable of exact definition; that it is easier to define by negation than by affirmation. Whatever rule may be formulated on the subject as a result of the adjudged cases, it cannot, we think, include the condemnation here sought as one made for a public use. Looking to the charter of the appellee, we find that the company was organized for "public use" in transporting persons and property along its line; in other words, has undertaken an ordinary railroad enterprise. The ground upon which private property may be taken for railroad uses without the consent of the owner is primarily that railroads are highways furnishing means of communication between different points and promoting traffic and commerce. The taking of property for these purposes must always be limited to the lawful necessities of the enterprise. The moment the appropriation goes beyond such necessity, it ceases to be justified on the principles which underlie the right of eminent domain. Gooley's Const. Lim. pp. 779, 780.

The charter of appellee furnishes no warrant for condemning property for the purpose indicated by the record. It is doubtless an attractive point, on account of its inspiring scenery, for the location of a park, and such a terminal would very probably increase the revenues of appellee; but to gratify the senses of the pleasure seeker and thereby incidentally to increase revenues is without the domain of a public use for which private property may be taken under the power of eminent domain.

In a well-considered case in New York, where the railroad company was given power to condemn private property for public use, it applied for the condemnation of a part of the land belonging to De Veaux College, which commands a view of the "Whirlpool Rapids." Its purpose was to give visitors a view of those rapids. It was held that this was not a public use for which private property could be taken, the court saying in part: "The fact that the road of petitioner may enable the portion of the public who visit Niagara Falls more easily or more fully to gratify their curiosity, or that the road will be public in the sense that all who desire will be entitled to be carried upon it, is not sufficient, we think, in view of the other necessary limitations, to make the enterprise a public one, so as to justify condemnation proceedings. The case does not, we think, differ in principle from an attempt on the part of a private corporation, under color of an act of the Legislature, to condemn lands for an inclined railway, or for a circular railway, or for an observatory, to promote the enjoyment or convenience of those who may visit the Falls." In re Niagara Falls & W. Ry. Co., 108 N. Y. 375, 15 N. E. 429.

This case is very much in point, and the authorities there cited and the reasons given apply with equal force to the case at bar; for it is clear from the record that the part of the railroad running through the land of the appellant is not intended for ordinary traffic, but only for sight-seers.

We have seen that the use here sought to be made of appellant's property is not a public use in the sense that it can be taken under the power of eminent domain. The case at bar is, however, very much stronger than the Niagara Falls Case, because, granting that the use sought to be made by appellee of the land in question came within the meaning of a "public use" justifying condemnation, still the land could not be taken; for, the appellant being a corporation with the power of eminent domain, its land could not be condemned by another corporation possessing that power, unless the public use sought to be made of it reached the measure of a public necessity or an essential public convenience. This is the express mandate of the recent statute under which this proceeding is had, and without which the application of appellee could not be entertained.

Scenic advantages were held in the Niagara Falls Case not to reach the measure of a public use justifying condemnation proceedings; a fortiori must such advantages fail for insufficiency when subjected to the test of the public necessity contemplated by our law. Spending a pleasant day in the midst of wild and rugged surroundings on the banks of the Potomac, viewing its "Great Falls" while strolling in a beautiful park, would doubtless be both inspiring and invigorating to those who had the time and opportunity to enjoy it. That sight-seers should be furnished such an opportunity may be desirable, but it cannot be said to be a public necessity, demanding the displacement of appellant from its private ownership by the compulsory proceedings here invoked.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the State Corporation Commission erred in awarding appellee the certificate complained of, and therefore its action must be reversed, the order appealed from set aside, and the cause remanded to the State Corporation Commission for such further proceedings in the premises as the appellee may be advised to take, with a view to condemning land for its uses through the lands of the appellant, not in conflict with the views expressed in this opinion.

(104 Va. 533)

DONABLE'S ADM'R v. TOWN OF HARRISONBURG.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 23, 1905.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—POWERS IN GENERAL.

A municipal corporation possesses and can exercise only those powers granted in express words, those necessarily or fairly implied or incidental to the powers expressly granted, and those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 36, Cent. Dig. Municipal Corporations, §§ 144, 148, 149.]

2. SAME—RESTRICTION TO CORPORATE LIMITS.

A municipal corporation is, as a general rule, restricted to its corporate limits in the exercise of its corporate powers.

3. SAME.

A municipal corporation is not, by virtue of its express power to keep its streets in order, to provide workhouses, etc., and to establish and operate a sewer system, waterworks, etc., empowered to conduct a rock quarry outside of its corporate limits.

4. SAME—ULTRA VIRES ACTS—INCIDENTAL LIABILITY.

A municipal corporation is not liable in damages for the death of a servant working on a rock quarry operated by it without authority outside of the corporate limits of the municipality.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 36, Cent. Dig. Municipal Corporations, § 1546.]

Error to Circuit Court, Rockingham County.

Action by John A. Switzer, sheriff of Rockingham county, and as such administrator of Grant Donable, deceased, against the town of Harrisonburg. There was a judgment in favor of defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Sipe & Harris, D. O. Deckert, and O. A. Hammer, for plaintiff in error. T. N. Haas, for defendant in error.

CARDWELL, J. This is an action on the case against the town of Harrisonburg, to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate, caused by an explosion of dynamite at a rock quarry operated by the defendant outside of its corporate limits, at which quarry the decedent was employed as a laborer.

The defendant demurred to the declaration upon the ground that the operation of a rock quarry by the defendant outside of its corporate limits was an ultra vires undertaking, and therefore the defendant was not responsible in damages for the injuries to the decedent, which demurrer was sustained, and to that judgment of the circuit court this writ of error was awarded.

It is sought to distinguish this case from that of Duncan v. City of Lynchburg, decided by this court February 8, 1900, and reported in 2 Va. Dec. 700, 34 S. E. 964, 48 L. R. A. 331, by the fact alleged that the stone gotten out by the decedent and others was to be for use on the streets of the defendant town, whereby this getting out of the stone was a mere incident of the work in which the town was engaged in the repair and maintenance of its streets, a work not only authorized, but imposed upon the town as a duty, by its charter; in other words, the work in progress being primarily the repair and maintenance of the streets of the town, which is not only within the powers of the town, but one of its absolute duties, and one of the considerations for the granting of its charter, for the failure in the performance of which duty the town is liable to respond in damages to any person injured in consequence of such failure, it is within the discretion of the town council, so long as the means adopted by it are such as to meet the requirement that the streets shall be kept in proper and safe condition for travel, to determine what means of repair and maintenance shall be used.

If that proposition could be maintained, a municipality might engage in limitless undertakings not authorized by its charter in express words, or necessarily and fairly implied in or incidental to the powers expressly granted, the result of which would be to expose the resources of the municipality to constant danger of exhaustion.

The following statement of the law by Dillon, in his work on Municipal Corporations (section 89), has been often quoted with approval by this court, viz.: "It is a general and undisputed proposition of law that a municipal corporation possesses and can exercise the following powers, and no others: First, those granted in express words; second, those necessarily or fairly implied in or incidental to the powers expressly granted; third, those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation, not simply convenient, but indispensable. Any fair, reasonable doubt concerning the existence of the power is resolved by the courts against the corporation and the power is denied." Winchester v. Redmond, 93 Va. 711, 25 S. E. 1001, 57 Am. St. Rep. 822; Wallace v. Richmond, 94 Va. 217, 26 S. E. 586, 36 L. R. A. 554; Railway Co. v. Dameron, 95 Va. 545, 28 S. E. 951; Duncan v. Lynchburg, supra.

It is equally well-settled law that a municipal corporation is, as a general rule, restricted to its corporate limits in the exercise of its corporate powers. Duncan v. Lynchburg, supra; Becker v. La Crosse (Wis.) 75 N. W. 84, 40 L. R. A. 829, 67 Am. St. Rep. 874; Mayor of Detroit v. Park Com'rs, 44 Mich. 602-605, 7 N. W. 180; Teideman on Mun. Corp. § 62; 2 Dillon on Mun. Corp. § 565.

In Duncan v. Lynchburg, supra, the city of Lynchburg was operating a rock quarry outside of the city limits, in the course of which a nuisance was created, and suit was brought to recover damages of the city by reason of the nuisance; but it was held that the operation of the rock quarry was ultra vires, and therefore the city was not liable in damages, the grounds upon which the undertaking was held to be ultra vires being, first, because neither the charter nor the general law gave the city authority to operate a rock quarry, and, second, because the operation of the quarry was carried on outside of the corporate limits.

The general law was the same at the time of the accident out of which this suit arises at it was when the case of Duncan v. City of Lynchburg, supra, arose, and the charter of Harrisonburg grants no power to operate a rock quarry, either within or without the town, unless it arises by implication out of the powers granted to keep its streets in order, to provide workhouses and houses of correction and reformation, and to establish and operate a sewer system, waterworks, gasworks, electric light works, etc., all of which powers were conferred upon the city of Lynchburg by its charter; so that the principle of law applied in the case of Duncan v. Lynchburg is clearly applicable to this case.

In the former case, speaking with reference to the opinion expressed by Judge Dillon that for some purposes, such as for the establishment of a pesthouse or a cemetery, a municipal corporation may acquire land outside of its territorial boundaries, the opinion by Buchanan, J., says: "If this be true, it must be because the lands are indispensably necessary to enable it to protect the health, and well-being of its people." And, further: "It might be convenient for a municipal corporation to own and operate a rock quarry, but is manifestly not indispensably necessary that it should do so in order that it may accomplish the objects of its creation."

The case of Becker v. La Crosse, supra, is an authority in point here, not only for the proposition that a municipal corporation is not liable in damages for an ultra vires act, but also for the proposition that an undertaking carried on by a municipality outside of its limits is, in the absence of express authority, ultra vires. See, also, Cavanagh v. Boston (Mass.) 1 N. E. 834, 52 Am. Rep. 716, and Albany v. Cundiff, 2 N. Y. 165.

Authorities are cited by the plaintiff for the proposition that private corporations are liable for damages arising out of a tort, though the act in which the tort was committed be ultra vires, but they have no application here. While the powers of a private corporation are bestowed and limited by charter, they act for themselves, in their own right, and in the pursuit of gain. On the other hand, municipal corporations exercise delegated powers and act through their officials as a local agency for the exercise of governmental functions. With reference to the liability of municipal corporations for damages arising out of the negligence of its agents, Judge Dillon says: "To create such a liability it is fundamentally necessary that the act done which is injurious to others must be within the scope of the corporate powers, as prescribed by charter or positive enactment (the extent of which powers all persons are bound, at their peril, to know); in other words, it must not be ultra vires in the sense that it is not within the power or authority of the corporation to act in reference to it under any circumstances."

The argument of the learned counsel for the plaintiff in this case that "to hold that, although it is one of the imperative, unescapable duties of the town to keep its streets in repair, yet all the work and transactions incidental thereto must be wholly performed within the corporate limits of the town, would be to impose most unfortunate limitation upon the town," might be much more properly addressed to the law-making power of the state than to the courts. It might be convenient, and even profitable, for the defendant to operate a rock quarry outside of its corporate limits, in order to obtain material suitable for repairing and keeping in order its streets; but without legislative authority it has no power to do so, and clearly no such power is in express words conferred in its charter, nor necessarily or fairly implied in or incidental to the powers expressly granted.

It follows that the defendant was not liable in damages for the death of the plaintiff's intestate, that the demurrer was properly sustained by the trial court, and that the judgment must be affirmed.

(104 Va. 605)

WOLVERTON v. HOFFMAN.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 23, 1905.)

DEEDS—CONSTRUCTION—REPUGNANT CLAUSES.

Where a deed granted, bargained, and sold to the grantee, her heirs and assigns, certain described premises, a subsequent clause, by which the grantor requested that the property should be that of W. and descend to his children in case he survived the grantor and grantee, who were husband and wife, was repugnant to the fee conveyed to the grantee by the granting clause of the deed, and was therefore void.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 16, Cent. Dig. Deeds, §§ 263, 439, 440.]

Error to Circuit Court, Shenandoah County.

Ejectment by W. S. Wolverton against S. J. Hoffman. A judgment was rendered in favor of defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

The deed referred to in the opinion was as follows: "Witnesseth, that for and in consideration of the sum of one dollar in hand paid by the said party of the second part to the parties of the first part, and in consideration of the natural regard that the said Wolverton has and bears for her, said Leannah Wolverton, said George Wolverton has granted, bargained, and sold, and by these presents does grant, bargain, and sell, to said Leannah Wolverton, her heirs and assigns, three pieces or parcels of land," including the land in controversy. Then followed the clause: "It is distinctly understood by and between the parties to this instrument that the foregoing conveyance is made to be free of and from all debts, claims, and demands against said George Wolverton, or any other husband that the said Leannah Wolverton may hereafter take (should she survive her present husband), and that said Leannah Wolverton shall have the right to sell and convey the property, or any part thereof, at any time that she deems proper, in the interest of herself and her husband, George Wolverton, and execute a title for the real estate so sold, such as is legal for a married woman to make, in uniting in a deed or other conveyance, by his joining in the deed. It is also distinctly understood by and between the parties to this deed that I request and desire that said property shall be the property of Winfield Scott Wolverton during his lifetime, and then to descend to his children; that is, should he (W. S. Wolverton) survive the said George and Leannah Wolverton."

M. L. Walton and Barton & Boyd, for plaintiff in error. Tavenner & Bauserman, for defendant in error.

KEITH, P. The plaintiff in error instituted an action of ejectment against S. J. Hoffman to recover a parcel of land lying in the county of Shenandoah, and to maintain the issue on his part introduced a deed from George Wolverton to Leannah Wolverton, his wife, by which was conveyed certain real and personal estate. It is declared in this deed that "it is distinctly understood by and between the parties to this instrument that the foregoing conveyance is made to be free of and from all debts, claims, and demands against said George Wolverton, or any other husband that the said Leannah Wolverton may hereafter take (should she survive her present husband), and that said Leannah Wolverton shall have the right to sell and convey the property, or any part thereof, at any time that she deems proper, in the interest of herself and her husband, George Wolverton, and execute a title for the real estate so sold, such as is legal for a married woman to make, in uniting in a deed or other conveyance, by his joining in the deed. It is also distinctly understood by and between the parties to this deed that I request and desire that said property shall be the property of Winfield Scott Wolverton during his lifetime, and then to descend to his children; that is, should he (W. S. Wolverton) survive the said George and Leannah Wolverton. And the grantor hereby covenants that he has the right to convey the property herein and hereby conveyed, that the same is free from incumbrance, and warrants the title to the same generally."

George Wolverton died in the lifetime of his wife, and W. S. Wolverton survived her. By her will she devises the real estate in controversy to Samuel J. Hoffman; and the only question before us arises upon a construction of the deed above quoted.

The deed under consideration conveys in plain and unambiguous terms a fee simple to Leannah Wolverton. It then says that it is "understood by and between the parties to this deed that I request and desire that said property shall be the property of Winfield Scott Wolverton during his lifetime, and then to descend to his children; that is, should he (W. S. Wolverton) survive the said George and Leannah Wolverton." W. S. Wolverton did survive George and Leannah Wolverton, and the contention is, upon the part of plaintiff in error, that under this deed Leannah Wolverton took a fee, which, in the event of George Wolverton dying in her lifetime and W. S. Wolverton surviving her, was reduced to a life estate. In support of this contention, plaintiff in error relies upon the intent of the grantor, to be gathered from reading the entire instrument, and from which he contends that it is made to appear that it was the intention of George Wolverton, in the contingency mentioned—that is, that his wife survived the grantor and that W. S. Wolverton survived her—that she should take only a life estate, with remainder to W. S. Wolverton for life and to his children in fee.

In support of this contention he places great reliance upon the case of Colton v. Colton, 127 U. S. 300, 8 Sup. Ct. 1164, 32 L. Ed. 188, where the will says: "I give and bequeath to my said wife, E. M. Colton, all of the estate, real and personal, of which I shall die seised and possessed or entitled to. I recommend to her the care of my mother and sister, and request her to make such gift and provision for them as in her judgment will be best." The wife not having made any provision, the mother and sister brought suit, and the court held that "no technical language is necessary for the creation of a trust in a will, and no general rule can be formulated for determining whether a devise or bequest carries with it the whole beneficiary interest, or whether it is to be construed as creating a trust. * * * 'If a trust is sufficiently expressed and capable of enforcement, it is not invalidated by being called 'precatory.' * * * If the objects of the supposed trust are definite and the property clearly pointed out, if the relations between the testator and the supposed beneficiary are such as to indicate a motive on the part of the one person to provide for the other, and if the precatory clause, expressing a wish, authority, or recommendation that the donee shall apply the property to the proposed cestui que trust, warrants the inference that it is precatory, then it may be held that an obligatory trust is created, which may be enforced in a court of equity."

We are, however, in a court of law, where the plaintiff must recover upon the strength of his own title. We need not, therefore, consider whether or not the language creates a trust, for it would be unavailing if such were the case.

Plaintiff in error also relies upon what is without doubt true, that courts, whether of law or of equity, in the construction of written instruments, seek to gather the intention from an examination of the whole paper, and not merely from its disjointed parts, so as to give an effect to the whole. The intention of the grantor is to be sought after, and, when discovered, is to be carried into effect, if it can be done consistently with the rules of law. Courts will not only look through the entire deed, but will transpose words or sentences, if thereby they can effectuate the intent of the grantor without defeating the intent in any other part. But if, in a deed, there be two clauses so repugnant to each other that they cannot stand together, the first shall be received and the latter rejected, differing in this respect from a will: Blackwell v. Blackwell (N. C.) 32 S. E. 677.

The rule upon the subject is well expressed in Devlin on Deeds, § 837, where it is said: "The intent, when apparent and not repugnant to any rule of law, will control technical terms; for the intent, and not the words, is the essence of every agreement. In the exposition of deeds, the construction must be upon the view and comparison of the whole instrument, and with an endeavor to give every part of it meaning and effect." But, like most rules, it has its exceptions. In section 832a, the same author says: "The question is not always one of intent, but of enforcing established and well-defined principles of law." In that connection he cites Maker v. Lazell, 83 Me. 562, 22 Atl. 474, 23 Am. St. Rep. 795, where the court says: "The defendant invokes the broad proposition that, in considering written instruments, courts should always seek for the actual intent of the parties, and give effect to that intent when found, whatever the form of the instrument. The proposition has been stated perhaps as broadly as this in text-books and judicial opinions; but it is not universally true. It is hedged about by some positive rules of law, which the parties must heed if they would effectuate their intent, or avoid consequences they did not intend. Muniments of title, especially, are guarded by positive rules of law, to secure their certainty, precision, and permanency. If, in the effort to ascertain the real intent of the parties, one of these rules is encountered, it must control; for no positive rule of law can be lawfully violated in the search for intent."

In Gaskins v. Hunton, 92 Va. 528, 23 S. E. 885, this court said: "It is a settled rule of construction, both in deeds and wills, that if an estate is conveyed, or an interest given, or a benefit bestowed in one part of the instrument, by clear, unambiguous, and explicit words, such estate, interest, or benefit is not diminished nor destroyed by words in another part of the instrument, unless the terms which diminish or destroy the estate before given be as clear and decisive as the terms by which it was created."

We have seen that the fee simple is conveyed to Leannah Wolverton by the deed under consideration in clear, unambiguous, and explicit words. The language relied upon to reduce that interest from a fee simple to a life estate is not apt and proper for the creation of any estate whatsoever. It cannot be said that it diminishes the estate given by language as clear and decisive as that by which it was created.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

(58 W. Va. 334)

FRUM et al. v. FOX et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 21, 1905.)

1. EQUITY—BILL—MULTIFARIOUSNESS.

A bill by the heirs of a deceased person against a purchaser of the decedent's real estate at a sale thereof for nonpayment of taxes, to set aside the deed acquired under such purchases and to declare the dower of the widow of such decedent in the same land barred, is multifarious.

2. TAXATION—REDEMPTION—AGREEMENT BY PARTIES.

A purchaser at a tax sale of an entire tract of land, owned in separate parcels by himself and two others, one of whom, at the time of the purchase, contributes for the purpose thereof more money than the proportion which his share of the land bears to the whole tract, with the understanding and agreement that, as to the parts owned by the purchaser and the party so contributing, the purchase shall operate as a redemption, acquires no title to the land owned by the party so contributing, as against him.

3. COSTS—ON APPEAL.

When a final decree, giving no costs in the court below, is affirmed in this court, and no necessity for remanding the cause exists, this court will give to the appellee his costs in the trial court as well as his costs in this court.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Randolph County.

Bill by H. L. Frum and others against A. N. Fox and others. Decree for plaintiffs, and defendants Margaret Fox and others appeal. Reversed in part.

W. B. Maxwell, for appellants. Jas. A. Bent, T. S. Engle, and J. L. Wamsley, for appellees.

POFFENBARGER, J. Margaret Fox, widow, and T. J. and James L. Fox, adult heirs at law, of A. N. Fox, deceased, ask reversal of a decree of the circuit court of Randolph county, by which a tax deed, acquired by said A. N. Fox in his lifetime, was set aside and annulled, at the instance of H. L. Frum and others, heirs of H. G. Frum, deceased. Prior to his death said H. G. Frum obtained by purchase from Lucy E. Corley 68 acres of land, part of a 200-acre tract, the residue of which was purchased of A. N. Fox and one Monohan. In December, 1899, the entire tract was sold by the sheriff of said county for nonpayment of the taxes thereon in the name of said Corley, and purchased by Nimrod Shiflett, for $23.96. Before the purchase money was paid to the sheriff, said Frum and A. N. Fox appeared at his office, and some arrangement was made by which Shiflett relinquished the benefit of his purchase, and the sheriff reported and certified the land as having been sold to said Fox, who was a son-in-law of Frum. In March, 1901, Frum died, and in April following H. L. Frum, one of his sons, and a resident of Harrison county, was appointed administrator of his estate, and A. N. Fox became the surety on his bond, with the understanding that he (Fox) should, as agent of said administrator, take charge of the personal estate of the decedent and transact business and administer the estate as such agent, in the name of said administrator.

On the 15th day of February, 1901, Fox applied for, and received from the clerk of the county court of Randolph county, a deed for said tract of land, and on the 3d day of February, 1902, said H. L. Frum and other heirs of said decedent, brought this suit to set aside said deed, and such proceedings were had that, on the 5th day of February, 1904, it was annulled as aforesaid. The bill also prayed relief against M. F. Fitzwater, mother of the plaintiffs and widow of H. G. Frum. After the death of her husband, she had married ——— Fitzwater. The prayer against her, based upon certain allegations of the bill which need not be mentioned, was that her dower be adjudged and decreed in this cause to be barred. H. L. Frum sued in his own right and as administrator, and the bill set out his relation to A. N. Fox, as agent as aforesaid, but did not pray any settlement with Fox, or decree against him, otherwise than for the cancellation of said deed. It did allege the duty of Fox, in view of such agency and custody of the personal estate, to pay the taxes and redeem the land from sale. Fox answered the bill, denying all fraud in the procurement of the deed, and averring notice to the heirs of his purchase and right to take the deed. Soon after the filing of this answer, he died, and the suit was revived against his administratrix, widow, and heirs. The appellants answered the bill by adopting as their own the answer filed by A. N. Fox. M. F. Fitzwater appeared and demurred to the bill, and the court sustained the demurrer and dismissed it as to her. Afterwards she set up a claim under the exemption statute to $200 worth of the personal property of the estate of H. G. Frum as his widow, claiming the right to hold the same exempt from debts and liabilities contracted by the decedent in his lifetime. This claim she assigned to Sarah J. Smith, who brought a suit in chancery for the enforcement of it against the administratrix and distributees of the estate of A. N. Fox. She also conveyed her claim for dower in the real estate to F. W. Smith, who brought a suit against the widow and heirs of A. N. Fox for assignment of said dower. The court made one decree in all three cases, overruling demurrers to all the bills, setting aside said tax deed, referring all three causes to a commissioner of the court to take, state, and report an account, granting leave to the parties to file answers before the commissioner, and reserving for future adjudication all questions concerning the claim of Mary F. Fitzwater to have dower in the land and to share in the distribution of the personal estate.

In the petition for this appeal multifariousness in the bill was relied upon; but in the brief filed for appellants that ground of error is expressly waived. The court is requested to disregard it and pass upon the setting aside of the tax deed as if the cause were here on a sufficient bill for that purpose alone. Counsel for appellee say the bill is not multifarious in any respect. In view of this attitude of the parties, no inquiry as to the sufficiency of the bill in that respect will be entered upon. But one competent witness testifies concerning the transaction between Frum and Fox, in consequence of which the sale was reported as having been made to the latter. That witness is Shiffett, who says Frum and Fox came to him on the day after he made the purchase, and all went together to the sheriff's office, where the arrangement was consummated. Upon application to the sheriff to redeem, Frum was informed that he could not do so, but that, if Shiffett would yield his rights, he would give him a receipt for the land, and that Frum gave Fox $10 or $11, and Fox transacted the business with the sheriff, and that both of them talked to the sheriff about redeeming the land, and told him (witness) they had come for the purpose of redeeming it. He further says that after retiring from the sheriff's office they said they had redeemed the land, and asked the witness how he had happened to buy it. On cross-examination, he said: "It was the understanding that day between me and them and George Leonard that I give away to Fox and let him take my place."

As the entire tract of 200 acres, of which Frum owned only 68 acres and Fox and Monohan the residue, in relative quantities not disclosed, was purchased, it is clear that Frum gave Fox an amount of money amply sufficient to pay his portion of the purchase money. He owned less than one-third of the land, and the whole amount of purchase money was a few cents less than $24, so that Frum's share of it was less than $10, the lowest amount mentioned by the witness as having been given by him to Fox. In view of this circumstance, the relationship of the parties, and the declarations made by them on the occasion of this transaction, we are of the opinion that there was no intention on the part of either Frum or Fox that a deed should ever be taken by the latter, and that they intended the payment of the money to operate as a redemption of the land from sale and delinquency, and that the court properly held that Fox had fraudulently and wrongfully procured the execution of the tax deed. The deed recites a sale of the entire 200 acres, including Fox's own land, as well as that of Frum and Monohan. At the time the deed was made, all except the 68 acres had been redeemed. Hence Fox must have redeemed from himself his own land and allowed Monohan to redeem his. The Monohan interest may have afforded some reason for treating the transaction as a purchase as to his land, but no reason is perceived why it should have been so regarded in so far as it affected the lands of Frum and Fox, since Fox was to pay the taxes on his own portion of the land and Frum had furnished him an amount amply sufficient to pay the taxes on the 68 acres. As no provision of the statute authorized the sheriff to allow a redemption of part of the 200-acre tract, by payment of part of the taxes thereon, it was necessary to take an assignment of Shiffett's purchase, in order to have the highest and best remedy against Monohan for the taxes on his part of the land. Neither Frum nor Fox could redeem part of the land at the sheriff's office. The sheriff had no authority to release the state's security for any of the taxes. Smith v. Tharp, 17 W. Va. 221. But, after purchase, redemption of part could be allowed by the purchaser to Monohan, if he desired to redeem, and, if not, his land could be held under the purchase, since there was no tenancy in common or other confidential relation.

Be this as it may, the situation in which these parties found themselves at the sheriff's office, respecting this land, makes it highly probable, if not certain, that there was no intention to effect a purchase otherwise than in trust, except as to the land owned by Monohan. As to Frum's land and his own, Fox's purchase from Shiffett was intended to operate as payment of the taxes, and as to Monohan's as a purchase, and it was never contemplated that Fox should take a deed for his own or Frum's land. Frum had a deed from Corley, fully describing his land and affording the means of a simple, easy redemption without any expense, and no money was due from him. Had Monohan failed to redeem, a deed for his land alone could have been taken, just as in the case of Frum's. It is not intended here to say an owner of part of a tract of land, sold as this one was, has a right to redeem his part by payment of part of the taxes or purchase money, but only that he may do so with the consent of the purchaser, and that such consent may be in the form of an antecedent agreement, contemporaneous with the purchase. Viewing the case in the light of all the circumstances and the testimony above quoted, our conclusion is that the purchase was intended to operate as a redemption as regards the land in question. A purchase by an agent is said to so operate. Williamson v. Russell, 18 W. Va. 612, 625; Curtis v. Borland, 35 W. Va. 124, 12 S. E. 1113; Battin v. Woods, 27 W. Va. 58; State v. Eddy, 41 W. Va. 95, 23 S. E. 529; Cooley on Taxation, 964; Blackwell, Tax Titles, § 566. Whether it does, or makes the purchaser a trustee for the owner, is ordinarily not very material, since the result is practically the same. Cain v. Brown, 54 W. Va. 656, 664, 46 S. E. 579. This decree canceled the tax deed, and thus left Frum's deed from Corley in force, and thereby put the title back in Frum's heirs as effectually as if a conveyance to them by Fox's heirs had been enforced.

Failure of the court to require repayment of the purchase money and expenses as a condition precedent to the annulment of the deed is assigned as error; but, as no purchase money is due and the expenses were incurred without necessity and in violation of the agreement of the parties, the court did not err in this respect. This is not the ordinary case of an adverse purchase under defective proceedings. In substance and effect it was a valid purchase to hold in trust, which the courts say amounts to a redemption, and a trustee is certainly not entitled to expenses incurred in the violation of his trust, and in no sense connected with the performance or execution thereof. The dismissal of the bill as to M. F. Fitzwater is made the subject of a cross-assignment of error by counsel for the appellee; it being insisted that the two objects disclosed by the bill, cancellation of the tax deed, and barring the dower right, were not inconsistent. They are undoubtedly wholly foreign to each other. The tax deed stood in the way of the claim of the widow, as well as that of the heirs. Against it they made common cause, for, in order to obtain any title or interest in the land, they must get rid of it. This made an issue between the widow and heirs, on one side, and Fox, on the other, involving pleadings and evidence which had no relation whatever to the claim to dower. The issue between the widow and heirs respecting the dower is wholly different, and with that Fox has nothing to do. When the matter demanded against one defendant is separate, distinct, and unconnected with the matter demanded against another, and neither is interested in the defense to be made by the other, the bill asserting such different demands is multifarious. Stuart v. Coalter, 4 Rand. 74, 15 Am. Dec. 731. Two distinct grounds of equitable relief between the same parties cannot be joined in one bill. Zell Guano Co. v. Heatherly, 38 W. Va. 409, 18 S. E. 611. See, also, Shaffer v. Fetty, 30 W. Va. 248, 4 S. E. 278; Crickard v. Crouch's Adm'rs, 41 W. Va. 503, 23 S. E. 727; Petty v. Fogle, 16 W. Va. 497.

As the matters of the settlements of the estates of Frum and Fox, decedents, are not germane to this bill, so as to make them properly cognizable in this suit, and, if they were, the pleadings in the cause show that the sole object of the suit is to get rid of the tax deed, no decree of reference could properly be made in this cause. Whether such decree is necessary or proper in either of the other two causes cannot now be determined; for there is no final decree, as yet, in either of them, and this appeal has not brought either of them up. The allegations of the bill, all considered, show clearly that the matters of administration, personal estate, and agency in Fox were set forth for the purpose of showing duty on his part to redeem the land from his own purchase at the tax sale. For this purpose, they were not necessary, and probably not sufficient, though we do not so decide.

For the reasons above stated, so much of the decrees aforesaid as dismisses the bill as to M. F. Fitzwater and sets aside and annuls said tax deed will be affirmed, and a decree entered here requiring the appellants to pay to the appellees their costs in the circuit court by them expended in and about the prosecution of this suit in respect to matters cognizable in it, as well as their costs in this court, and in all other respects the decree of February 5, 1904, in so far as it affects this cause, will be reversed, all of which will be certified to said circuit court.

(58 W. Va. 263)

STATE v. DOLAN.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 7, 1905.)1. CRIMINAL LAW—RENDITION OF JUDGMENT—PRESENCE OF DEFENDANT.

It is error to render judgment of imprisonment in any case in the absence of the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 15, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, § 2511.]

2. INDICTMENT—REQUISITES.

An indictment under a statute must state all the circumstances which constitute the definition of the offense in the statute, so as to bring the defendant precisely within it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 27, Cent. Dig. Indictment and Information, § 286.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—NECESSITY FOR MOTION IN ARREST.

Anything which is good cause for arresting a judgment is good cause for reversing it, though no motion in arrest is made.

4. SAME—APPEAL—REVERSAL.

Although no demurrer was interposed or motion in arrest of judgment made, if the indictment is so defective that it could not be properly prosecuted, a judgment thereon will be reversed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 15, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, § 2627.]

Brannon, P., and Sanders, J., dissenting.
(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Tyler County.

James F. Dolan was convicted of violation of the liquor law, and brings error. Reversed.

John A. Howard, Matheny & Smith, V. B. Archer, and F. L. Blackmarr, for plaintiff in error. The Attorney General, for the State.

McWHORTER, J. At the April term, 1895, of the circuit court of Tyler county, three indictments were returned by the grand jury against James F. Dolan, numbered 1, 2, and 3, respectively, for misdemeanor, charging that "Jas. F. Dolan, on the — day of September, 1894, in the county of Tyler, aforesaid, and within one year next preceding the finding of this indictment, did unlawfully keep and maintain a common and public nuisance, by then and there knowingly permitting intoxicating liquors to be vended and sold contrary to law in a certain building known as the 'Arlington Hotel,' situate in the county of Tyler, as aforesaid, and then and there the property of the said Jas. F. Dolan, against the peace and dignity of the state." This is indictment No. 1, and the other indictments were the same, except the date therein alleged; No. 2 alleging "the — day of January, 1895," and No. 3 "the — day of February, 1895." On the 15th day of August, at the August term of said court, when the first case was called, "the defendant, by his attorney, pleaded not guilty"; to which the prosecuting attorney replied generally. A jury was impaneled and sworn and, having heard the evidence, returned a verdict finding the defendant guilty, as charged in the indictment. The court assessed the fine against the defendant upon the verdict of the jury at $100, and gave judgment accordingly, and also a judgment that the defendant be imprisoned in the county jail of Tyler county for the term of 30 days, and on the same day, August 15, 1895, on Nos. 2 and 3, the defendant, by his attorney, pleaded guilty in each of said causes; "whereupon the court, proceeding to render judgment against the defendant in each of said causes, upon his said confession, doth ascertain and fix the fine at one hundred dollars in each of said causes. Therefore, it is considered by the court that the state of West Virginia recover against the defendant one hundred dollars, fine in each of said causes, assessed and fixed, as aforesaid, and her costs of prosecution by her in each of said causes expended. And it is further considered by the court, and accordingly ordered, that the defendant, James F. Dolan, be imprisoned in the county jail of this county for the term of thirty days. And it is ordered that the terms of imprisonment imposed on the defendant, James F. Dolan, by this and the preceding judgment, shall be inflicted upon him in regular succession, according to the number of indictments upon which said judgment were rendered. And it is further considered by the court that the certain building mentioned in the indictments known as the 'Arlington Hotel,' situate in the county of Tyler, in the town of Sistersville, be abated and closed up as a place for the sale of spirituous liquors contrary to law; and the sheriff of said county, taking a copy of this order, shall abate and close up said building, in pursuance of this judgment, as a place for the unlawful sale of such liquors, and keep the same so closed for such purpose." This is all that appears from the record in the case. The defendant presented his petition to one of the judges of this court, praying for a writ of error and supersedeas to the said two judgments rendered on the 15th day of August, 1895, which were awarded. The defendant says the court erred in its judgment directing the imprisonment of defendant for a term of 30 days. It is also contended that the indictments, and each of them, are bad for uncertainty. No brief has been filed on behalf of the state in this case. In State v. Campbell, 42 W. Va. 248, 24 S. E. 875 (Syl., point 4), it is held: "A defendant may appear by counsel in any misdemeanor case, although it be punishable by imprisonment, but in no case can there be judgment of imprisonment without having the defendant present at its rendition." The authorities are uniform that judgment of imprisonment cannot be rendered in the absence of the defendant. King v. Harrison & Duke, 12 Modern Reports, 157; Com. v. Crump, 1 Va. Cases, 172, 175; 1 Chitty's Criminal Law, 695, and cases cited in note "b"; People v. Taylor, 3 Denio (N. Y.) 91, 98; People v. Winchell, 7 Cow. 525. See note "b" at the end of the case. In the last case cited it is said: "Sentence of the slightest corporal punishment cannot be given in absentia." Son v. People, 12 Wend. 344; Tracy's Case, 25 Vt. 93; Rex v. Harris, 1 Raymond, 267.

It is further claimed that the court erred in ordering the house closed as a nuisance. In section 277, 1 Bish. Cr. Proc., it is said: "The judgment to abate a nuisance can be rendered only when the defendant is present"; citing Reg. v. Chichester, 2 Den. C. C. 458, 8 Eng. L. & Eq. 284.

It is contended by plaintiff in error that the indictments are wholly insufficient, in that no offense is charged therein; that it is not sufficient to allege that the defendant kept and maintained a common public nuisance, by "then and there knowingly permitting intoxicating liquors to be vended and sold contrary to law." The indictments fail to allege in what respect the sale was contrary to law. This kind of indictment has been held insufficient in State v. Brewing Co., 53 W. Va. 591, 45 S. E. 924, where the sufficiency of an indictment similar to the ones at bar is discussed. See, also, Cohen v. King Knob Club (W. Va.) 46 S. E. 799. "An indictment on a statute must state all the circumstances which constitute the definition of the offense in the act, so as to bring the defendant precisely within it." Hampton's Case, 3 Grat. 590; State v. Whitter, 18 W. Va. 306; Glass' Case, 33 Grat. 827; Youngs' Case, 15 Grat. 664. In Matthews Case, 18 Grat. 989 (Syll. point 3), it is held: "Anything which is good cause for arresting a judgment is good cause for reversing it, though no motion in arrest is made." This proposition was approved in Randell's Case, 24 Grat. 646, and in Lemon's Case, 4 W. Va. 755, 757, 6 Am. Rep. 293; also in State v. Miller, 6 W. Va. 600, and in State v. McClung, 35 W. Va. 280, 286, 13 S. E. 654. Although there was no demurrer or motion in arrest of judgment, the indictments being fatally defective, either a demurrer or motion in arrest of judgment must have been sustained if interposed; besides, the judgments, being illegal, must be reversed, and the indictments quashed.

BRANNON, P. (dissenting). Judge SANDERS and I dissent, for the reason that to two indictments the defendant pleaded guilty, and, as to the third, took no exception to the indictment by demurrer or motion in arrest of judgment. We grant that on demurrer the indictments would be bad, but only in a matter of specification. They change substantially an offense, only lacking in specifying the kind of sale, whether on Sunday, to an infant, to one intoxicated, or otherwise. It is going far to say that one confessing himself guilty under such an indictment should be let off. He waived such defect. We are unwilling to cast aside the confession on two indictments and the verdict on the other. We are willing to reverse the judgment, but not willing to quash the indictments. We would reverse the judgment, and remand the causes to the circuit court, with direction to award writs of capias ad audiendum judicium, and proceed to render such judgments upon the confessions and verdict as the court may see proper. If a defendant is not in court when sentence of jail is made, what writ is there to hunt him and put him in jail? I do not know any. State v. Campbell, 42 W. Va. 247, 24 S. E. 875, says that no imprisonment can be imposed until he is brought into court under a capias to hear judgment.

(53 W. Va. 276)

ROBERTS v. HICKORY CAMP COAL & COKE CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Nov. 7, 1905.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—JURISDICTION.

Justice's courts in this state are statutory courts of limited jurisdiction, and are not courts of record.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 31, Cent. Dig. Justices of the Peace, § 71.]

2. SAME—PARTIES DEFENDANT.

A justice is without jurisdiction in an action brought by him against a defendant who is a resident of this state, but not of the county in which the action is brought; the cause of action having arisen in the county of defendant's residence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 31, Cent. Dig. Justices of the Peace, §§ 143-147.]

3. SAME—ATTACHMENT.

And in such case, the justice, being without jurisdiction in the principal action, acquires no jurisdiction by attachment and garnishment of the debtor of the defendant in the justice's county.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 31, Cent. Dig. Justices of the Peace, §§ 177, 178.]

4. SAME.

The justice being without jurisdiction, his judgment in the principal action, as well as that upon the attachment and garnishment, is void.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 31, Cent. Dig. Justices of the Peace, § 374.]

5. GARNISHMENT—PAYMENT BY GARNISHEE—VOID JUDGMENT.

And the payment of the money due from the garnishee to the defendant on the order of the justice is no protection to the garnishee.

6. JUDGMENT—ATTACK ON VOID JUDGMENT.

A void judgment may be declared to be void in any court in which it may be presented, whether in a direct or collateral proceeding.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 30, Cent. Dig. Judgment, §§ 919, 920.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Kanawha County.

Action by William M. Roberts against the Hickory Camp Coal & Coke Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

W. S. Laidley, for plaintiff in error. T. S. Clark and A. W. McDonald, Jr., for defendant in error.

McWHORTER, J. William M. Roberts brought his action against the Hickory Camp Coal & Coke Company, a corporation, before Justice E. H. Ball of Kanawha county, for a balance of $283.25, due on a contract, with interest from July 8, 1904. The defendant appeared and filed its answer, admitting the claim of plaintiff, but setting up the fact that it was served with a suggestion in a certain suit pending before J. B. Champe, a justice of Fayette county, in which the Imperial Colliery Company was plaintiff and the said Roberts was defendant, requiring it to show what was due from it to Roberts; that afterwards in said suit it was ordered to pay to the Imperial Colliery Company the sum of $272.20, the amount of the judgment of the Imperial Colliery Company rendered against Roberts in said suit, which amount was paid by the defendant, Hickory Camp Coal & Coke Company, to R. R. Huddleston, deputy sheriff of Fayette county, on the 6th of February, 1904, under an execution then in his hands; and admitting that it still owed to plaintiff, Roberts, the sum of $11, which it was ready to pay. Plaintiff, Roberts, filed a replication to the said plea or answer of defendant, averring that the payment set up by the defendant, claiming to have been made on a judgment rendered by the Fayette county justice, was no payment of the debt sued for, and admitted by the said plea to have been due and payable to plaintiff, because there was no valid judgment rendered against plaintiff by the Fayette county justice, in favor of the Imperial Colliery Company, for want of jurisdiction; that plaintiff, Roberts, had always been a resident of the state of West Virginia, and was then, and had been for years past, a resident of Kanawha county, W. Va.; that no summons or other process was ever served upon him at any time, or in any manner, in said action of the Imperial Colliery Company against him; that he never had any notice of said action or said judgment until the defendant set up the same as defense in this case; that the justice in Fayette county never obtained jurisdiction of said Roberts in said action, and could not render any valid judgment therein, and could not legally have directed the defendant in this case to pay such judgment without having such jurisdiction, and that all that was done by said Fayette county justice was without jurisdiction and without authority of law, and was null and void, and denied the existence of any valid judgment rendered against him by said justice in the action mentioned in defendant's plea, and denied that the payment claimed by the defendant in answer to the suggestion was any payment whatever of the debt here sued for, and denied that he ever authorized the defendant to pay anything whatever to the Imperial Colliery Company, and denied that he owed the Imperial Colliery Company anything, and prayed judgment for the amount sued for, and for which the defendant admitted it had owed him. Upon the hearing, Justice Ball held that the justice of Fayette county had no jurisdiction to render any judgment, or to make an order for the Hickory Camp Coal & Coke Company to pay said judgment, and that the judgment and order against the garnishee were null and void, and that the payment claimed to have been made by the defendant was no payment of the Roberts' debt against it, and gave judgment for the amount sued for, $283.25. The defendant took the case by appeal to the circuit court of Kanawha county, where on the 13th of June, 1905, the case was heard, and the following order entered: "This action came up on appeal taken by the defendant from the judgment of a justice of Kanawha county, and, neither party desiring a jury, the same is submitted to the court, and the same was heard upon the pleadings made up before the justice, to wit, the complaint of the plaintiff, the answer of the defendant, and the replication of the plaintiff, all in writing and filed herein. That the evidence adduced by the defendant was the record of the case of Imperial Colliery Co. v. Wm. Roberts, tried before Justice Champe, in Fayette county, W. Va., in which record is herein filed, and the evidence adduced by the plaintiff was the affidavit of W. Roberts, sworn to February 17, 1905, which is filed herein, and, by agreement between the parties to this cause, said affidavit was read as the testimony of said Roberts herein, and this was the only testimony adduced on the trial. The defendant objected to the testimony of Roberts, not because of its form in affidavit, but to the illegality thereof, which objection was overruled by the court, to which ruling the defendant excepted. That this action was for the sum of $283.25, and the defendant admitted that it had been indebted to the plaintiff in that amount, but claims that it had paid the sum of $272.20 on August 23, 1904, on a suggestion issued in the said case of the Imperial Colliery Co. v. W. Roberts on a judgment rendered by the justice in Fayette county, and which payment it was claimed by the plaintiff was no payment whatever. This court, upon consideration of the pleadings, the evidence, and the argument of counsel of both plaintiff and defendant, is of opinion that the said payment claimed to have been made was valid payment, and the defendant's indebtedness to the plaintiff should be reduced to that extent." Then follows judgment in favor of the plaintiff, Roberts, against the Hickory Camp Coal & Coke Company and Citizens' Trust & Guaranty Company of West Virginia, parties to the appeal bond, the sum of $11.05, balance due plaintiff after deducting the sum of $272.20. To which finding and judgment of the court plaintiff excepted, and procured a writ of error to said judgment from one of the judges of this court.

The crucial question involved in this case is whether Justice Champe had jurisdiction to enter judgment in the action of the Imperial Colliery Company against Roberts in Fayette county. "The jurisdiction of justices of the peace is purely statutory. They have only such judicial powers as have been expressly conferred upon them by statute. The courts of justices not being courts of record or of general jurisdiction, there is no presumption in favor of jurisdiction when the record does not disclose it." 18 Am. & E. E. L. (2d Ed.) 17, and cases there cited. Section 16, c. 50, Code 1899, clearly defines the civil jurisdiction of justices, in which it provides: "Shall not extend to any action unless the cause of action arose in his county, or the defendant, or one of the defendants, resides therein, or being a non-resident of the state, is found, or has property or effects within the county." The return of the officer on the original summons shows that Roberts was not found in Fayette county, as also the return of the second summons, and the record contains not a word with reference to the residence of Roberts in Fayette county, or that the cause of action accruing to the Imperial Colliery Company against Roberts, or any part of it, arose in said county. The testimony of Roberts is, and the fact is conceded, that he resides, and has resided for the last eight or nine years, in Kanawha county, and that he was never a non-resident of the state of West Virginia; that no summons was served upon him in the suit, and he testified that he had no notice of the action against him in Fayette county; that the Imperial Colliery Company had its office and place of business in Kanawha county, and at which place he made a contract with said Imperial Colliery Company, which contract was the basis of its action. It is contended by counsel for defendant in error that the Hickory Camp Coal & Coke Company was located in Fayette county, "where Roberts was working, cutting timber, and was, in fact, most of the time. Even if it is true, as stated in his affidavit, that he was a resident of Kanawha county," this in no manner appears from the record. The only matter in the record that would indicate that the defendant, Hickory Camp Coal & Coke Company, was in Fayette county is the fact that the return of the sheriff of service of the summons on garnishee states that it was served on the company by delivering a copy "to G. P. Meadows, the president and general manager of said company; he being a resident of said county, and found therein at the time of said service." But it does not appear from the record that plaintiff, Roberts, was ever in the county of Fayette for any purpose; nothing in the record to show that the cause of action arose in Fayette county, but it does show that it arose in Kanawha county. In Harvey v. Parkersburg Insurance Co., 37 W. Va. 272, 16 S. E. 580 (Syl., point 3), "the cause of action generally means the breach of duty by the defendant, complained of"; and in Syl. point 4, "the debtor, unless it be otherwise provided, must, in order to make payment, seek the creditors." In this case Roberts would have to pay his debt to the Imperial Colliery Company at its place of business in Kanawha county.

It is contended by defendant in error that a justice has jurisdiction under the Constitution by virtue of section 28 of article 8, in the provision that, "The civil jurisdiction of a justice of the peace shall extend to actions of assumpsit, debt, detinue and trover, if the amount claimed, exclusive of interest, does not exceed $300"; that this is a general jurisdiction, in which the justices are given original and concurrent jurisdiction over the actions named, the only limitation in such actions being that of the amount in controversy, which cannot exceed $300. But said section 28 confines such jurisdiction of justices to their county. Under section 193, c. 50, Code 1899, a provision is made for attachments to be issued by justices against a defendant in an action where the ground for attachment exists, as set forth in said section; the last ground being: "If the defendant, or any of the defendants, is a foreign corporation, or a nonresident of the state, such justice having jurisdiction of the action." But there is no provision for an attachment against the property of a defendant who is a resident of the state, but not of the county in which the justice is proceeding. In Mayer v. Adams, 27 W. Va. 244 (Syl., point 4), it is held: "The jurisdictional facts necessary to give a court of special and limited jurisdiction a right to act must appear in the record of its proceedings, or such proceedings will be regarded as had without jurisdiction, and therefore as absolute nullities." Counsel for defendant in error make their contention on the theory that a justice's court is a court of record. In Todd v. Gates, 20 W. Va. 464 (Syl., point 1), "The summons in a justice's court, like the writ in a court of record, must be looked to, in order to determine the plaintiff's claim upon the question of jurisdiction." "The forms of actions now existing shall not apply to justices' courts, and there shall hereafter be but one form of action in said courts, which shall be denominated a civil action." Section 49, c. 50, Code 1899; O'Connor v. Dills, 43 W. Va. 54, 26 S. E. 354. In sixth clause of section 60, c. 50, Code 1899, it is provided that: "The action shall also be dismissed at plaintiff's cost, whenever it appears that it has been brought in the wrong county, or for any other reason the justice has not jurisdiction thereof." Mill Co. v. Southern, 46 W. Va. 754, 34 S. E. 782. "The plaintiff's right of action, the effectiveness of the judgment, and the protection of the garnishee from subsequent attack after payment under judgment, depends upon the principal action, its rightful institution, rightful judgment thereon, and rightful execution of the judgment." Wap. on Attach. &

Gar. § 474. Under the statute, Roberts, being a resident of the state, could not be sued before a justice without his county. The plaintiff, Imperial Colliery Company, knew his residence was in Kanawha county, and, the attachment being subsidiary to the main suit, the jurisdiction depended upon the principal action, and the defendant, Roberts, not being a resident of the justice's county or a nonresident of the state, the justice did not acquire jurisdiction by the attachment proceeding. Dorr's Adm'r v. Rohr, 82 Va. 359 (Syl., points 3 & 4), 3 Am. St. Rep. 106. The Hickory Camp Coal & Coke Company, the garnishee, having been brought into the case by service of process, was bound to take notice of the fact that its creditor, Roberts, had not been served with process, and it must have known that his residence was in Kanawha county, and not in Fayette, and it was clearly its duty, if practicable, to have brought to the notice of its creditor the fact that his debt in its hands was sought to be sequestrated, knowing that he had no notice of the proceeding, instead of paying out of its hands the fund that belonged to him, without objection or protest. Stewart v. Assurance Co., 45 W. Va. 734, 32 S. E. 218, 44 L. R. A. 101; Dorr's Adm'r v. Rohr, supra; Harris v. Balk, 198 U. S. 215, 25 Sup. Ct. 625, 49 L. Ed. 1023. The plaintiff Imperial Colliery Company had a complete remedy in the circuit court of Kanawha county against Roberts, including attachment against the property of Roberts in Fayette county, in case grounds for attachment existed. There Roberts would have been served with process, and could have made his defense, if any he had, both against the claim in the principal suit and also against the attachment. "If a court does not have jurisdiction, it is wholly unimportant how precisely certain and technically correct its proceedings and decision may have been. Its judgments and orders are mere nullities, and may not only be set aside at any time by the court in which they were rendered, but they may be declared to be void by every court in which they are presented. The void or voidable character of a judgment depends, then, upon whether the court by which it was rendered did or did not have jurisdiction; in other words, the distinction turns upon the defective or wrongful execution of the power to hear and determine a cause, which renders the judgment merely voidable, and the lack of power to hear the cause at all, which renders the judgment void." 17 Am. & E. E. L. (2d Ed.) 1048, and cases there cited, and 29 Am. & E. E. L. 1067, where it is said of a void judgment: "No rights are acquired or divested by it. It neither binds nor bars any one, and all proceedings founded on it are worthless." The Fayette justice had acquired no jurisdiction of the person of defendant, Roberts, and, Roberts not being a nonresident, he had by his pretended attachment no jurisdiction of his property. So, having neither jurisdiction of defendant's person or property, the justice was without power to render any judgment in the case; hence the judgment is void, and the payment by the Hickory Camp Coal & Coke Company was without authority, and it is in no wise protected by its voluntary payment. Brewer v. Hutton, 45 W. Va. 106, 30 S. E. 81, 72 Am. St. Rep. 804 (Syl., point 6); Stewart v. Assurance Co., 45 W. Va. 734, 32 S. E. 218, 44 L. R. A. 101; Wap. on Attach. & Gar. §§ 926, 959, 963.

For the reasons herein given, the judgment of the circuit court must be reversed and set aside, and, this court proceeding to render such judgment as the circuit court should have rendered, it is considered that the plaintiff, William M. Roberts, recover against the defendant, the Hickory Camp Coal & Coke Company, and the Citizens' Trust & Guaranty Company of West Virginia, the surety in the appeal bond, the sum of $299.05, the principal and interest of the plaintiff's claim from July 8, 1904, until the date of the judgment, with interest on said sum of $299.05 from June 13, 1905, until paid, and the costs about his action in that behalf expended, and that this judgment be certified to the clerk of the circuit court for execution to be issued thereon.

(53 W. Va. 233)

TRACEWELL v. WOOD COUNTY COURT.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 7, 1905.)

1. TRIAL.—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction must not submit a question of law to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Trial, §§ 818, 467.]

2. WATERS.—SURFACE WATERS.—DAMAGES.

In an action against a county court for damage from collecting surface water in a ditch along a county road, and casting it in a body upon land, the rule, as a measure of damages, that if the land is worth as much in market value after the injury as before no recovery can be had, does not apply. Nor can general benefits in increase of value or otherwise from the construction of the road, common to all in the vicinity, be set off against such damages.

3. EMINENT DOMAIN.—PROPERTY TAKEN FOR PUBLIC USE.—SURFACE WATER.

A county court which, by a ditch made by it along a public road for drainage, collects surface water, and casts it in a body on land, doing damage, is liable for such damage by reason of section 9, art. 3, of the Constitution.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 18, Cent. Dig. Eminent Domain, § 236.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Wood County.

Action by W. S. Tracewell against the Wood county court. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

V. B. Archer and Wm. Beard, for plaintiff in error. John F. Laird, for defendant in error.

BRANNON, P. W. S. Tracewell brought an action of trespass on the case against the county court of Wood county, and it resulted in a verdict and judgment for the county court from which Tracewell has sued out a writ of error. The action was for damages to the land of the plaintiff on the side of a high hill adjoining the city of Parkersburg, known as Ft. Boreman, on which land the plaintiff had dwelling houses standing upon foundations. The declaration alleges that the county court had recently constructed a public road along the side of the steep hill above the plaintiff's land, and had made drains or ditches along the same, which drains or ditches collected in a body surface water flowing upon the hillside in great quantity, and cast the same in a body upon the plaintiff's land, carrying and depositing mud and sediment upon it, cutting and eroding its surface, creating dampness under the dwelling houses, rendering them unhealthy, injuring their foundations, and causing the surface of the ground to slip and loosen the foundations of the dwellings.

The plaintiff assigns it for error that the court gave an instruction saying that a county court is not responsible to an individual in damages for injury sustained in consequence of the neglect of the county court, its officers or agents, to perform any duty enjoined by law, unless action is expressly or by necessary implication given by the Constitution or statute; and that, therefore, in this case the jury is instructed that, even though they believe from the evidence that the real estate described in the declaration as belonging to the plaintiff when the cause of action claimed to have arisen actually belonged to the plaintiff, and even though the jury should believe that the real estate, by reason of the failure and neglect of the defendant to properly construct and keep in repair the ditches, drains, waterways, channels, and sluices mentioned in the declaration, yet unless the jury believe that the same constituted a portion and part of the public road mentioned in the declaration, they should find for the county court. This instruction is bad. First. It puts a proposition of law to the jury for its decision. It leaves it to the jury to say whether by law the facts stated in the declaration and evidence would give an action, and as, if connected with that question, it says that if the plaintiff was injured by the ditch, yet there could be no recovery if the ditch was not part of the road. If the ditch was not part of the road, how could there be recovery? Or how could there be any connection of this clause with the legal proposition? There was no evidence tending to show that the county court had constructed a ditch independent of the road. There is no connection between that legal proposition put to the jury in the opening of the instruction and the hypothesis of the ditch not being a part of the road. The instruction is confused, inconsistent, misleading. A legal proposition should not be put to the jury for its decision. What had that legal proposition to do with the theory that the ditch was not a part of the road? Second. There was no evidence of any ditch made by the county court separate and apart from the road, and the instruction put a theory not arising upon the evidence, introduced before the jury a question not fairly arising on the evidence.

Instruction 4 says that, even if the jury should believe from the evidence that by reason of the construction of the road, or by failure to keep in repair the ditches, more water was caused to flow upon the land of the plaintiff than flowed or spread on it before such construction or failure to keep in repair, this would not entitle the plaintiff to recover, unless by reason of such construction or failure to repair surface water was collected and cast in a body or mass upon the property of the plaintiff. I think the instruction bad, because it goes on the theory that more surface water, spreading as surface water, went upon the plaintiff's land after the construction of the road than before, and presented a question of fact not developed by the evidence; for, whatever the evidence tended to show as to increase of water or flowage of water upon the plaintiff's land, it was not as surface water continuing as such, but in a body. It is true that the legal proposition put in that construction is sound. To render the defendant liable, its work must gather surface water and cast it in a body upon the plaintiff's land. McCray v. Town of Fairmont, 46 W. Va. 442, 33 S. E. 245; Clay v. St. Albins, 43 W. Va. 539, 27 S. E. 368, 64 Am. St. Rep. 883. The instruction does not, however, seem fitted to the evidence.

Instruction No. 3 says: "The jury is instructed that, unless they believe from the evidence that the ditches and drains * * * mentioned in the declaration are part of the public road of Wood county, mentioned therein, or that by reason of construction of the road mentioned in the declaration of this cause, they should find a verdict in favor of the county court, as, under the law, a county court is not liable for damages sustained by any person by reason of any defect in a drain or ditch, unless said drain or ditch form a constituent part of a public road." As above stated, no evidence tended to show that the ditch was not a part of the public road. All the evidence tended to show that it was made by the court as a part of the road. Therefore, the instruction puts a theory not arising from the evidence. It is irrelevant to the case. But it is vague and incomplete in one of its material clauses; that clause in the words, "or that by reason of construction of the road mentioned in the declaration in this case." What followed by reason of the construction of the road? If the jury believed that by reason of the construction of the road, what? Instructions must be clear, not obscure. The sentence is incomplete. There is no evidence tending to dislocate the ditch from the road.

Instruction 5 told the jury that surface water is like the water of the sea, which each may fight, consume, repel, or expel without regard to any injury to another proprietor; an exception being that such water cannot be collected, and then cast in a body upon the property of another, and that, if the county court constructed the ditches on its property for the purpose of draining off from its property the surface water, the court had right to take such action, as it would not be liable for damages from the flow of such water, unless through construction or failure to keep in repair such ditches surface water was collected and thrown in a body or mass upon the land of the plaintiff. This instruction is criticised on the ground that there was no evidence to show that the county court was making simply an effort to keep surface water from its road. This criticism is untenable. For what was the ditch made? The defendant had right to make a ditch to keep the surface water from its road, but could not gather it in a body, and cast it upon the plaintiff's land.

Instruction 6 told the jury that the measure of the damages to the property of the plaintiff would be the difference in its market value immediately before and immediately after the time when it was claimed that the damage was inflicted, and that, if the plaintiff's property was worth as much after as before the injury, the jury must find for the defendant. McCray v. Fairmont, 48 W. Va. 442, 33 S. E. 245, and Blair v. City of Charleston, 43 W. Va. 62, 26 S. E. 341, 35 L. R. A. 852, 64 Am. St. Rep. 837, are cases relied on for this proposition. Those cases do not apply to this case. They relate to the permanent damages to property by reason of change of grade of a street—enduring damages—while this case is for transient or intermittent injury, ensuing from a removable cause. If a work of internal improvement, like change of grade, leaves the property fully as valuable as before, the owner is not injured; but can we conceive that any one may gather surface water in a ditch, and cast it in bulk upon a town lot, filling the lot with mud, flowing under a house, depositing debris upon the surface, and greatly injuring the daily use of the property, and defend himself by saying or proving that the property will still bring as much as before? We do not think the rule put for this instruction is applicable in this case.

The same objection applies to instruction 8. The grading of a street by competent authority is a lawful act; the casting of surface water in a body upon a lot is not. There is a difference. The objection to the evidence of Tracewell, going to prove that coal and wood could be hauled to his premises by the new road, was improper. It only tended to show benefit to him from the new road, common alike to him and all others. He could not be charged with them in offset against any damages he might be entitled to. The evidence of Straus, Deem, and Kirk, tending to show that the property of the plaintiff was worth as much after the alleged injury as before, and to show an appreciation of property along the road, would be inadmissible, under principles just stated.

Instruction 1 for the defendant was objected to. It told the jury that the burden of proving the allegations of the declaration was upon the plaintiff, and, if the jury should believe from a consideration of all the evidence that the plaintiff had failed to prove his case, the jury should find for the defendant, and that the law did not require the defendant to prove that it was not guilty of inflicting the damage charged in the declaration, but that, on the contrary, the law required the plaintiff to "convince" the jury that he had sustained loss, and that the defendant was responsible therefor. We see no objection to this instruction. The word "convince" is not improper in such case. The jury would have to be convinced by the evidence of the facts necessary to convict the defendant of the wrong attributed to it.

Instruction 8 is bad, because it told the jury that if the construction of the road and ditches resulted in a special benefit to the plaintiff's property by reason of increase in market value, or "otherwise," then such special benefit might be offset against "any such damage permanent to the property arising from construction of the road, to the extent that the jury may decide to be right and proper." Now the word "otherwise" as to the benefit is indefinite. What benefit besides increase in market value is here meant? Did the evidence tend to show any special benefit? Increase of value would be common to all, and should not be charged against the plaintiff. Guyandotte Co. v. Buskirk (W. Va.) 50 S. E. 524. Can we set off increase of value by reason of the construction of a new road—a result common to all of the neighborhood—against that damage which comes to a particular property owner from the flowage upon his lot of surface water in body, resulting from ditches made in the construction of the road? Can you enter into a process of debit and credit in such case by taking the damage, and setting off the benefits? We do not think you can do this in such a case, and in this instruction the damages spoken of are permanent. Is the word "permanent" here meant as relating to a cause that is permanent? This case is not one for permanent damages, because the source of the injury could be remedied, the damages occasional or intermittent, and, besides, all evidence of damages after suit was excluded; and we do not see that the introduction of the question of permanent damages was proper in this case.

Instruction 9 says that, though the property of the plaintiff was injured, yet if it was due to unusual flood or extraordinary rainfall, out of ordinary experience, and that the injury would not have occurred except for such unusual flood and rainfall, and not from the construction of the road, the jury should find for the defendant. This legal proposition is sound. Clay v. St. Albins, 43 W. Va. 539, 27 S. E. 368, 64 Am. St. Rep. 883. But there is no evidence tending to prove that state of facts, unless it be of rains after the suit. That evidence was excluded, or rather the jury was told that no damage was claimed after suit was brought.

An instruction was given that the law did not require the county court to furnish a drain or ditch to carry water away from the premises of the place. There was no such question before the jury. No one claimed that the defendant was bound to make a drain to carry away the water from the plaintiff's land. It was irrelevant to the case before the jury.

An instruction was given to the effect that article 3, § 9, of the Constitution, that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without compensation, does not make a county court liable for damages from surface water where a private individual would not be liable. Probably so, but this instruction affords no rule for the guidance of the jury. It leaves it to the jury to say when a private individual would be liable by law. It makes the jury the judge of the law. It left to the jury to say when an individual would be liable by law, and if he would be liable, then the county court would be liable, and if he would not be liable, then the court would not be liable. The instruction is no guide to the jury.

An instruction was given that, if the jury believed that the plaintiff sustained damage, and that damage was all since the institution of the suit, and none before, the jury should find for the defendant. This is utterly irrelevant to the case. No such question arose from the evidence. The plaintiff disclaimed recovery from any damage after the suit.

We do not understand that any contention was made that, if the cause of action stated in the declaration was sustained by proof, the county would not be liable. Watkins v. County Court, 30 W. Va. 657, 5 S. E. 654, is cited for the county court, but for what purpose does not appear. It was used on the trial, referred to in an instruction. It is not in the brief relied upon to disprove the liability of a county court for any public work which injures private property, either by an act which amounts to "taking," or only damages to the property. That case has no application to this case, whatever may be the object of counsel in referring to it. He makes no argument to apply it to this case. That case denies recovery against the county for damage to the person from a tree left standing too close to the road, which fell upon the person. It was claimed that the county should have cut it down. That was damage to the person, and the principle stated in that case is doubtless sound, namely, that a county is not liable for a wrong inflicting injury done in discharge of the public functions of the county court, where no statute gives action. But that case sustains this action, if its cause be proven, because that case says that a county is liable if there be express law holding it liable for an act, and in this case the action is based on the provision of the Constitution and of section 1, c. 42, of the Code of 1899, ruling that case, saying that: "Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation." It makes a county court, as well as a municipal corporation, liable for its acts and works which take or damage private property without the consent of the owner or without compensation. But for that provision the county would not be liable. If a city is liable to a lot owner for consequential damages from change of grade of a street, why is not a county liable for damage to land from water thrown upon it by a road ditch? Both injuries come from the performance of public functions by the public authority. Indeed, if any difference, the case of the county is plainer for liability, because it causes a physical invasion of the property. It is a taking, and actionable under the Constitution, as it was before the words "or damaged" were put in it. "Discharging water upon it [land] is a taking, within the meaning of the Constitution." "A deposit of stone and rubbish upon land is such a taking as to require compensation." Mills, Em. Domain, § 30. "The backing of water so as to overflow the lands of an individual, or any other superinduced addition of water, earth, sand, or other material or artificial structure placed on land, if done under statute authorizing it for the public benefit, is such a taking as by the constitutional provision demands compensation." Pumpelly v. Green Bay Co., 13 Wall. 166, 20 L. Ed. 557. But this is not material, in view of the addition of the words "or damaged" to the clause as it was before the Constitution of 1872. This subject is discussed in Johnson v. City of Parkersburg, 16 W. Va. 402, 27 Am. Rep. 779. The same rule of liability applies to the county courts and to municipal corporations. It is useless to re-discuss this matter. See 15 Cyc. 656; Chester County v. Brower (Pa.) 12 Atl. 577, 2 Am. St. Rep. 714; Chicago v. Taylor, 125 U. S. 161, 8 Sup. Ct. 820, 31 L. Ed. 638; Lewis on Eminent Domain, §§ 89, 229; City of Omaha v. Cramer (Neb.) 41 N. W. 295, 13 Am. St. Rep. 504; Wendel v. Spokane (Wash.) 67 Pac. 576, 91 Am. St. Rep. 825; Brown v. City (Wash.) 31 Pac. 313, 314.

For these reasons, we reverse the judgment, set aside the verdict, and grant a new trial.

(72 S. C. 506)

STATE v. MURRAY.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 11, 1905. On Rehearing, Oct. 30, 1905.)

1. FORGERY—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Cr. Code 1902, § 873, providing that whoever falsely forges or counterfeits, or assists in forging or counterfeiting, any writing or instrument, and utters or publishes the same as true, is guilty of forgery, is within the power of the Legislature.

2. JURY—CHALLENGES OF STATE.

On an indictment for forgery the state under Cr. Code, § 55, is entitled to five peremptory challenges.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 31, Cent. Dig. Jury, § 611.]

3. STATUTES—TITLE OF ACT.

The words "Forgery and Offenses against the Currency," inserted in the Criminal Code for convenience and indicating the subject-matter of that chapter, are not part of the title of the act, so as to render Cr. Code 1902, § 873, unconstitutional on the ground that the title and body of the statute do not correspond.

4. FORGERY—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

In order to constitute forgery by uttering or publishing a forged instrument or writing, it must be uttered and published as true, and must be known by the party uttering or publishing it as false, forged, or counterfeited and the act must be done with intent to prejudice, damage, or defraud another.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 23, Cent. Dig. Forgery, § 6.]

5. SAME—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to sustain a conviction for forging and uttering a lease.

Appeal from General Sessions Circuit Court of Sumter County; Gage, Judge.

George W. Murray was convicted of forging and uttering a lease, and appeals. Affirmed.

The following are the exceptions:

"First. Because, it is respectfully submitted, his honor erred in allowing the state, over the objections of the defendant, to challenge peremptorily more than two jurors; whereas, the law only allowed the state two challenges in the trial of said case.

"Second. Because his honor erred in refusing the motion of the defendant to direct a verdict of not guilty upon the close of the case for the state, which motion was made on the grounds: (1) That the state had not proven that the lease was uttered by the defendant with any knowledge of its falsity; (2) because there was no evidence to show any intent to defraud; (3) because there was no evidence tending to show an effort to cheat or defraud by means of the lease; (4) that there was no evidence tending to show that the defendant forged the lease or had any knowledge of the alleged forgery; (5) because there was no evidence that the paper was actually uttered, but, on the contrary, it appeared that the lease was introduced in evidence by the defendant's attorney simply because it was in existence, and the evidence showed that the lease as introduced was in exact accordance with the terms of the lease relied upon by the plaintiffs, and consequently could not under any view of the testimony operate to cheat or defraud any person, and it further appeared that the defendant could not be convicted of uttering a forged instrument, under section 373, Criminal Code, because that statute only undertakes to define forgery, and cannot cover the independent crime of uttering a forged instrument, because it would be unconstitutional to that extent, the title of the act being 'Forgery and Offenses against the Currency.'

"Third. Because his honor erred in not granting a new trial in said case, on the motion of the defendant, made upon the minutes of the court, upon the grounds that the undisputed oral and documentary evidence taken in the case at bar, and in the proceedings leading up to the case, and in which the lease was used as evidence, showed conclusively that the same was used only for legitimate purposes, and that the use of the same under the issues raised by the pleadings could not operate to cheat or defraud the Chatmans, nor could the defendant have intended to have cheated or defrauded the Chatmans, because said lease was in exact terms as that introduced in evidence by the Chatmans; because there was no evidence tending to show that the defendant either forged or caused to be forged the lease, nor was there any evidence tending to show that the defendant had any reason to believe the lease to have been forged; because, said lease being in exact accordance with the true contract as set up by the Chatmans, its introduction in evidence strengthened the case of the plaintiffs, and in no way benefited the case of the defendant, for the reason that the sole issues raised by the pleadings and evidence in the case for specific performance were (a) the legal construction of the lease as to whether it was a lease with an incidental right of purchase, or whether it was a contract of purchase with a right vested in the lessee to comply at any time, whether in default or not; (b) whether or not the five acres of land included in the lease had been returned by the Chatmans at an agreed price or not; because the evidence as a whole taken in connection with the good character of the defendant, which was proven in the case, was totally insufficient to support a verdict of guilty; and because the statute under which the defendant was tried, to wit, section 373, is unconstitutional, the same being contrary to the provisions of article 2, § 20, of the Constitution of 1868, and of article 3, § 17, of the Constitution of 1895, in that the title of said act relates to 'Forgery and Offenses against the Currency,' and provides for the punishment of crimes already existing, to wit, the crimes of forgery and of offenses against the currency, but the body of the act provides a punishment for persons 'willingly acting or assisting in the false making, forging or counterfeiting of any writing or instrument of writing, or of uttering, or publishing as true any false, forged or counterfeited writing, or instrument of writing,' and that said act, so far as it relates to the uttering as true any false, forged, or counterfeited writing, is unconstitutional, null, and void, and the conviction in this case should not be allowed to stand under a void statute."

Lee E. Moise and George Johnstone, for appellant. John S. Wilson, for the State.

GARY, A. J. The indictment, under which the defendant was convicted, charged that he "did willfully and falsely utter and publish as true a certain false, forged, and counterfeited writing and instrument of writing, commonly called a lease of land, of the tenor as follows: * * * He, the said George W. Murray, then and there, well knowing the same to be forged, with intent to defraud Scipio Chatman and James Chatman. * * *" The exceptions will be set out in the report of the case.

1. The first question that will be considered is, whether his honor, the presiding judge, erred in allowing the state to challenge peremptorily more than two jurors. The names of the persons composing the jury were drawn and called in the usual manner, and defendant exercised seven challenges and the state exercised two, whereupon the state challenged the third juror, and the defendant objected upon the ground that this was not a charge of forgery, but of uttering a forged instrument, and that section 55 of the Criminal Code of 1902, was not applicable to this case. The court overruled the objection and allowed the challenge. The state did not exercise more than five challenges. Section 373 of the Criminal Code of 1902 is as follows: "Whoever shall be convicted of falsely making, forging or counterfeiting, or causing or procuring to be falsely made, forged or counterfeited, or of willfully acting or assisting in the false making, forging or counterfeiting, of any writing or instrument of writing, or of uttering or publishing as true any false, forged or counterfeited writing or instrument of writing, or of falsely making, forging, counterfeiting, altering, changing, defacing, or erasing, or causing or procuring to be falsely made, forged, counterfeited, altered, changed, defaced or erased, any record or plat of land, or of willingly acting or assisting in any of the premises, with an intention to defraud any person, shall be guilty of forgery, and shall be sentenced to be imprisoned not less than one year or more than seven years, and also to pay such fine as may be judged expedient, at the discretion of the judge who may try the case." Section 55 of the Criminal Code provides that any person who shall be arraigned for the crime of forgery shall be entitled to peremptory challenges not exceeding ten, and the state in such cases shall be entitled to peremptory challenge not exceeding five; persons indicted for other crimes shall be entitled to peremptory challenge not exceeding five, and the state not exceeding two. Uttering or publishing as true any false, forged, or counterfeited writing constitutes the crime of forgery, under section 373 of the Criminal Code of 1902. It is a kindred form of forgery. It is usual to enact that various illegal acts shall constitute the crime of forgery, as will be seen by reference to the statutes of the different states. The Legislature is vested with power to enact such statute.

2. The next question for consideration is whether section 373 of the Criminal Code of 1902 is unconstitutional, on the ground that the title and body of the statute do not correspond. We have failed to find in the record where the circuit judge ruled, or was requested to rule, upon this question. The assignment of error cannot, however, be sustained. The words "Forgery and Offenses against the Currency" do not form the title of an act, but are merely inserted in the Criminal Code for convenience in indicating the subject-matter of that chapter.

3. The remaining exceptions raise the question whether there was any testimony tending to sustain the allegations of the indictment that were put in issue and contested by the defendant. In order to constitute forgery by uttering or publishing a forged instrument of writing, three important factors are requisite: (1) It must be uttered or published as true and genuine. (2) It must be known by the party uttering or publishing it as false, forged, or counterfeited. (3) It must be with intent to prejudice, damage, or defraud another person. We will first consider whether there was any testimony to the effect that it was uttered or published by the defendant as true and genuine. It was offered in evidence by the defendant upon the trial of the action for specific performance of contract instituted against him by Scipio Chatman and James Chatman, and he testified that it was genuine.

The next question for consideration is whether there was any testimony tending to prove that the defendant knew that the writing uttered or published was false, forged, or counterfeited. There is abundance of testimony to the effect that said writing was forged. James Chatman testified that he did not sign the lease. Scipio Chatman testified that James Chatman did not sign it on the 4th of November, 1899, while he and James were at the house of defendant when the negotiations for the lease or purchase of the land were consummated. Marion W. Cato, who witnessed the agreement, signed in duplicate by Scipio Chatman and George W. Murray, testified that he did not sign his name as a witness to the instrument of writing set out in the indictment, which purports to have been signed by George W. Murray and James Chatman, and witnessed by him. Witnesses testified that there was only one kind of ink used by Murray and others, when the papers were signed on the 4th of November, 1899, and it was black, yet the alleged forged instrument was written in blue ink, and on white paper, while the duplicate writing signed by the defendant and Scipio Chatman was on blue paper. E. F. Miller testified that he printed the blank on which the lease in question was written, along with others, for the defendant, during the early part of the year 1900. On those blanks then printed, appear the numbers "190" in two places. It is at least a reasonable inference from these facts that the defendant knew the writing was forged.

The next question that will be considered is whether there was testimony tending to show that the writing was uttered with a fraudulent intent. In 2 Bish. Cr. Proc. § 428, it is said: "That the defendant made false representations at the time of the uttering, that he fabricated a disposition to prove the forged writing genuine, that his statements concerning the source whence he obtained it have been contradictory, and other like equivocations and suspicious doings, may be shown against him." In 9 Enc. of Pl. & Pr. 561, we find the following: "It is not necessary to state how the instrument could have been used for the purpose of fraud. It is enough if it appear from the character of the instrument, together with the provisions of the statute, that it might have been so used in connection with other facts, real or simulated, either then existing, or with which it was to be afterwards connected." This is quoted with approval in State v. Bullock, 54 S. C. 300, 32 S. E. 424. The rule is thus stated in State v. Fuller, 1 Bay, 245, 246, 1 Am. Dec. 610: "In the present case the indictment states that the note was passed, knowing of the forgery, with intent to defraud." The verdict finds the uttering, knowing of the forgery. The facts which constitute the offense are here found. The intent is only matter of circumstance, which naturally follows and springs out of the facts. No other than a fraudulent intent can be inferred, when a man makes or passes a false deed as and for a true one. The law will presume, as in the foregoing cases (in odium fraudis), that it was done with "a fraudulent intention."

The defendant testified that he did not know until the proceedings for specific performance were commenced that the parties claimed that only one of them had signed the contract; and afterwards, when he found out that only one had signed, he mentioned it in his answer. The following appears in the testimony of the defendant: "Q. You have stated that up to the time these proceedings were started you thought both these parties signed the contract? A. Yes, sir. Q. And when this complaint was served, and you saw only Scipio Chatman had signed this contract, you began to look up your papers, and you found that paper signed by James Chatman? A. Yes, sir. Q. And you set up in your answer that Scipio Chatman didn't make any contract with you, but that James Chatman did so, and that he had abandoned the land and gone away? A. Yes, sir; and so he had." Also the following: "Well, you have stated to the counsel that when you swore out this notice and affidavit to turn these people off, that you swore it out as having been a contract with the two of them? A. Yes, sir. Q. And afterwards, when you found only one had signed, you mentioned it in your answer? A. Yes, sir." Marion W. Cato testified that the defendant approached him about testifying in the case, and said he wanted him to say he witnessed "those papers." The testimony tended to prove that there was a scheme on the part of the defendant to show that only James Chatman signed the lease, and that he had abandoned the land and gone away. This would have been prejudicial to the rights of Scipio Chatman. The question whether there was a fraudulent intent depended upon all the facts and circumstances of the case, and we are unable to say that the verdict is without any testimony to support it.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. After careful consideration of the petition herein, the court is satisfied that no material question of law has been either overlooked or disregarded.

It is therefore ordered that the petition be dismissed, and that the order heretofore granted staying the remittitur be revoked.

(73 S. C. 450)

GREENWOOD GROCERY CO. v. CANADIAN COUNTY MILL & ELEVATOR CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 17, 1905.)

SALE—RESERVATION OF TITLE.

Where a seller shipped the goods with a bill of lading providing for delivery to consignee on payment of the draft attached, it is prima facie evidence of a reservation of title and right to the goods until payment of the draft, and the buyer obtains no right to possession by tender of less than the amount called for by the draft.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 43, Cent. Dig. Sales, § 547.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Greenwood County; Gary, Judge.

Action by the Greenwood Grocery Company against the Canadian County Mill & Elevator Company. From an order refusing to dissolve an attachment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. K. Blake and Caldwell & Giles, for appellant. Sheppards, Grier & Park, for respondent.

WOODS, J. The complaint in this cause is to recover damages for breach of a contract to deliver a car load of flour to the plaintiff. The defendant being a foreign corporation, an attachment was issued to obtain jurisdiction and under the warrant the flour was seized in the hands of the railroad company at Greenwood, S. C. The defendant moved to dissolve the attachment, on the ground that it appeared from the complaint and the affidavit the flour was the property of the plaintiff and not of the defendant, and hence the court was without jurisdiction. The motion was refused and defendant appeals.

The essential facts stated in the complaint and the affidavit are as follows: The defendant, Canadian County Mill & Elevator Company, a corporation resident in El Reno, Okl., contracted to sell and deliver to plaintiff, Greenwood Grocery Company, at Greenwood, in this state, 250 barrels of flour at $4.50 per barrel. The defendant consigned to the plaintiff the flour, and sent draft on plaintiff, with bill of lading attached, to the Bank of Greenwood, but the draft required payment for the flour at $5.50 per barrel, instead of $4.50, the contract price. Plaintiff tendered to the bank the contract price and demanded the bill of lading, but the bank refused to accept less than the full amount of defendant's draft, and, upon plaintiff's refusal to pay more than the contract price, withheld the bill of lading. Thereupon the plaintiff brought this action for damages, attaching the flour in the hands of the railroad. The defendant's position is that when the flour was delivered to the carrier consigned to the plaintiff, it ceased to be the property of the defendant, and became the property of the plaintiff, subject only to the right of stoppage in transitu, and that therefore the attachment must fail.

1. The general rule is that an attachment will not be dissolved, on the ground that the defendant has no title to the property, or that it is the property of the plaintiff. The defendant's lack of interest in the property would affect the title of the purchaser under the attachment, but not the validity of the process. Drake on Attachments, § 417. As said in Metts v. Insurance Company, 17 S. C. 120, 123: "The attachment is based on facts disconnected with the property, and it must stand or fall upon these facts." But it is manifest this reasoning does not apply where the court obtains jurisdiction of a nonresident by virtue of the attachment of his or its property in the state. In such case, the jurisdiction and the validity of the attachment depend upon the defendant having property in the state, and if this fact does not appear, it is fatal. 4 Cyc. 775. In this case the flour is the property in this state alleged to belong to defendant, and if the title to that has passed from the defendant to the plaintiff, the attachment should be dissolved.

2. The sole question, therefore, is whether by drawing on the plaintiff with the bill of lading attached to the draft and refusing to deliver the bill of lading without payment of the draft, the defendant retained title and right of possession of the property. The effect of a bill of lading issued by the carrier who is a third party, on the title to the property as between the consignor and consignee is a question of fact depending not only on the terms of the paper itself, but on the intention of the parties as expressed by their dealings with each other. 1 Benjamin on Sales, §§ 568, 579, 580; Emery v. Irving National Bank (Ohio) 18 Am. Rep. 299; 24 A. & E. Enc. Law, 1066; Hobart v. Littlefield, 13 R. I. 341; Merchants' National Bank v. Bangs, 102 Mass. 291; Kentucky Refining Co. v. Globe Refining Co. (Ky.) 47 S. W. 602, 42 L. R. A. 353, 84 Am. St. Rep. 468; Chandler v. Sprague, 38 Am. Dec. 418, note; 23 Eng. Rul. Cases, 383, note. The fact that the bill of lading is taken, making the goods deliverable to the order of the vendor, who is himself the consignor, is very strong prima facie evidence that the vendor in delivering the goods to the carrier intended to reserve the title until payment of the purchase money; and when a draft for the price is drawn on the purchaser with such bill of lading attached, the title does not ordinarily pass to him until the draft is paid. Bank v. Rowan, 23 S. C. 339, 55 Am. Rep. 26; 1 Benjamin on Sales, § 567; Porter on Bills of Lading, § 482; Dows v. National Exchange Bank, 91 U. S. 618, 23 L. Ed. 214; Kentucky Refining Co. v. Globe Refining Co. (Ky.) 47 S. W. 602, 42 L. R. A. 353, 84 Am. St. Rep. 468; Hopkins v. Cowen (Md.) 44 Atl. 1062, 47 L. R. A. 124; Emery v. Irving National Bank, 18 Am. Rep. 299; National Bank v. Crocker, 111 Mass. 167; Bank v. Cummings (Tenn.) 18 S. W. 115, 24 Am. St. Rep. 618; Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank v. Logan, 74 N. Y. 568; Lanfeur v. Blossman, 45 Am. Dec. 76; Stollenwerck v. Thacher, 115 Mass. 224; Erwin v. Harris, 87 Ga. 333, 13 S. E. 513. But this presumption may be rebutted by other circumstances and previous dealing of the parties evidencing a different intention. Porter on Bills of Lading, § 483.

In this case, however, it seems by the terms of the bill of lading the goods were deliverable to the consignee. The presumption therefore was that the consignor intended the title to pass. Emery v. Irving National Bank, 18 Am. Rep. 299; 1 Benjamin on Sales, § 596. If, therefore, the railroad company had delivered the goods to the consignee without the surrender of the bill of lading and without notice of any reservation of title and possession, it would not be liable to the consignor, though he actually intended to reserve the title and possession until payment of his draft for the price. Bank v. Railway Co., 25 S. C. 224. As between the vendor and purchaser, the authorities leave no room to doubt, however, that even if the bill of lading provides for delivery to the consignee, yet if the consignor draws for the price attaching the bill of lading to the draft, this is sufficient evidence of his intention to reserve the title and right of possession until the draft is paid, and the consignee is not entitled to the goods until payment. Emery v. Irving National Bank, 18 Am. Rep. 290; Chandler v. Sprague, 38 Am. Dec. 419, note; Bank of Rochester v. Jones, 55 Am. Dec. 290; Cayuga County National Bank v. Daniels, 47 N. Y. 631; Marine Bank v. Wright, 48 N. Y. 1; Halsey v. Warden, 25 Kan. 128; First National Bank of Green Bay v. Dearborn, 15 Am. Rep. 92. That the intention of the shipper as evidenced by his action in respect to the bill of lading is controlling, is supported by the elaborate opinions in Shepherd v. Harrison, 23 E. Rul. Cases, 349, especially the opinions of Kelly, C. B., and Lord Chelmsford. Here, according to the statement of the complaint and the affidavit, not only did the defendant, the consignor, express its intention to reserve the jus disponendi by presenting through a bank the draft with the bill of lading attached, but the plaintiff expressed this to be also its understanding of the contract by offering to pay the price, as it claimed it to be, as a condition precedent to acquiring possession of the bill of lading, and through it of the flour.

It is argued, however, that according to the complaint, which must be taken as true, the plaintiff tendered the real price agreed upon, and that by such tender he became entitled to the flour without respect to the amount of the draft. This argument is not without force, but it is not convincing nor is it sustained by authority. Even the important case of Mirabita v. Imperial Ottoman Bank, 3 Ex. Div. 164, cannot fairly be said to go to the extent of holding the buyer entitled to recover possession upon tender of any amount less than the draft. The question whether the right to possession would pass to the vendee upon tender of less than the amount called for by the draft if the less amount tendered be the true amount of the purchase money, did not arise and was not decided. There the draft for the purchase money with the bill of lading attached had been sent to the defendant bank, with instructions to deliver the bill of lading upon payment of the draft. The plaintiff tendered the full amount of the draft, and demanded the bill of lading. The bank refused to deliver it, claiming it had incurred freight charges which must also be paid, whereas it had done nothing to make itself liable for freight. The case was, therefore, one in which it appeared the defendant bank, on its own responsibility, had refused to accept the full amount claimed by the vendor as expressed in the draft, upon payment of which the bill of lading was to be delivered to the vendee. Under these facts, the bank was held liable to the vendee. Lord Justice Cotton uses the following language: "So, if the vendor deals with or claims to retain the bill of lading in order to secure the contract price, as when he sends forward the bill of lading with a bill of exchange attached, with directions that the bill of lading is not to be delivered to the purchaser till acceptance or payment of the bill of exchange, the appropriation is not absolute, but until acceptance of the draft, or payment, or tender of the price, is conditional only, and until such acceptance, or payment, or tender, the property in the goods does not pass to the purchaser; and so it was decided in Turner v. Trustees of Liverpool Docks, 6 Ex. 543; 20 L. J. (Ex.) 393; Shepherd v. Harrison, Law Rep. 4 Q. B. 196; Ogg v. Shuter, 1 C. P. D. 47. But if the bill of lading has been dealt with only to secure the contract price, there is neither principle nor authority for holding that in such case the goods shipped for the purpose of completing the contract do not on payment or tender by the purchaser of the contract price vest in him. When this occurs, there is a performance of the condition subject to which the appropriation was made, and everything which, according to the intention of the parties, is necessary to transfer the property is done; and, in my opinion, under such circumstances, the property does on payment or tender of the price, pass to the purchaser." From the context and the facts of the case, as hereinbefore stated, it is, we think, manifest that the court is referring to payment or tender of the price as expressed in the draft accompanying the bill of lading, and not some price which the vendee contends to be the true one, different from that expressed in the draft, upon payment of which the bill of lading was to be delivered. The defendant's argument on this point leaves out of view the principle that as between plaintiff and defendant in the circumstances here appearing, the flour was shipped on condition the the draft—not the amount claimed by the plaintiff as the true price—should be paid by the plaintiff before it should have the flour. Until the draft is paid or there is tender of the amount it calls for, the contract is executory, and while in some exceptional cases an executory contract for the sale of chattels may be enforced by an action for specific performance, the rule is that a buyer's action of claim and delivery to recover possession can be founded only on an executed contract of sale. 2 Benjamin on Sales, § 1306.

Even if the draft and bill of lading had been sent to the plaintiff itself under such conditions as exist here, it could not have retained the bill of lading, which was the symbol of the goods, without payment, or at least acceptance, of the draft. 1 Benjamin on Sales, § 570; 1 Daniel on Neg. Instruments, §§ 1734, 1734a-1734c; Tiedemann on Commercial Paper, § 494; Bank of Rochester v. Jones (N. Y.) 55 Am. Dec. 290; Cayuga County National Bank v. Daniels, 47 N. Y. 631; Marine Bank v. Wright, 48 N. Y. 1. It requires no argument to show that it is of the utmost importance to commerce that a bill of lading should have full effect as an instrument by which a vendor or shipper may retain his right of possession—jus disponendi—using it as a symbol of the property to express his intention as to the conditions upon which the property should be delivered. The courts of this country and of England have with practical unanimity given the bill of lading this force. But even if the defendant's view were correct, that the tender of the true price as stated by the plaintiff, without respect to the amount required by the draft accompanying the bill of lading, passed to the plaintiff the title and right to possession, the plaintiff would still have his election to sue for the property itself, or for damages for breach of the contract in refusing to deliver the goods. 24 A. & E. Ency. Law, 1149, 1150. On the facts as presented in the complaint and the affidavit, the defendant is prima facie the owner of the flour.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(72 S. C. 437)

GARNER et al. v. GARNER et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 10, 1905.)

EQUITY—DISMISSAL OF BILL—INSUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

A motion to dismiss a bill on the ground that there was no testimony tending to sustain the allegations thereof was, in effect, a motion for nonsuit, which cannot properly be made in an equitable action.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 19, Cent. Dig. Equity, § 827.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Florence County; Dantzler, Judge.

Action by John S. Garner and others against Joseph F. Garner and others. From an order overruling an order of the master dismissing the complaint, certain defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. F. Dargan and George Galletley, for appellants. Green & Hines and J. P. McNeill, for respondents.

GARY, A. J. This is an action to set aside certain transactions for fraud, to subject the lands described in the complaint to the payment of the claims therein mentioned, and for an accounting as to rents and profits. By order of the court a referee was appointed to take the testimony and report his conclusions of law and fact. At the close of the plaintiffs' testimony a motion was made to dismiss the complaint as to the defendants Arthur R. Garner and Maggie Garner, on grounds which are set out in the report of the referee.

The report of the referee was as follows: "This case was referred to me by order of the court, bearing date the _____ day of _____, to take testimony and report on all issues. Pursuant to this order, I have taken the testimony, which is herewith submitted. At the conclusion of the testimony on behalf of the plaintiffs, the attorneys for defendants moved to dismiss the case as to the defendants Arthur R. Garner and Maggie Garner, on the following grounds, to wit: First, upon the ground of an utter failure to prove and sustain the action against them, under rule 30 of the circuit court, and because the proof adduced before the referee was insufficient to support the cause of action against the said defendants. Second, because it appears from the pleadings and proof of the plaintiffs that the land in question was sold for $3,428, and that the plaintiffs have received the same, and have not returned or tendered the same to the defendants, or either of them. After hearing argument, the motion is granted, on the ground first stated, to wit, because I find that there is not sufficient testimony to make out a case against the defendants Arthur R. Garner and Maggie Garner."

Both the plaintiffs and the defendants Arthur R. Garner and Maggie Garner filed exceptions to the report. His honor, the presiding judge, made the following order: "This cause came on to be heard on exceptions to the report of the referee, to whom was referred all issues of law and fact. A motion by the defendants Arthur R. Garner and Maggie Garner was made, on the close of plaintiff's testimony, to dismiss the complaint as to them upon grounds fully set forth in their motion. The referee granted defendants' motion on the first ground set forth, dismissing the complaint as to Arthur R. Garner and Maggie Garner. It appearing from the testimony that there was some evidence going to prove that at the sale of the real estate, mentioned in the complaint as having been made at Darlington in 1884, there was an attempt to chill the bid at such sale, which resulted in sale of same at less than its real value, to the detriment and injury of the rights of the plaintiffs, then wards of the defendant Joseph F. Garner, and it appearing that said Arthur R. Garner and Maggie Garner were advantaged by the chilling of the said bid, the court is of the opinion that the referee erred in dismissing the complaint as to those defendants. It is so ordered. Ordered, further, that the cause be remanded to the referee to take further testimony therein, responsive to the allegations in the pleadings."

The said defendants appealed upon exceptions assigning error in reversing the referee upon the first ground of the motion to dismiss the complaint, and in refusing to reverse his ruling upon the second of said motion. The motion to dismiss the complaint on the ground that there was no testimony tending to sustain the allegations thereof was, in effect, a motion for a nonsuit, which cannot properly be made in an equitable action. Woolfolk v. Mfg. Co., 22 S. C. 332; McClenaghan v. McEachern, 47 S. C. 446, 25 S. E. 296; Barnes v. Rodgers, 54 S. C. 115, 31 S. E. 885; Gilreath v. Furman, 57 S. C. 289, 35 S. E. 516; Railway v. Beaudrot, 63 S. C. 266, 41 S. E. 299. The general principle is thus stated in 6 Enc. of Pl. & Fr. 830: "Nonsuits are applicable only to cases arising before common-law tribunals, and cannot be resorted to in actions of an equitable nature, unless by virtue of statutory authority." In cases brought to trial before a jury, the presiding judge rules upon the questions of law and the jury determines the issues of fact. The object of the nonsuit is to withdraw the case from the jury upon a question of law to be decided by the presiding judge. It is the dual nature of the trial that gives rise to the practice of making a motion for nonsuit. There is no necessity for resorting to this practice in chancery cases, as the questions of law and issues of fact are to be determined by the same person except in certain cases not necessary to mention. The case under consideration is a good illustration that it is far better for the referee to decide the issues after all the testimony has been submitted, instead of granting a nonsuit or dismissal at the close of the plaintiffs' testimony, for the reason that the court, when called upon to decide whether there was any testimony to sustain the allegations of the complaint, is compelled to canvass the evidence without the aid of the referee's findings of fact, as required by rule 30 of the circuit court.

Another reason why the practice of granting nonsuits should not be sanctioned in equity cases is that it may not have the effect of a final judgment as to the rights of the parties, and the same question may afterwards arise when the plaintiff is able to supply the testimony which was lacking, and thus prolong litigation. But, waiving this objection, we are satisfied that the order of the referee was properly set aside by his honor, the circuit judge. As the case will be remanded for further proceedings, the court deems it advisable to refrain from a discussion of the testimony in detail until the findings of fact have been made in the manner provided by rule 30, hereinbefore mentioned.

It is the judgment of this court that the order of the circuit court be affirmed.

JONES, J., concurs in the result.

WOODS, J. (concurring in the result). I express no opinion as to whether the evidence is strong enough to justify a final decree in favor of the plaintiffs, annulling the sale of the land as against the defendants Arthur R. Garner and Maggie Garner, who set up the defense of purchasers for valuable consideration without notice; nor as to whether the circuit judge was right in holding the mere fact of these defendants being advantaged by the chilling of the bidding at the sale when Joseph F. Garner, their grantor, bought, would be sufficient to set aside the sale as to them. But I think the relationship of the Garners and the evidence of lack of means of Arthur R. Garner and Maggie Garner to make the purchase were sufficient to make it safer to refuse a motion to dismiss the complaint without hearing all the evidence that either side had to offer.

I do not assent, however, to the view taken in the opinion of Associate Justice GARY, that the circuit judge should never dismiss an equity cause upon hearing the evidence of the plaintiff, however conclusively it may show he is not entitled to recover. The authorities cited in the majority opinion fully establish that where an issue of fact is referred to a jury a nonsuit cannot be granted. The philosophical reason for this is that an order of nonsuit is not conclusive of the issue, and therefore there should be a verdict, which is conclusive, as contemplated by the statute. But on the trial of an issue from an equity cause submitted to a jury the practice of directing a verdict for defendant when it is plain the plaintiff has not established his case is sustained in Brock v. Nelson, 29 S. C. 49, 6 S. E. 899, and Gilreath v. Furman, 57 S. C. 289, 35 S. E. 516. It follows inevitably that where the circuit judge is trying the cause on evidence taken in open court, or by a master or referee under the order of the court, and it appears clearly from the plaintiff's own showing that in no view of the facts could there be a decree in his favor, the circuit judge may dismiss the complaint without consuming the time and labor necessary to take the evidence on the part of the defendant. To curtail the power of the circuit court in this regard would, in my opinion, be fruitful of delay and unnecessary labor. No doubt the case should be quite clear to warrant such action, because in such cases, as in cases where nonsuits are granted or verdicts directed, there is always the possibility of delay from the necessity of a new trial, if on appeal this court should regard the evidence worthy of rebuttal.

(72 S. C. 453)

GREGG v. BANK OF COLUMBIA.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 17, 1905.)

1. TROVER AND CONVERSION—DRAFT FOR COLLECTION — SALE BY BANK OF GOODS SHIPPED.

Where a draft with a bill of lading attached is sent to a bank, with instructions to notify the shipper if the draft is unpaid, it cannot sell the goods to a third party without notice to the owner; and, if it does, it is guilty of conversion.

2. PLEDGE—CONVERSION BY PLEDGEE—DEMAND—TENDER.

Where a pledgor had no notice of a conversion of the pledged chattel and an application of the proceeds by the person converting the same to his debt until after the conversion, he may bring an action for damages without tender of the amount due and demand for the return of the property.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 40, Cent. Dig. Pledges, § 92.]

3. TROVER AND CONVERSION—DAMAGES.

In conversion of personal property, the jury may give the highest market value up to the time of the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 47, Cent. Dig. Trover and Conversion, §§ 263, 264.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Richland County; Purdy, Judge.

Action by Joseph Gregg against the Bank of Columbia. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

D. W. Robinson, for appellant. Barron & Ray, for respondent.

WOODS, J. The Bank of Columbia, defendant in this action, appeals from a judgment recovered against it for damages for the conversion of three car loads of corn. The exceptions charge error in refusing to grant a nonsuit, in the admission of evidence, in the charge to the jury, and in refusing a new trial.

A brief statement of the evidence will so show the true relation of the parties and the rights and duties which grew out of that relation that the case will be relieved of much apparent complication. The business of the plaintiff, Joseph Gregg, in the city of Chicago, was to ship grain, usually on orders, but occasionally to brokers, for sale on his own account. The three carloads of corn with which we are now concerned had been bought on order, but the orders were canceled before shipment, and thereupon the plaintiff sent them to J. D. Miot, a grain broker, of Columbia, S. C., and made separate drafts on him with bills of lading attached for each car of corn, amounting in the aggregate to $1,238.05. These drafts were in favor of Wanzer & Co., a large brokerage house of Chicago, who advanced to Gregg the amount of the drafts, and who in turn placed the drafts, with the bills of lading attached, to their own credit in American Trust & Savings Bank of Chicago. This bank sent the drafts and bills of lading to the Bank of Columbia, with instructions to collect and remit proceeds for its credit to National Bank of the Republic in New York. Across the left end of each of the drafts was the following instruction: "Do not surrender documents until draft is paid. If not paid promptly notify ———, Chicago, giving reasons and hold for instructions." The Bank of Columbia received the papers on June 7, 1901, and after several refusals by Miot to accept or pay the drafts, returned them to the Chicago bank. A second time they were sent for collection, and returned after a like unsuccessful effort to collect. Upon receiving them a third time, after again presenting them to Miot, the Bank of Columbia sold the corn to a third party on July 25, 1901, for the face of the drafts, storage charges, and freight, and remitted the amount of the drafts, less exchange, to National Bank of the Republic for credit of American Trust & Savings Bank. The plaintiff had no notice of the sale until receipt of a letter from Miot, dated August 7, 1901, advising of his inability to deliver a carload of corn he had contracted to sell, because all the corn had been already sold by the Bank of Columbia. In the meantime corn had advanced in price. The plaintiff's claim was for $720, alleged to be the difference between the price realized for the corn and the highest market price from the date of the alleged conversion to the time of the trial. The defendant endeavored to prove as a material fact that the intention of Gregg, the drawer, was not, as he alleged it was, to make Miot, the drawee, merely his broker to sell the corn, pay the drafts, and account for the sale, but that Miot should buy the corn and become himself absolute owner on payment of the drafts. Assuming that the evidence left this issue of fact in doubt, it was quite immaterial, in view of the undisputed documentary evidence, what the original position and rights of Miot were, because, if the jury had taken defendant's view, when Miot refused payment of the drafts, which was the condition of his acquiring ownership and possession of the corn, the ownership stood as if the drafts had never left the bank in Chicago. Although the drafts were returned to the Chicago bank and resent for collection several times, the original instruction to hold and notify in case of nonpayment was not only altered, but was each time resent with the papers. If Gregg sold the corn to Miot on condition that he should pay the amount of the drafts as the purchase price, as the defendant contends he did, then he was bound to take the price agreed upon from Miot, notwithstanding a rise in the price of corn, but the Bank of Columbia had no right to bind him to sell to another at the same price or at any price. While the bank of Columbia no doubt acted in good faith, the documents in its hands afforded no justification for the sale of the corn.

1. The Chicago owner of the corn had through the drafts and bills of lading invested the Bank of Columbia with legal authority to offer the corn to Miot—whether as purchaser or as agent of the plaintiff, is not material; but when he refused to take it, the authority of the bank was at an end, and it had no more right to sell the corn to another than if it had never had the drafts. Such a sale by the bank was therefore as much an unwarranted conversion of the property of the owner as a sale made by a stranger would have been. This was not a case where an emergency had arisen. There was no danger of the loss of the corn. It is plain that even the Chicago bank or Wanzer & Co. had no right to order a sale of the corn, if Gregg was the owner, without notice to him and demand on him for payment of his debt, and surely the defendant, a mere collecting agent, had no right to sell without notice to any of the parties concerned. Therefore, the circuit judge might well have charged the jury that the papers held by the Bank of Columbia gave it no authority to sell, and the defendant certainly could not complain when it was left to the jury to say whether, under all the testimony, including the papers, the defendant bank had such authority, and, if they found it had no authority, then it would be guilty of conversion.

Another issue of fact was whether the plaintiff, in drawing the drafts on Wanzer & Co., with the bills of lading attached, and receiving the amount expressed on their face from Wanzer & Co., actually sold the corn or only pledged it as security for money loaned. This issue was plainly stated to the jury, with the manifestly correct instruction, if the plaintiff had unconditionally parted with the ownership and right of possession, he could not recover for the conversion.

2. But the most serious question is whether the plaintiff could maintain an action for conversion, even if it is conceded he had not parted entirely with the ownership of the corn, but merely pledged it for money borrowed from Wanzer & Co. by indorsing the bills of lading. The defendant made this question by a motion for nonsuit and by appropriate requests to charge. The ordinary relation of pledgor and pledgee imports general ownership of the pledge by the pledgor, and a special property or lien of the pledgee accompanying the possession. Since an interest in property is not sufficient to sustain an action for conversion, unless there is also the right to possession, and since that right is in the pledgee and not the pledgor, the latter cannot, as a general rule, maintain such an action until his right of possession has been regained by payment or tender of the debt secured by the pledge and demand for the return of the property. There was no proof in this case that plaintiff made a tender to Wanzer & Co., or the Chicago bank, or the defendant, or that he demanded a return of the property from any of them. There was evidence, however, to the effect that the defendant paid Wanzer & Co.'s debt to the Chicago bank, which credited the amount to Wanzer & Co. and thus paid the debt of the plaintiff to that firm. The payment was made by remitting the proceeds of the alleged unauthorized sale, and manifestly, if the plaintiff had with knowledge of the conversion acquiesced in this application of the proceeds for his benefit, he would be held to ratify the sale. But, as we have seen, there was evidence that the plaintiff did not know until after the 7th of August of the sale, which had been made on the 25th of July. When the defendant gave notice it had sold the corn, this was notice it was out of its power, or that of the Chicago bank, or Wanzer & Co., to surrender it to plaintiff. This notice imported that tender and demand would be futile, and that the only remedy of plaintiff would be to recover damages for the conversion, in estimating which the benefits received by the plaintiff must be taken into the account. Gage v. Allison, 1 Brev. 495, 2 Am. Dec. 682; Jones on Pledges, § 748; 22 A. & E. Ency. Law, 879. The plaintiff having the remedy of a suit at law for conversion, an equitable action for accounting, which defendant insists was the proper action, could not have been maintained. Lacombe v. Forrestall, 123 U. S. 562, 8 Sup. Ct. 247, 31 L. Ed. 255. The equitable doctrine of accounting had no application, therefore, and was stated by the circuit judge to indicate that, if the jury reached the conclusion the Chicago bank or Wanzer & Co., as pledgees, in order to collect their money authorized the sale made by the Bank of Columbia, the remedy then would have been on the equity side of the court to obtain an accounting, and this action could not be maintained. This instruction was not unfavorable to defendant, and clearly was a correct statement of the law.

3. The defendant next submits, if it was liable at all, the jury should have been confined in estimating damages to the value of the property at the time of conversion, and it was error to charge: "In a case of conversion of personal property the jury may give the highest market value up to the time of the trial." It will be observed the instruction was not that the plaintiff in all cases of conversion is entitled to recover the highest market value up to the time of trial, but that the jury may adopt that as the measure of damages. This was a correct statement of the law as laid down in this state. Carter v. Du Pre, 18 S. C. 179. The just measure in some circumstances may be the value at time of conversion, as was considered by the court in Reynolds v. Witte, 13 S. C. 9, 36 Am. Rep. 678; in other circumstances the just measure might clearly be the highest market value; and the jury may adopt the one or the other, according to their view of the justice of the case. No doubt, if either measure were capriciously adopted, the circuit judge would have the power to relieve against the injustice by ordering a new trial. For instance, if the conversion were made a bona fide claim of right without grievous wrong or oppression, and it appeared reasonably certain the plaintiff would have sold about the time of the conversion, manifest injustice would be done to make an enormous sporadic rise in the market price, due to abnormal conditions occurring long after the conversion, the measure of damages. On the other hand, to give only the value at the time of conversion would, in some circumstances, be equivalent to requiring the owner of the property to sell his property at a time and for a price fixed by a wrongdoer. In this case, the jury took as a basis the approximate, if not the exact, value at the time of the conversion, and the defendant has no reason to complain.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(140 N. C. 154)

BROWN v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 5, 1905.)

TRIAL—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL—RIGHT TO OPEN AND CLOSE.

The tender of witnesses by defendant's counsel to counsel for plaintiff, in order that their fees may be taxed as costs in the event plaintiff is cast in the suit, does not amount to the introduction of evidence by defendant, within the meaning of superior court rule 3, providing that, when no evidence is introduced by defendant, the right of reply and conclusion shall belong to his counsel, and does not take from defendant the right to open and close the argument.

Appeal from Superior Court, McDowell County; Justice, Judge.

Action by J. R. Brown against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

S. J. Ervin, for appellant. Justice & Pless, for appellee.

BROWN, J. The plaintiff offered evidence tending to prove that his mule was killed on the defendant's track at a crossing by coming in contact with a box car which partly obstructed the crossing, and which had been negligently left there for some time in such position by the defendant's agents. There was a motion for judgment of nonsuit, and, this being denied, the defendant excepted. The defendant offered no evidence.

After the argument was begun, the defendant asked to tender the witnesses summoned by it to the counsel for the plaintiff. This was done in order that they might be taxed in the event the plaintiff was cast, under the ruling in Loftis v. Raxter, 68 N. C. 340, and Henderson v. Williams, 120 N. C. 341, 27 S. E. 30. The plaintiff's counsel proceeded to examine one of these witnesses before the jury, and after examining this witness claimed the right to open and conclude the argument. The court ruled that the tender of the witnesses by the defendant's counsel amounted to introducing evidence, and that according to the practice of the court the plaintiff should open and conclude the argument, and the defendant excepted to this ruling. In the rules of practice adopted by the justices of this court for the government of the superior courts, it is provided: "In all cases, civil or criminal, when no evidence is introduced by the defendant, the right of reply and conclusion shall belong to his counsel." Rule 3, 128 N. C. 655. In all other cases, the right to open and conclude the argument is left to the discretion of the judge, and his decision is not reviewable. Rule 6, Id. 656. We do not think the tendering of the witnesses for the evident purpose of having their fees taxed as costs amounted to the introduction of evidence within the letter or spirit of rule 3 above quoted. The introduction of evidence includes something more than the tendering of a witness. One of the ablest law writers, Thomas Starkie, defines "evidence" as follows: "That which is legally submitted to a jury to enable them to decide upon the questions in dispute or issue as pointed out by the pleadings, and as distinguished from all comment and argument, is termed evidence." Starkie on Evidence, p. 8, § 3. Mr. Elliott says that Starkie's definition is among the clearest and best that has ever been framed. Elliott, § 6. The word "evidence" is used in rule 3 in the sense and with the significance given to it by the text and judicial writers. Witnesses are vehicles or means of proof. Evidence is the proof itself, offered to establish or disprove an alleged fact, the truth of which is in dispute. Unless the party tendering a witness examines such witness with the view thereby to elicit proof in support of his side of the controversy, he cannot be said to introduce evidence.

If we should adopt the construction placed upon the rule by the court below, then defendants will in all cases have to surrender the right to have their counsel open and conclude the argument, under the terms of the rule, or else forfeit the right to have their witness fees taxed as costs, although the plaintiff should be cast in the suit. We are quite sure such a construction or intention was not in the minds of our predecessors when the rule was formulated. We have examined the cases of Cureton v. Garrison, 111 N. C. 271, 16 S. E. 338, and Sitton v. Lumber Co., 135 N. C. 542, 47 S. E. 609, and neither of them decides the point presented upon this appeal. They relate to the taxation of costs only. The object of tendering the witnesses is to give the adversary party an opportunity to test their materiality, and to prevent oppression by summoning a multitude of immaterial witnesses for the purpose of increasing costs. This disposition of the case renders it unnecessary to consider the remaining exceptions of the appellant.

New trial.

(140 N. C. 135)

OYSTER v. IOLA MIN. CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 28, 1905.)

1. PARTIES—DEFENDANTS—JOINDER.

Where an individual with the consent of a corporation converted the corporation and its assets to his own use, and manipulated the corporation for his own benefit in a reckless manner, and secreted and disposed of its property to defeat the collection of a debt due plaintiff, and the corporation and individual were so intimately connected in the transactions that it would be almost impossible to investigate their acts unless both were brought into court, plaintiff could join both as parties defendant to an action to recover the property converted by them, and for a receiver and injunction to protect plaintiff's interest in such property, and secure the payment of his judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Montgomery County; Cooke, Judge.

Action by Charles C. Oyster against the Iola Mining Company and another. From a judgment overruling a demurrer to the complaint, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

C. W. Tillett, Osborn, Maxwell & Keerana, and E. E. Raper, for appellants. H. C. Niles, Adams, Jerome & Armfield, and W. J. Adams, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. This is an appeal from a judgment overruling a demurrer to the complaint. Briefly stated, the grounds of demurrer are: (1) Misjoinder of parties. (2) Misjoinder of causes of action. (3) Failure to state a cause of action against Iola Mining Co. (4) Failure to state a cause of action against M. L. Jones. These are the only defendants. Without fully analyzing the complaint, it charges that the defendant Jones, with the consent of the defendant mining company and its manager, has wrongfully converted the entire corporation and all its assets to his own use, and has manipulated and used the corporation and its property for his own benefit exclusively; that as manager, and with the consent of the corporation, he has taken exclusive possession of the entire property of the corporation; that his management has been reckless and improvident; that he has disposed of the products of the mine for the deliberate purpose of defrauding the stockholders of the mining company, including the plaintiff, and preventing an enforcement of their rights.

One general object of the complaint is to recover property belonging to the plaintiff, which it is alleged that the two defendants confederated to destroy or place beyond the reach of the plaintiff. The 32,000 shares of stock mentioned in the first cause of action are alleged to have been wrongfully disposed of by the two defendants, and the proceeds divided between them. The 75,000 shares named in the second cause of action, it is alleged, were fraudulently declared forfeited, and were sold by both defendants, and the proceeds applied in part to a debt of the corporation already paid. The fourth cause of action alleges that Jones concurred in this disposition of the property to defeat the second cause of action; while the third clause, claiming $5,800 against the corporation is connected with the second by reason of the fact that $3,000 of the $5,800 went to the said corporation by reason of the fraudulent conversion of the stock mentioned in the second cause of action, and the allegation that Jones, with the consent of said company, has secreted and disposed of the property of the corporation to defeat the collection of the debt due the plaintiff. The complaint also asks for a receiver and injunction to protect the plaintiff's interest in the property, and to secure the payment of such judgment as he may recover. The two defendants are so intimately connected in these series of transactions that it would be almost impossible to investigate any of the grounds of complaint and unravel the tangled skein, unless both defendants are made parties, and have opportunity to be heard, and the whole series of transactions is gone into.

Under the former system of procedure at common law, where everything was calculated for the production of a single issue, it was essential to exclude all parties and causes of action save one, if possible. The present procedure more nearly resembles the former equity practice. "Where a general right is claimed, arising out of a series of transactions tending to one end, the plaintiff may join several causes of action against defendants who have distinct and separate interests, in order to a conclusion of the whole matter in one suit." Young v. Young, 81 N. C. 91. This has been recently followed in Fisher v. Trust Co., 138 N. C. 224, 50 S. E. 659, in which Benton v. Collins, 118 N. C. 196, 24 S. E. 122, and many other cases of similar purport are collected. Upon the allegations in the complaint, both defendants being called on to answer and having opportunity to defend, the whole matter can be inquired into, and the rights of all the parties properly adjusted better and more readily than if the action were chopped up into many distinct and several actions.

No error.

WALKER, J. (concurring in result). The complaint is so drawn that it is difficult to determine with certainty whether or not there has really been a misjoinder, and while this question is to be decided in the first instance, at least, by the complaint itself, it may sometimes turn out that there has, in fact, been a misjoinder, when it does not appear on the face of the pleading. In order to sustain the joinder of the causes of action in this case, it is necessary to give the allegations a very liberal construction under section 260 of the Code. If the object is to recover a debt due by the corporation for money borrowed from Mosser & Co., and to recover damages from Jones and the company for a wrongful conversion of the stock of Mosser & Co., and finally to charge them with mismanagement of the affairs of the company, and a tortious manipulation of its assets, for the purpose of defeating the recovery of the debt and of the damages for the conversion of the stock, the causes of action can be joined. Benton v. Collins, 118 N. C. 196, 24 S. E. 122. The objection to the pleading is that the plaintiff does not clearly and distinctly allege a joint liability of the company with Jones, though it was doubtless the intention of the pleader so to do. The confederacy between the two to defeat the plaintiff's rights is not set forth with that certainty and definiteness which the Code requires; but this defect should perhaps have been taken advantage of by motion, and not by demurrer. Code, § 261.

Again it appears, by implication at least, that the members of the firm of Mosser & Co. consented to the alleged wrongful acts of Jones, because it is alleged that the company consented, and they were stockholders, directors, and the principal officers of the company, and there is no allegation that they protested against what was contemplated to be done, and what was afterwards actually done by Jones. Whether Mosser & Co., plaintiff's assignors, gave their consent to the alleged wrongful acts in such a way as to deprive them of any right now to complain of them, is a question I prefer to decide when the facts are all before us, and not now upon the present meager statements of the complaint. There is ambiguity in the allegations of the complaint, but, under the circumstances, I do not feel justified in withholding my assent to the conclusion of the court, believing it better that the matter should be investigated when the facts will be shown with more clearness, and not seeing, at present, that any substantial right of the defendants is likely to be prejudiced thereby. The defendants, as has been said, could have had the allegations of the complaint made more definite and certain, in order "that the precise nature of the charge would be made apparent." Code, § 261. This was not done, for some good reason, I have no doubt, and, in the absence of a more definite statement, construing the complaint liberally, as required by section 260, I concur in the decision for the reasons already assigned, though my assent is not unreservedly given to all that is said in the opinion of the court. Care should be taken that we do not give too loose an interpretation to section 260 of the Code with respect to misjoinders, and too free a hand to pleaders in such cases. That section was enacted to prevent multifariousness and confusion in the trial of causes, which should always be avoided in pleading; and parties, who may otherwise be prejudiced, are entitled to its strict enforcement. "The bill," says Judge Story, "should not be multifarious, for if it is so it is demurrable, and may be dismissed by the court of its own accord, even if not objected to by the defendant. By multifariousness in a bill is meant the improperly joining in one bill distinct and independent matters, and thereby confounding them; as, for example, the uniting in one bill of several matters, perfectly distinct and unconnected, against one defendant, or the demand of several matters of a distinct and independent nature against several defendants in the same bill. In the latter case, the proceeding would be oppressive, because it would tend to load each defendant with an unnecessary burden of costs, by swelling the pleadings with the statement of the several claims of the other defendants with which he has no connection. In the former case, the defendant would be compellable to unite, in his answer and defense, different matters wholly unconnected with each other, and thus the proofs applicable to each would be apt to be confounded with each other, and great delays would be occasioned by waiting for the proofs respecting one of the matters, when the others might be fully ripe for hearing. Indeed courts of equity, in cases of this sort, are anxious to preserve some analogy to the comparative simplicity of proceedings at the common law, and thus to prevent confusion in their own pleadings, as well as in their own decrees." Story, Eq. Pl. § 271.

CONNOR, J., concurs in the concurring opinion.

(129 N. C. 534)

MILLS v. BISCOE LUMBER CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1905.)

1. DISCOVERY — STATUTES — PRODUCTION OF WRITINGS—DEPOSIT IN COURT.

Code, § 578, provides that the clerk or judge may order either party to give the other an inspection and copy, or permission to take a copy, of any papers, books, or documents under his control containing evidence relating to the merits of the action or defense. Held, that the statute confers no authority to order a party to deposit papers, books, or documents in the clerk's office.

2. SAME—ORDER—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Where, on appeal to the judge from an order of the clerk for deposit of books for inspection, made under Code, § 578, it was reversed, it being a discretionary matter and the order an administrative one not affecting the merits, it was not res judicata, and the motion could be renewed and a new order obtained.

Appeal from Superior Court, Montgomery County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by W. A. Mills against the Biscoe Lumber Company. From an order reversing an order of the clerk requiring plaintiff to give an inspection of certain papers, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hinsdale & Hinsdale, for appellant. Adams, Jerome & Armfield, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. Code, § 578, provides that the court—i. e., clerk (Code, § 182)—or judge "may in their discretion and upon due notice order either party to give to the other, within a specified time, an inspection and copy or permission to take a copy of any books, papers and documents in his possession or under his control containing evidence relating to the merits of the action or the defense therein." This was a motion in the cause by the defendant before the clerk for an inspection of papers, etc., of that nature in possession of the plaintiff. The clerk made an order requiring the plaintiff to "produce and deposit in the office of the clerk" certain papers described in the order, and that, "in order that the defendant, its agents or attorneys, may in the presence of the clerk examine and take copies thereof, it is further ordered that said notes, letters, papers, documents, and books of account shall be deposited in said clerk's office on or before August 12, 1905, and shall remain in said office two weeks." The plaintiff excepted "to so much of the order as requires the defendant to deposit the papers with the clerk and allow them to remain two weeks." On appeal the judge briefly entered, "The above judgment is reversed."

The judgment of the clerk was erroneous in the particular excepted to. There is nothing in the statute which authorizes an order that the respondent be required to deposit the papers. In practice, this might prove oppressive and detrimental. The papers and books might be necessary in the conduct of the plaintiff's business, and there is no guaranty of their safety when so deposited. All that the statute authorizes is an order that the papers be produced with sufficient opportunity to the other side to inspect the same and take a copy. Sheek v. Sain, 127 N. C. 272, 37 S. E. 334. The judge probably did not intend to do more than reverse the part of the order objected to. But, if he did, it was a discretionary matter, and, the order being an administrative order in the cause and not affecting the merits, it is not res judicata, and the motion can be renewed and a new order obtained, in the discretion of the court or judge, of the tenor authorized by the statute. Indeed, the plaintiff is not resisting an order of that purport.

No error.

(139 N. C. 503)

CAMPBELL et al. v. EVERHART et al.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1905.)

1. DEEDS—PARTIES.

Code, § 1329, which provides that "any limitation by deed" to the heirs of a living person shall be construed to be to his children, abolishes the common-law rule that a deed to the heirs of a living person is void for uncertainty, and makes a deed to the heirs of a living person a valid deed to his children; the word "limitation" in the statute meaning the creation of an estate.

2. SAME—CHILD UNBORN AS GRANTEE.

A conveyance to the heirs of a living person is a conveyance to his children as tenants in common, including a child en ventre sa mere; Code, § 1328, providing that a child unborn, but in esse, shall be deemed a person capable of taking by deed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 16, Cent. Dig. Deeds, § 21.]

3. EJECTMENT—PROOF OF TITLE BY PLAINTIFF—NECESSITY.

Plaintiff, in ejectment, in order to recover, must show a title good against the world or good against defendant by estoppel.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 17, Cent. Dig. Ejectment, §§ 16-19.]

4. SAME—PRIMA FACIE PROOF OF TITLE.

Plaintiff, in ejectment, establishes a prima facie case on showing a grant from the state and mesne conveyances connecting him with the grant, or proving a title out of the state by grant duly issued, or by an adverse possession for 30 years, without regard to the number or connection of tenants, and 20 years' adverse possession in himself or those under whom he claims, or such a possession for 7 years under color, or showing 30 years' adverse possession by himself or some one person, and mesne conveyance connecting him with the title acquired by that person against the state, or showing adverse possession by himself or those under whom he claims for 21 years under color, or showing an estoppel arising from defendant obtaining possession as tenant of plaintiff, or connecting defendant with a common source of title showing in himself a better title.

5. ESTOPPEL—POSSESSION OF LAND UNDER ANOTHER.

One taking possession of land under another is estopped from disputing the latter's title until the possession is restored to him, after which time the one affected by the estoppel may set up any right he may have to the property.

6. EJECTMENT—ISSUES—PROOF.

Where, in ejectment, plaintiff alleges that his grantor acquired title by reason of the possession of a third person, through whom defendant claimed, by the permission of the grantor, he must, in order to prevail, prove that the third person entered on the land or continued in the possession thereof as the grantor's tenant, thereby estopping the third person from denying the grantor's title; and defendant will defeat a recovery on showing that the third person surrendered his possession and then relied on his title or acquired title to the premises.

7. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—INVADING PROVINCE OF JURY.

The evidence showing that the third person's possession was by the permission of the grantor consisted of testimony of his declarations to that effect. Held, that an instruction that the deed was sufficient to vest title in plaintiffs was in effect a peremptory instruction to find for plaintiffs, and an invasion of the province of the jury in violation of the express provisions of Code, § 418.

8. SAME—QUESTION OF LAW OR FACT.

The question of the legal sufficiency of the evidence is for the court, while the question of the weight of legally sufficient proof is for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Trial, §§ 332, 339.]

9. SAME—SUBMISSION OF ISSUE TO JURY.

Where reasonable minds, acting within the limitations prescribed by law, might reach different conclusions from an examination of the evidence on an issue, the evidence must be submitted to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Trial, § 332.]

10. EJECTMENT—DEFENSE—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

Where, in ejectment, plaintiff showed a prima facie title and right to possession, defendant was not confined to his own adverse possession, but could tack it to the possession of those under whom he claimed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 1, Cent. Dig. Adverse Possession, §§ 214, 215.]

11. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where, in ejectment, plaintiffs must fall if the third person under whom defendant claimed had not been in possession under plaintiff's grantor, the error in an instruction that, unless defendant had adverse and exclusive possession for 20 years, he could not recover, was immaterial.

12. EVIDENCE—HEARSAY.

A recital in a deed conveying land to the heirs of a living person that the latter had paid the grantor a certain consideration is not competent, in ejectment by his children, as against defendant claiming under such person.

13. SAME—RECORDS—CENSUS LIST.

A census list found in the clerk's office is inadmissible to prove that a person was not in being at a specified date, in the absence of proof showing how the list was made or the source of the information it purported to contain.

14. WITNESSES—COMPETENCY.

The testimony of a witness interested in the event of an action of ejectment as to transactions with a decedent from whom defendant derived title is incompetent against him, without reference to the extent of the interest.

Appeal from Superior Court, Davidson County; Bryan, Judge.

Action by R. G. Campbell and others against Chas. Everhart and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Reversed.

This is an action for the recovery of real property, a parcel of land in Lexington township. Plaintiffs, in support of their claim to title, put in evidence a deed dated November 22, 1870, from Susan Humphreys "to the lawful heirs of B. F. Hilliard and their heirs." Hilliard was the son of Susan Humphreys, and the plaintiffs are the grandchildren of said Hilliard, and claim under the deed for the reason that their mothers (who are now dead) were the children of Hilliard, and therefore answer to the description in the deed of the persons who were intended to take thereunder. There was no proof of title in Susan Humphreys, but there was testimony which plaintiff insists tended to show that Hilliard either entered upon the land originally, or continued in possession after the date of the deed to his heirs (November 22, 1870), by her permission, and is therefore estopped to deny her title. It is unnecessary to set out this testimony in order to an understanding of the point upon which the case is decided. There was testimony to the effect that Hilliard had occupied the land for 12 years prior to the date of the deed of Mrs. Humphreys in 1870, and that he continued in possession until his death in 1898 with brief interruptions, his children living there with him most of the time during their minority and after they became of age, and that he had conveyed a part of the land to his wife and other portions to Darr and Leonard.

The court charged the jury, among other things not necessary to be stated, as follows: "(1) The burden of the issue is upon the plaintiffs. They must recover upon the strength of their own title, and not the weakness of the defendants. They must show title in themselves, and that they were entitled to the possession at the commencement of the action. (2) The court instructs the jury that the deed introduced by the plaintiffs in this action is sufficient to vest in them the legal title to the land described in the complaint, and to authorize them to take possession of the same; nothing else appearing." Defendants excepted. And in response to prayers from the plaintiffs the jury were instructed as follows: "(1) There is no evidence of exclusive, continuous, and adverse possession under color of title on the part of the defendants for seven years, and, unless you find from the evidence that the defendants have had adverse and exclusive possession for the period of 20 years under known and visible metes and bounds, you will answer the first issue 'Yes.'" Defendants excepted. "(2) The court charges you that there is no evidence that the defendants have had adverse and exclusive possession under known and visible metes and bounds for the period of 20 years, and you should answer the first issue 'Yes.'" Defendants excepted. "(3) The court charges you that the deed of 1870 from Susan Humphreys to the lawful heirs of B. F. Hilliard was the same in law as if it had been made to the children of B. F. Hilliard, and conveyed a valid title from Susan Humphreys to the children of B. F. Hilliard then living, and if you find, from the evidence, that Margaret Leonora Wood was born in April thereafter, she would in law be included as one of the children then living, and would be within the description of the grantees in the deed." Given. Defendants excepted.

The court refused the following prayers of the defendants: "(1) The court charges you that the deed from Susan Humphreys to the lawful heirs of B. F. Hilliard is invalid and null and void for want of grantees, and the jury should answer the first issue 'No.' (2) That there is no evidence to go to the jury that Susan Humphreys, at the time of the execution of the deed, owned said land or was in possession thereof, or had any right to convey the same, and the jury should answer the first issue 'No.' (3) That if the jury shall find, from the evidence, that prior to the execution of the deed from Susan Humphreys to the lawful heirs of B. F. Hilliard said B. F. Hilliard was in the open, notorious, adverse, and exclusive possession of the land in controversy, and continued to so hold the same up to his death, and that after his death his widow, V. A. Hilliard, held the same under him by deed from B. F. Hilliard introduced in evidence, and her grantees so continued to hold adverse possession thereof up to the commencement of this action, then the plaintiffs would not be entitled to recover, and the jury should answer the first issue 'No.' (4) That in passing upon the question of adverse possession the jury should consider the fact, if they find such to be the fact, that B. F. Hilliard, from a time prior to the year 1870 and up to his death, was in receipt of the rents and profits of said land, paid taxes thereon, lived on the same for a large part of the time, conveyed a large portion of the tract by deed to his wife, and other portions thereof by deed to Darr and Leonard, witnesses for defendants, and that Jane Campbell and Lenora Wood, plaintiffs' ancestors, never made any claim to said land, if the jury find they made no claim thereto, and if upon the whole evidence the jury shall find that defendants and those under whom they claim have held continuous, adverse, and exclusive possession thereof for the years succeeding the year 1870, then the jury shall answer the first issue 'No.' (5) The fact that Jane Campbell and Lenora Wood, ancestors of the plaintiffs, lived with their father a part of the time on the land in controversy as members of the family, as children live with their parents, would not put them in possession of the land under their own right, nor interrupt their father's adverse possession. If the jury shall find his possession was adverse until they made some claim to own the same, and if the jury shall find from the evidence that the children so lived with their father as members of his household, and not under any claim or right of their own, and if the jury shall further find that defendants and those under whom they claim have been in the continuous, exclusive, adverse possession thereof from the year 1870 and prior thereto, then the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover, and the jury shall answer the first issue 'No.' (6) That Fred Hilliard, a son of B. F. Hilliard, born in lawful wedlock, though begotten after the execution of the deed from Susan Humphreys to the lawful heirs of B. F. Hilliard, would share in said land, and under the same there are four children to take the same, viz., Sallie Hilliard, Jane Campbell, Lenora Wood, and Fred Hilliard, or the heirs of such of them who are dead, and in no event can plaintiffs claim more than one-half of the land, and the jury should answer the issue accordingly."

There was a verdict and judgment for the plaintiffs, and defendants, having duly excepted to the rulings of the court, appealed.

McCrary & Ruark and E. E. Raper, for appellants. Watson, Buxton & Watson, Walser & Walser, and King & Kimball, for appellees.

WALKER, J. (after stating the case). The first question raised in this case calls for a construction of the deed from Mrs. Humphreys to her son, B. F. Hilliard, and also involves its validity. We have no doubt as to either proposition thus presented. At common law a conveyance could not be made directly to the heirs of a living person, simply because a living person could have no heirs in present. The rule of the law then was, "Nemo est hæres viventis." This maxim was originally and generally applied to both wills and deeds, and its proper translation was that "no one can be heir during the life of his ancestor." And though a party may be heir apparent or heir presumptive, yet he is not heir, living the ancestor, and therefore, when an estate was limited to one as a purchaser under the denomination of "heir," "heir of the body," "heir male," or the like, the party could not take as purchaser, unless by the death of the ancestor he has, at the time when the estate is to vest, become the very heir. But this rule was relaxed by the courts, and an exception engrafted on it, and, if there was sufficient on the face of a will to show that by the word "heir" the testator meant heir apparent, it should be so construed, and in such case the popular sense was allowed to prevail against the technical. In other words, it appears to have been established by the authorities that prima facie the word "heir" should be taken in its strict legal sense, but, if there was a plain demonstration in the will that the testator used it in a different sense, the court would assign that meaning to it; what was sufficient to show that the testator did not intend that it should have its technical construction depending largely upon the language employed in connection with it and the circumstances under which the word was used. Broom's Legal Maxims (8th Ed.) p. 521 (marg. p. 523). It was likewise held in the case of a will that the rule had no place, if the testator knew of the existence of the parent and intended his devise to take effect during his life. Broom, p. 524. One reason for the relaxation of the rule in the case of wills was that the testator might have been inops consilii, and the instrument therefore was construed so as to effectuate his intention. But the maxim was also extended to deeds, and a limitation (the word is here used in the sense of conveyance) "to the heirs of a person" who is living was held to be void for uncertainty, as no one can in any proper sense be the heir of a living person, and it could not, therefore, be known who were to have the benefit of the conveyance; but it was likewise the rule in regard to a deed that, if anything appeared on its face to indicate that the grantor used the word "heirs" as designatio personarum, or if a preceding estate was created, so as to make the limitation to the heirs of the living person a contingent remainder, depending for its vesting upon the event of the death of the ancestor before the life estate terminated, the word "heirs" was construed to mean children. It has always been true, both in the case of deeds and of wills, that if the instrument shows who the grantee is, or if it designates and so describes him that there is no uncertainty respecting the party who is intended to take under the will or deed, it is not of vital consequence that the matter which establishes his identity is not in the common or best form, or expressed with technical nicety or accuracy, or in the usual or most appropriate position in the instrument. 1. Devlin on Deeds, §§ 184, 185; 2 Devlin on Deeds, § 864, and note 11, where cases from this and other states are collected; 8 Washburn on Real Property, 282. But at common law, where the limitation in the deed was simply to the heirs of a living person, and nothing else appeared to indicate the special intention of the grantor as to who should take, the deed was void, because no grantor was sufficiently designated. Our statute completely reverses this principle, and now, by virtue of its wise provision, such a limitation is conclusively presumed to be intended for the children of the person named therein. The language of the statute is too plain for any possible doubt as to its true meaning. It is as follows: "Any limitation by deed, will or other writing, to the heirs of a living person, shall be construed to be to the children of such person, unless the contrary intention appear by the deed or will." Code, § 1329.

But the defendants' counsel contends that the use of the word "limitation" in the statute takes our case out of its operation, as the deed in this case is in effect a direct conveyance to the heirs of B. F. Hilliard, without the creation of any preceding estate to be "limited" or determined by the happening of a future event or the performance of any condition. The fallacy of this contention is to be found in the misapprehension of the true legal definition of the word "limitation." It has a twofold meaning, says Mr. Fearn. We quote his own language: "Great confusion has frequently arisen from not observing that the word 'limitation' is used in two different senses; the one of which may, for the sake of convenience of distinction, be termed the original sense, namely, that of a member of a sentence, expressing the limits or bounds to the quantity of an estate, and the other, the derivative sense, namely, that of an entire sentence, creating and actually or constructively marking out the quantity of an estate." 2 Fearn on Remainders (4th Am. Ed.) marg. p. 10, § 24. In our statute the word is manifestly used in its derivative or secondary sense, which is made very clear to us by the learned, able, and elaborate opinion of Chief Justice Shepherd in the leading case of Starnes v. Hill, 112 N. C. 1, 16 S. E. 1011, 22 L. R. A. 598, remarkable for its lucidity of statement and the strength and cogency of reasoning from ancient and well-settled principles of the law, by which it distinguished between vested and contingent remainders, and further sustained the conclusion of the court that this statute did not abolish the rule in Shelley's Case, but was intended merely to give effect to the intention of the maker of the instrument, namely, that the persons for whose use and benefit it was made should take, either directly or indirectly, as purchasers, and to cure what was supposed to be the defect in, and to remove the injustice of, the rule of the common law. Starnes v. Hill, supra. Under this construction of our statute Margaret Hilliard (afterwards Margaret Wood), if en ventre sa mere at the time the deed was executed, took as tenant in common with the living child or children, who at the time answered to the description of "lawful heirs" of their father. She would not have taken anything at common law, as she was not actually in esse at the date of the deed, and no one was appointed to preserve the use to her. In Dupree v. Dupree, 45 N. C. 167, 59 Am. Dec. 590 et seq., Pearson, J., speaking of a conveyance immediately to an unborn child says: "Property must at all times have an owner. One person cannot part with the ownership, unless there be another person to take it from him. There must be a 'grantor and a grantee and a thing granted.' We have no sort of doubt that Mrs. Goff intended all the children of Robert and Rachel (Peggy Ann excepted), without reference to the time of their birth, to be participants of her bounty; and the only regret is that she did not call upon a lawyer, who would have drawn a conveyance passing the property to a trustee, by which the uses could have been kept open until the death of Mrs. Dupree, so as to let in all of her children. But she chose to make a common-law conveyance directly to the children; and, of course, no other could take under her deed of gift except those in esse, or, as my Lord Coke expresses it, 'in rerum natura,' when the right of property passed out of her. To wit, at the date of the deed of gift. The owners were then called for, and it was then necessary for them to take the property. The plaintiff could not answer the call, and there is no rule of the law, by which we can give him another day." See, also, Heath v. Heath, 114 N. C. 547, 19 S. E. 155. This rule of the common law has been changed by the statute to the extent that it affected a child en ventre sa mere. It is now provided by statute that "an infant unborn, but in esse, shall be deemed a person capable of taking by deed or other writing, any estate whatever, in the same manner as if he were born"; that is, in rerum natura. Code, § 1328; Heath v. Heath, supra. It comes to this, therefore, that the deed was sufficient in form and substance to pass whatever title Mrs. Humphreys had in the land to the children of B. F. Hilliard, her son.

But we are brought now to the consideration of the question, did she have any title to pass? A plaintiff, in order to recover in an action of ejectment, must show a title good against the world, or good against the defendant by estoppel. He makes out a title prima facie under the first branch of the requirement when he shows a grant from the state (the origin and source of all title to land) and mesne conveyances connecting him with the grant, or by proving title out of the state by grant duly issued or by an adverse possession for 30 years, without regard to the number or connection of the tenants, and 20 years' adverse possession in himself or those under whom he claims, or such a possession of 7 years under color, or by showing 30 years' adverse possession by himself or by some one person, and mesne conveyances connecting him with the title thus acquired by that person as against the state (the law presuming, not only title out of the state by virtue of the possession for 30 years, but also a grant to the person who has thus held the possession for 20 years of the time [Bryan v. Spivey, 109 N. C. 57, 13 S. E. 766]), or by showing adverse possession by himself or those under whom he claims for 21 years under color, or by showing an estoppel arising out of the fact that the defendant obtained the possession of the land as tenant of the plaintiff or by his permission, or, lastly, by connecting the defendant with a common source of title, showing in himself an older and better title from that source; the law, by a rule of evidence established for convenience, not requiring in such a case proof of title beyond the common source. This rule is sometimes called an estoppel. Whether erroneously or not we need not decide. Alexander v. Gibbon, 118 N. C. 796, 24 S. E. 748, 54 Am. St. Rep. 757; Newlin v. Osborne, 47 N. C. 164; Frey v. Ramsour, 66 N. C. 466; Caldwell v. Neely, 81 N. C. 114; Christenburg v. King, 85 N. C. 229. The method of proving title to land is well stated by Avery, J., in Mobley v. Griffin, 104 N. C. 112, 10 S. E. 142. In what we have said no reference is made to the particular nature of the possession necessary to bar the entry of the state, or to the manner in which the connection between the successive tenants, when required, must be shown. This matter is fully discussed by Justice Connor in Jennings v. White (at this term) 51 S. E. 799. If we apply the above-stated principles to the facts of this case, we find that no evidence has been adduced to show any title in Mrs. Humphreys when she made her deed to the plaintiffs' ancestors, unless the testimony introduced tended to show that her son, B. F. Hilliard, either entered into possession or continued his possession by her permission, and thereby estopped himself, so long as he retained that possession, to deny her title. It is undoubtedly true that, where a party takes possession of land under another, he is not allowed to dispute the latter's title until he has given up the possession so acquired. The whole doctrine upon which the estoppel rests in such cases is most clearly and forcibly stated by Dillard, J., in Farmer v. Pickens, 83 N. C. 549. "It is settled," says he, "that a person accepting a lease from another is estopped, during the continuance of the lease, and afterwards, until he surrenders the possession to his landlord, to dispute his title; it being a rule founded on a principle of honesty which does not allow possession to be retained in violation of that faith on which it was obtained or continued. Hartzog v. Hubbard, 19 N. C. 241; Lunsford v. Alexander, 20 N. C. 166; Smart v. Smith, 18 N. C. 258; Burnett v. Roberts, 15 N. C. 81. The rule between lessor and lessee extends equally to one who takes or holds possession under a contract of purchase, and he is not permitted to controvert the title of him under whom he entered or by whose consent he has continued a possession. Love v. Edmonson, 23 N. C. 152." And the rule applies with equal force to a person who continues a possession antecedently held by him with the consent of the party whose title is in question. "The rule best supported by authority, English and American," it is said, in the same case, "is stated by Bigelow, in his work on Estoppel, at pages 397 and 398, to be that an anterior possession does not vary the application of the rule, on the ground that, although the party asserting the estoppel may not have lost the advantage of parting with the possession, yet by attornment to him, or the new relation of vendor and vendee, he may have been led into some omission or conduct prejudicial to his title, which otherwise would not have been. In this state the rule is held to be that a possession previous to a lease or contract of purchase does not let in the party to dispute the title which he had recognized." Springs v. Schenck, 99 N. C. 551, 6 S. E. 405, 6 Am. St. Rep. 552. The rule affects as well the assignee or undertenant of the person, who has thus acquired the possession of the land, as it does the assignor. Lunsford v. Alexander, 20 N. C. 166; Pate v. Turner, 94 N. C. 47; Bonds v. Smith, 106 N. C. 553, 11 S. E. 822. But the estoppel lasts no longer than does the possession so acquired and on which it is founded. When possession is wholly restored to the party who gave it, the estoppel no longer applies, and the party formerly affected by it can then stand upon his original right, to which he is fully remitted; for, reason being the soul of the law, when the reason of any particular law ceases, so does the law itself. Having given up that which he gained by reason of the favor or consent of another, and which might prejudice the latter if he retained and asserted title in himself, he is at perfect liberty to set up any right or title he may have to the property surrendered, for he is not then bound in good conscience or in fairness to do otherwise. The plaintiffs, therefore, may show, if they can, that Hilliard entered upon the land or continued in the possession of it as the tenant of Mrs. Humphreys or in subordination to her and the defendants may show, if they can, that he or those claiming under him have surrendered the possession, so that now they may rely on any title that Hilliard had or that they have acquired in the premises. It follows as a matter of course that there was error in the charge, in so far as the jury were told that the deed of Mrs. Humphreys to Hilliard's heirs at law (now construed to mean his children) was sufficient of itself to vest the title to the land in them. This was equivalent to a peremptory instruction, binding upon the jury, to find for the plaintiff, whereas the deed of itself could not pass a title the grantor did not have; and, if the testimony was legally sufficient to show such a possession in Hilliard under Mrs. Humphreys as raised an estoppel against him, it consisted in the alleged declarations of Hilliard to Tussey and others, and the credibility of these witnesses was surely a matter for the jury to pass upon. The court, in deciding this question for them, invaded their province contrary to the provision of Code, § 413, which provides that in charging the petit jury in a case the court shall not give an opinion whether a fact is fully or sufficiently proven, such matter falling within the true province of the jury, but shall only state the evidence, and declare and explain the law arising thereon.

We have not passed upon the sufficiency of the testimony to show an estoppel, as the question may not be presented to us again, and, if it is, the evidence may not be just as we find it in this record. It may be stronger or weaker than it now is. We may say generally that evidence should raise more than a mere conjecture as to the existence of the fact to be proved. The legal sufficiency of proof and the moral weight of legally sufficient proof are very distinct in the conception of the law. The first lies within the province of the court; the last, within that of the jury. Applying the maxim "De minimis non curat lex," when we say that there is no evidence to go to the jury, we do not mean that there is literally and absolutely none, for as to this there could be no room for any controversy; but there is none which ought reasonably to satisfy the jury that the fact sought to be proved is established, though there is no practical or logical difference between no evidence and evidence without legal weight or probative force. The sufficiency of evidence in law to go to the jury does not depend upon the doctrine of chances. However confidently one, in his own affairs, may base his judgment on mere probability as to a past event, when he assumes the burden of establishing such event as a proposition of fact and as a basis for the judgment of a court, he must adduce evidence other than a majority of chances that the fact to be proved does exist. It must be more than sufficient for a mere guess, and must be such as tends to actual proof. But the province of the jury should not be invaded in any case, and when reasonable minds, acting within the limitations prescribed by the rules of law, might reach different conclusions, the evidence must be submitted to the jury. Lewis v. Steamship Co., 132 N. C. 904, 44 S. E. 686; Byrd v. Express Co. (at this term) 51 S. E. 851. To which may be added Wheeler v. Schroeder, 4 R. I. 383; Offutt v. Col. Exposition, 175 Ill. 472, 51 N. E. 651; Day v. Railroad, 96 Me. 207, 52 Atl. 771, 90 Am. St. Rep. 335; Cattlett v. Railway, 57 Ark. 461, 21 S. W. 1062, 38 Am. St. Rep. 254; Railroad v. Stebbing, 62 Md. 504.

Whether any proof has been adduced in this case as to the estoppel, which conforms to the legal standard, we leave as an open question, to be decided when it becomes necessary to do so. Nor need we decide whether the fact that B. F. Hilliard's children lived on the land with him as members of his family prevented his possession from being adverse to them and those claiming under them after the deed was executed by Mrs. Humphreys. It is a general rule that as between those occupying parental and filial, or quasi-parental and filial, relations, the possession of one is presumed to be permissive, and not adverse to the other. 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. (2d Ed.) 821. The character of the possession will depend somewhat upon the state of the proof, as no hard and fast rule applicable to all cases can well be laid down. As illustrative of the general principle, we refer to the following cases: Burrus v. Meadors, 90 Ala. 140, 7 South. 469; White v. White, 52 Ark. 188, 12 S. W. 201; Douglas v. Irvine, 126 Pa. 643, 17 Atl. 802. If Hilliard held his possession under Mrs. Humphreys from November 20, 1870, the date of her deed, to the time of his death in 1898, he having never given up the land, such possession could not have been adverse to his children, who claimed under her deed, and it can make no difference in this connection, nor, indeed, when considering the question of estoppel, whether she really had any title or not. If that time is excluded from the count altogether, his previous possession was not continued long enough to presume a title in him; he having no color. If he was not holding under his mother, then as no title is shown in her, and consequently none in his children by virtue of her deed, it becomes immaterial whether his possession was adverse to his children or not, for plaintiffs, in that event, having shown no title in themselves at all, must necessarily fail in the suit, however weak the title of Hilliard or the defendants may be; the burden of the issue being on them, and not on the alienees of Hilliard, the defendants. It follows, therefore, that (1) the first instruction of the court in its general charge was correct, and the second was erroneous. (2) The first instruction in response to plaintiffs' prayers was not correct in the abstract, as if plaintiffs showed prima facie a title and right to recover, and defendants were put to their proof, the latter were not confined to their own adverse possession, but could tack to it the possession of those under whom they claimed. But the error in this instruction was immaterial, for the reason we have already given—that plaintiffs must fail, if Hilliard was not in possession under Mrs. Humphreys, unless hereafter they can show title in her derived in some other way. (3) The second instruction in response to plaintiffs' prayers is likewise immaterial, for the reason just given in considering the next preceding instruction. If plaintiffs show a title in Mrs. Humphreys otherwise than by estoppel, we do not think the possession of Hilliard could be considered adverse to his children, if they lived with him on the land, during the time of such joint occupancy. (4) The instruction in response to plaintiffs' third prayer was correct, except as to the legal effect of the deed in passing title, which was at least misleading. The refusal of the first instruction in response to defendants' prayers was correct. Defendants' second prayer was correct in part. Whether there is any evidence of Mrs. Humphreys possession will depend, of course, upon the nature of Hilliard's possession, as the jury may find it to have been. If he held under her, his possession was in law her possession. The sixth prayer was properly refused. The other prayers of both parties are sufficiently covered by what we have already said in this opinion.

There remains to be considered the questions as to the competency of evidence: (1) The recital in the deed of Mrs. Humphreys that Hilliard paid her the consideration, $1,000, is not competent against defendants, nothing else appearing. It is merely her unsworn declaration. If he actually paid her the money, it would at least be some evidence as to the character of his possession; that is, as to whether he claimed in his own right or under her. (2) The census list, found in the clerk's office, offered by defendants to show that Lenora Wood was not in esse at the date of the deed from Mrs. Humphreys, was incompetent. Census reports are competent to prove facts of a public nature. As evidence they are confined to such facts, and the details as to individual persons and other private matters, as the age of a particular person or the product of a factory, are noted only as a necessary basis for the general summaries or the ultimate statement of facts affecting the public. 3 Wigmore on Ev. § 1671. The case of Edwards v. Logan, 114 Ky. 312, 70 S. W. 852, 75 S. W. 257, is directly in point. There, as here, a census list (not a census report) was found in the clerk's office, and offered to show nonage of one of the parties, whose vote had been challenged. It was held incompetent on two grounds, (a) as not being a census report, and (b) as not evidence of any matter of a private nature. The method of proving age by documentary evidence is stated in Elliott on Ev. §§ 410, 413, 1286. It appears that such evidence as that offered in this case was admitted in Flora v. Anderson (C. C.) 75 Fed. 231, upon the authority of Greenleaf, Ev. 483, and Stephens Dig. of Ev. art. 34; but on referring to these books we find that the authors state that public registers and reports are evidence only of facts of a public nature, and agree in this respect with Wigmore. The mistake in that case, we think, was in supposing that the fact proposed to be established was within that category. There was no proof as to how this list was made, or from what source the information it purported to contain was derived, and it would hardly accord with the general rule in regard to evidence, if it was permitted to be considered as against entries in the family Bible which were introduced. (3) Testimony of a witness interested in the event of the action as to transactions or communications between him and a deceased person from whom defendants derive title are not, of course, competent against them. The extent of the interest is not material.

It is unnecessary to specially consider the other numerous exceptions, as they may not again be presented. We order a new trial for the error committed in the charge to the jury, as above indicated.

New trial.

(139 N. C. 520)

EUBANKS v. ALSPAUGH et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1905.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—DISCHARGE—JUSTIFICATION—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action for breach of a contract of employment, the contract and the servant's discharge by defendants having been established, the burden was on the latter to prove a justification.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, § 47.]

2. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where, in an action for breach of a contract employing plaintiff as superintendent of defendant's mill, there was evidence that defendants only inquired as to plaintiff's capacity as a weaver, and that it was not necessary that a superintendent should be an expert in all departments of a mill, but there was no evidence of any notice to defendants as to plaintiff's qualifications as a carder and spinner, error in an instruction that the fact that plaintiff was not an expert carder and spinner would not justify his discharge, if defendants had notice thereof before employing him, was not material.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT—WRONGFUL DISCHARGE—INCOMPETENCY—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for wrongful discharge of a servant, an instruction that if it was necessary for a person employed in plaintiff's capacity to understand carding, spinning, and weaving, and plaintiff did not sufficiently understand such vocations to enable him to direct those in charge of such departments, and he did not intelligently direct them on account of his lack of skill and knowledge, defendants had a right to discharge him from their employment, sufficiently covered the defense that plaintiff was properly discharged for incapacity.

Appeal from Superior Court, Iredell County; Bryan, Judge.

Action by S. D. Eubanks against U. L. Alspaugh and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

The plaintiff alleged that the defendants, having employed him as superintendent of their mill for a term of six months, wrongfully discharged the plaintiff, to his damage, etc. The defendants denied that plaintiff was wrongfully discharged, and alleged, by way of further defense, that the plaintiff was entirely incompetent to perform the duties he had undertaken, and claimed the right to discharge him on that account, and they further set up this breach of contract on the part of the plaintiff as a counterclaim to his demand. Issues were submitted responsive to the pleadings. Verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiff. Defendants excepted and appealed.

Armfield & Turner and R. Z. Linney, for appellants. Furches, Coble & Nicholson and Zeb V. Long, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. The judge below charged the jury very fully on the issues, and properly put on the plaintiff the burden of proving the contract of employment, the discharge by the defendants, and the existence and amount of substantial damage. The only exception made by the defendants, or urged upon our attention, was in giving the prayer for instructions by the plaintiff No. 7, which is as follows: "The burden is upon the defendants to show that the plaintiff was not capable and efficient in the performance of his duties under the contract, and if the jury should find by a greater weight of the evidence that the plaintiff was not an expert in the departments of carding and spinning, yet if the jury further find by a greater weight of the evidence that the defendants had notice of this fact, at or before the time they employed the plaintiff, that the plaintiff was not an expert carder and spinner, if such was the fact, would not excuse the defendants for discharging the plaintiff, and if the jury find that the plaintiff was discharged, and for this cause, this would be a breach of the contract on the part of the defendants, and you will answer the third issue 'Yes.'" This was given. The defendants excepted to the above instruction, first, because the burden was wrongfully put on the defendants; second, because there was no evidence that the defendants knew of the plaintiff's incompetency before the contract of employment.

There is no merit in the first exception. The contract of employment and the discharge by the defendants being established, the law places the burden of justification on the defendants, and the charge of the court on this point is correct. Deitrich v. Railroad, 127 N. C. 25, 37 S. E. 64; McKelthan v. Tel. Co., 136 N. C. 213, 48 S. E. 646. While the second exception is not entirely responsive to the language of the charge, it sufficiently appears that the defendants intended to address the same to that part of prayer No. 7 on the question whether the defendants knew the plaintiff was not an expert carder and spinner before the contract of employment. The court here told the jury that even if the plaintiff was not an expert carder and spinner, yet if the jury further found that the defendants had notice of this before employing the plaintiff, such fact would not justify his discharge. The defendants contend that there is no evidence that they had any notice in the matter, and there is none set out in the record, as far as the court can discover. There is testimony to the effect that the defendants only inquired of the plaintiff's capacity as a weaver, but no evidence of any notice as to his qualifications as a carder and spinner.

We are of opinion, however, that this does not constitute reversible error, for the reason that the mistake is not on any essential or controlling feature of the defense. There was no contract that the plaintiff should be an expert in carding and spinning, and there was no allegation or evidence of such requirement. There were allegation and evidence that the plaintiff was employed by the defendants to superintend this and the other departments of the mill. There was also evidence of the plaintiff to the effect that it was not necessary that a superintendent should be an expert in all departments of a mill, and a witness for the defense testified that, while it was better for a superintendent to be an expert in all the departments, there were many mills run successfully where the superintendent was not such. The mistake of the court, therefore, to which the exception is addressed is not on an essential or material matter, and does not, we think, justify or call for a new trial. Speaking directly to this question in another part of the charge, in response to a prayer for instruction by defendant, the court told the jury: "If the jury shall find from the greater weight of the evidence that it was necessary for a superintendent of the defendant's mill, to successfully operate the same, to understand carding, spinning, and weaving in order to intelligently direct those under him in those departments, and should further find from the evidence that the plaintiff did not sufficiently understand carding and spinning to enable him to direct those in charge of those departments, and that he did not intelligently direct and instruct those placed in charge of the carding and spinning on account of a lack of skill and knowledge on his part, then I charge you that this was a violation of the contract on the part of the plaintiff, and the defendants had the right to discharge him from their employment, and the plaintiff is entitled to recover nothing in this action." This, we think, gave the defendants the full benefit of this feature of the defense; and, taking the charge as a whole, we are of opinion that the cause has been fairly and correctly submitted to the jury.

Judgment affirmed.

(104 Va. 551)

MOON'S ADM'X v. HIGHLAND DEVELOPMENT CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 23, 1905.)

1. TRUSTS—TRUST DEEDS—CONSTRUCTION—DEED BY BENEFICIARY.

Certain property was conveyed by a husband to trustees for a valuable consideration for the benefit of his wife; the deed providing that, in the event of the husband's death before the wife, the trustees should convey the property to her for life, remainder in fee to such persons as she might appoint, and in default thereof to her heirs, and that, in case she died before the husband, then the trustees should convey the property to such persons as the wife appointed by will, and in default of such appointment to her children. The husband survived the wife, who died, leaving a last will and testament, by which she devised the estate to her son and daughter. Held, that such devisees took a fee-simple estate.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF DEBT.

In a partition suit one of the parties consented to a decree recognizing that his share in one of the tracts was bound by the lien of a mortgage. The decree was entered two days before May 1, 1903, at which date, by terms of Code 1887, § 2935 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1555], the limitation of the right to enforce such mortgage expired. Thereafter trustees under such mortgage revived such partition suit by a cross-bill sought to foreclose the mortgage. Held, that by such consent decree the bar of limitations as against the enforcement of the mortgage was removed.

3. PARTITION—CREDITORS' BILL—PARTIES.

Where, in a partition suit as originally instituted, partition was not the sole relief demanded, and subsequent decrees and proceedings had made the case in effect a creditor's bill for the satisfaction of liens due by the coparceners and binding on the estate to be partitioned, it was error to dismiss a party claiming title adverse to any party to the cause, on the ground that such issue could not be determined in the partition suit.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Bath County.

Action by R. J. Glendy's administrator and trustees against R. J. Glendy's heirs and others for partition, etc. A statement of liens was filed, to which Julia A. Moon, as administratrix of J. S. Moon, deceased, filed certain exceptions. From an order overruling the same, and dismissing the Highland Development Company as a party to the suit, Julia A. Moon, as administratrix, etc., appeals. Reversed in part.

Patrick & Gordon, for appellant. Daniel Harmon and W. M. McAllister, for appellee.

KEITH, P. A controversy between certain parties to this suit was disposed of at a former term of this court, and is reported under the style of McAllister v. Harman, 101 Va. 17, 42 S. E. 920.

The cause having been remanded to the circuit court, a decree was entered on the 29th of April, 1903, reviving it against the executors of Warner Wood, one of the defendants, and referring it to a commissioner to state an account showing the balance due upon the bond and lien proved in favor of Warner Wood; an account of the collections and disbursements made by McAllister, as general receiver of the court, by reason of the decree authorizing him as such receiver to collect from Lewis Harman and Carter Berkeley the purchase money for the lands involved, showing the balance in his hands as such receiver and how the fund so collected by him had been applied (see McAllister v. Harman, supra); an account of all collections and disbursements made by McAllister, general receiver of the court, of funds involved in the cause, and the amounts still due and uncollected on the rent account; an account showing the balance in the hands of McAllister, as trustee of Robert J. Glendy and as administrator of R. J. Glendy, deceased; an account of all the claims proved in the cause and to what extent and how any of said claims are payable and binding upon all the lands involved in the cause, and which of said claims are payable exclusively by R. J. Glendy's estate or are binding upon that part of the real estate assigned to the estate of R. J. Glendy; and to what extent, if any, Lewis Harman and Carter Berkeley or their assignees may be entitled to reimbursement or subrogation by reason of payments made by them or either of them to William M. McAllister, general receiver.

Upon the coming in of this report it appeared that the first lien was for taxes; that in the second class were attachments issued by Barley and Thomas; in the third class, a sum due McAllister as receiver; fourth, the debt due Warner Wood; fifth, that of D. B. Taylor & Co.; and, sixth, that of Julia A. Moon, administratrix of J. Summerfield Moon, with interest from December 1, 1904.

To this statement of liens' exceptions were filed by Warner Wood's executors and Julia A. Moon, administratrix, in which they unite in an attack upon the first three classes, and Julia A. Moon in addition attacking the debt of Warner Wood as not constituting a lien upon the land which had been assigned to C. D. Glendy.

The court overruled these exceptions and directed a sale of the moiety of land which had been assigned to R. J. Glendy; and with reference to that portion allotted to C. D. Glendy, and which appears to have been purchased by Jacob Yost, the decree provides that the said Yost may have 60 days from the adjournment of the court to notify the commissioners appointed to sell whether or not he proposes that his purchase shall be adopted as a judicial sale by the court, in which event the purchase money is to be paid to the commissioners, and if he fails to comply with the terms of his purchase, and C. D. Glendy, or some one for him, shall fail to pay the debt chargeable on that share of land within 60 days, then the commissioners were directed to sell that moiety of land also. From this decree an appeal was obtained to this court.

The land in controversy belonged originally to Robert J. Glendy, who on the 20th of November, 1876, conveyed it to Hugh W. Sheffy, trustee, reciting in the deed that, the grantor desiring to provide the means of paying his debts by the conveyance to trustees for that purpose of various tracts of land, in all of which Mary J. Glendy had a right of dower, and it being desirable that said Mary J. Glendy should unite in the deed of trust, so as to secure a perfect title to the purchasers, and she having agreed to unite in said deed upon condition that Robert J. Glendy should convey to a trustee the property therein described and upon the trusts therein declared, therefore the said Robert J. Glendy granted to Hugh W. Sheffy and his heirs certain land, which he describes, known as "The Wilderness"; "but it is expressly understood that a lien is retained upon said Wilderness estate for the sum of $3,000, payable in three equal annual payments, with interest from this date, and in favor of Hugh W. Sheffy and James Bumgardner, Jr., trustees for said Robert J. Glendy, under the trust deed aforesaid of even date with this deed." This conveyance of November 20, 1876, was declared to be upon the following trusts: "That said Hugh W. Sheffy shall hold the property for the sole and separate use of said Mary Jane Glendy, free from the debts of and contracts of her husband, and in the event of the death of said Robert J. Glendy before the said Mary J. Glendy that said trustee will convey said real estate to the said Mary J. Glendy, to hold it during her natural life, with remainder in fee to such persons as she may by deed or will appoint, and in default thereof to her right heirs; and in case the said Mary Jane Glendy shall die before her said husband, then the said trustee will convey said real property to such persons as the said Mary Jane Glendy may in writing, attested by three witnesses, or by her last will and testament, designate and appoint, and in default of such appointment to her children and the descendants of such as may be dead per stirpes."

On the 8th of February, 1882, Robert J. Glendy and Mary J. Glendy, his wife, parties of the first part, H. W. Sheffy and James Bumgardner, Jr., trustees, created by the deed of Robert J. Glendy dated November 20, 1876, parties of the second part, and C. D. Fishburne and James Bumgardner, trustees, of the third part, and Warren Wood of Albemarle county, Va., of the fourth part, recites that, whereas, Robert J. Glendy and Mary J. Glendy, his wife, two of the parties of the first part, are indebted to the said Warren Wood in the sum of $4,000, evidenced by their bond of even date, payable on demand, with interest from date, which they desire more fully to secure to said Wood; and whereas, there was in the deed first above referred to a lien reserved on the land thereby conveyed (which is the same land conveyed in the deed of February 8, 1882), to secure the payment of a debt of $3,000, with interest from 20th November, 1876, to Messrs. H. W. Sheffy and James Bumgardner, Jr., the trustees named in R. J. Glendy's general deed of trust (to wit, the second deed hereinabove described), which last-named debt has been paid in full out of said sum of $4,000, as evidenced by the signatures hereto of said parties of the second part, who hereby release the land hereinafter conveyed from the lien reserved as aforesaid: Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises, Robert J. Glendy and his wife, Hugh W. Sheffy, as trustee of Mary J. Glendy, and with her consent, convey to C. D. Fishburne and James Bumgardner, Jr., the "Wilderness," the "Fowler," and two "Nelson" tracts, which are described in the deed, except 785 acres sold to various parties named in the deed, the whole quantity conveyed being 3,906 acres, in trust to secure to Warren Wood and his heirs the payment of the debt of $4,000, with interest thereon till paid.

Mary J. Glendy died before her husband, leaving a last will and testament, by which she devised the whole of her estate, both real and personal, to her husband during his natural life, the personal property at his death to be disposed of as he might see fit and proper, and "the real estate to be divided equally between my son Charles D. and daughter, Edmonia Glendy, to be enjoyed by them, forever." This will bears date the 3d day of March, 1884, and was signed and sealed by the testatrix in the presence of three attesting witnesses, and was admitted to probate at the January term, 1885, of the county court of Bath county.

Edmonia Glendy married a Mr. Fowler and died, leaving a daughter, who died under 21 years of age, from whom Robert J. Glendy inherited one-half of the estate. By deed of the 17th of May, 1889, Robert J. Glendy conveyed the "Wilderness" estate to McAllister, trustee, to secure certain creditors therein named.

At April rules, 1890, William M. McAllister, as administrator and trustee of Robert J. Glendy, deceased, certain persons secured by the deed of May 17, 1889, and others, heirs at law of Robert J. Glendy, filed their bill, in which they set forth a debt to the Valley Bank of Staunton due by Robert J. Glendy and upon which some of the plaintiffs were indorsers, deduce the title of Robert J. Glendy to the "Wilderness" tract through the various deeds which we have recited, set forth the debt due by bond to Warner Wood and the payments upon it, and charge "that the residue of said bond and interest is still due and unpaid and constitutes a lien upon said Wilderness estate, one-half of which should be paid by the said C. D. Glendy and the remaining half whereof should be paid by the estate of the said Robert J. Glendy, deceased." They further charge that partition should be made of the said Wilderness estate between the said

Charles D. Glendy and the estate of the said Robert J. Glendy, deceased, and that one-half of the trust debt due to Warner Wood should be provided for out of a sale of the half of said Wilderness estate which shall be allotted and assigned to the said Robert J. Glendy, and the other half made a charge upon the half assigned to C. D. Glendy. Charles D. Glendy, Warner Wood, and C. D. Fishburne and James Bumgardner, Jr., trustees in the deed to secure the debt of Warner Wood, are made parties and required to answer.

In August Warner Wood and his trustees answered, and state that by deed dated February 8, 1882, Robert J. Glendy and his wife, Mary J. Glendy, conveyed the land therein mentioned and described to the defendants, James Bumgardner, Jr., and C. D. Fishburne, trustees, to secure the payment of their bond to Warner Wood for $4,000, as described in said deed of trust; that the deed of trust was executed also by Hugh W. Sheffy, as trustee of said Mary J. Glendy, under deed of said Robert J. Glendy and wife, dated 20th November, 1876, and by said Sheffy and James Bumgardner, Jr., trustees in a general deed of trust by said Robert J. Glendy dated November 20, 1876, thus giving to said defendants as trustees the first lien on said land to secure said debt to Warner Wood; that the interest on said debt had been paid up to the 8th day of August, 1888, so that all the principal and interest on the same at 6 per cent. per annum is now due from the 8th of August, 1888.

Accounts were taken under this decree, and subsequently a contract of sale was made to Harman and Berkeley, and the suit growing out of that contract was before this court in the case of McAllister, Trustee, v. Harman, supra.

By a decree entered on the 29th of April, 1903, which has already been referred to, after numerous accounts had been ordered, it is provided as follows: "And by consent of parties the right and privilege is given to C. D. Glendy to take possession and control that part of the real estate involved in this cause which was assigned to him, subject, however, to all liens existing thereon, and especially subject to the deed of trust lien in favor of Warner Wood covering all the real estate involved in this cause; it being distinctly understood that such privilege and right to take possession and control said real estate shall not impair or affect any existing lien on said real estate, or the right of any holder or owner of any lien thereon to enforce the same."

At August rules, 1903, Micajah Woods and J. W. Fishburne, executors of Warner Wood, deceased, against whom this suit had been revived by consent, filed a cross-bill, in which they set out the proceedings theretofore had so far as they were pertinent to the interests of their testator. They call attention to the fact that the "Wilderness" tract of land had been originally conveyed to Hugh W. Sheffy, trustee, subject to a lien of $3,000 in favor of Hugh W. Sheffy and James Bumgardner, Jr.; that Hugh W. Sheffy and James Bumgardner, Jr., trustees, holding the lien of $3,000 on the "Wilderness" tract of land, united in the deed under which Mary J. Glendy held, and those claiming under her hold, for the purpose of showing that the aforesaid lien had been paid in full out of the sum of $4,000 which Warner Wood loaned to Robert J. Glendy and Mary J. Glendy and which the said deed was executed to secure. The cross-bill charges that the whole of the $4,000 loan was used for the payment of the aforesaid lien and interest, and that by reason of the premises Warner Wood became and has continued to be subrogated to all the rights and remedies of the said Hugh W. Sheffy and James Bumgardner, Jr., trustees, under said lien, in addition to the rights which he acquired under the deed of trust aforesaid.

The contract of September, 1890, by which C. D. Glendy and William M. McAllister, trustee, gave an option to Lewis Harman and Carter Berkeley to purchase the "Wilderness" tract, is set out, and a part of the decree of the 18th of February, 1891, is recited, as follows: "And, the said Charles D. Glendy consenting thereto, the said Lewis Harman and Carter Berkeley shall also pay to the said general receiver that portion of the land payment contracted to be paid by them to the said Charles D. Glendy; it being manifest to the court that the greater part thereof will be necessary to pay off and discharge Charles D. Glendy's one-half of the trust lien, reported in this cause in the name and favor of Warner Wood."

It is assigned as error that the debt of Warner Wood was allowed as a lien against the lands of C. D. Glendy (1) because Mrs. Glendy had only a life estate in the property; (2) because the statute of limitations barred the right to enforce the lien; and (3) because the demurrer to the cross-bill should have been sustained.

It will be observed that Mrs. Glendy was not a volunteer, but a purchaser for valuable consideration, as appears from the deed of November 20, 1876, by which the "Wilderness" estate was conveyed to Hugh W. Sheffy, in trust for the sole and separate use of Mary J. Glendy, "and in the event of the death of Robert J. Glendy before the said Mary J. Glendy that said trustee will convey said real estate to the said Mary J. Glendy, to hold it during her natural life, with remainder in fee to such persons as she may by deed or will appoint, and in default thereof to her right heirs, and, in case the said Mary J. Glendy shall die before her said husband, then the said trustee will convey said real property to such persons as the said Mary Jane Glendy may in writing, attested by three witnesses, or by her last will and testament, designate and appoint, and in default of such appointment to her children." The husband survived the wife, who died leaving a last will and testament, by which she devises this estate to her son, C. D. Glendy, and her daughter, Edmonia, from whom Robert J. Glendy derives title.

We are of opinion that her devisees took a fee-simple estate.

We are also of opinion that the statute of limitations does not bar the right to enforce the lien.

The statute upon which appellant relies is section 2935 of the Code of 1887 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1555], which provides that "no deed of trust or mortgage hereafter given to secure the payment of money, and no lien hereafter reserved to secure the payment of unpaid purchase money shall be enforced after twenty years from the time when the right to enforce the same shall have first accrued, and no deed of trust or mortgage given prior to May first, eighteen hundred and eighty-eight, to secure the payment of money, and no lien reserved prior to May first, eighteen hundred and eighty-eight, to secure unpaid purchase money, shall be enforced after twenty years from the time the right to enforce the same shall have first accrued: Provided, the limitation of the right to enforce such deed of trust, mortgage, or lien reserved, shall not expire prior to May first, nineteen hundred and three."

The debt is set forth in extenso in the bill filed by McAllister, trustee, and others, and all the parties bound for its payment were before the court; and if the moiety of land belonging to C. D. Glendy could not originally in that proceeding have been sold for the satisfaction of this debt, the difficulty consisted in a defect in the prayer for relief. The whole transaction out of which this debt grew, all the parties to it, and the property upon which it was secured, were under the jurisdiction of the court in that case.

In this attitude of affairs consent decrees were entered which fully recognized that the share of Charles Glendy in the "Wilderness" tract is bound by the lien to secure the Warner Wood debt; and by the decree of April 29, 1903, he in express terms consents that it shall be "subject to the deed of trust lien in favor of Warner Wood covering all the real estate involved in this cause." It will be observed that his decree was entered two days before May 1, 1903, before which date by the terms of section 2935 it is declared that the limitation of the right to enforce such deed of trust, mortgage, or lien reserved shall not expire.

We think, also, that the cross-bill was properly filed, and that its effect was to cure any omission existing in the pleadings up to that time.

"A cross-bill is a bill filed by a defendant in a suit against a plaintiff, or some other defendant, or both, in the same suit touching the matter in question in the original bill;

and it may be either to obtain a discovery in aid of the defense to the original bill, or to obtain relief for all parties touching the matter of that bill. * * * This bill lies, among other instances, in the following cases:

* * * Where a question arises between two defendants upon a case made out by evidence arising from pleadings and proofs between the plaintiffs and defendants, * * * and where at the hearing it appears that the suit already instituted is insufficient to bring before the court all matters necessary to enable it to decide upon the rights of all the parties." Barton's Chancery Prac. vol. 1, § 101.

In this case the original bill and all the proceedings show that the executors of Warner Wood, deceased, have a perfect case as against their codefendant, C. D. Glendy. Not only do the facts recited and proof establish this right beyond peradventure, but C. D. Glendy has conceded it in decrees entered by his consent. It would be a travesty upon justice, under the circumstances disclosed in this record and which we have set out in detail, to turn these executors out of court and declare that their just claim is barred by the statute of limitations.

We are of opinion that the assignment of error, with respect to the debt of Warner Wood as a lien against the land of C. D. Glendy, is not well taken in any of its aspects.

We are further of opinion that there was no error in the decree with respect to the liens established for taxes, amounting to $307.66; for one-half of the Barley and Thomas attachments, amounting, respectively, to $233.33 and $87.09; or to the amount allowed William M. McAllister, receiver, $465.31.

We are of opinion, however, that there is error in so much of the decree as dismisses the Highland Development Company as a party to the suit. Upon this subject, the decree is based upon the proposition that the Highland Development Company claims by title adverse to any party to this cause, and not through any of said parties, following the law as stated by this court in Pillow v. Southwestern Improvement Co., 92 Va. 144, 23 S. E. 32, 53 Am. St. Rep. 804, in which the court holds that a partition suit cannot be made a substitute for an action of ejectment, and that to give the court jurisdiction to settle questions of title in such a suit the defendant must be a person who claims under one who was a joint owner with the plaintiff.

Without undertaking to discuss the effect of the amendment to the statute which has been made since the decision in Pillow v. Southwest, etc., Co. was rendered, it is sufficient to observe that a partition of the land between C. D. Glendy and R. J. Glendy was not the sole object of this suit, as originally instituted, and subsequent decrees and proceedings in the case have made it in effect a creditors' bill for the satisfaction of liens due by the coparceners and binding upon the estate to be partitioned; so that it is brought within the influence of that very numerous class of cases which require that, before real estate can be sold for the payment of debts, all clouds upon the title must be removed and all liens, their amounts, and order of priority fixed and determined. Rossett v. Fisher, 11 Grat. 492; Horton v. Bond, 28 Grat. 817, and Hudson v. Barham, 101 Va. 67, 43 S. E. 189, 99 Am. St. Rep. 849, are some of the many authorities upon that point.

For this error we are of opinion that the decree of the circuit court should be reversed, and it is affirmed in all other respects.

(104 Va. 565)

AILSTOCK v. MOORE LIME CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.
Nov. 23, 1905.)

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION — ATTACHMENT — WRONGFUL SUING OUT — LIABILITY.

Where an attachment is sued out from a court without jurisdiction, maliciously and without any reasonable or probable cause, plaintiff is liable to defendant for damages resulting from the levy.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 33, Cent. Dig. Malicious Prosecution, § 13.]

Error to Circuit Court, Botetourt County.

Action by J. T. Ailstock against the Moore Lime Company. Judgment in favor of defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Harvey & Nelson and De Witt V. Lemon, for plaintiff in error. Benj. Haden, for defendant in error.

CARDWELL, J. This is an action on the case, brought by plaintiff in error, J. T. Ailstock, to recover of the defendant in error, the Moore Lime Company, damages for malicious prosecution of a civil suit.

The declaration alleges that the Moore Lime Company "went and appeared before one W. R. Carper, then and there being one of the justices of the peace in and for said county of Botetourt, and then and there before said justice falsely and maliciously and without any probable or reasonable cause whatever caused and procured the said justice to issue and grant it a writ of attachment against the said plaintiff and in favor of the said Moore Lime Company, as plaintiff therein, in the words and figures following, to wit:

"Virginia, Botetourt County—to wit:

"To R. L. Rudersill, Deputy Sheriff of Said County: Whereas, the Moore Lime Company have this day made before me, W. R. Carper, a justice of said county, a complaint on oath that they verily believe that they have a just claim against J. T. Ailstock for the sum of one hundred and thirty-six dollars and ninety-eight cents ($136.98) for debt due them for open store account (account herewith attached), and that the said Moore Lime Company has present cause of action therefor, and further—more to the best of affiant's belief that the said J. T. Ailstock has or will have in the hands of W. C. Matthews' estate sufficient to satisfy the claim of the said Moore Lime Company.

"These are therefore in the name of the commonwealth to command you to attach the estate of the said J. T. Ailstock now in the hands of the said W. D. Matthews for the amount of the said claim and make return thereof at Eagle Rock, Virginia, in the said county, on September 9, 1903, at 10 o'clock a. m., before me or such other justice of said county as may be there to try this attachment, showing the day and manner of executing the same.

"Given under my hand this 31st day of August, 1903. W. R. Carper, J. P."

"And the said defendant afterwards, to wit, on the same day of the date of the said writ of attachment, delivered the same to R. L. Rudersill, a deputy sheriff of said county, and then and there maliciously and without any reasonable or probable cause whatsoever caused and procured the said deputy sheriff to execute the said attachment on W. C. Matthews, in whose hands was a large sum of money, to wit, $250, owing to the said plaintiff; that by reason of the execution of this writ of attachment the said W. C. Matthews refused to pay to the said plaintiff the whole or any part of the amount owing to him; that afterwards, to wit, on the 12th day of September, 1903, the attachment proceedings were dismissed and abandoned by the said defendant."

Then follows the allegation that by the wrongful and unlawful suing out and execution of said writ of attachment the plaintiff was damaged, etc.

To this declaration the Moore Lime Company demurred, which demurrer was sustained, and to that judgment this writ of error was awarded.

The sole question involved in the demurrer, necessary to be considered here, is, "If an attachment be sued out from a court without jurisdiction, maliciously and without any reasonable or probable cause whatsoever, and damage results from the levy of the said attachment, can the malicious suing out and levy of the said attachment be made the basis for an action for damages?"

This precise question has never been before this court, so far as we have been able to find from the reported cases, and the authorities elsewhere seem hopelessly divided, though it seems to us that the best-reasoned cases maintain the proposition that the action will lie.

It is clear from the declaration that the justice who issued the attachment complained of was wholly without jurisdiction. In the first place, the amount sued for ($136.98) was in excess of his jurisdiction, and his warrant sets out no ground upon which to issue an attachment.

By section 2961 of the Code of 1887 [Va.

Code 1904, p. 1571] it is provided that a justice may issue an attachment against a debtor removing his effects out of the state, and by section 2962, Code 1887 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1572], that he may issue an attachment against a tenant removing his effects from the leased premises. But neither of these grounds for the attachment appears in the justice's warrant in this case. It merely shows that the debt sued for was due and owing and was an open store account for $136.98, which is in excess of a justice's jurisdiction; the limitation of the jurisdiction of a justice in such cases being $100. Section 2939, Va. Code 1904.

"It has been considered," says Chitty, in his work on Pleading (volume 1, p. 204), "that when civil proceedings in an inferior court having no jurisdiction over the debt are adopted by a party with an express malicious intent, though there be a demand recoverable elsewhere, an action on the case may be supported." And on page 149 of the same volume, citing a number of authorities, the same author says: "If the proceeding be malicious and unfounded, though it were instituted in a court having no jurisdiction, case may be supported, for trespass."

In a note by Hare & Wallace, in 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 260, it is said: "An action lies also for maliciously holding to bail, or maliciously attaching property, under the process of a court which has no jurisdiction. And it lies for maliciously suing out an attachment, and attaching the plaintiff's property, where nothing is due, or for more than is due. It lies also for maliciously suing out a domestic attachment, where either there is nothing due, or the party has not rendered himself legally liable to such process." Among the many authorities in support of the text is the case of Goslin v. Wilcock, 2 Wils. 302, which has been cited with approval in the cases which we will hereafter refer to, and in many others.

In Boon v. Maul, 3 N. J. Law, 862, where it was held that suit lies for maliciously attaching property by writ from a court without jurisdiction, the opinion says: "The counsel for the defendant below, the plaintiff in this court, now insist that the declaration is defective, inasmuch as it does not contain an averment that the defendant knew that the common pleas of Philadelphia had not jurisdiction of the cause. In the case of Goslin v. Wilcock, 2 Wils. 302, which case very much resembles the present in point of principle, this averment was not considered essential. It appears to me that if a man maliciously makes use of the process of law, with an intention to vex and distress another, that he does it at his peril. He must see to the legality of the proceedings."

The Supreme Court of Ohio has uniformly held to the same doctrine. See Fortman v. Rottier, 8 Ohio St. 548, 70 Am. Dec. 606, and Coal Co. v. Upson, 40 Ohio St. 17. In the last-named case, the opinion says: "It may now be considered the approved doctrine that an action for the malicious prosecution of a civil suit may be maintained whenever, by virtue of any order or writ issued in the malicious suit, the defendant in that suit has been deprived of his personal liberty, or of the possession, use, or enjoyment of property of value."

In Hays v. Younglove, 7 B. Mon. 545, it was held that where a proceeding was malicious and unfounded, though instituted before a court having no jurisdiction, either trespass or case may be maintained.

To the same effect is Brand v. Hinchman, 68 Mich. 590, 36 N. W. 664, 13 Am. St. Rep. 362, where it was held, citing a number of authorities, that the action would lie, even where there had been no arrest or seizure of property.

In Morris v. Scott, 21 Wend. 281, 34 Am. Dec. 236, the Supreme Court of New York held that "an action on the case for a malicious prosecution lies against a party who falsely and maliciously prosecutes another, although the court in which such prosecution was had was utterly destitute of jurisdiction in the matter," and that all that was necessary to maintain such an action was the malice and falsehood of the prosecution.

In Kerr v. Mount, 28 N. Y. 659, a case very similar to the one under consideration, the opinion by Denio, C. J., says: "The process being void, the party who set it in motion, and all persons aiding and assisting him, were prima facie trespassers. If, though void as respects the party, it were yet regular and apparently valid on its face, it might protect the officer against an action, on the principle of Savacool v. Boughton, 5 Wend. 170, 21 Am. Dec. 181; but this protection, being extended to the officer upon motives of policy, would not at all aid the party. Acts which the officer might justify would be trespasses against the party. There is no principle with which I am acquainted which can shield the defendant from the damages which the plaintiff has sustained by his wrongful act in causing this property to be seized under a void warrant of attachment."

In Antcliff v. June, 81 Mich. 477, 45 N. W. 1019, 10 L. R. A. 621, 21 Am. St. Rep. 533, also similar in many respects to the case we have under consideration, after showing that "latterly the American authorities are tending strongly and increasing rapidly in favor of the maintenance of a suit for malicious prosecution where no property is seized and the person is not molested," and that the exact point had not been passed on by that court before, the opinion says: "I am satisfied, however, that if the wrong and injury is done by a malicious suit, it is immaterial, upon principle, whether the court had jurisdiction or not to entertain such suit. For every malicious wrong there is certainly in this day and age a remedy; and under our liberal system of pleading in this state a plain and clear statement of the facts constituting the wrong is sufficient, and it is but little matter, in actions of trespass on the case, what the action is named or called." In Michigan there is a similar statute to section 2901 of our Code of 1887 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1526], which provides that an action of trespass on the case may be maintained where an action for trespass would lie.

The line of authorities from which we have made the foregoing citations maintain that it is as much a wrong to disturb one's property or peace, or to injure his reputation and credit, by the prosecution, maliciously, of a civil suit, as it is to prosecute one maliciously and without probable cause, by which the person is wronged, going upon the common-law principle that for every injury there is a remedy, and to deny remedy in such case would violate this wholesome principle. They maintain that, when the plaintiff sets the law in motion, he is the cause, if it be done groundlessly and maliciously, of the defendant's damage, and that while a void process of law, upon which one's property is seized or he is deprived of his liberty, might upon motives of public policy be sufficient to protect the officer executing the process, it would not at all aid the party who begun and carried on the action with malice and without probable cause.

There is unquestionably a strong array of authority for the opposite view; but, as we have remarked, the question has never been determined in this state, and we are therefore at liberty to adopt the view that we think is founded on the better reason, and that view is in accordance with that taken in the authorities we have cited, and as expressed pointedly by Pennington, J., in Boon v. Maul, supra, viz., that if one maliciously makes use of the process of law, with an intention to vex and distress another, he does it at his peril. He must see to the legality of the proceedings. This is the gravamen of the charge made in the declaration in this case, and we are of opinion that the demurrer thereto should have been overruled.

The judgment of the circuit court will therefore be reversed and annulled, the demurrer overruled, and the cause remanded for a trial upon its merits.

(53 W. Va. 327)

PICKENS et al. v. DANIELS et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Nov. 21, 1905.)

1. APPEAL—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

A decree confirming the finding of a commissioner's report and decreeing in accordance therewith carries with it the presumption of correctness, and will not be reversed unless plainly wrong.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, §§ 4015-4018.]

2. EQUITY — CODEFENDANTS — LITIGATION BETWEEN.

Codefendants in a chancery suit cannot therein lawfully litigate matters between themselves wholly foreign to the matters raised by the pleadings and proofs between the plaintiffs and defendants.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 19, Cent. Dig. Equity, § 1000.]

3. APPEAL—FINAL DECREE.

A decree merely ascertaining a personal indebtedness from a defendant to the plaintiffs, but not decreeing payment thereof, and not fixing a lien therefor or otherwise providing for the payment thereof, is not final or appealable.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Barbour County.

Bill by John D. Pickens and others against W. W. Daniels and others. Decree for plaintiffs, and J. N. B. Crim appeals. Reversed in part.

Melville Peck, for appellant. Dayton & Dayton and Samuel V. Woods, for appellees.

COX, J. At January rules, 1890, the executors of James Pickens filed their bill in chancery in the circuit court of Barbour county against W. W. Daniels to subject his real estate to the satisfaction of the liens of two judgments, alleged therein to have been recovered by plaintiffs' decedent in his lifetime against Daniels and others. It is alleged in the bill that on the 14th day of May, 1886, Daniels assigned to the plaintiffs' decedent one-half of a certain debt (the one-half amounting to $581.05) due the firm of Crim & Daniels, composed of J. N. B. Crim and W. W. Daniels, as collateral security for the payment of said judgments, and that the collateral has proved unavailing, because J. N. B. Crim, the partner of Daniels, has assumed to control the whole debt, and denied the right of Daniels to assign such one-half to Pickens. The debt referred to was a deed of trust debt due from Mary J. Love to Crim & Daniels, and will hereafter be called the "Love debt." J. N. B. Crim and two judgment lienors against the real estate of Daniels were also made parties defendant to the bill. By answers Daniels denied substantially that the assignment to Pickens of one-half of the Love debt was as collateral, but claimed that the assignment was in part payment of the judgments, and that afterwards on the 16th of February, 1888, he (Daniels) settled with Dever Pickens, one of the executors of James Pickens, for the residue of said judgments, and exhibited a receipt showing such settlement, and claimed also that J. N. B. Crim assented and acquiesced in the said assignment, and that Crim had wrongfully appropriated the one-half of the Love debt assigned to Pickens, by applying the whole of the Love debt upon the purchase money of the Love land, which had been sold in another chancery suit in that court to satisfy the liens against it, and purchased by Crim. Daniels also denied any indebtedness of the firm of Crim & Daniels to Crim or any other person. By answers Crim denied substantially that said assignment to Pickens was legal, but claimed that at the time it was made there was a large indebtedness due to Crim as a member of the firm of Crim & Daniels, and also claimed that, by agreement with Daniels, the whole of the Love debt became the property of Crim as payment on the indebtedness due him from the firm, and that upon the request of Daniels he became the purchaser of the Love land and applied to the purchase money thereof the part of the whole amount of the Love debt payable out of said purchase money. In May, 1890, while this suit was pending, Daniels died. Previous to his death, he conveyed the land sought to be subjected by the plaintiffs to O. F. Hodges for $1,800, for which, in part, Hodges executed his notes to Daniels. Some of these notes were assigned by Daniels to A. W. Martin. Martin brought suit in equity against Hodges and Daniels, and in that cause Hodges paid into court to the general receiver purchase money amounting to $1,900, and that cause was heard with this cause at the time of the entry of the last decree of reference, and at the time of the entry of the decree here complained of, although the record of that cause is not brought here. After the death of Daniels, an answer was filed by his administrator setting up practically the same defenses made by his decedent. There were two references to a commissioner, the last one on the 15th of November, 1897, both in the lifetime of Daniels. J. N. B. Crim filed four exceptions to the last report of the commissioner. A decree was entered overruling three of the exceptions, without designating them, and confirming the report as modified by the decree. The decree in most particulars followed the findings of the commissioner. From this decree Crim alone appeals.

He complains of the overruling of his exceptions to the commissioner's report and of the decree in accordance with its findings. By his exception No. 4 he objects to the report because the whole of the Love debt was not reported as belonging to him. This raises the question of the correctness of the report of the commissioner and of the decree finding that the assignment of one-half of the Love debt by Daniels to Pickens was valid and absolute, and that Daniels was not indebted to plaintiffs, and that plaintiffs' judgments were extinguished and no longer liens. Considerable evidence was taken up on the question as to the assignment to Pickens of one-half of the Love debt, and upon the question of whether or not Crim assented and acquiesced therein. This evidence is conflicting, but the commissioner found that the assignment was valid and absolute and that plaintiffs' judgments were therefore extinguished. The circuit court decreed to the same effect. While the finding of a commissioner upon a question of fact is not as conclusive as the verdict of a jury, it is entitled to great weight. Holt v. Taylor, 43 W. Va.

153, 27 S. E. 320; Handy v. Scott, 26 W. Va. 710; McGuire v. Wright, 18 W. Va. 507. This decree, confirming the finding of the commissioner and decreeing in accordance therewith, carries with it the presumption of correctness and will not be overthrown unless plainly wrong. First National Bank v. Bowman, 36 W. Va. 649, 14 S. E. 989; McClure-Mable Lumber Co. v. Brooks, 46 W. Va. 732, 34 S. E. 921; Mann v. Bryant, 12 W. Va. 516. We have considered all the evidence, facts, and circumstances appearing, which we deem it unnecessary to detail in this opinion; and giving to them, and to the finding of the commissioner, and to the decree of the lower court the weight to which they are entitled under the law, we cannot say that the court erred in so decreeing. Consequently, appellant's exception No. 4 should have been overruled.

Appellant by his exception No. 1 complains because the commissioner found a balance against him on settlement of the partnership accounts of the firm of Crim & Daniels, and by his exception No. 2 complains because the commissioner did not find Daniels indebted to him upon such settlement, claiming that there was a large balance due him from Daniels. The consideration of the ruling of the lower court upon these exceptions raises the questions whether or not the settlement of the partnership accounts between Crim & Daniels, codefendants, was a proper matter to be litigated in this suit, and whether or not the decree, based upon the commissioner's report, that Crim pay to Daniels' administrator $81.59 found due upon settlement of said partnership accounts, is correct. The object of plaintiffs' bill was to enforce judgment liens. It is true that the title to one-half of the Love debt was in issue between plaintiffs and defendants J. N. B. Crim and W. W. Daniels, but this issue did not require a settlement of the partnership accounts. The state of the partnership accounts at the date of the assignment might be a material fact tending to sustain either Daniels or Crim in their contention as to the right of Daniels to make the assignment; but the present state and settlement of the partnership was foreign to the matters raised by the pleadings and the proofs between plaintiffs and defendants. The settlement of the partnership between the members thereof constituted a wholly independent subject of controversy between them, in which the plaintiffs were in no wise interested. Under the well-settled rules of equity procedure, the matter of the settlement of the partnership accounts could not legally be litigated between these codefendants in this suit. Worthington v. Staunton, 16 W. Va. 208; Tavener v. Barrett, 21 W. Va. 656; Templeman v. Fauntleroy, 3 Rand. 434; Hoffman v. Ryan, 21 W. Va. 415; Jones v. Grant, 10 Paige, 348; Vance v. Evans, 11 W. Va. 342; Radcliff v. Corrothers, 33 W. Va. 682, 11 S. E. 228; Fowler v. Lewis' Adm'r, 36 W. Va. 112, 14 S. E. 447. It may be claimed that after the death of Daniels, the settlement of the partnership accounts was proper in the settlement of the personal estate of Daniels; but the answer to that claim is disclosed by this record. There was no settlement of the personal estate of Daniels in this suit. There was no personal estate before the court to be distributed, except the aforesaid fund in the hands of the general receiver. There was no notice to creditors, no settlement of the accounts of the administrator of Daniels, no ascertainment of the personal estate, and no steps were taken to ascertain it. In this condition of the record the settlement of the partnership accounts was not proper as an incident to the settlement of the personal estate of Daniels. Appellant's exception No. 1 should have been sustained, and No. 2 overruled.

Appellant complains of the ascertainment in the decree of an indebtedness against him of $531.05, with interest from the 14th of May, 1886, in favor of plaintiffs for one-half of the Love debt, and by his exception No. 3 he objects to the report of the commissioner because it finds him chargeable with the whole amount of the one-half of the Love debt, notwithstanding the debt was not paid in full, or entitled to be paid in full, out of the proceeds of the sale of the Love land. While the decree ascertained this indebtedness, it did not decree payment of it and did not fix a lien for it, or otherwise provide for its payment, but expressly withheld any decree for payment, and continued the cause between plaintiffs and defendant Crim, with leave to plaintiffs to amend their bill. Is this part of the decree final or interlocutory? A decree rectifying the expressed opinion of the judge, but not followed by the sentence of the law, is not appealable. Hill v. Cronin, 56 W. Va. 174, 49 S. E. 132. A decree or judgment, to be final, must be complete and certain in itself, and not a recital or memorandum. It must show intrinsically and distinctly, and not inferentially, that the matter has been adjudicated. It must contain the sentence of the law. Hill v. Cronin, supra; Core v. Strickler, 24 W. Va. 689; 2 Cyc. 594, 613, 614; Harris v. Refining Co., 41 Cal. 393; Elliott v. Pell, 1 Paige, 268; Tripp v. Vincent, 3 Barb. Ch. 613. We cannot treat this ascertainment of indebtedness as more than tentative, and subject to change or revision by the court below. It is not final, so that it may be appealed from. Appellant's exception No. 3 to the report of the commissioner finding against him the whole amount of the one-half of the Love debt assigned to Pickens should have been sustained, as the appellant, if he could be charged at all, could not be charged on account of that half of the Love debt more than was payable thereon out of the proceeds of the sale of the Love land.

Appellant complains of the allowance to Samuel V. Woods of $144.79, with interest from the 1st of January, 1897, for services as counsel for W. W. Daniels in this suit. This allowance was fixed as a lien on the $81.59 decreed to be paid by appellant to Daniels' administrator upon settlement of the partnership accounts; but, as the decree for the payment of the $81.59 must be reversed and set aside, there remains nothing before the court to which the lien may attach. There was no further decree for payment or provision for payment of this allowance, or of certain general debts, other than lien debts, which were ascertained by the decree against Daniels' estate. Such debts, other than lien debts, were only ascertained, without decree for payment. The record discloses nothing for this ascertainment to operate on without further adjudication. So far as the general debts, other than lien debts, were ascertained by the decree, we must treat their ascertainment as merely interlocutory and without finality under the principles before stated.

Appellant complains that the liens were fixed and directed to be paid in an ambiguous manner out of the fund in the hands of the general receiver, derived from the sale of the real estate of Daniels. How can appellant complain? By no pleading did he claim a lien against that fund. The liens reported and decreed against it were more than the fund. Appellant made no exception to that part of the commissioner's report ascertaining the liens against that fund, and no objection to the decree thereon when it was entered. Under these circumstances, we think appellant cannot complain against that part of the decree. Ward v. Ward, 21 W. Va. 262; Keck v. Allender, 87 W. Va. 201, 16 S. E. 520.

Appellant complains that costs, including a docket fee, were adjudged against him in favor of the administrator of Daniels. While this alone would not be ground for appeal, yet this court, finding other error for which the decree must in part be reversed, may review the judgment awarding costs against appellant. Jones v. Cunningham, 7 W. Va. 707; Farmers' Bank v. Woodford, 34 W. Va. 480, 12 S. E. 544; Bogges' Heirs v. Robinson's Heirs, 5 W. Va. 402; King v. Burdett, 12 W. Va. 688. We take it that this decree against Crim for costs included the costs incurred in the settlement of the partnership accounts, as other costs were decreed in favor of Daniels' administrator against the plaintiffs. The litigation as to the settlement of the partnership accounts being improper, and it being necessary to reverse the decree in that regard, we think the decree for costs against appellant was also improper.

For the reason stated, so much of the decree entered by the circuit court of Barbour county on the 31st day of May, 1904, in this cause, as ascertained the validity of the assignment of the one-half of the Love debt by Daniels to Pickens, and as decreed that Daniels was not indebted to plaintiffs at the date of the filing of their bill, and that plaintiffs' judgments were extinguished and no longer liens against the real estate of Daniels, and that plaintiffs pay to Daniels' administrator the costs incurred, etc., and as decreed the liens upon, and directed their payment out of, the fund in the hands of the general receiver of said circuit court derived from the sale of the real estate of Daniels, is affirmed, and so much of said decree as adjudicated the settlement of the partnership accounts of the firm of Crim & Daniels, and as decreed that Crim pay to Daniels' administrator the sum of $81.59 and costs, including docket fee, and as decreed that the allowance to Samuel V. Woods be fixed as an attorney's lien on said sum so decreed to be paid by Crim to Daniels' administrator, is reversed, set aside, and annulled, and the appellant's exceptions numbered 1 and 3 to the report of the commissioner are sustained, and appellant's exceptions numbered 2 and 4 to said report are overruled, and to the extent exceptions are hereby sustained the report is set aside, and as to the residue of said decree not above affirmed or reversed the appeal and supersedeas is dismissed; and this cause is remanded to the circuit court of Barbour county for such further proceedings as may be proper therein, according to the principles herein announced and the rules governing courts of equity.

(58 W. Va. 291)

STATE v. BRIGGS.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 14, 1905.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW — DEFENSE — APPOINTMENT OF ATTORNEYS.

When the court appoints three practicing attorneys to aid a prisoner in making his defense, it is not error for one of them to withdraw from the trial, where the prisoner makes no objection to such withdrawal.

2. SAME—APPEAL—SETTING ASIDE VERDICT.

A motion to set aside the verdict of a jury on the ground that the lower court gave certain instructions for the state will not be entertained in this court, unless it affirmatively appears from the record that the accused objected to such instructions at the time they were offered, and excepted to the ruling of the court in giving them.

3. HOMICIDE—INTENT.

In determining the criminality of the act of killing, it is immaterial whether the intent was to kill the person killed, or whether the death of such person was the accidental or otherwise unintentional result of the intent to kill some one else. The criminality of the act is deemed the same.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 26, Cent. Dig. Homicide, § 23.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Fayette County. Jesse Briggs was convicted of murder, and he brings error. Affirmed.

McVey & Daniels and Littlepage & Vickers, for plaintiff in error. C. W. May, Atty. Gen., and Frank Lively, for defendant in error.

SANDERS, J. The defendant, Jesse Briggs, was convicted of the murder of Woodson Lyons by the criminal court of Fayette county, and sentenced to be hanged, and a writ of error to this judgment was allowed by one of the judges of this court. The defendant was tried at the January term, 1904, of said court, and on a motion for a new trial he filed his affidavit, showing that at the same term, and within a few days after he was indicted, he appeared before the court, and stated that he had no money, and was therefore unable to employ counsel to represent him upon his trial. The court thereupon appointed Elmo McVey, an attorney at law, to make his defense. Shortly thereafter, and on the 26th of the same month, the prisoner was arraigned for trial, at which time the court appointed J. W. Daniel and E. G. Pearson, attorneys, to assist McVey in his defense. After the jury was impeached, Pearson, without the prisoner's consent, voluntarily withdrew from the case. The affidavit also shows that Pearson was an attorney of ability and experience, while McVey and Daniel were both young and inexperienced attorneys. The affidavit does not expressly state that Pearson accepted the appointment and entered upon the trial as one of the attorneys, but presumably he did, inasmuch as it appears therefrom that after the jury were sworn he withdrew. It does not appear that there was an objection to Pearson's withdrawal, nor that demand was made for additional counsel, and this matter was not called to the court's attention, nor complained of, until after verdict. The important right of one accused of crime to have the assistance of counsel in making his defense was denied by the common law. When the government charged a person with treason or felony, he was denied this privilege, and only such questions as he could suggest was counsel allowed to argue. But the framers of our Constitution, regarding the protection of life and liberty as the protection of the most sacred and greatest right of man, promulgated such constitutional provisions as to throw around every subject of the sovereignty a veil of protection from oppression and wrong, by extending to every citizen, when the state prefers a charge against him for the infraction of its laws, the privilege of being assisted by counsel in establishing his innocence, and seeing that justice is done him when called upon to answer such charge. The law is never vindicated by the oppression and punishment of the innocent, nor by even the punishment of the guilty, until there is a fair trial in conformity to the rules of law; and, in order to avoid unjust punishment, and to see that all who are charged have their cases fully and fairly presented to the court and jury before whom they are arraigned, our Constitution has provided that the accused shall have the assistance of counsel upon his defense. But while we have such constitutional provision, and even if it should be so construed as to make it the duty of the court to provide counsel for the accused when he is peculiarly unable to do so, rather than permissive, and extending to him the privilege of such counsel, which was denied him at common law, it is not such as makes it the duty of the court to make the appointment, unless a demand therefor has been properly made. The right is such as can be waived, and the silence of the accused, and his failure to request the assistance of counsel, is a waiver of such constitutional guaranty. In State v. Kellison, 56 W. Va. 690, 47 S. E. 166, it is said by Judge Poffenbarger: "The Constitution does not make assistance of counsel a prerequisite to conviction, as it does a trial by jury. The clause contains no prohibitory language. It only says he shall have the assistance of counsel. * * * Even if said clause makes it the duty of the state to furnish counsel when demanded, it does not follow that such action is to be taken unless demand therefor has been made." In this case the court appointed three attorneys to represent the accused upon his trial, and, while the affidavit alleges that the two who remained and conducted the trial were young and inexperienced, yet no objection was made to Pearson retiring from the case, the court was not asked to require him to continue in the trial, nor was additional counsel asked for. The defendant complained of his retirement for the first time after the verdict was pronounced against him. The affidavit, while it contains the facts as hereinbefore stated, was not made until after verdict. We think the court committed no error in refusing to set aside the verdict on this ground.

It is claimed by the prisoner that the court erred in giving certain instructions to the jury for the state. We find from the bill of exceptions that the defendant moved to have the verdict of the jury set aside on the ground that instructions numbered 1 to 7, inclusive, were given for the state; but the record fails to show that the court gave more than five such instructions, which are numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, and 7, and as to these which were given there is nothing in the record to show that the defendant made any objection to them when offered, or excepted to them when given. In fact, there is nothing to show that the prisoner complained of them until he made his motion to set aside the verdict of the jury, and assigned the giving of them as one of the grounds therefor. But, even if objection had been made to these instructions, counsel in their brief do not point out any objection to them, nor is that urged as a ground for reversal of the case; and, moreover, upon an examination, it is found that they correctly expound the law applicable to this case. The prisoner in his assignment of error says that it was error for the court to refuse to give the special charge to the jury which was asked by him. We do not find contained in the record any instructions or charge offered by the defendant which were not given, but, under the head of "Defendant's Instructions," we find numbers 5 and 6, but it does not appear whether these instructions were given or refused, but they propound correct propositions of law applicable to the case, and, nothing appearing in the record to the contrary, we must presume that these instructions were given; and, inasmuch as they are numbered 5 and 6, it would indicate that there had been other instructions offered by the prisoner, but, if so, they are not made a part of the record, and this court cannot determine whether or not it was error for the court to refuse them, even if it did so.

This brings us to the question as to whether or not the verdict of the jury is supported by the evidence, and, in dealing with this question, it will not be our purpose to detail the testimony, because it will avail nothing to do so, and in fact it is not necessary for an appellate court to give a review, and most especially an extensive one, of the testimony offered upon the trial; but all that is proper, and certainly all that is demanded, is to give conclusions reached by the court from such evidence. The evidence here shows that the prisoner fired the shot which resulted in the death of Woodson Lyons; in fact the prisoner does not deny this. And not only does it show that the shot was fired, but that at the time it was done the deceased and Mary Young were seated in a room, and that the prisoner stepped to the door, and addressed himself to the woman, and immediately pulled his pistol, and fired four shots in rapid succession, some finding lodgment in the woman, and one in the deceased. The prisoner, to excuse himself, says that at the time the shot was fired both the woman and the deceased were advancing toward him, the woman having in her hand a razor. This evidence of the prisoner is without corroboration, while the evidence clearly preponderates to the contrary, and shows that the shots were fired without excuse or provocation.

Counsel argue that this killing was done in the heat of passion, and that for that reason the jury should not have found the prisoner guilty of murder in the first degree. We see no just ground upon which to base such a contention. The evidence fails to disclose anything from which such a conclusion could be drawn. Murder in the first degree is the willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing of a human being, but this deliberation and premeditation need not exist for any appreciable length of time before the commission of the act. If at the time the fatal shot was fired the prisoner had formed the specific intent of taking the life of either Mary Young or the deceased, he would be guilty of murder in the first degree, and upon this evidence the jury has so found. While we realize full well the extreme penalty which the prisoner has been called upon to pay, and while the infliction of such punishment always appeals to the sympathy of men personally, yet it must be remembered that the law declares that he who takes life willfully, premeditatedly, and deliberately must pay the debt with his own life in return. This being the demand of the law, the evidence proving the prisoner guilty, the jury having so found, and the trial court having so adjudged, this court is powerless, under the forms and rules of law, to render assistance to the prisoner now, and the judgment of the criminal court is therefore affirmed.

(58 W. Va. 308)

CAMPBELL v. CITY OF ELKINS.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 14, 1905.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—STREETS—PUBLIC CHARACTER—RECOGNITION.

To establish prima facie the public character of a road, street, or alley, it is only necessary to prove its use as such by the public and recognition of it as such by the county court, or the city or town, as the case may be; and such act or recognition may be shown either by the records of the county court or municipal corporation, or by proof of work done upon the same by one who is shown to be the officer whose duty it is to take care of, work, and repair the road in the precinct in which it is or the street or alley of the town or city.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 36, Cent. Dig. Municipal Corporations, §§ 1422, 1428.]

2. SAME—EVIDENCE.

In establishing such recognition by proof of work done upon the road or street by such officer, the amount and character of the work is immaterial, if it be such as to show clearly that it was work upon the road or street for the public benefit.

3. SAME—LATENT DEFECTS—LIABILITIES.

Liability of a municipal corporation for injury occasioned by a latent defect in a street or road, such a defect as the injured party could not have observed or discovered by the exercise of reasonable care and prudence, is absolute, and does not depend upon lack of diligence or care on the part of the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 36, Cent. Dig. Municipal Corporations, §§ 1612, 1616.]

4. SAME—DEFECTIVE SIDEWALK.

A board in a wooden sidewalk, laid on stringers resting upon smooth ground, not dangerous in character, so unsound as to give way under the weight of a pedestrian and injure him, is an actionable defect under the law of this state.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 36, Cent. Dig. Municipal Corporations, § 1624.]

5. INTEREST—JUDGMENT EX DELICTO.

A judgment rendered upon a verdict in an action ex delicto should bear interest from the date of the verdict, if there be one, and not from the date of the judgment.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Circuit Court, Randolph County.

Action by L. H. Campbell against the city of Elkins. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

W. B. Maxwell and E. D. Talbott, for plaintiff in error. Wamsley & Coberley, for defendant in error.

POFFENBARGER, J. The city of Elkins complains on a writ of error of a judgment of the circuit court of Randolph county against it in favor of L. H. Campbell for damages resulting to him from a defective sidewalk, whereby his ankle was dislocated and his leg broken. The errors assigned are predicated on the action of the court in overruling the demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence, refusing to set aside the verdict of the jury on the ground of excessiveness, and rendering judgment for the amount of the damages assessed by the jury, with interest thereon from the date of the verdict.

Very slight evidence of recognition by the city of the street on which the injury occurred is found in the record. No ordinance or order of the council recognizing it as a public street appears, but J. G. L. Shaffer, superintendent of streets at the time, testified that he thought that particular street was under the control of the city in October and November, 1900, and in that connection said: "We repaired the walks." He also testified that this work was done under the direction of the city authorities. James A. Bent testified that the street in question had been there "since the town was built," but he proves no acts of recognition by the city authorities. That the people used the street is disclosed by considerable evidence in the case, but the only testimony to an act of recognition is that of Shaffer, and he does not say by whom or in what manner he was directed to make repairs upon the walks. In response to the question whether it was done under the direction of the city authorities, he replies, "Yes, sir," but this is very indefinite. Whether he was so directed by the mayor, a member of the council, the street commissioner, or some other officer, or whether the direction was given in pursuance of an order of the council, is in no way indicated. It is well settled by the decisions of this court, however, that proof of the mere working of a road by a road surveyor and its use by the public are sufficient to establish the character of the road as a public road in any proceeding. Boyd v. Woolwine, 40 W. Va. 282, 21 S. E. 1020; Ball v. Cox, 29 W. Va. 407, 1 S. E. 673; Yates v. Grafton, 33 W. Va. 507, 11 S. E. 8; Kelly's Case, 8 Grat. 632; Parrish v. Huntington (W. Va.) 50 S. E. 416. The same rule is declared in Yates v. Grafton to be applicable to the streets and alleys of cities and towns, and this view finds support in the fact that the statute upon which the doctrine rests is applicable to both classes of highways. It says: "And every road, street or alley used and occupied as a public road, street or alley, shall in all courts and places, be taken and deemed to be a public road, street or alley (as the case may be,) whenever the establishment thereof as such may come in question." Code 1899, c. 43, § 31. If used by the public and recognized in any manner by the public authorities in charge of the county roads or streets and alleys, as the case may be, the road, street, or alley in question is a public highway. Proof of these facts make it such prima facie. If the work done is of such character and is done by such person and under such circumstances as to show an express and unequivocal act of recognition, the amount of importance of the work is immaterial. It may be much or little; but it must be done in such manner and by such person as to show intent to treat it as a public highway. The sidewalk is part of the street, and work on it is work on the street necessarily. As he was the officer of the city charged with such work, corresponding to the road surveyor in the case of county roads, it is not enough, under our decisions, that it appear that work was done upon the street by him? It would seem that it is not necessary to prove that he had particular direction from the council to do the work. Yates v. Grafton says: "Acceptance of the county or city or incorporated town need not be proved by matter of record, but may be presumed from acts of recognition, acceptance and claim." Point 4, syllabus, Talbott v. King, 32 W. Va. 6, 9 S. E. 48, says: "The user must be accompanied either by an order of the county court recognizing it in some way as a road, or the road must be worked by a surveyor as such." And in the opinion in that case the evidence is reviewed and analyzed thoroughly to ascertain whether the fact of work by a surveyor is established by it. The inquiry does not go to the extent of the directions under which he worked or his authority as an overseer. These inquiries seem to have been regarded as unnecessary in view of the presumption in favor of the regularity of the acts of public officers. Though very slight, the evidence must be held, under the decisions above referred to, sufficient to warrant a finding by the jury that the street in question was a public one, and, therefore, good on demurrer.

The plaintiff testified that, as he was walking at a rapid gait, near the middle of the board walk, about 9 o'clock in the evening, his foot slipped on a certain plank and broke it down, so that his right heel went into a hole, made by the breaking of the board, and threw him forward with his weight on that foot, and thus dislocated his ankle and broke a bone in the leg. He produced, on the trial, a part of the board which he says so broke with him, and showed that it was decayed to some extent. As to the character of the defect, his testimony is rather indefinite. It did not let his foot go clear through, but he says his foot went into it and his heel caught in the next plank and kept him from falling, which statement seems to import that the defect was such as to permit his heel to become fastened in it, so that his weight, thrown upon the foot, either forward or to one side, dislocated the ankle and broke a bone. He says he saw the hole that night, November 25, 1900, and went back in April or May following, and found the hole still there, and that a board had broken in the middle, and the end of the part toward the street was down in the middle of the walk, while the other half rested on the stringer nearest the property line and the middle stringer. The piece produced at the trial was the one the end of which had gone down under his weight. Another witness swears he went the next morning and examined the sidewalk, to ascertain, if possible, the place and manner of the injury, and found a hole in the sidewalk, and, from the tracks left in the frost by the plaintiff in crawling away seeking assistance, he was able to locate that as the place at which the injury occurred. But he does not describe the hole in the sidewalk. For aught that he says, it may have been a mere depression caused by a broken board which had settled slightly. The physician who was called to attend him was mayor of the city at the time, and on cross-examination he gave contradictory statements of the plaintiff as to the place at which and the manner in which the injury was sustained, saying the injured man had told him he had fallen at an offset in the walk. The street commissioner, called as a witness for the defendant, says that, having heard of the accident, he went the next day and examined the sidewalk, and found that, owing to the rotting away of the middle stringer, a board had broken in the middle and swaged, so as to make a depression in the walk four or five inches deep; but he did not think it was of sufficient size and depth to allow a person's foot to go down into it. Mrs. Poe, another witness for the defendant, said the plaintiff had come to her door that night seeking help, and while there had told her he had slipped and dislocated his ankle.

Absolute liability of municipal corporations for injuries occasioned by defects in highways, imposed by the decisions of this court, starting with Sheff v. Huntington, 16 W. Va. 307, and coming down to Arthur v. City of Charleston, 51 W. Va. 132, 41 S. E. 171, renders it impossible for the court to say, in cases of this class, whether there is any evidence of negligence or want of care on the part of the corporation and withhold them from the jury for lack thereof. Diligence and the exercise of even the highest degree of care does not excuse. Under this rule, a sudden disaster to a highway, such as the falling of a tree across it, or a landslide into it, or its demolition by storm, in the night, in front of a traveler, resulting in injury to him or his property, under such circumstances as would prevent both him and the officer charged with oversight of the road from having any previous knowledge of the occurrence, would probably make the corporation liable; but "so the law is writ," and has been for 25 years. In Chapman v. Milton, 31 W. Va. 384, 7 S. E. 22, the weight of the burden which this construction of the statute imposes was pointed out, and as a sort of countervailing principle the law of contributory negligence adverted to in the following language: "But in cases like that now under consideration, where the statute in express terms imposes an absolute liability upon the town, it is unnecessary to allege or to prove notice of the defect to the town. This statute seems to be somewhat harsh and impolitic; but it is one the Legislature had the power to make, and therefore nothing is left to the courts but to enforce it. However, the construction we have given it is not likely to expose municipal corporations to any extraordinary burden, because, if the defect in the highway be open and visible, and the traveler, through his own negligence or rashness, should, by attempting to pass over it thereby suffer injury, such injury would be attributable to himself, and could not be said to arise from the want of repair to the highway." In recent years the principles of the law relating to contributory negligence seem to have been applied in determining what constitutes a defect in a highway, as well as in estopping the plaintiff from claiming damages, when the defect is clearly proven, but he has contributed to his own injury by his negligence in attempting to use the defective part of the road or street. As the law imposes upon the traveler the duty of exercising care in the use of the streets, such highways as may be safely used, by the exercise of care and prudence, are held not to be defective or out of repair, and injury thereon gives no right of action. Van Pelt v. Clarksburg, 42 W. Va. 218, 24 S. E. 878, declares that: "A municipal corporation is not an insurer against accidents upon its streets and roads. Nor is every defect therein, though it may cause the injury sued for, actionable. It is sufficient if the streets and roads are in a reasonably safe condition for travel in ordinary modes with ordinary care; and whether so or not is a practical question, to be determined in each case by its particular circumstances." In Waggener v. Town of Point Pleasant, 42 W. Va. 798, 26 S. E. 352, on demurrer to the declaration, the court held that: "The averment that a person, while passing over a public brick sidewalk in bad repair, rough, uneven, sideling, and slippery, caught his foot against a projecting brick, fell down, injuring himself, does not state a sufficient cause of action, as such incidents are liable to occur with the old and feeble, careless and indifferent, at almost any place or time. Municipalities are simply required to keep streets and sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition for persons traveling in the usual modes, by day and night, and exercising ordinary care." To the same effect see Yeager v. Bluefield, 40 W. Va. 484, 21 S. E. 752. In all these cases the alleged defects were patent, such as could be seen and overcome by exercising care in passing them.

Moore v. Huntington, 31 W. Va. 842, 8 S. E. 512, denies the application of these principles in determining as to a latent defect, one which cannot be observed or known before injury results from it, and seems to close every avenue of escape from liability for injury by them. After stating the rule applicable to patent defects, the court there says: "But, if the injury does not result from these, but from another and latent defect, which no reasonable degree of prudence or care could detect, he [a person using the street] will not be considered as taking the risk of injury from the latent defect." In the opinion, at page 849 of 31 W. Va., and page 515 of 8 S. E., Judge Snyder says a person so injured will be entitled to recover if the defect is one "for which the municipality is responsible"; but nothing in the opinion indicates any state of circumstances under which, in such case, the defect could be considered one for which the municipality would not be responsible. In that case, as in this, the plaintiff was injured by the breaking of a board in a wooden sidewalk, and of the defect the court said: "This was a latent defect, for which the defendant was responsible by reason of its neglect in not repairing the sidewalk." As under the decisions hereinbefore noted, the liability of the town is absolute, not dependent upon its negligence or want of care, the word "neglect" could not have been used in its ordinary legal sense, and must be deemed to have been used to signify mere failure to repair, although it did not appear that the corporation had had any knowledge of the defect. In several of the states having statutes similar to ours, liability for such defects does not attach unless negligence on the part of the town is established by showing either knowledge of it or want of ordinary diligence which would have revealed it, such as failure to inspect. Thomp. Com. Neg., § 6156; Jackson v. Pool, 91 Tenn. 448, 19 S. W. 324; McGrail v. Kalamazoo, 94 Mich. 52, 53 N. W. 935. But our decisions have adopted the principle enunciated in their prototype, Merrill v. Hampden, 26 Me. 234, holding that: "If there be a defect in the road, however small, which occasions an injury, the party injured using common and ordinary care, the town is liable." See Sheff v. Huntington, cited. Hence, in determining whether an imperfection in a highway which occasions an injury, when the traveler is not in any way at fault and has had no means of knowledge of it, is an actionable defect, the court cannot base a negative answer on want of evidence of negligence. The town's duty is absolute, and, to prevent liability, it must appear that it has provided a reasonably safe sidewalk, street, or road, as the case may be.

Here the walk was composed of oak boards, about six or seven feet in length, laid cross-wise on three stringers, about equidistant from each other, and, for aught that appears to the contrary, resting on the ground. As the broken board sank only four or five inches below the others, on account of the decay of the stringer, the boards were probably not more than six inches above the ground. The walk was from five to seven years old, but the boards, save the one which broke, appeared to be sound. The street on which it was did not bear the burden of heavy travel, and was not lighted for use at night. Those who used it most were school children. It was not over dangerous ground, such as a ditch, ravine, or sideling place, in view of which the breaking of a decayed board might reasonably be expected to result in injury, but on a comparatively smooth surface, in consequence of which 99 boards might break without injury to the traveler, and the one hundredth with such injury. Under such circumstances, the law announced by the Tennessee court in Jackson v. Pool, 91 Tenn. 448, 19 S. W. 324, might be urged, without doing any violence to reason. There this principle was declared: "In suit against a city for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff while passing over a common plank sidewalk laid upon the ground, by reason of an alleged defect therein, there being proof tending to show the defect was latent, it is error for the court to charge that the city was liable, though the defect was latent, if it could have been discovered by 'inspection, observation, or otherwise.' This strong doctrine is not applied to latent defects in common sidewalks, but only to defects in structures over dangerous places." But it would be inconsistent with the law as evidenced by our decisions; for, in Tennessee, the basis of municipal liability, as revealed by the above quotation itself, is negligence, not violation of a statutory guaranty of safety, when the pedestrian is not himself in any way at fault. Under Moore v. Huntington, cited, and principles uniformly declared by our decisions, the imperfection under consideration must be deemed a defect and actionable.

It is hardly necessary to remark that there is sufficient evidence to warrant a finding by a jury that the injury resulted from the defect, since there is direct and positive evidence to this effect, as has been already indicated. The demurree is entitled to the benefit of all inferences fairly arising from the evidence. Barrett v. Coal Co., 55 W. Va. 395, 47 S. E. 154; Gunn v. Railroad Co., 42 W. Va. 676, 26 S. E. 546, 36 L. R. A. 575. If the evidence, were it permitted to go to the jury, would sustain a verdict in favor of the demurree, the demurrer should be overruled.

Kelley v. Railroad Co. (decided at this term) 52 S. E. 520.

As the verdict was rendered May 8, 1903, the subsequent rendition of judgment for the amount thereof with interest from the date of the verdict was in strict obedience to the mandate of the statute. Code 1899, c. 131, § 16. Prior to Acts 1882, p. 341, c. 120, amending certain sections of the Code, including sections 14 and 16, this would have been error. Fowler v. Railroad Co., 18 W. Va. 579. But the act of 1882 amended the chapter so as to make it say, in section 14, judgment shall be entered "with interest from the date of the verdict," instead of "from the date of the judgment," as in the Code of 1868, and, in section 16, for the aggregate of principal and interest due at the date of the verdict, if there be one; otherwise, at the date of the judgment or decree, with interest thereon from such date, in all cases as to which it is not otherwise provided. "Such date" means the date of the verdict when there is one, and the date of the judgment or decree when there is no verdict. This is the plain, logical, as well as grammatical, connection and meaning of the words. Fowler v. Railroad Co., cited, and Hawker v. Railroad Co., 15 W. Va. 628, 36 S. E. 825, assert that actions for damages are ruled by the two sections above referred to, and, as they have been amended so as to give interest from the date of the verdict instead of the date of the judgment, those two cases sustain the interpretation of the statute herein expressed.

As no error is perceived in the judgment, it will be affirmed, with costs and damages according to law.

(72 S. C. 479)

BEST v. SEABOARD AIR LINE RY.
(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 20, 1905.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—JURISDICTION.

Const. art. 5, § 21, provides that magistrates shall have jurisdiction in such civil cases as the General Assembly shall prescribe, and Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 71, provides that magistrates shall have jurisdiction of an action for a penalty where the amount claimed does not exceed $100. Held, to give magistrates jurisdiction in such cases against all defendants subject to the process of the court or who may voluntarily appear therein.

2. SAME—ACTION AGAINST FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 155, provides for service of summons on foreign corporations when they have property within the state, or the cause of action arose therein, or service may be had on certain officers or agents of the corporation. Held, in connection with Const. art. 5, § 21, and Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 71, to give a magistrate jurisdiction of an action against a foreign corporation having property in the state to recover a penalty by due service of summons.

3. CARRIERS—LOST FREIGHT—RECOVERY OF PENALTY.

Under Act Feb. 23, 1903 (24 St. at Large, p. 81), providing that failure to adjust claims against a carrier within the times prescribed shall subject a carrier to a penalty, provided that, unless the consignee recover the full amount claimed, no penalty shall be recovered, a consignee of freight cannot recover the penalty for failure to pay for the lost freight, where he accepts, after the time provided in the act, the amount claimed for loss of freight before bringing the action for penalty.

Gary, A. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Barnwell County; Geo. E. Prince, Judge.

Action by C. A. Best against the Seaboard Air Line Railway. From an order of the circuit court reversing a judgment of the magistrate, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Davis & Best, for appellant. Robert Alldrich, for respondent.

JONES, J. The plaintiff brought this action in a court of magistrate, in Barnwell county, S. C., to recover of defendant a penalty of $50, claimed under the act of 1903, for failure to adjust and pay, within the time required by that act, a claim of $4.40 for loss of a barrel of flour during transportation. The complaint further alleged that the defendant was a corporation under the laws of North Carolina and Virginia, with its line of railroad track through Barnwell county, and that the claim for loss had been paid by the defendant after the time required by the act, but before the commencement of the action for the penalty. Defendant appeared in the magistrate court and demurred: (1) On the ground that the magistrate had no jurisdiction of an action against a foreign corporation; (2) that it appeared on the face of the complaint that the claim for loss or damage had been paid by defendant and received by the plaintiff, and that therefore no action for the penalty could be maintained. The magistrate overruled the demurrer and gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the penalty, $50. On appeal to the circuit court raising the same questions, the circuit court set aside the judgment of the magistrate and dismissed the complaint, sustaining both grounds of the demurrer. The present appeal by plaintiff questions both these rulings.

1. By section 21, art. 5, of the Constitution, it is provided that "magistrates shall have jurisdiction in such civil cases as the General Assembly may prescribe: Provided, such jurisdiction shall not extend to cases where the value of property in controversy, or the amount claimed, exceeds one hundred dollars, or to cases where the title to real estate is in question, or to cases in chancery." The General Assembly, by section 71 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1902, prescribed that magistrates shall have civil jurisdiction in: "(3) An action for a penalty, fine or forfeiture, where the amount claimed or property does not exceed one hundred dollars." This would seem to give magistrates jurisdiction in an action for a penalty not exceeding $100 against all defendants who may be subject to the process of that court, or who may voluntarily appear therein. With respect to the service of the summons on a foreign corporation, it is provided in section 155 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1902 that "such service can be made in respect to a foreign corporation only when it has property within the state, or the cause of action arose therein, or where such service shall be made in this state personally upon the president, cashier, treasurer, attorney or secretary, or any agent thereof." It appears by the complaint that the defendant has property in this state, a line of railroad track extending through Barnwell county, in this state, and is engaged in the business of transporting freight to Ulmer, in Barnwell county, S. C., and has an agent there. Under our statutes, now appearing as section 1779 et seq., vol. 1, Civ. Code 1902, foreign corporations doing business in this state are made subject to the courts of this state in all actions or suits arising out of the business or dealings of such corporation with any citizen or corporation within this state. This legislation is broad enough to subject foreign corporations to the jurisdiction of a magistrate, where the magistrate otherwise has jurisdiction of the cause of action, and the foreign corporation appears or is otherwise served with process according to law. By the act of 1898 (22 St. at Large, p. 698), section 156, Code Civ. Proc. 1902, providing for service by publication (among other things) "where the defendant is a foreign corporation, has property within the state, or the cause of action arose therein," was so amended as to empower magistrates within their jurisdiction to order service by publication on absent defendants, in the same manner and to the same extent as authorized by section 156 to be done by the circuit court, or a judge thereof, or the clerk of the court of common pleas, the master, or the probate judge. In this case, however, no question is involved as to the manner of service or process, as it appears on the record that the action was commenced by service of summons and complaint on the 24th day of November, 1903, and that defendant appeared and demurred, not only to the jurisdiction of the magistrate, but to the complaint on its merits. In so far, therefore, as the question of jurisdiction over the person depends upon the service of process or appearance of defendant, it is complete. Garrett v. Herring Co., 69 S. C. 278, 48 S. E. 254, citing cases.

It is contended that section 423, Code Civ. Proc. 1902, limits jurisdiction over foreign corporations to the circuit court in the cases therein specified. That section provides: "An action against a corporation created by or under the laws of any other state, government or country may be brought in the circuit court—(1) By any resident of this state for any cause of action. (2) By a plaintiff not a resident of this state, when the cause of action shall have arisen, or the subject of the action shall be situated, within this state."

This section must be construed consistently with subsequent legislation of this state, subjecting foreign corporations doing business in this state to the jurisdiction of the courts of this state. It will be observed that there are no words in the above section which show the intent that all actions against foreign corporations must be brought in the circuit court. It is not inconsistent with the legislation of the state, which in terms or by necessary implication gives jurisdiction to magistrates to entertain actions against such corporations doing business in this state, at the suit of citizens or corporations of this state arising out of such business, when the action is otherwise within the jurisdiction of the magistrate; for example, a magistrate has no jurisdiction when the amount exceeds $100, when the title to real estate is involved, in equitable actions, and when the cause of action arose out of the state. But under this section the circuit court has jurisdiction of a suit by a resident against a foreign corporation in any cause of action, even when it arose out of the state. Chafee v. Postal Telegraph Co., 35 S. C. 372, 14 S. E. 764. But under subdivision 2 of this section the circuit court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit by a nonresident against a foreign corporation, when the cause of action arose in this state, or the subject of the action shall be situated within the state. It may be that a magistrate has no jurisdiction to entertain such a suit by a nonresident, against a foreign corporation; but we are not called upon to consider that question, as it is not suggested that plaintiff is not a resident of this state, or that the complaint is defective for not alleging that plaintiff is a resident of this state. The case of Chafee v. Postal Telegraph Co., 35 S. C. 372, 14 S. E. 764, has no real bearing upon the particular point involved in this case, as that case was decided in 1891, before the legislation of 1897 referred to, and the court was not considering whether a magistrate had jurisdiction in a case like the present one; but the question there was whether in a suit against a foreign corporation in the circuit court a complaint was demurrable for failure to state that the plaintiff is a resident of this state. We therefore think the circuit court was in error in holding that the magistrate was without jurisdiction in this case.

2. We concur, however, in the view of the circuit court that under the act of February 23, 1903 (24 St. at Large, p. 81), an action cannot be maintained for a penalty alone, after a settlement for loss or damage before suit. The statute being penal should receive such strict construction as would not defeat the obvious intent of the Legislature. The act expressly provides: "Failure to adjust and pay such claim within the periods respectively herein prescribed, shall subject each common carrier so failing to a penalty of fifty dollars for each and every such failure, to be recovered by any consignee or consignees aggrieved, in any court of competent jurisdiction: Provided, that unless such consignee or consignees recover in such action the full amount claimed, no penalty shall be recovered, but only the actual amount of loss or damage, with interest as aforesaid. * * *". It seems that the plain meaning of the statute is to make recovery of the amount claimed in a court of competent jurisdiction a condition precedent to a recovery of the penalty, as the statute expressly says that no penalty shall be recovered unless the consignee recover the full amount claimed in such action. The term "recover," when considered by itself, is not the usual or apt word to indicate a voluntary payment or receipt of money for damages suffered, but ordinarily means the obtaining in a suit of the right to something by a verdict and judgment of a court, and that this is the meaning in the present statute is manifest by the context—"recover in such action." The object of the statute was not to penalize the carrier for merely refusing to pay a claim within the time required, whether just or unjust, but the design was to bring about a reasonably prompt settlement of all proper claims; the penalty, in case of a recovery in a court, operating as a deterrent of the carrier in refusing to settle just claims, and as compensation of the claimant for the trouble and expense of the suit which the carrier's unreasonable delay and refusal made necessary. It is true that the statute authorizes a suit for the penalty in the same action for the loss or damage, but that is very far from saying that the penalty is not dependent upon the recovery of the claim by action in court. Doubtless the act provided for such a joinder mainly because the recovery of the penalty is dependent upon recovery at law of the claim.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

GARY, A. J. (dissenting). This appeal raises two questions: First, was there error on the part of his honor, the circuit judge, in ruling that the magistrate did not have jurisdiction, on the ground that the defendant was a foreign corporation; and, second, was there error in his construction of the act of 1903? The action was commenced in a magistrate's court.

The complaint alleges: First. "That the defendant, the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company, is a corporation duly created and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the states of North Carolina and Virginia, with its line of railroad track extending through the state of South Carolina, Barnwell county." Second. "That on the 10th day of June, 1903, the plaintiff herein filed a claim with the agent of the defendant at Ulmer, S. C., for one barrel of flour, the same being four dollars and forty cents ($4.40), lost in transit from Nashville, Tenn., to Ulmer, S. C., the said barrel of flour having been consigned along with other flour to the plaintiff herein, from the Liberty Mills, of Nashville, Tenn., and that on the 16th day of November, 1903, the defendant paid the said claim for the loss, to wit, $4.40, but the same was not paid or refused until long after ninety days had expired from the date the said claim for shortage was filed with the said agent."

The defendant filed the following demurrer: "The defendant company, by Robert Aldrich and J. O. Patterson, Jr., its attorneys demurs to the complaint herein, upon the following ground, that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, in this: (1) That it appears upon the face of said complaint, that the defendant company is a corporation created and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the states of North Carolina and Virginia, and therefore is a foreign corporation, and a magistrate's court has no jurisdiction of actions against a foreign corporation. (2) That it appears from the face of said complaint that the claim of $4.40 for the barrel of flour, alleged to have been lost, has been paid by the defendant company and received by the plaintiff. Wherefore the defendant demands that the said complaint be dismissed, with cost."

The magistrate overruled the demurrer and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff, whereupon the defendant appealed to the circuit court upon two exceptions, assigning error in overruling the respective grounds of demurrer. His honor, the presiding judge, sustained both exceptions and reversed the judgment of the magistrate. The circuit judge based his ruling as to the first exception on section 423 of the Code, and the case of Chafee v. Postal Tel. Co., 35 S. C. 372, 14 S. E. 764. The following are the reasons assigned by him in sustaining the second exception: "The act of 1903 provides a penalty of $50 for failure to adjust and pay the claims referred to in the act, within the period named, but provides 'that, unless such consignee recover in such action the full amount claimed, no penalty shall be recovered.' This being a penal statute, it must be strictly construed, and the penalty provided for kept within the terms of the act; and, the plaintiff having collected and received the amount of the claim prior to bringing his suit, he surrendered his cause of action for the penalty."

The assignments of error are as follows: "(1) That his honor erred, it is respectfully submitted, in holding that a court of magistrate has no jurisdiction of an action against a foreign corporation. (2) That his honor erred, it is respectfully submitted, in holding that the claim of the plaintiff for property lost having been paid by the defendant and received by the plaintiff before the action was brought, the plaintiff could not maintain an action for the penalty."

1. We will first consider the question whether the circuit judge erred in ruling that the magistrate did not have jurisdiction of the defendant, on the ground that the defendant was a foreign corporation. It will be seen by reference to the Acts of 1902, pp. 1311, 1316, under the head of "Railroad Consolidations," that the defendant was chartered under and by virtue of the laws of the state of South Carolina, and is therefore a domestic corporation. Section 2055 of the Code of Laws of 1902, relative to suits against consolidated railroad companies, provides that "suits may be brought and maintained against such new companies, in any of the courts of this state, for all causes of action in the same manner as against other railroad companies therein." Considering, however, that the court cannot take judicial notice of the fact that the defendant is a domestic corporation, there are other reasons why the magistrate had jurisdiction.

Article 9, § 8, of the Constitution, is as follows: "The General Assembly shall not grant to any foreign corporation or association a license to build, operate or lease any railroad in this state; but in all cases where a railroad is to be built or operated, or is now being operated, in this state, and the same shall be partly in this state and partly in another state, or in other states, the owners or projectors thereof shall first become incorporated under the laws of this state; nor shall any foreign corporation or association lease or operate any railroad in this state, or purchase the same or any interest therein. Consolidation of any railroad lines and corporations in this state with others shall be allowed only where the consolidated company shall become a domestic corporation of this state. No general or special law shall ever be passed for the benefit of any foreign corporation operating a railroad under an existing license of this state, or under any existing lease, and no grant of any right or privilege and no exemption from any burden shall be made to any such foreign corporation, except upon the condition that the owners or stockholders thereof shall first organize a corporation in this state under the laws thereof, and shall thereafter operate and manage the same and the business thereof under said domestic charter." Chapter 44 of the Code of Laws of 1902 sets forth the conditions upon which foreign corporations are permitted to do business in this state. Section 1793 of said chapter provides that, "when a foreign corporation complies with the provisions and requirements of this chapter, it shall ipso facto become a domestic corporation, and shall enjoy the rights and be subject to the liabilities of such domestic corporations; it may sue and be sued in the courts of this state, and shall be subject to the jurisdiction of this state as fully as if it were originally created under the laws of the state of South Carolina." Section 1794 makes it unlawful for any foreign corporation to do business, or attempt to do business, in this state without first having complied with the requirements of said chapter, and provides a punishment for violation of said provisions.

It is true, the complaint alleges that the defendant is a corporation, created under the laws of North Carolina and Virginia, but it likewise appears upon the face thereof, that the defendant is operating its railroad in Barnwell county, of this state. In 13 Enc. of Law, 895, it is said: "When a foreign corporation avails itself of the privilege of doing business in a state whose laws authorize it to be sued there, by service of process upon an agent, its assent to such service will be implied. It waives the right to object to the mode of service of process which the state laws authorize. The fact that it has not complied with a state law requiring it to appoint and designate an agent for service of process, is wholly immaterial. It is estopped by its actions from denying that it has complied with this requirement." Applying this principle to the case under consideration, the defendant is estopped from contending that it is not a domestic corporation, for if it is not a domestic corporation, then the operation of its railroad is unlawful. It would be against public policy to give effect to such contention. From the fact that the defendant is doing business in this state, the presumption arises that it has complied with the conditions upon which it was lawful for it to operate its railroad. 1 Elliott on Evidence, § 106; 22 Enc. of Law, 1280.

There is another reason why the magistrate had jurisdiction of the defendant. Jurisdiction is of two kinds—of the person, and of the subject-matter. While jurisdiction as to the subject-matter cannot be waived, the law is otherwise as to jurisdiction of the person. Martin v. Fowler, 51 S. C. 164, 28 S. E. 312; Ex parte Hilton, 64 S. C. 201, 41 S. E. 978, 92 Am. St. Rep. 800. In the case under consideration, the question of jurisdiction related to the person. Ex parte Perry Stove Co., 43 S. C. 186, 20 S. E. 980; Smith v. Walke, 43 S. C. 381, 21 S. E. 249; Rosamond v. Earle, 46 S. C. 9, 24 S. E. 44; Bird v. Sullivan, 58 S. C. 50, 36 S. E. 494; Burckhalter v. Jones, 58 S. C. 89, 36 S. E. 495; Baker v. Irvine, 62 S. C. 293, 40 S. E. 672; Garrett v. Herring, 69 S. C. 278, 48 S. E. 254. When the defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, for the reasons stated in the second ground of demurrer, it contested the case upon the merits to the extent of the sufficiency of the complaint. Duke v. Postal Tel. Co., 71 S. C. 95, 50 S. E. 675. This was sufficient to subject the defendant to the jurisdiction of the court. When the defendant raised the question of jurisdiction, it should have relied exclusively upon that objection, if it did not wish to become subject to the jurisdiction of the court. Garrett v. Herring, 69 S. C. 278, 48 S. E. 254. The first exception should be sustained.

2 We will next consider whether there was error on the part of the presiding judge in ruling that the plaintiff could not maintain an action against the defendant, by reason of the fact that the claim for the lost property had been paid by the defendant, and received by the plaintiff, before the action was brought. Sections 2 and 4 of the act of 1903 (pages 81 and 82) are as follows:

"Sec. 2. That every claim for loss of or damage to property, while in the possession of such common carrier, shall be adjusted and paid within forty days, in case of shipments wholly within the state, and within ninety days, in case of shipments from without this state, after the filing of such claim with the agent of such carrier at the point of destination of such shipment: Provided, that no such claim shall be filed until after the arrival of the shipment, or of some part thereof, at the point of destination, or until after the lapse of a reasonable time for the arrival thereof. In every case such common carrier shall be liable for the amount of such loss or damage, together with interest thereon from the date of the filing of the claim therefor until the payment thereof. Failure to adjust and pay such claim within the periods respective herein prescribed, shall subject each common carrier so failing to a penalty of fifty dollars, for each and every such failure, to be recovered by any consignee or consignees aggrieved, in any court of competent jurisdiction: Provided, that unless such consignee or consignees recover in such action the full amount claimed, no penalty shall be recovered, but only the actual amount of the loss or damage, with interest as aforesaid."

"Sec. 4. That causes of action for the recovery of the possession of the property shipped for loss or damage thereto and for the penalties herein provided for, may be united in the same complaint."

The proper construction of the act is that when a common carrier fails to adjust and pay the consignee's claim within the time specified by the act, it subjects itself to liability (1) for the amount of the loss or damage, together with interest thereon from the date of the filing of the claim therefor, until the payment thereof; (2) for a penalty of $50 for failure to adjust and pay the claim within the period prescribed by the statute, provided the consignee recovers the full amount claimed, whether in an action when necessary, or by voluntary payment on the part of the common carrier. The mode of determining whether the consignee was entitled to recover the full amount of his claim, is a mere incident and not a condition precedent to his right to recover the penalty. The adjustment and payment of the claim for loss of the property was not intended as satisfaction of the liability incurred as a penalty, nor did it have such effect by operation of law. Section 4 of the act evidently contemplated the bringing of a separate action for the penalty. It seems to me that a contrary construction would sacrifice the spirit of the statute for the letter thereof, and enable a common carrier to defeat the manifest purpose of the act, after it had failed to adjust and pay the claim for loss or damage within the specified time, and when by its conduct it had shown that the consignee was entitled to the full amount claimed. The exception raising this question should be sustained.

For these reasons, I think the judgment of the circuit court should be reversed.

(72 S. C. 465)

ELLIS v. SOUTHERN RY. CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 18, 1905.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—TORTS OF SERVANT—PERSONAL LIABILITY.

Where the wrongful act of a servant is the proximate cause of an injury, he is liable to a person injured, whether such wrongful act be one of nonfeasance or misfeasance.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 84, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, §§ 1235, 1236.]

2. SAME—AGENT OF MASTER.

An agent of a railroad company, in exclusive charge of the management of the company at the time of an alleged injury, is not liable for an injury inflicted by the servants employed by him for the company to operate its trains; they being, not the agents of the defendant, but of his principal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 84, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, § 1211.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Hampton County; Klugh, Judge.

Action by I. D. Ellis, administratrix of W. J. Ellis against the Southern Railway Company and P. I. Welles. From an order overruling a demurrer to the complaint, Welles appeals. Reversed.

The following is the complaint:

"The complaint of the above-named plaintiff, L. D. Ellis, as administratrix of estate of W. J. Ellis, and in her own behalf and in behalf of the children of the said W. J. Ellis, deceased, respectfully shows to this court:

"(1) That at the times hereinafter mentioned the defendant Southern Railway Company was and is now a railway corporation, duly chartered and existing under and by the laws of the state of South Carolina, and as such is and was operating a railway from the town of Batesburg, in the county of Lexington, and through the counties of Aiken, Barnwell, and Hampton, to the station of Hardeeville, in Hampton county, and elsewhere in this state, and as said railway corporation so operating was engaged in the hauling of freight and passengers for hire to and from said points and elsewhere in this state, and the defendant P. I. Welles was at the time hereinafter mentioned the agent and servant of the said codefendant, and as such was in exclusive charge of the operation and management of the said Southern Railway Company, and still is operating the said railway in behalf of his codefendant, the Southern Railway Company, and as such agent so operating the said railway was and still is liable for acts and doings of the railway company aforesaid.

"(2) That on or about the 3d day of March, 1902, at about 4 o'clock of the morning of that day, W. J. Ellis went to a station on the railway of defendant the Southern Railway Company known as Furman, in Hampton county, S. C., where the said railway crosses one of the public highways of said county of Hampton, for the purpose of getting on one of the passenger cars owned and operated by the defendant, the Southern Railway Company, on its said railway, and becoming a passenger thereon, intending to go to his place of business at Summerfield, Fla.; and that soon after getting to said station the regular train of cars, then due to arrive at said station on defendant's railway, appeared in sight with an exceedingly dim headlight on the locomotive attached to said passenger cars of said defendant's company, whereupon and immediately afterwards the said W. J. Ellis lighted with fire some combustible material, and gave across the railway track aforesaid the usual and customary signal for the train of cars aforesaid to stop, whereupon the agent and servants of defendant's railway company aforesaid in charge of said passenger cars and locomotive on the railway track of defendant's company aforesaid, gave with the whistle on the locomotive attached to the passenger cars aforesaid the usual and customary signal to stop, but, instead of stopping the said passenger cars aforesaid, as they were in duty bound to do, the agents, servants and employees of the defendant's company aforesaid, willfully, maliciously, negligently, carelessly, and wantonly ran, or caused the passenger cars and locomotive aforesaid to run, by the station aforesaid across the public highway aforesaid at an exceedingly high rate of speed, without first continuously for 500 yards before reaching the public highway and station aforesaid ringing the bell or sounding the whistle on the locomotive and train of cars aforesaid on the railway track aforesaid, and willfully, maliciously, negligently, carelessly, and wantonly struck or caused to be struck the person of W. J. Ellis with some parts of the locomotive and train of cars aforesaid on the railway track of defendant's company aforesaid, wounding and instantly killing the said W. J. Ellis.

"(3) That by reason of these willful, careless, negligent, malicious, and wanton acts of the defendant's company, and the killing of the said W. J. Ellis as aforesaid, this plaintiff and the heirs at law of the said W. J. Ellis have been damaged in the sum of $50,000.

"(4) The plaintiff is the duly qualified administratrix of the estate and effects of W. J. Ellis, deceased.

"Wherefore plaintiff demands judgment in her own behalf and in behalf of the heirs at law of the heirs of the said W. J. Ellis in the sum of $50,000, with the cost of this action."

Defendant Welles appeals on the following exceptions: "First. To the order permitting amendment: (1) Because it is respectfully submitted that his honor, the presiding judge, J. C. Klugh, erred in permitting the plaintiff to amend her complaint, inasmuch as the said complaint did not state the beneficiaries for whose benefit the action was brought, and therefore did not state any cause of action; and his honor therefore was without authority to permit an amendment to said complaint, in order that it might state such a cause of action.

"Second. To the order overruling the demurrer of the defendant, P. I. Welles: (1) Because it is respectfully submitted that his honor, the presiding judge, erred in not deciding that inasmuch as it appeared upon the face of the complaint that this appellant was an agent and servant of his codefendant, the Southern Railway Company, and that the willful, malicious, negligent, careless, and wanton conduct alleged to have caused the death of plaintiff's intestate, was not committed in the presence of this defendant, but through the willful, malicious, negligent, careless, and wanton conduct of the agents and servants of the said railway company, in charge of a passenger train of cars and locomotive engine upon said company's road, at a station at which the said W. J. Ellis desired to take passage, and where it is not alleged that this defendant was present, then this defendant not being the master or employer of the persons in charge of said train, is not responsible for their actions, under the doctrine of respondent superior, and no cause of action is alleged against this defendant. (2) Because it appears upon the face of said complaint that the conduct of the persons in charge of said train was the cause of the injury to plaintiff's intestate, and it is not alleged that the plaintiff was upon their said train, directing the movements and actions of the persons upon said train, and this defendant is not liable for their conduct; the same not being alleged to have occurred through the misfeasance or positive wrong of this defendant. (3) Because the only charge against this defendant appearing in said complaint is a charge of negligence or conduct amounting to nonfeasance or omission of duty in the course of his employment, and for such nonfeasance or omission, this defendant, not being the master or employer of the persons in charge of said train, is not liable for the death of plaintiff's intestate. (4) That under the laws of this state, an agent is not liable to a third person for damages resulting to him in the non-performance, or neglect of the duty which the agent owes to his principal, and the only charge of negligence, or willful, wanton, or malicious conduct under the allegations of said complaint, if any there are, would make him responsible to his principal, his codefendant, the railway company, and not to the plaintiff. (5) Because, on the face of said complaint, the only allegations of negligence or misconduct on the part of this defendant, being in general words charging that this defendant was in exclusive charge of the operation and management of the railroad company, his codefendant, and that as such agent, he operated the said railway company, and was liable for its acts and doings, and no specific act of negligence being charged against this defendant except as generally responsible for the negligence of the agents, servants, and employes of the defendant company in charge of the passenger train and locomotive which struck plaintiff's intestate, no cause of action is alleged against this defendant, even if, under the laws of South Carolina, an employe may be held responsible for acts of nonfeasance causing injury to third persons."

Nathaniel B. & Joseph W. Barnwell, for appellant. E. F. Warren and J. P. K. Bryan, for respondent.

GARY, A. J. This is an appeal from an order overruling a demurrer to the complaint, on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The complaint, together with the exceptions which state the grounds of demurrer, will be set out in the report of the case.

1. The first question which will be considered is whether an agent is personally liable to a third person for an act of nonfeasance causing injury. In volume 1, pp. 288, 289, of Jaggard on Torts, it is said: "The thinness and uncertainty of the distinction between the misfeasance, malfeasance, and nonfeasance leave an exceedingly unstable basis on which to rest an important principle of liability. It would, indeed, seem to be a fair criticism on the subsequent reasoning that the courts have, in applying the distinction, engaged in a solemn game of logomachy. Thus in Bell v. Josselyn, 63 Am. Dec. 741, it was said that failure of defendant to examine the state of the pipes in a house before causing the water to be let on would be a nonfeasance, but, if he had not caused water to be let on, that nonfeasance would not have injured the plaintiff. If he had examined the pipes, and left them in a proper condition, and then caused the letting on of water, there would have been neither nonfeasance nor misfeasance. As the facts were, the nonfeasance caused the act done to be a misfeasance. The plaintiff suffered from the act done, which was no less a misfeasance by the reason of its being preceded by a nonfeasance." Continuing, on page 289, the author uses this language: "The futility of such reasoning on the word 'nonfeasance' appears fully from the lack of definitiveness of the meaning to be given the term. This solemn legal jugglery with words will probably disappear 'if the nature of the duty incumbent upon the servant be considered.' If the servant owe a duty to third persons, derived from instrumentality likely to do harm or otherwise, and he violates that duty, he is responsible. His responsibility rests on his wrongdoing, not on the positive or negative character of his conduct. A wrongful omission is as actionable as a wrongful commission."

The rule is thus stated in Mecham on Agency, § 572: "Some confusion has crept into certain cases from a failure to observe clearly the distinction between nonfeasance and misfeasance. As has been seen, the agent is not liable to strangers for the injuries sustained by them, because he did not undertake the performance of some duty which he owed to his principal, and imposed upon him, by his relation, which is nonfeasance. Misfeasance may involve, also, to some extent, the idea of not doing—as where the agent, while engaged in the performance of his undertaking, does not do something which it was his duty to do, under the circumstances, does not take that precaution, does not exercise that care, which a due regard for the rights of others requires. All this is not doing; but it is not the not doing of that which is imposed upon him by law as a responsible individual in common with all other members of society. It is the same not doing which constitutes actionable negligence in any relation."

In Mayer v. Thompson-Hutchinson Bldg. Co. (Ala.) 16 South, 620, 28 L. R. A. 433, 436, 53 Am. St. Rep. 88, the court states the principle as follows: "The liability of the principal or master to third persons does not depend upon any privity between him and such third persons. It is the privity between the master and servant that creates the liability of the master for injuries sustained by third persons on account of misfeasance or nonfeasance of the servant or agent. It is difficult to apply the same principles which govern in matters of contract between an agent and third persons, to the torts of an agent which inflict injury on third persons, whether they be of misfeasance, or nonfeasance, or to give a sound reason why a person, who, acting as principal, would be individually liable to third persons for an omission of duty, becomes exempt from liability for the same omission of duty because he was acting as servant or agent. The tort is none the less a tort to the third person, whether suffered from one acting as principal or agent, and his rights ought to be the same against the one whose neglect of duty has caused the injury." In a note to this case on pages 433 and 434, 28 L. R. A., after the statement that there are many misleading dicta to the effect that nonfeasance of a servant causing injury to third persons is not generally a ground of action in their favor against the servant, and that these dicta can all be traced to a dictum in a dissenting opinion in Lane v. Cotton, 12 Mod. 488, 1 Ld. Raym. 646, we find the following language: "These dicta and text-book statements based upon them have had the pernicious effect of confusing the subject, because they do not distinguish between the direct liability of an agent or servant to third persons for breach of his own duty toward them, and an indirect liability to them for breach of duty to his own employer, and fail to recognize or indicate the fact that an agent or servant may owe duties to third persons at the same time he owes service to his employer, and that the common duty to regard the rights of our fellow men is none the less binding upon a person because he happens to be at the time an agent or servant. An analysis of all the cases on the subject shows that in almost every instance negligence of an agent or servant has been held to make him liable to a third person injured thereby, provided he would have been liable if acting on his own behalf under circumstances otherwise unchanged. The difficulty seems to vanish almost if not entirely when the test of the liability of an agent or servant to a third person on account of his nonfeasance or negligence is taken to be his nonperformance of a duty toward them. Where such duty and neglect thereof appear, it seems utterly unreasonable to say that the negligent person shall not be liable merely because he was the agent or servant of some other person to whom he might also be liable. To say that liability for failure to perform a duty toward a person who is injured in consequence shall not exist, because the guilty person is in the same transaction also guilty of a breach of another and a distinct duty to a different person, is to state a proposition condemned by the analogies of the law as well as by reason."

The court, in Ellis v. McNaughton, 76 Mich. 237, 42 N. W. 1113, 15 Am. St. Rep. 308, uses this language: "Misfeasance may involve to some extent the idea of not doing, as where an agent, while engaged in the performance of his undertaking, does not do something which it was his duty to do under the circumstances, as, for instance, when he does not exercise that care which a due regard for the rights of others would require. This is not doing; but it is the not doing of that which is not imposed upon the agent merely by his relation to his principal, but of that which is imposed upon him by law as a responsible individual, in common with all other members of society. It is the same not doing which constitutes negligence in any relation, and is actionable." The true rule deducible from the authorities is that the servant is personally liable to third persons when his wrongful act is the direct and proximate cause of the injury, whether such wrongful act be one of nonfeasance or misfeasance.

2. The next question that will be considered is whether the complaint contains allegations sufficient to show that the injury was sustained as the direct and proximate result of a wrongful act on the part of the defendant Welles. Our construction of the complaint is that it seeks to make the defendant Welles respond in damages solely on the ground that he was the agent of the Southern Railway Company, and as such was in exclusive charge of the operation and management of said company at the time of the injury. The persons in charge of the train of cars that caused the injury were not the agents of the defendant Welles, even if employed by him, but of his principal, the Southern Railway Company. While the Southern Railway Company may have been responsible for the conduct of the servants in charge of said train of cars, their acts did not render the defendant Welles liable for the injury, as they were not his agents. There are no allegations in the complaint to the effect that the injury was a direct and proximate result of a wrongful act on the part of the defendant Welles. Therefore it fails to state a cause of action against him, and the demurrer should have been sustained.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed.

(72 S. C. 474)

ROUNDTREE v. CHARLESTON & W. C. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 18, 1905.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURY TO SERVANT—PLEADING AND PROOF.

Under Code Civ. Proc. 1902, §§ 190-192, providing that no variance between the pleading and proof shall be deemed material until it has actually misled the adverse party, proof that a plaintiff was injured in loading the wheels of a truck is not a variance from an allegation of injury from loading trucks.

2. EVIDENCE—OPINIONS.

In an action for personal injuries, plaintiff may give an opinion as to the amount of damages he has sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 20, Cent. Dig. Evidence, § 2234.]

3. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

In the absence of a request, failure to charge that there was no evidence to sustain a verdict of punitive damages is not error.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 43, Cent. Dig. Trial, § 627.]

4. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

Failure to charge that there was no evidence to authorize punitive damages is harmless error, where so much of the verdict as was for punitive damages is remitted.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Hampton County; Klugh, Judge.

Action by J. E. Roundtree against the Charleston & Western Carolina Railway Company. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

James W. Moore, for appellant. W. B. Smith and W. B. De Loach, for respondent.

GARY, A. J. This is an action for damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff through the negligence of the defendant. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff, at the time of the injury, was employed by the defendant as a section hand on its line of railway; that, while he was trying to load a heavy truck on a flat car, he was overstrained and hernia was produced on account of the willful, wanton, and knowing negligence of the defendant in failing to provide a sufficient number of hands to lift so heavy a weight. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $1,500 damages and $450 punitive damages. The defendant made a motion for a new trial on the minutes of the court. The presiding judge granted an order that, unless the plaintiff should remit upon the record all except $1,500 of the verdict, there should be a new trial, as there was no testimony to sustain a verdict for punitive damages. The plaintiff remitted on the record all in excess of $1,500.

1. The defendant appealed upon exceptions, the first of which assigns error on the part of his honor, the presiding judge, in refusing the motion for a nonsuit on the ground that there was no testimony tending to show that the plaintiff was injured while loading a truck, but was injured while loading the wheels of a truck. In refusing the motion for nonsuit, the presiding judge said: "Trucks being a technical expression, the meaning of which is known to railroad men, it may or may not mean the four wheels coupled together; and I will leave it to the jury to say whether the railroad was negligent in the manner alleged. As a matter of fact, I do not think it would be taking one by surprise to amend the complaint to conform to the proof."

Sections 190, 191, and 192 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1902 are as follows:

"Sec. 190. No variance between the allegation in pleading and the proof shall be deemed material, unless it have actually misled the adverse party, to his prejudice, in maintaining his action or defense, upon the merits. Whenever it shall be alleged that a party has been misled, that fact shall be proved to the satisfaction of the court, and in what respect he has been misled; and thereupon the court may order the pleading to be amended, upon such terms as shall be just.

"Sec. 191. Where the variance is not material, as provided in the last section, the court may direct the fact to be found according to the evidence, or may order an immediate amendment without costs.

"Sec. 192. Where, however, the allegation of the cause of action or defense to which the proof is directed is not proved, not in some particular or particulars only, but in its entire scope and meaning, it shall not be deemed a case of variance within the last two sections, but a failure of proof."

The appellant contends that this case comes within the provisions of section 192. These sections were construed in the case of Ahrens v. Bank, 3 S. C. 401, 410, as follows: "Under section 192 [190], no variance is to be regarded as material, unless it has actually misled the party, and in that case his remedy is to satisfy the court immediately, by proof by affidavit, that he has been so misled. The effect of such proof is not to prevent the court from allowing an amendment to such case, but to entitle the party prejudiced by such amendment either time or such other compensatory terms and conditions as may be reasonable. The object of the Code is to secure to parties acting in good faith the fullest right to rectify by amendment any defect in pleading the result of misapprehension, inadvertence, or accident, but at the same time to protect, as far as possible, the substantial rights of the party prejudiced by such amendment. If the party prejudiced by such variance does not take advantage of the remedy afforded by section 192 [190], then, under section 193 [191], it is the duty of the court to disregard the variance as immaterial, and either to order an immediate amendment, or to direct the fact to be found according to the evidence. Section 194 [192] was intended to guard against the application of sections 192 [190] and 193 [191] to cases which are not, properly speaking, cases of variance, but where the party has proved on the trial a state of facts foreign to the allegations of the pleadings, and having the effect to leave the facts alleged in the pleadings unproved in their 'entire scope and meaning.' It is obvious that variances involving nothing more than technical differences between the allegations and proofs can only be made material in the mode pointed out in section 192 [190]. * * * Under the foregoing provisions of the Code [190 and 191], a motion for a nonsuit is not the proper mode of taking advantage of any variance that might have occurred; nor can this court set aside the judgment, if sustained by the proofs, on the ground of any such variance, in view of the provisions of the Code in question." These principles are in accord with the rule laid down in Pom. Code Rem. §§ 553, 554.

While it is true there was no testimony tending to show that the injury was caused by loading a truck, complete in all its parts, nevertheless there was evidence to the effect that the injury was the result of loading the wheels, which were a component part of the truck. It cannot, therefore, be successfully contended that the allegation of the complaint was "not proved, not in some particular or particulars only, but in its entire scope and meaning." Furthermore, the variance was not prejudicial to the defendant, as it requires a smaller force of hands to load wheels of a truck than to load the entire truck.

2. The second exception raises the question whether the presiding judge erred in ruling that the plaintiff could testify as to the amount of his damages. The appellant contends that the testimony was inadmissible on the ground that it was merely the expression of an opinion. This question is conclusively settled by the case of Oliver v. Ry., 65 S. C. 1, 43 S. E. 307. Mrs. Oliver, in answer to the question, to what extent, in her opinion, she had been damaged, was permitted to testify: "I could not put any money value on my health—$10,000 seems a very paltry sum." This was made the ground of exception, and the court ruled that the question was competent. See, also, Dent v. Railway, 61 S. C. 329, 39 S. E. 527, and Burnett v. Railway, 62 S. C. 281, 40 S. E. 679.

3. The third exception assigns as error that there was no testimony whatever as to exemplary damages, and that the presiding judge should have charged the jury that plaintiff was only entitled to actual damages. In the first place, the defendant should have presented a request to that effect. In the second place, the plaintiff has remitted upon the record so much of the verdict as was for punitive damages. The appellant, therefore, cannot now complain that the alleged error was prejudicial.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(140 N. C. 151)

HAMRICK v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 5, 1905.)

1. TELEGRAPHS—MESSAGES—DELAY.

Where delivery of a message informing plaintiff of the serious illness of his wife was delayed for a period of 28 hours, and plaintiff was informed of such delay before he started to his wife's bedside, it was no defense that, in view of the fact that his wife ultimately recovered, he was not damaged, but was in fact relieved of 28 hours' anxiety on account of the delay.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 45, Cent. Dig. Telegraphs and Telephones, § 70.]

2. EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS OF SERVANT—RES GESTÆ.

In an action for delay in the delivery of a telegram, subsequent admissions and statements of defendant's agent as to why it was not delivered sooner, etc., were hearsay and not admissible as res gestæ.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rutherford County; Justice, Judge.

Action by W. D. Hamrick against the Western Union Telegraph Company to recover damages for delay in delivery of a telegram. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

F. H. Busbee & Son and W. R. Whitson, for appellant. McBrayer & McBrayer and B. A. Justice for appellee.

BROWN, J. The evidence tends to show that the plaintiff's wife, being very ill, procured one Huntley to send the following telegram from Forest City to the plaintiff at Old Fort, N. C., about 40 miles distant, viz.: "Bill, come home at once, your wife is bad off"—and also that the defendant negligently delayed the delivery of the telegram at Old Fort for some 28 hours. Immediately upon receipt of the telegram, the plaintiff started home, and on arrival found his wife very ill. She continued so for 11 weeks, and recovered.

1. It is contended by the defendant that the evidence does not disclose a state of facts from which the jury can infer mental anguish; that the plaintiff was relieved of 28 hours' anxiety on account of his wife's condition by reason of the delay; and that inasmuch as he arrived home and found his wife alive, and as she recovered, he has failed to show reasonable grounds for mental anxiety arising from the delay in delivering the telegram. The argument is plausible. But it does not take into account the possibility that when the plaintiff finally received the message his mental anxiety may have become very acute and much increased for fear his wife may have died during the 28 hours of delay. The mental disturbance, vexation, and increased anxiety which the knowledge of the delay may have caused to the plaintiff's mind will readily occur to any one. Now, if the plaintiff had not been informed of the great delay in the delivery of the telegram before he started home, the defendant's contention would be sound. We are of opinion there was some evidence of mental anxiety caused by the unreasonable delay, sufficient to be considered by the jury.

2. During the trial, the plaintiff, being examined in his own behalf, stated that 10 or 15 minutes after receiving the telegram, which was handed to him by an employé of a tanning company, for which company the plaintiff was working, the plaintiff went to the depot and had a conversation with the agent of the defendant company about this telegram, in which conversation the agent made certain statements and admissions with regard to its receipt and transmission, why it had not been delivered sooner, etc. To the introduction of this testimony, detailing conversations had and admissions and statements made by the agent of the defendant company at the time stated, the defendant excepted. In the reception of this evidence there was error. In no possible aspect of the evidence can these declarations be considered as part of the res gestæ, as was contended. It seems to be the invariable rule that the declarations of an agent, to be admissible as a part of the res gestæ, must have been made at the place where the occurrence happened. No declaration made at a different place and at a different time has ever been treated as any part of the res gestæ. Railroad v. Stein (Ind. Sup.) 31 N. E. 180, 32 N. E. 831, 19 L. R. A. 733; Simon v. Manning, 99 N. C. 327, 6 S. E. 101; Southerland v. Railroad, 106 N. C. 100, 11 S. E. 189. The authorities are uniform that what an agent says while doing acts within the scope of his agency is admissible as a part of the res gestæ. What he says afterwards concerning his acts is hearsay and inadmissible. Smith v. Railroad, 68 N. C. 107; McComb v. Railroad, 70 N. C. 178; Branch v. Railroad, 88 N. C. 575. In the case of Western Union Tel. Co. v. Way, 4 South. 844, the Supreme Court of Alabama holds that statements of an agent of a telegraph company are not competent as against the company to prove that a message was not transmitted, when not made in performance of any duty relating to its transmission. In Darlington v. Telegraph Co., 127 N. C. 448, 37 S. E. 479, it is held that conversations of an agent of a telegraph company before, or declarations by him after, sending a message, are incompetent to fix the company with notice of its importance.

New trial.

(140 N. C. 36)

LYLES v. BRANNON CARBONATING CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 22, 1905.)

1. NEGLIGENCE—RES IPSA LOQUITUR—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action for death caused by negligence, the burden of proof resting on the plaintiff was not shifted to defendant by the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur"; such doctrine being a mere mode of proving negligence as a matter of evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 37, Cent. Dig. Negligence, §§ 218, 225.]

2. TRIAL—OMISSION TO CHARGE—REQUEST.

In an action for death caused by the explosion of a soda water tank, the court's omission to fully explain the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" was not error, where plaintiff failed to present a prayer embodying the instruction desired.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Trial, §§ 627, 628.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; Cooke, Judge.

Action by Jarvis Lyles, as administrator of the estate of Charles Lyles, deceased, against the Brannon Carbonating Company. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The following issue was submitted: "Was the death of the plaintiff's intestate caused by the negligence of the defendant as alleged in the complaint?" The jury answered it, "No." From a judgment dismissing the action, the plaintiff appealed.

Stewart & McRae, for appellant. Burwell & Cansler and T. C. Guthrie, for appellee.

BROWN, J. The evidence discloses that the plaintiff's intestate was killed by the explosion of a soda-water tank made of copper and lined with block tin, which was being charged with gas at the bottling works of the defendant in Charlotte. The tank did not belong to the defendant, but had been borrowed by it on the same day and an hour or so before the explosion from the Charlotte Drug Company, of which W. M. Wilson was the president; the loan having been made by said Wilson. No negligence is alleged in the complaint as to the manner of charging the tank, or in respect to the actions of the servants of the defendant, upon whom devolved the duty of receiving, examining, and charging the tank. The negligence alleged in the complaint consisted solely in using a defective tank. There are several exceptions in the record relating to the admission and rejection of evidence. We have examined them carefully and think they are without merit.

Mr. McRae, the counsel for the plaintiff, in an able argument, rested his main contention upon two alleged errors in the charge of the court: (1) Because his honor erred in instructing the jury that the burden of proof upon the issue was on the plaintiff. (2) Because his honor in his charge failed to explain fully to the jury the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur." It has never been decided in this state that, where the principle of "res ipsa loquitur" applied, its effect was to shift the burden of proof upon the issue of negligence. In an action for damages for death by wrongful act, the burden is on the plaintiff, upon the issues of negligence and damages (the only issues in this case), and if an accident happened out of the ordinary, our court has never said that this circumstance established the plaintiff's case, and shifted the burden of proof upon the issue over to the defendant. In those cases where the doctrine is applied, this court regards it as purely evidential, and the inference to be drawn from the fact of the accident is some evidence which the court permits to go to the jury upon the question of negligence, and the plaintiff is not required to prove the actual facts showing the particulars wherein the defendant was negligent, but there is no presumption raised whereby the burden of proof is shifted. "Res ipsa loquitur" does not dispense with the rule that he who alleges negligence must prove it. It is simply a mode of proving negligence, and does not change the burden of proof. Labatt, Master & Servant, § 834; Womble v. Grocery Co., 135 N. C. 481, 47 S. E. 498; Stewart v. Carpet Co., 138 N. C. 67, 50 S. E. 562. In the latter case, Mr. Justice Walker says: "The law attaches no special weight as proof of the fact of an accident, but holds it to be sufficient for the consideration of a jury, even in the absence of any additional evidence." We think the jury had before them all the circumstances connected with the accident and doubtless gave them such weight as they thought proper, and they seem to have drawn from the fact of an accident no inference of negligence.

As to the other contention of the plaintiff, we think it cannot be sustained. The doctrine that "the thing speaks for itself" relates solely to the evidence which may go to the jury as some proof of an alleged fact. It was therefore the plaintiff's duty, if he desired the court to charge upon this phase of the evidence more particularly, to hand up a prayer for instructions to that effect. This the plaintiff failed to do. He cannot now be heard to complain for the alleged omission of his honor to charge upon that particular feature of the evidence, which the plaintiff himself did not regard of sufficient importance to call attention to by appropriate prayers for instruction. The charge of the able and careful judge who presided in the court below has been closely examined. It appears to us to fully cover the controversy, and to be a very clear and correct summing up of the contentions of the parties and the law applicable to the case. We find no error in it. The judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed.

(140 N. C. 49)

EDWARDS v. CAROLINA & N. W. R. CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 22, 1905.)

1. RAILROADS—CROSSING ACCIDENT—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for death at a railroad crossing while deceased was trying to cross between two sections of a train, an instruction that it was defendant's duty "to ring the bell or blow the whistle," or to give other suitable and sufficient signals and warnings of the approach of its train while moving the same in its yards, and to use all proper and reasonable efforts to avoid injuring any party who might be in its yards on legitimate business, etc., was not objectionable, as contradictory, in that the first part was in the alternative, while the second part required both the giving of signals and the taking of precautions.

2. SAME—USE OF CROSSINGS.

In an action for death at a railroad crossing, an instruction that use of the highways belongs as much to the public as the track does to the railroad company, and that for the company to block the highway without absolute necessity, or to render its use so dangerous as to deter the traveling public or to keep them in fear of life or limb, would be a material or unlawful interference with their rights, and would constitute evidence of negligence, was correct.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 41, Cent. Dig. Railroads, § 964.]

3. SAME—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

A request to charge that defendant railroad company was not guilty of any negligence, causing the death of plaintiff's intestate, if intestate was guilty of conduct recited which amounted to contributory negligence, was properly refused.

4. TRIAL — REFUSAL OF REQUEST — CURING ERROR.

A finding that intestate was guilty of contributory negligence cured error in the refusal of a prayer on such issue.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, § 4230.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Lincoln County; Cooke, Judge.

Action by R. S. Edwards, as administrator, etc., against the Carolina & Northwestern Railroad Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. H. Marion and C. E. Childs, for appellant. D. W. Robinson, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. At Lincolnton Station the defendant's tracks are on the north side of the depot, and those of the Seaboard Air Line Railway are parallel and on the south side. On the day in question a long freight train had come in on the defendant's track, and had been engaged in unloading and shifting some half hour, when the passenger train came in on the other road. Thereupon the defendant's freight train was "cut open" where the street leading to the town crossed its track. This street was then used, and had been for many years, as the main and only thoroughfare to and from the trains and depot. After being left open a short while, half the width of the street or less, and before the Seaboard passenger train had left, this interval in the defendant's freight train was closed to three or four feet in width. The plaintiff's intestate, who was the mail carrier between the station and the post office (which was on the north side), came from the Seaboard train pushing a wheelbarrow loaded with mail. He threw the mail across the opening, it being too narrow for his wheelbarrow, and then was trying to cross through himself, when the train came back and killed him. The defendant made the usual motion in negligence cases to take the case from the jury, but his first exception for refusal of a nonsuit needs no discussion.

The second exception is because the court charged the jury that "it is the duty of the defendant's engineer or fireman to ring the bell or sound the whistle, or to give other suitable and sufficient signals and warnings of the approach of its train, while moving its trains in its yards, and to use all proper and reasonable efforts to avoid injuring any party who may be in its yards on legitimate business; and if the jury find from the greater weight of evidence that the defendant failed to give such signal and take such precautions, and the said acts on the part of the defendant resulted in the killing of the plaintiff's intestate, they should answer the first issue 'Yes.' Smith v. Railroad, 132 N. C. 824, 44 S. E. 663." The defendant insists that this is contradictory, because the first part of the instruction is in the alternative, "ringing or sounding the whistle," and in the second part "giving the signal and take such precautions." But we do not so find it. The latter part says "signal and precautions," which is merely the equivalent of the alternative "signal" and "proper and reasonable effort" to avoid injury to others mentioned in the first part of that instruction.

The third exception is to the following instruction: "The use of the highways and streets by the traveling public belongs as much to the public as the track does to the railway company; and for the company to block up the highway without absolute necessity, or to render its use so dangerous as to deter the traveling public, or to keep them in constant fear of life and limb, would be a material and unlawful interference with their rights; and if the jury find, from the greater weight of the evidence, that the defendant in this case so blocked up and obstructed a public highway in the town of Lincolnton, this would be evidence of negligence, and if such negligence caused the killing of the plaintiff's intestate, then the jury will answer the first issue 'Yes.' Norton v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 910, 29 S. E. 893." But we think it a correct statement of the law, and this also disposes of the fourth exception.

The fifth exception to a refusal of a prayer as to contributory negligence need not be considered; for, if it were conceded to have been error to refuse it, the jury cured such error by its finding that the plaintiff's intestate was guilty of contributory negligence. It is true this prayer was that the defendant was not guilty of any negligence, if the intestate was guilty of conduct recited which would amount to contributory negligence, and was properly refused on that ground. There was conflicting evidence as to whether the flagman told the plaintiff's intestate to pass through, or told him not to do so, and whether the train came back on a signal or not. The jury found on the first of these propositions that the intestate was guilty of contributory negligence in trying to pass through the narrow opening, but further found that there was negligence in moving the train back and closing the gap without warning to the intestate of such movement, and that this negligence was the proximate cause of his death. The judge told the jury that if they should "find that, notwithstanding the negligence of the intestate in entering upon the crossing, the defendant, by the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care in the movement of its train, could have avoided striking the intestate, then they should answer the third issue 'Yes.'"

The case was fully and very ably argued here on both sides, but on full examination of the whole case we think that the judgment below should be affirmed.

Affirmed.

(139 N. C. 494)

IN RE POPE'S WILL.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1905.)

WILLS — EXECUTION — WITNESSES — SUBSCRIPTION.

Where a witness to a will took part in the physical act of writing her name as a witness, by holding the pen while the name was written by another at her direction, which was done animo testandi, at the testator's request, and in his presence, she was an effectual subscribing witness to the will, though she was able at the time to write her own name.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 49, Cent. Dig. Wills, § 822.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Iredell County; Long, Judge.

Application for probate of the will of Elijah Pope, deceased. From a decree denying probate, Charles Pope appeals. Reversed.

Issue devisavit vel non on a paper writing propounded as the will of Elijah Pope, deceased, transferred from the clerk, and heard before the judge and a jury in the superior court. There was testimony to the effect that there were present at the execution of the paper the alleged testator, D. J. Fulbright, a justice of the peace, Martin Miller, Candace Pope, and Charlie Pope. D. J. Fulbright prepared the paper, and same was signed by Elijah Pope as his last will and testament in the presence of two witnesses. Martin Miller signed his name as subscribing witness, and then wrote the name of the other witness, Candace Pope, who held the pen while this was done, and who had been requested by the testator to subscribe as the other witness. Martin Miller, one of the subscribing witnesses, testified to the execution of the paper writing by Elijah Pope, and that he signed as subscribing witness, and in reference to Candace Pope, who signed as witness, said: "Candace asked me to write her name. She had hold of the pen all the time I was writing her name. She and the old man asked me to write her name." Candace Pope testified: "I am daughter of Elijah Pope, and lived with him. I was there the latter years of his life. Mr. Fulbright came over. Father sent for him. Got there about dusk. Martin Miller was there. Father signed the paper. I signed it. Father asked me to sign it. My name is C. L. Pope. I had hand on the pen. I signed it. Nobody held my hand. When I signed it I was standing at Martin's back. He was sitting at a chair at a table. He had the pen. I held the pen at the end. In this way my name was put to the will. I asked him to hold the pen. My daddy was sitting there. Mr. Fulbright was there. Father was 84 years old at the time. He seemed like he always did. He died about 10 months after that, I think; am not certain. He complained of heartburn; went off to the bottoms and died there; died suddenly, don't know what was the matter with him. His mind was good as usual." It was also in evidence that Candace Pope could write. After the witnesses to the paper writing had testified, the propounders offered the same as the will of Elijah Pope. The caveators objected, for that the subscribing witness C. L. Pope stated that she could write, but did not herself subscribe her name, but authorized the other witness, Miller, to write her name, and she held the end of the pen while he wrote her name, and that therefore she did not subscribe her name agreeably to the requirements of the statute. The objection was sustained. The propounder excepted, and from judgment against him appealed.

L. C. Caldwell and Z. V. Long, for appellant. J. B. Connelly and R. B. McLaughlin, for appellees.

HOKE, J. The point which the parties desired and intended to present, and which the record does present, is thus stated in the case on appeal: "The only question is as to the attestation of the will by one of the subscribing witnesses, O. L. Pope; her name appearing thereon in the normal handwriting of the other subscribing witness, M. L. Miller, and nothing appearing on the face of the paper to show that Miller had authority to sign her name, or that the subscription is not in her handwriting, except from the evidence which is set forth in the case." On that question the court is of opinion that there was error in the ruling of the judge below; and on the testimony presented, if believed by the jury, the paper writing was properly proven as the last will and testament of Elijah Pope. In construing the statute as to written wills, with witnesses, it is accepted law that the witness must subscribe his name to the paper writing animo testandi, in the presence of the testator, and after the testator has himself signed the same. Ragland v. Huntingdon, 23 N. C. 563; In re Cox's Will, 46 N. C. 321; Chase v. Kittredge, 93 Mass. 49, 87 Am. Dec. 687. And it has been long established that the witness may properly subscribe by making his mark. Pridgen v. Pridgen, 35 N. C. 259; Devereux v. McMahon, 108 N. C. 184, 12 S. E. 902, 12 L. R. A. 205. Some of the courts have also decided that the witness may subscribe by causing a third person to write the name of the witness in his presence and that of the testator, and without such witness taking any physical part in the act. Jesse v. Parker, 6 Grat. 57, 52 Am. Dec. 102; Smythe v. Irick, 46 S. C. 299, 24 S. E. 69, 32 L. R. A. 77, 57 Am. St. Rep. 684. And the courts of New Hampshire, Kentucky, Kansas, and some recent decisions in New York are to the same effect. There is strong authority to the contrary. Riley v. Riley, 36 Ala. 496; Simmons v. Leonard, 91 Tenn. 183, 18 S. W. 280, 30 Am. St. Rep. 875; McFarland v. Bush, 94 Tenn. 538, 29 S. W. 899, 27 L. R. A. 662, 45 Am. St. Rep. 760; Horton v. Johnson, 18 Ga. 396. Our own court does not seem to have passed on this question directly, and it is not necessary to do so in the case before us; for the evidence is to the effect that Candace Pope held the pen during the entire time her name was being written. The witness took part in the physical act of writing her name animo testandi, in the presence of the testator, at his request, and thus fulfills every requirement for an effectual subscribing witness to a will. Such requirement is stated by an approved writer as follows: "A person, to become a subscribing witness to a will, must sign his name or make his mark, or do some physical act, affixing or recognizing his name, which he intended as a subscription." Martindale on Conveyancing (2d Ed.) p. 554. And in Underhill on Wills, vol. 1, p. 274, it is said that not only a mark with the name of the witness attached, but anything that the witness shall write with intent that it shall stand for his name, shall be a valid signing by him. It has also been held that, if the witness puts his name to the paper animo testandi, he may subscribe by affixing his initials, and his hand may be even guided by another. If the witness can effectually subscribe in the many modes suggested, it would seem that he could do so when he holds the pen while his entire name and full signature is written.

The only reason suggested against the validity of this attestation is the fact that the witness was able to write herself, and it is contended that this kind of signature is only sanctioned when the witness is unable to write, or, at most, when temporarily disabled. But the authorities do not support this position. As a matter of fact, in most cases where the witness has been permitted to subscribe in this way, he was unable to write; but this fact was not regarded as essential and should not be controlling. One principal purpose in requiring the attestation of wills is to surround the testator with witnesses who are charged with the present duty of noting his condition and mental capacity. Another is to insure the identity of the instrument and to prevent the fraudulent substitution of another document at the time of its execution. Taking part in some physical act in the presence of the testator by which the name of the witness is affixed to the instrument animo testandi is the essential feature of the requirement. In re Cox's Will, supra. It is always desirable that a witness who can write his name should be selected, and that he should write the signature in his own hand; but this is a matter of convenience in the probate of the paper, more particularly in case of the death of the witness, and does not bear with special force on the act of execution—the res gestæ. Thus, in Harrison v. Elvin, 43 Eng. Com. Law, 658, where it was urged upon the court that only a witness who could write should be allowed as a subscribing witness, because otherwise the signature could not be proved after his death, Lord Denman rejected the suggestion as controlling, saying that this was only an inconvenience and likely to arise in any kind of an attestation. It is not of the first importance, therefore, whether the witness could or could not write, and the authorities are to the effect that to become an effectual subscribing witness by making a mark, or in the other ways suggested, it is not necessary to show as a prerequisite that the witness was unable to write. In Martindale on Conveyancing, § 190, it is said: "It may be observed that it is not necessary that a party should sign his name; but his mark is sufficient, though he should be able to write." In 3 Washburn on Real Property, 286, we find it stated as follows: "Affixing his mark by the grantor against his name, though written by another, is a signing, though it do not appear that he cannot read or write." These authorities are cited with approval in Devereux v. McMahon, 108 N. C. 142, 144, 12 S. E. 902, 12 L. R. A. 205. In 1 Williams on Executors, 134, it is said that the decisions on the construction of the statute of frauds appear to make it clear that in case of the witness, as well as the testator, the subscription by mark is sufficient, notwithstanding the witness is able to write. In Jesse v. Parker, supra, it is not stated that the witness could not write; and in Smythe v. Irick, supra, it expressly appears that the witness could write, and it was held that this fact did not affect the principle. It will be noted that these two last cases are from courts which maintain the position that a subscription can be made without any physical or manual act by the witness at all; but they are apt as authorities on the position now being maintained. The point is expressly decided against the position of the caveators in Baker v. Denning, 35 E. C. L. 335, 8 Adol. & Ellis, 94. The witness Candace Pope having taken part in the physical act of writing her name as witness, and this having been done animo testandi, at the request of the testator, and in his presence, the court is of opinion that she is an effectual subscribing witness to the will, and that this result is not affected by the fact that such witness was at the time able to write her own name.

There was error in the ruling of the court, and a new trial is awarded.

New trial.

(140 N. C. 18)

BUNKER v. BUNKER et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1905.)

1. JUDGMENT—RES JUDICATA.

On an application for construction of a will and for an accounting, a claim for costs in a prior suit and interest was filed as a lien on certain real estate belonging to the estate, payable out of rents and profits by B. It was first allowed, but afterwards omitted from the report of a referee under order of court, to which omission plaintiff excepted. The exceptions were overruled and a final judgment was rendered, which did not in terms include such costs, etc., but provided that plaintiff should only recover a certain sum and the "costs" of the action. No exception was entered or appeal taken from this judgment, and the amount recovered and the costs were paid. Held, that such judgment was res judicata of B.'s liability to pay the costs of such former suit from the assets of the estate.

2. SAME—REOPENING.

Where a judgment was rendered, and no exception was entered, no appeal taken, and the amount recovered and the costs paid, the vitality of the suit and of the judgment was fully spent, and the latter could not be reopened or the suit revived.

Appeal from Superior Court, Surry County; O. H. Allen, Judge.

Action by C. W. Bunker, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Chang Bunker, deceased, etc., against Adelaide Bunker and others, for an accounting. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Plaintiff, C. W. Bunker, in behalf of himself and as administrator with the will annexed of his father, Chang Bunker, and as guardian of Hattie Bunker, another child, brought this action against the defendant Adelaide Bunker, widow of Chang Bunker, for a construction of his will and an accounting in respect to certain rents and profits received from the lands devised to her and others in her husband's will. Her codefendants are the other children of the testator and the husbands of those who are married. The clause of the will in question provided that, if the rents and profits of his lands should be more than is necessary for the support of his "single and infant children and his wife," the residue should be equally divided among all his children. The court at August term, 1886, construed the will, and ordered a reference to R. S. Folger to take and state an account of rents and profits in the hands of the defendant Adelaide Bunker, and to ascertain and report the residue, if any, going to the children. The referee reported, and, among other items of the account, charged the said defendant with the sum of $525.15, amount of costs paid in the suit of Jones v. Bunker, concerning a part of the land, and interest on the same, $367.68. Defendant Adelaide Bunker excepted to this charge. The court, Judge Boykin presiding, at the spring term, 1893, overruled this exception, and, having sustained certain other exceptions of the said defendant, recommitted the case, with directions, to the referee, to the end that the account might be correctly taken and the true balance ascertained according to law. A new account was taken and stated by the referee and reported to the court. In this account the said defendant was again charged with the costs paid by C. W. Bunker in the suit of Jones v. Bunker, to be paid out of the rents and profits of the land. To this there was no exception, but exceptions were filed to other items, and at the hearing, fall term, 1895, the court, having considered the exceptions, and concluding that the account had been taken on a wrong principle, set it aside and ordered a new account, to be taken in accordance with the directions then given. The referee reported, and in the account stated by him failed to charge, or to make any reference to, the item of costs in the suit of Jones v. Bunker. Among other exceptions of plaintiffs to this report, not necessary to be stated, was the following: That the referee failed to find the amount, $525.15, paid by C. W. Bunker as costs in the case of Jones v. Bunker, with interest on the same, as heretofore found by the referee to be due C. W. Bunker, to be a first lien on said estate, or to be first paid out of the rents and profits of the land described in the pleadings in this case. At the November term, 1900, the court, Judge Timberlake presiding, after sustaining one of defendant's exceptions to the report and overruling others, and after overruling all of plaintiff's exceptions, including, of course, the one as to the costs in the suit of Jones v. Bunker, "adjudged that the heirs at law of Chang Bunker [plaintiffs and defendants, who are named in the judgment] recover the sum of $801.51, with interest thereon from the date of the payment, and also the costs of the case, to be taxed by the clerk." There was no exception to this judgment, and no appeal therefrom. The case disappeared from the trial docket and was transferred to the judgment docket. The amount of the judgment was fully paid, as counsel admitted in this court. At fall term, 1904, on motion of the plaintiffs, after notice, the court ordered the case to be reinstated for further proceedings. After reciting that at spring term, 1893, the plaintiff had been allowed by the court, upon the report of the referee, the amount of the costs in Jones v. Bunker, and that there had been no return or report of rents and profits by defendant Adelaide Bunker since 1897, the court ordered a reference for the purpose of having taken and stated an account of rents and profits since that time, and directed that the amount of the costs in Jones v. Bunker, so allowed by the referee and court at a former term, be paid out of any surplus of rents and profits. The defendants excepted to this order and appealed, for the following reasons, among others: (1) That the order is not supported by the record; (2) that the order reinstating the cause is erroneous, the judgment of Judge Timberlake being final; (3) that the order committing to a referee the claim of plaintiff, C. W. Bunker, for the costs in the suit of Jones v. Bunker, is erroneous, as this item was presented by the exceptions to the report heard before Judge Timberlake, and passed on by him, and no exceptions were filed to his judgment.

Carter & Lewellyn and Manly & Hendren, for appellants. Watson, Buxton & Watson, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the case). There were several important questions discussed in this case, but the only one we need consider is that which relates to the nature and legal effect of the judgment rendered at November term, 1900, when Judge Timberlake presided. If it was a final judgment, the plaintiffs cannot be heard upon any matter which was litigated in the action and which was necessarily determined by it. In such a case the matter in dispute having passed in rem judicatum, the former decision is conclusive between the parties, if either attempts by commencing another action or proceeding to reopen the question. This doctrine is but an outgrowth of the familiar maxim that a man shall not be twice vexed for the same cause, and the other wholesome rule of the law that it is the interest of the state that there be an end of litigation, and consequently a matter of public concern that solemn adjudications of the courts should not be disturbed. Broom's Legal Maxims (8th Ed.) 330, 331. "If," says Lord Kenyon, "an action be brought and the merits of the question be discussed between the parties, and a final judgment obtained by either, the parties are concluded, and cannot canvass the same question in another action, although, perhaps, some objection or argument might have been urged upon the first trial which would have led to a different judgment." Greathead v.

Bromley, 7 Durnf. & East (7 T. R.) 546. And again in another case he says: "After a recovery by process of law there must be an end of litigation. If it were otherwise, there would be no security for any person, and great oppression might be done under the color and pretense of law." Marriott v. Hampton, 7 Durnf. & East, 269. "Good matter must be pleaded [or brought forward] in good forme, in apt time, and in due order; otherwise, great advantage may be lost." Coke, 303b. If there be any one principle of law settled beyond all dispute, it is this: that whensoever a cause of action, in the language of the law, "transit in rem judicatam," and the judgment thereupon remains in full force and unreversed, the original cause of action is merged and gone forever; and so it is, also, that if the plaintiff had an opportunity of recovering something in litigation formerly between him and his adversary, and but for the failure to bring it forward or to press it to a conclusion before the court he might have recovered it in the original suit. Whatever does not for that reason pass into and become a part of the adjudication of the court is forever lost to him. U. S. v. Leffler, 11 Pet. 101, 9 L. Ed. 642. Judge Willes thus states the rule: "Where the cause of action is the same, and the plaintiff has had an opportunity in the former suit of recovering that which he seeks to recover in the second, the former recovery is a bar to the latter action." Nelson v. Couch, 15 C. B. (N. S.) 108 (a. c., 109 E. C. L. R. 108). These principles have been fully adopted by us, as will appear in the case of Tyler v. Capeheart, 125 N. C. 64, 34 S. E. 108, where the doctrine as to the plea of former judgment is concisely and accurately stated as follows: "The controverted point in that case [Wagon Co. v. Byrd, 119 N. C. 460, 28 S. E. 144] was whether a judgment was an estoppel as to the issues raised by the pleadings, and which could be determined in that action, or only as to those actually named in the judgment. The court held the former to be the rule settled by the reason of the thing and by the authorities. It was not held that where [as in the present case] other causes of action could have been joined the judgment was final as to them also. It was only intended to say that the cause of action embraced by the pleadings was determined by a judgment thereon, whether every point of such cause of action was actually decided by verdict and judgment or not. The determination of the action was held to be a decision of all the points raised therein; those not submitted to actual issue being deemed abandoned by the losing party, who did not except." And in Wagon Co. v. Byrd, supra, it is said: "The judgment is decisive of the point raised by the pleadings or which might properly be predicated upon them." The doctrine does not extend to any matter which might have been brought into the litigation or any cause of action which the plaintiff might have joined, but which in fact was neither joined nor embraced by the pleadings. Tyler v. Capeheart, supra.

Applying the foregoing and familiar principle to our case, we find that the facts bring it clearly within its scope and influence, and certainly, at least, so far as the matter of costs in the suit of Jones v. Bunker is concerned. It was an item in the account originally, and was properly considered by the referee, as it is alleged in the complaint, and denied in the answers, that it is a proper charge against the said Adelaide Bunker and should be paid out of the rents and profits of the land. It was at first allowed by the referee, and afterwards omitted from his account, reported in obedience to an order requiring a new account to be taken and stated. To this omission plaintiffs excepted, and, if it be conceded that the exception was directed only to the failure of the referee to charge the former allowance upon the rents and profits, and this seems to be so, it nevertheless appears that the plaintiffs permitted what is in form and substance a final judgment to be rendered, which did not in terms include this allowance, but provided, on the contrary, that plaintiffs should only recover a certain sum and the costs of the action, which necessarily excluded from the judgment the recovery of the costs paid in the suit of Jones v. Bunker. That this was a final judgment there can be no doubt. It possessed all of the elements and characteristics of such a judgment. It decided the case upon its merits, without any reservation for other and future directions of the court, so that it was not necessary to bring the case again before the court; and when it was pronounced the cause was at an end, and no further hearing could be had. Flemming v. Roberts, 84 N. C. 532; McLaurin v. McLaurin, 106 N. C. 331, 10 S. E. 1056. All discussion of questions involved in that suit is shut out by the judgment. This ruling applies with equal force, we think, to the other branch of the order, which required the referee to take an account of the rents and profits received since March, 1897. By the very terms of the judgment, the account was closed to the day of its rendition, and no other or further accounting could be ordered in respect to matters not included in that suit. Such relief must be sought in a new and independent action. The judgment was rendered at November term, 1900. No exception was entered and no appeal taken, but the amount recovered and the costs were paid. When this was all done by and with the acquiescence of the plaintiffs, the vitality of that suit and of the judgment therein was fully spent, and the latter could not be reopened and the suit revived by any sort of proceeding known to the law.

The court erred in making the order, and the case is remanded, with directions to set it aside and to deny plaintiff's motion.

Reversed.

(139 N. C. 613)

STATE v. JONES et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1905.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN—STREETS—CONDEMNATION—APPRAISERS—FAILURE TO SELECT—DELAY.

The fact that the owner of land sought to be condemned for a street refused on notice to select an appraiser, as he was entitled to do, and appealed to the superior court, did not delay the opening of the street until the appeal was finally determined.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 18, Cent. Dig. Eminent Domain, §§ 632, 672.]

2. SAME—RESOLUTION OF CONDEMNATION—NOTICE.

In proceedings to condemn land for a street, the resolution condemning and appropriating the land to public use was a legislative ex parte act, to which the owner was not a party, and of which he was not entitled to notice.

3. SAME—PAYMENT OF PRICE—DELAY.

In proceedings to condemn land for a street, delay in payment of damages assessed for the land condemned did not stay the exercise of the public's right to take possession.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 18, Cent. Dig. Eminent Domain, §§ 630-634.]

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—EMINENT DOMAIN PROCEEDINGS.

The Creedmoor charter (Priv. Acts 1905, p. 1006, c. 398) provides for the condemnation of land for street purposes, and section 17 prescribes the procedure, and declares that the value of the land condemned shall be appraised by three freeholders of the town qualified to act as jurors, one of whom is to be appointed by the landowner, another by the town, and those two to select a third; that the report of such appraisers shall be signed by at least two of them and filed with the mayor, and lie in his office 10 days for inspection, and authorizes the landowner to appeal to the superior court if dissatisfied. Held, that such provision was not unconstitutional, as depriving the landowner of his property without due process of law, for the implication requiring notice is plain and in pursuance thereof notice in fact was given.

5. JURY—RIGHT TO JURY TRIAL—CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS.

A proceeding for the assessment of damages for land taken for a street is not a proceeding in which the landowner is entitled to a jury trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 31, Cent. Dig. Jury, §§ 116-119.]

6. SAME.

The right of a landowner to a jury trial in proceedings to condemn land for a street, if guaranteed by the fundamental law, is protected by Creedmoor Charter (Priv. Acts 1905, p. 1006, c. 398) § 17, providing for the condemnation of land for street purposes, and authorizing an appeal from the award of damages to the superior court, where all issues of fact are triable by jury.

J. EMINENT DOMAIN—APPRAISERS—QUALIFICATIONS.

Where a right of appeal is given from an award of damages in proceedings by a town to condemn land for a street, or where there is authority in a court of competent jurisdiction to review the proceedings, it is immaterial that the appraisers appointed were freeholders of the town.

8. SAME—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Creedmoor Charter (Priv. Acts 1905, p. 1006, c. 398) § 17 provides for the condemnation of land for street purposes, and declares that the report of appraisers shall lie in the mayor's office for purposes of inspection and appeal, and that, unless an appeal is taken from such report, "the land so appraised shall stand condemned for the use of the town and the price fixed shall be paid." Held, that such provision applied only to the procedure for fixing the price to be paid, and should be construed to mean that if no appeal was taken from the appraised value the land should stand condemned "at such value," but does not suspend the right of entry if an appeal is taken.

Connor, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Granville County; Council, Judge.

Jesse Jones and others were indicted and tried for forcible trespass, and from a judgment of not guilty on a special verdict, the state appeals. Affirmed.

Winston & Bryant, Graham & Devin, and the Attorney General, for the State. B. S. Royster and T. T. Hicks, for appellees.

BROWN, J. The defendants, acting under the authority of the board of commissioners of the town of Creedmoor, entered upon certain land of S. H. Rogers, the prosecuting witness, within the said town, and proceeded to open and lay out a public street. Rogers was present and objected. We assume that the acts of the defendant Lyon, who was mayor, and his associates constituted a forcible trespass, unless they were duly authorized to enter upon and take possession of said land and open it as a public street. At a meeting of the board on May 16, 1905, the commissioners adopted a resolution condemning the land, upon which the trespass is charged to have been committed, for use as a public street and directing that it be opened. The resolution provided for the appointment of an appraiser on behalf of the town and for notice to Rogers to select his appraiser, and fixed a time and place for Rogers and his appraiser to meet the town appraiser on the premises to fix the compensation. The town of Creedmoor was chartered by the General Assembly of 1905 (Priv. Acts, p. 1006, c. 398). Section 15 (page 1009) of the act gives to the commissioners plenary power to condemn land for streets, sidewalks, and for other town purposes, and makes it their duty to keep the streets in repair. Section 17 prescribes the machinery for condemning land for streets or for other town purposes, and provides that the value shall be appraised by three freeholders of said town qualified to act as jurors and not connected by blood or marriage with the landowner or officially with the town. The section also provides for an appeal. In case no appeal is taken within 10 days the condemnation proceedings are final, and the money awarded shall be paid from the town funds. So far as we can see, the authorities of the town acted in strict conformity to the act in passing the resolution condemning the property. They appointed an appraiser and notified Rogers to select one. The fact that he refused and that he appealed to the superior court could not have the effect to delay the opening of the street until the appeal was finally determined. The appeal was not from the resolution condemning and appropriating the land to a public use. That was a legislative ex parte act, of which Rogers was not entitled to notice, and to which he could not be a party. The appeal was necessarily from the report of the appraisers fixing the compensation. As we shall hereafter see, the delay occasioned thereby in the payment of the money could not stay the sovereign power in taking possession of the land.

We agree with the Attorney General that if the provisions of the charter of Creedmoor are insufficient, so that the power of the eminent domain cannot be lawfully exercised by the town authorities, the defendants would be guilty. It is objected that the charter makes no provision for notice to the land owner, and therefore defendants cannot justify under it. Mr. Mills, in his work on Eminent Domain, states that notice is not absolutely necessary. Seizure is constructive notice, and the character of the proceeding gives notice to the world. Section 94. But we hold that, while the landowner was not entitled to notice, when the Legislature, or the commissioners to whom it has delegated its powers, appropriated his property to a public use, he was, however, entitled to notice and a hearing when his compensation was fixed. Mr. Elliott, in his work on roads and streets (section 200), examines this question carefully, and says: "It is, however, held in most of the cases which have given the subject careful consideration that a statute will be valid which determines without any interference a question of the necessity for the appropriation, or submits it without providing for notice to an inferior tribunal, but that a statute which undertakes to determine the question of compensation, or to submit it to commissioners or appraisers, without providing for notice, is unconstitutional." The same author says, in section 198: "There are some courts of high authority which hold that although notice is indispensable, it is not essential to the validity of the statute that it should provide for notice, and that it is sufficient if due notice is actually given." The authorities he cites are from some of the ablest courts in this country and fully support the author's views.

Of what steps and proceedings is the landowner entitled to notice? Mr. Lewis, in his work on Eminent Domain (volume 2, § 66), answers the question as follows: "All questions relating to the exercise of the eminent domain power, and which are political in their nature and rest in the exclusive control and discretion of the Legislature, may be determined without notice to the owner of the property to be affected. Whether the particular work or improvement shall be made or the particular property taken are questions of this character, and the owner is not entitled to a hearing thereon as a matter of right." Other authorities hold the same view. The Supreme Court of Ohio says: "It is not upon the question of the appropriation of lands for public use, but upon that of compensation for lands so appropriated, that the owner is entitled of right to a hearing in court and the verdict of a jury." Zimmerman v. Canfield, 42 Ohio St. 433. To the same effect, see People v. R. R. Co., 160 N. Y. 225, 54 N. E. 689. While the charter of Creedmoor makes no provision for notifying the land owners of contemplated action by the commissioners, it provides for ample notice when the landowner's property is to be appraised and his compensation fixed. In fact, it gives him the right to appoint one of the appraisers, and provides that one shall be appointed by the commissioners and those two shall select a third. The charter further provides that the report of the appraisers shall be signed by at least two of them, and shall be filed with the mayor and "lie in his office ten days and be subject to inspection." It also provides for an appeal to the superior court by the landowner, if he is dissatisfied. Giving the landowner the right to select one of the appraisers and the right of appeal are tantamount to an express provision requiring notice to him of the appraisal. The board required such notice to be given to Rogers, and it is admitted that he refused to act under it and to appoint an appraiser. If he had not received the notice, he could not have refused to act. Instead of selecting "his man," as the statute provided, at the appointed hour he appeared on the ground and seated himself upon the fence, and thereby endeavored to obstruct the opening of the street. Mr. Randolph, in his work on Eminent Domain (section 338), says: "A condemnation proceeding which does not provide for notice seems to be considered in some decisions as essentially defective. But the better view is that such act may be made effective by actually giving the proper notice. Thus it has been held that notice is plainly intended where the act contemplates the participation of the owner in the proceedings, as where it authorizes him to assist in striking a jury or gives him the right to appeal." See, also, State v. Jersey City, 24 N. J. Law. 662; State v. Trenton, 36 N. J. Law 499; Kramer v. Cleveland, 5 Ohio St. 140; Swan v. Williams, 2 Mich. 427; Belt Ry. v. Baltzell, 75 Md. 94, 23 Atl. 74; Peoria, etc., R. Co. v. Warner, 61 Ill. 52. Mr. Lewis recognizes it as settled law by repeated adjudications that statutes authorizing condemnation and making no provision for notice are valid, if actual notice is given; but it is unnecessary that we should go that far in this case. Lewis on Eminent Domain, § 368. But at the same time he says: "By far the greater portion of the cases proceed upon the principle of implying a requirement to give notice from the provisions of the statute itself." The implication requiring notice in the charter of Creedmoor is plain, and in pursuance thereof the notice was given. That is the ground upon which we place our decision.

2. Has the statute provided a proper tribunal to fix the compensation? We agree with the learned chancellor of New York that "the government is bound in such cases to provide some tribunal for the assessment of the compensation or the indemnity, before which each party may meet and discuss their claims on equal terms." 2 Kent, Com. 399. There is no constitutional provision in our state which guarantees a jury trial in such proceedings. The Constitution of the state does not refer to the right of eminent domain. The right to condemn and the duty to pay compensation are recognized by the courts as a right and duty appertaining to sovereignty, which the state may exercise freely upon all proper occasions, and which a jury has no right to control, except where an appeal is taken and tried in the nisi prius courts. Scudder v. Trenton Falls Co., 1 N. J. Eq. 694, 23 Am. Dec. 756. It is held by this court as early as 1837, in an elaborate opinion by Chief Justice Ruffin, that an assessment for damages in such a proceeding need not be made by a jury of 12 freeholders. It is not a controversy within the meaning of the Bill of Rights, nor is it such a trial by jury as that instrument declares shall be "sacred and inviolable." Railroad Co. v. Davis, 19 N. C. 452. If, however, a jury trial were guaranteed the landowner by the fundamental law, his rights in that respect are fully protected by his right of appeal to a court where all issues of fact are triable by jury. State v. Lyle, 138 N. C. 738, 51 S. E. 66. The method for the assessment of damages in the Creedmoor charter has been passed upon and fully approved by this court in State v. Lyle, 100 N. C. 499, 6 S. E. 379. In that case the charter of Reidsville was under consideration, and the section relating to the appraisement is copied in the opinion of Chief Justice Smith. The two are nearly identical, with the exception that in the Reidsville charter the mayor can appoint an appraiser if the landowner refuses. We do not think such omission in the Creedmoor charter invalidates it, for if the landowner refuses to select an appraiser it is his own folly. It is not necessary for us to decide as to the power of the mayor to fill the vacancy on the board of appraisers occasioned by the obduracy of the landowner. As he has taken an appeal, his damages will be assessed de novo by a tribunal whose jurisdiction is undoubted. Certainly the stubbornness of the landowner cannot be permitted to put a stop to the exercise of an undoubted and necessary power given to all towns by the General Assembly. The fact that the appraisers are freeholders of Creedmoor makes no difference. The question has been decided in other states, as well as our own, and it has been held that, where there is a right of appeal, or where there is authority in a court of competent jurisdiction to review the proceedings, the common council of the town seeking to appropriate the land may appoint all of the appraisers. Elliott on Roads & Streets, § 281, and cases cited. In the Reidsville charter, passed upon by this court in Lyle's Case, the statute provided that all the appraisers should be freeholders and citizens of the town. Lyle's Case is practically on all fours with this, and, as it has remained unchallenged since 1888, we see no reason to overrule it now. It is cited and approved in several cases; the latest being Railroad v. Newton, 133 N. C. 134, 45 S. E. 549.

3. As soon as the commissioners in the exercise of the powers delegated to them appropriated the land to a public street, they had the right to enter and open it without awaiting the payment of damages. State v. Lyle, supra; Cooley, Const. Lim. § 480. This question is fully discussed in Lyle's Case, and sound reasons given why the public needs should not await the assessment and payment of damages. We think that decision is supported by the great weight of authority. Railroad v. Davis, supra; Railroad v. Parker, 105 N. C. 246, 11 S. E. 328; Railroad v. Newton, supra. The present chief justice says in Newton's Case: "Formerly the landowner had no right to a jury trial in fixing compensation upon condemnation of the right of way, nor was the compensation required to be paid before entry. Code, § 1946, changed this as to railroads by requiring the company to pay into court the sum assessed before entry." This opinion was approved by a unanimous court and delivered in 1903. A distinction is made as to the time of payment in cases where the seizure is made by the sovereign, as in this case, and where the land is condemned by a quasi public corporation exercising the power of eminent domain. In the former case, and in the absence of constitutional restrictions, it is held in most of the states that the making of compensation need not precede an entry upon the property, where, as in this case, provision is made by the sovereign power for the payment of the money. Lewis on Eminent Domain, § 456, and notes thereto, citing all the cases to that effect; Randolph on Eminent Domain, § 291; Am. & Eng. Encyc. (2d Ed.) vol. 10, p. 1139, and cases cited; Elliott, § 241. In Mills on Eminent Domain, § 125, North Carolina is put down as one of the states where in it is held that compensation need not precede the entry, but that there may be an entry and adjustment afterward. Johnston v. Rankin, 70 N. C. 550; Railroad v. McCaskill, 94 N. C. 746. The statute requires the report of appraisers to lie in the mayor's office for 10 days for purposes of inspection and appeal, and provides that, unless an appeal is taken from such report, "the land so appraised shall stand condemned for the use of the town and the price fixed shall be paid," etc. We think that this applies only to the procedure for fixing the price to be paid, and means that, if no appeal is taken from the appraised value, the land shall stand condemned at such value. The appeal is not allowed to postpone the right of entry. Such a construction as that would seriously interfere with and indefinitely delay public works, such as opening or extending streets and the like. "Public policy forbids the suspension of operations on works of internal improvement during the pendency of litigation to ascertain the damage to which parties may be entitled." Phifer v. Railroad, 72 N. C. 434.

For the reasons given we are of opinion that the entry of defendants was rightful, and that upon the special verdict they are not guilty.

The judgment of the superior court is affirmed.

WALKER, J. (concurring). The defendants are indicted for a criminal trespass, and questions which might be open for discussion and decision, if there had been a direct attack made upon the proceedings for a condemnation of the land, by appeal or otherwise, are not to be considered in this collateral proceeding. It may be regarded as settled law that the power to take private property for public uses belongs to every independent government exercising sovereign power, for it is a necessary incident to its sovereignty and requires, therefore, no constitutional recognition. U. S. v. Jones, 109 U. S. 513, 3 Sup. Ct. 346, 27 L. Ed. 1015. No provision for condemnation has ever been inserted in our Constitution, but the right of eminent domain or the right to condemn private property for public uses has always been conceded as essential to the due exercise of the powers of government and to the promotion of the public welfare. Legislation in the exercise of this inherent power, though subject to judicial control, is said to be practically unlimited, if the purpose be a public one and sufficient provision is made for compensation to the owner of the property proposed to be taken. Railroad v. Davis, 19 N. C. 451; Secombe v. Railroad, 23 Wall. 108, 23 L. Ed. 67. The mode of exercising the power of eminent domain, unless otherwise provided in the organic law, rests in the sound discretion of the Legislature, subject, however, to the principle, just stated, that there must be sure and adequate provision for compensating the owner. McIntire v. Railroad, 67 N. C. 273; Secombe v. Railroad, supra; Searl v. School Dist., 133 U. S. 553, 10 Sup. Ct. 374, 33 L. Ed. 740; Cherokee Nation v. Railroad, 135 U. S. 641, 10 Sup. Ct. 935, 34 L. Ed. 295. If the facts of this case are examined in the light of the foregoing principles, it cannot be doubted that the Legislature has assumed to exercise its unquestionable right to have land condemned in the town of Creedmoor for public streets. The Legislature has conferred upon the town commissioners general authority to act in the premises, where lands are required for the purpose of opening and laying out streets or for other public purposes, and has also provided a perfectly fair and sufficient method for ascertaining and paying just compensation to the landowners, whose property may be taken for the purpose. Priv. Laws 1905, p. 1006, c. 398. In this case the prosecutor did not see fit to avail himself of the privilege given him to appoint one of the appraisers, but willfully and obstinately refused to do so. He thus set the law at defiance. Not only did he attempt to shorten and weaken, but actually to paralyze, the arm of the law when stretched forth in an effort to promote the public welfare, and for no good reason whatever. There is and can not be any suggestion in this case that he was about to be wrongly or oppressively treated, or that his property was about to be taken without due process of law. When such has been the case, resistance to the last ditch is not only the privilege, but the duty, of the citizen, in the protection of his own property and in the vindication of constitutional right. Such conduct is not stubbornness, but lawful resistance. But willful and unreasonable obstruction to the due and orderly course of government and to the administration of law as declared by the proper authority is not only unwarranted, but entitles the offender to little or no consideration at the hands of the court, where there has been no clear violation of his rights. If he has lost any advantage secured to him by the statute through his refusal to accept it, why should we hear him now complain of the alleged imperfect execution of the law, growing out of his own misconduct, unless we propose to reverse or abolish the salutary maxim that no man shall be permitted to take any benefit of his own wrong, by which principle, if it is to stand unimpaired, he should be judged? The statute gave him a perfectly fair and adequate remedy for the full protection of his property, and for the recovery of just compensation, if the public required that it should be taken. Will the courts allow him to thus trifle with the law, and to make his trifling the foundation of his complaint that it was not well executed?

But, apart from these considerations, he has not lost any right by the supposed irregularity in the proceedings. The object in appointing the appraisers is to ascertain the measure of compensation, and nothing else. If he is dissatisfied with the decision of the appraisers, he is given the right of appeal, and of this right he has availed himself. The way is now open to him for the ascertainment of his damages by a jury, the most impartial body known to the law, before whom his rights can be determined both as to the facts and the law. That he cannot complain under such circumstances has been definitely and conclusively settled by this court, if we are not to disregard, but to follow, its solemn adjudications, and one in particular, which seems to me to dispose of all the disputed questions in this case, and a decision, too, which received full consideration from a court of exceptional learning and ability. In Johnston v. Rankin, 70 N. C. 550, it appears that the sheriff had not only not notified the landowner of the day on which the appraisal of his land proposed to be condemned for a street would be made, but, worse than this, he notified him that the jury would appraise it on one day, when in fact they appraised it on a different day, thus not only failing to give him notice, but misleading him. The court said he was not bound by the proceeding, and "he might perhaps have regarded all after proceedings as trespasses, being under a warrant which was void as to him for want of notice," or he might have had the proceeding quashed. "But," says the court, "he appeals, and thus vacates the assessment during the pendency of the appeal. By voluntarily becoming a party he waives the irregularity of want of notice, and gives the appellate court jurisdiction to hear the case on the merits." "He clearly waived, by appealing, any objection to the defect in the proceedings, which would otherwise have invalidated them," says the court in another part of its opinion. This case also definitely decides that the commissioners are the sole judges of the public use and of the necessity for taking the land, and that the appeal involves nothing but the amount of compensation. "There is, therefore, nothing to forbid the defendants from proceeding with the improvement pending the appeal. The law of this state does not require compensation to be first made, as that of some states does." I have examined the charter then under review, and find that it nowhere expressly authorizes entry upon the land before compensation is made; but it provides that, on payment of the amount of the appraisal, the streets may be opened. In McIntire v. Railroad, 67 N. C. 278, the court says: "If the owner of land overflowed by a milldam could bring his action on the case for damages every day, no public mill could be established. In like manner, if the owner of land taken by a railroad for its track could bring his action of trespass every day, no railroad could be built. * * * If the officers of the company cannot enter on lands and make surveys without a trespass, they could never locate the road. And if the road were located, and its construction delayed until the damages to all the landowners on the route were ascertained under the act, the delay would be indefinite, and of no benefit to any one. To hold that, during the pendency of a proceeding by the company to have the lands condemned, it could not prosecute its works without being exposed daily to an action of trespass, would effectually defeat the policy of the act." To the same effect are Railroad v. McCaskill, 94 N. C. 746; Railroad v. Davis, 19 N. C. 451. In Phifer v. Railroad, 72 N. C. 433, it is held that the appeal carried the whole case into the superior court, "where the plaintiffs [the landowners] can have every right which they seek in the action adjudged and determined." And in State v. McIver, 88 N. C. 686, it was said to be the rule in this state, in reference to the taking of private property for public uses, that the compensation to the owner need not precede the act of appropriation, if sufficient provision is made for compensation to the owner. Numerous other cases of like import might be cited, but those already mentioned will suffice to show the result of actual decision by this court upon the subject, and they are conclusive against the contention of the prosecution.

The words of this act, that if an appeal is not taken within 10 days "the land so appraised shall stand condemned for the use of the town and the price fixed by the appraisers shall be paid from the funds of the town," evidently mean that the appraisal shall stand as fixed by the appraisers, and not that the town shall have no right to take the land until the time for appealing has expired, for condemnation always precedes appraisal. Much stronger language was used in the charter of Asheville, construed in Johnston v. Rankin, supra, and yet the court held in that case that the town could enter and proceed with the work of laying out the street. But giving to the words we have quoted their broadest meaning, that the title did not pass until the time for appealing had expired, the town was not thereby forbidden to go upon the land for the purpose of laying out and constructing the street. We should always go to the farthest permissible length in protecting the rights and property of the citizen from unlawful interference, but some regard must also be had for the rights of the public, and we should be careful to see that the public welfare is not prejudiced by an undue consideration for private interests.

CONNOR, J. (dissenting). I should be content to note my dissent from the conclusion reached in this case, but for the fact that I am deeply impressed with the conviction that the opinion, of course unconsciously, weakens the security of private property and invites laxity, both of sentiment and conduct, on the part of those to whom the Legislature is constantly committing the exercise of the highest act of sovereignty. "Laws which authorize the taking of private property for public use should be strictly construed and closely scrutinized. Nothing justifies such an invasion of private right but an imperative public necessity, and the exercise of this right of eminent domain, under color of which so many iniquities have been committed, should be held strictly within the bounds provided by the Constitution and the laws." Refining Co. v. Elevator Co., 82 Mo. 121. "The appropriation of private property under the right of eminent domain is an exercise of sovereign power, and, when reliance is placed upon statutes conferring the right, those statutes, being in derogation of common right, must be strictly construed, and the right cannot be exercised, except in strict conformity to the power conferred." Harvey v. Railroad, 174 Ill. 295, 51 N. E. 163. "The privilege sought to be obtained by the application is against common right, and the law should be construed strictly against the privilege; and no question is better settled in this state than that, where a special and limited jurisdiction is conferred by statute upon an individual or a court, the record must affirmatively show a compliance with all the requisitions of the statute." Martin v. Rushton, 42 Ala. 239. "The law is jealous of the right of property holders, and adopts these formalities of procedure for their protection. * * * The right of eminent domain, that of taking the property of the private citizen without his consent and devoting it to the use of the general public, is an exercise of the highest act of sovereignty. It can only be called into existence by the authority of the Legislature and by the tribunal provided by law. This statute prescribes the mode, and I have no doubt whatever that it is mandatory. The failure of the city council to comply with it is fatal." City of Madison v. Daley (C. C.) 58 Fed. 753. "In cases like the present it is always to be borne in mind that these acts of Parliament are acts of sovereign and imperial power, operating in the most harsh shape in which that power can be applied in civil matters. * * * Whoever considers the effect of this must see the consequences which frequently do happen to individuals. Property to which they have attached their whole fortunes and interests may be taken from them by an absolute exercise of imperial power, and their whole circumstances and situation in life may be entirely altered for a sum of money to be fixed by somebody else. * * * The hardship imposed on individuals, I think, and I am glad to think, has of late years been subject to a more anxious consideration than it used to be. Probably the frequency of applications for such acts of Parliament and the vast expense of the works have occasioned that particular consideration. * * * It would be a strong measure indeed to allow men's property to be summarily taken from them, on the notion of the general benefit, when the parties taking it have not done those things which are incumbent on them to secure their capacity and ability to complete the whole undertaking." Lord Langdale, M. R., in Gray v. Railway Co., 9 Beav. 391. "So high a prerogative as that of divesting one's estate against his will should only be exercised when the plain letter of the law permits it, and under a careful observance of the formalities prescribed for the owner's protection." Cooley, Const. Lim. 763. "All grants of power by the government are to be strictly construed, and this is especially true with respect to the power of eminent domain, which is more harsh and peremptory in its exercise and operation than any other; one judge saying: 'An act of this sort deserves no favor. To construe it liberally would be sinning against the rights of property.'" Lewis, Em. Dom. 254. "In construing statutes which are claimed to exercise the right of eminent domain, a strict, rather than a liberal, construction is the rule. Such statutes assume to call into active operation a power which, however essential to the existence of government, is in derogation of the ordinary rights of private ownership and of the control which an owner usually has of his property." Matter of Bridge Co., 108 N. Y. 483, 15 N. E. 601.

I have noted the expressions of these jurists and authors, both in this country and in England (and hundreds more of like import can be found), to emphasize the fundamental rule of construction of statutes conferring upon corporations, either public or private, the power of eminent domain in respect to the matter of procedure. In the light of the decisions of this court, beginning with Railroad v. Davis, 19 N. C. 451, I concede that the Legislature may confer upon a corporation, having the right to condemn, the power to enter upon the land and subject it to the burden before compensation is made. In this opinion I do not care to controvert the proposition that power to enter may be conferred even before the assessment of damage is made. For the purpose of this discussion, I fully concede the right, in as full and complete measure as it is asserted in the opinion of the court. My dissent is based upon the construction of the statute. While I do not concede the necessity of invoking the rule, I insist that, in the light of authority and upon sound reason, the statute must be construed strictly, and all reasonable doubt resolved in favor of the owner. It is said that the power to condemn is political, and not judicial, and from this proposition, which is conceded, the conclusion is reached that, immediately upon the exercise of the power by a declaration of condemnation, the right to enter upon and occupy the property is vested in the corporation without notice to the owner; that the institution of proceedings fixing the compensation and providing for the payment is secondary, both in point of time and importance. It seems to be conceded that the owner is entitled to some sort or kind of notice at this time. However this may be, the proposition, startling to the citizen who has been educated in the belief that he lives under a government of laws and not of men, has judicial warrant for its support. It would serve no good purpose to discuss the foundation of this power, which resides in all forms of government. In view of the fact that the power is conferred upon all sorts and kinds of corporations at every session of the General Assembly, it would seem wise to require a substantial, if not a strict, compliance with the requirement of the statutes in regard to procedure by which the state parts with and delegates to others the exercise of this sovereign power, so vitally concerning the rights of the citizen and the honor of the sovereign.

The real question in this case is whether the charter of the town of Creedmoor confers upon the authorities the power to enter upon the property of the citizen until it is condemned, and whether it is condemned until the assessment of damages is made by the persons and in the manner prescribed by the charter. Section 17, c. 398, p. 1009, Priv. Laws 1905, being the charter of the town, provides that, whenever it shall become necessary to condemn land for streets, the value of such land shall be assessed by "three freeholders of said town. * * * One of said appraisers shall be appointed by the board of commissioners of said town, one by the land owner or his agent, and the third to be selected by the two so appointed." It is provided that the appraisers shall be sworn and shall file their report with the mayor within one week after the appraisement, etc. "Said report shall be signed by not less than two of the appraisers, and shall lie in the mayor's office for ten days and be subject to the inspection and examination of the landowner or his agent, and unless an appeal is taken, and such appeal shall lie to the superior court of Granville county in term time, during said period of ten days by the town or the landowner, the said land so appraised shall stand condemned for the use of the town, and the price fixed by the appraisers shall be fixed from the funds of the town." It will be observed that no power is expressly conferred upon the officers of the town to enter upon the land and open a street. Of course, such power is incident to condemnation and need not be expressly given. I find in several charters granted to railroad companies in this state the power to enter upon the land and construct the road before condemnation proceedings are instituted. Such power is given in the charter of the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad Company, which was before the court in Railroad v. Davis, supra. In the charter of the Wilmington & Raleigh, afterwards the Wilmington & Weldon, Railroad Company, no such power is given. On the contrary, it is provided that if it be necessary to take land a petition shall be filed, etc. After providing for the assessment of damages, etc., it is said the corporation may "thereupon, and also if no damage is due, enter upon the land and construct," etc. Power of entry to make surveys is given before condemnation. Chapter 49 of the Code, providing for the organization of railroad companies and prescribing the manner in which they shall proceed to condemn land, contains this language: "If the said company, at the time of the appraisal, shall pay into court the sum appraised by the commissioners, then and in that event the said company may enter, take possession of and hold said land, notwithstanding an appeal," etc. Section 1948. I note the provisions of these charters to show that, when the Legislature intended to confer the right to enter before the assessment is made or the damage paid, it has so declared in express terms.

In this case, it is found by the special verdict that the commissioners met on May 16, 1905, and adopted a resolution declaring that it was necessary and convenient for the public that a street be opened through the land of Rogers, appointing an appraiser on the part of the town, and directing that the owner be notified to appoint an appraiser, and fixing the time at which they should meet and assess the damage. The owner was notified by the mayor. He declined and refused to select an appraiser. Thereupon, on May 24, 1905, the board of commissioners selected a second appraiser to act with the one formerly appointed. The two selected a third appraiser, and the three persons thus selected went upon the premises and laid out the street, not in conformity to the resolution, and assessed the damages. They filed their report on May 25, 1905. At a meeting of the board on May 27th the report was adopted, and on the 29th the prosecutor gave notice of an appeal. The report stated that they had taken 250 feet of land; whereas, the true quantity included in the street was 800 feet. On the 29th of May the defendants entered upon the land in the manner set forth in the special verdict. The correctness of the judgment below depends upon the answer to the question whether the land stood condemned on the 29th of May; and the answer to this is dependent upon the question whether, by the resolution of May 16, 1905, the land stood condemned. It cannot be successfully contended that any right of entry was given in the charter until condemnation was had. It would seem that the plain language of the statute would put an end to the controversy. When the appraisers have been appointed, have acted, and the report of their action has been in the mayor's office 10 days, eliminating the provision in regard to an appeal, "the said land so appraised shall stand condemned," etc. The charter is the authority, and the only authority, by which the power is conferred, and by which its terms and extent are to be measured. How is it possible for the court to say that this language is of no effect? Was it not most natural for the prosecutor to put the only reasonable construction upon this plain language, and to assert his ownership, until by the law of the land he has been divested of it? If the land stood condemned by the resolution, why should the Legislature have done a vain thing and declared that land already condemned should again "stand condemned"? If by the resolution of May 16, 1905, his land had been taken, it is immaterial for the purpose of this appeal to inquire whether the appointment by the board of two appraisers, when the statute empowered it to select only one, was authorized. If, on the contrary, the appointment and action of the appraisers are essential to the completion of the condemnation, it is important to inquire whether the refusal of the landowner to choose an appraiser conferred the power on the board to do so. It is said that he was stubborn, and by his stubbornness forfeited his right to have his property condemned according to the charter. The record does not disclose why the owner of the land refused to name an appraiser, nor is it of any moment in the decision of this case. It is sufficient to say, conceding that he was stubborn, this did not authorize the defendants to proceed, otherwise than in accordance with the law, to take his property. Some of the most sacred rights of person and property have been preserved by men who were stubborn. Doubtless Hampden was so considered when he resisted the payment of ship money. We may not dismiss a man's cause because in our opinion he was stubborn. If those upon whom the Legislature has conferred the right to exercise the highest acts of sovereignty fail to proceed according to the character, the citizen not only has a right, but it is his duty, to be stubborn. I do not question the motives of the defendants. I presume they were acting in good faith. But, when we deal with the sacred rights of person and property, nothing short of full and complete authority will justify.

In other charters directing the appointment of appraisers, as this does, provision is made for the appointment by the sheriff or clerk, if the owner of the property refuses to name an appraiser. It is no answer to the objection that the law has not been complied with to say that it is the fault of the property owner. The charter is the guide for the corporation. The Legislature has prescribed the terms upon which and the manner in which the corporation must accept the authority. The citizen is not consulted. He is told that the condemnation of his property is the exercise of sovereign power, and he is not entitled to be heard. Certainly, when he finds that in delegating that power to a corporation the Legislature has fixed the tribunal, provided for its selection, and prescribed the manner in which his property is to "stand condemned," he may make this last stand for his rights, and should not be told that it is immaterial whether the corporation observes the provision of the charter. I respectfully, but firmly, insist that this is to dispense with fundamental principles founded upon the experience of the ages. I am at a loss to see what right the commissioners had to select two appraisers, when the charter gave them power to select only one. That the manner of selecting the appraisers, when prescribed by the charter, is essential, and compliance therewith a condition precedent to condemnation, is abundantly sustained by the authorities. In Loucheim v. Hemsley, 59 N. J. Law, 149, 35 Atl. 795, the statute directed that the appraisers be of different political parties. The court said: "Neither in the communication nor in the minutes is any reference made to the statutory qualifications of the commissioners. This omission is fatal. A special authority delegated by statute to particular persons to take away a man's property and estate against his will must be strictly pursued, and must appear to have been so pursued on the face of the proceedings in which the authority is exercised." In Fore v. Hoke 48 Mo. App. 254, the statute required the petition for condemnation and assessment to set forth that the parties could not agree. The petition failing to do so, the court said that the averment was jurisdictional. In Adams v. Clarksburg, 23 W. Va. 203, Woods, J., says: "The taking of private property for public use, without the owner's consent, can only be justified for the uses, in the modes, upon the conditions, and by the agencies prescribed by law for its appropriation. Whenever the private property of an individual is to be divested by proceedings against his will, a strict compliance must be had with all the provisions of law which are made for his protection and benefit, or the proceeding will be ineffectual. These conditions must be regarded as conditions precedent which are not only to be observed and complied with before the right of the property owner is disturbed, but the party claiming authority under the adverse proceeding must show affirmatively such compliance. All the authorities concur in holding that as private property can be taken against the consent of the owner only in such cases and by such proceedings as may be specially provided by law, and as these proceedings are contrary to the course of the common law and are in derogation of common right, they are to be strictly construed, and that the party who would avail himself of this extraordinary power must comply fully with all the provisions of the law entitling him to exercise it." In this case a provision required 10 day's notice to be served on the owners before the court could appoint the commissioners. The court held that a failure to give the notice rendered the proceeding void. This, because the statute required the notice. In Madden v. L. & N. R. R., 66 Miss. 258, 6 South. 181, the statute provided that the commissioners be "disinterested." The court said: "This being the case, it is material to the validity of the appropriation that a strict compliance with the terms of the charter be apparent in the record. It nowhere appears, either in the appointment of the commissioners, in their return, or in any order entered therein, that they were "disinterested." And, if they were not, there has not been any condemnation of the land. This case was upon a "suggestion of error" reargued, and the decision affirmed.

In Mitchell v. Railroad, 68 Ill. 286, it is said: "It is a sound and inflexible rule of law that, when special proceedings are authorized by statute by which the estate of one person may be divested and transferred to another, every material provision of the statute must be complied with. The owner has the right to insist upon a strict performance of all the material requirements, and especially those designed for his security, and the nonobservance of which may operate to his prejudice." In Paret v. Bayonne, 39 N. J. Law, 559, Depue, J., says: "The officers of a corporation are agents, with only special powers such as are delegated to them by the act of incorporation, or such as are necessarily implied from the powers delegated. * * * In the performance of these functions they are required to conform strictly to the method of procedure prescribed." In Stewart v. Wallis, 30 Barb. 344, it is said: "The form by which private property may be taken for public purposes having been prescribed, it must be strictly pursued, or the attempt will be ineffectual and the proceeding void, and all persons acting under the color of them will be trespassers." We may apply the words of the court in Chl. & Alt. R. R. Co. v. Smith, 78 Ill. 98, to all works of public character: "Whilst all persons at that day were desirous to see railroads constructed, it was not intended that it should be done at the sacrifice of all private rights. Those acting for the company knew, or should have known, that in acquiring their right of way they were pursuing an extraordinary and summary remedy, and in doing so the law imperatively demanded that they should observe all of the requirements of the statute under which they were acting. And this is a requirement which lies at the foundation of our system of jurisprudence." Railroad v. Railroad, 106 N. C. 16, 10 S. E. 1041; 15 Cyc. p. 815.

This is probably the first instance in which the property of the citizen has been taken against his consent and its value fixed by appraisers, two of whom are selected by the party taking, and they selecting the third. I submit that to sustain it is destructive of elementary principles of natural justice and judicial procedure. It is no answer to say to the citizen, deprived of his property at a valuation fixed by appraisers so appointed, that he may appeal. He is entitled in the first instance, and at every step in the proceeding, to demand a strict observance of the written law. The provisions in regard to the mode of procedure before the land shall "stand condemned" are not empty forms. To so construe them puts the state in the attitude of keeping the promise to the ear and breaking it to the sense. Let us suppose a similar provision in the charter of a railroad company or telegraph company in regard to the appointment of appraisers—and there is no difference in principle; would it be contended that, if the owner, feeling that his rights were being unlawfully or unjustly invaded, refused to name an appraiser, a superintendent or other officer of the corporation could name two of the appraisers and say to the owner, if he was not satisfied, he could appeal. I do not so understand the guaranties which the law throws around the citizen. The right to appeal is of value, and not to be denied; but the right of the citizen to demand at all stages of the proceeding due process of law is not to be denied or abridged.

Holding, therefore, that the assessment was of the essence of the condemnation proceeding, I am forced to the conclusion that the land did never "stand condemned," because there was never any lawfully constituted appraisers, and that the report should not under the terms of the charter be confirmed, until the expiration of 10 days. It would seem, also, that the appeal suspended further action by the board. It is usually provided that, if the corporation deposit the amount of the award, an appeal shall not suspend the right of entry. I see no reasonable objection to such a provision. It is said, however, that the question is settled by this court in State v. Lyle, 100 N. C. 497, 6 S. E. 379. The extent to which a question becomes closed and is crystallized into positive law by a single decision binding upon the same court is often difficult to define. Without undertaking to do so, I think it permissible and safe to say that it should not extend beyond the clear and unmistakable language of the judge who writes the opinion. I should feel myself bound both by reason of my respect for the opinion of the learned chief justice who wrote, and the associate justice who concurred in, that opinion, as well as the learned judge who tried the case below, unless my convictions were so strong that to adopt the conclusion did violence to my sense of duty as a judge. I do not think that I am placed in this embarrassing position in respect to that case. Fully conceding that it is permissible to cite the case as in some measure sustaining the conclusion reached by the court, I think that a careful examination of the opinion discloses that the question upon which this case turns is not considered or decided. Smith, C. J., says: "The controversy in the present case turns upon the construction of the charter, which has been recited in full, and whether, in providing the method for ascertaining the compensation to be paid the owner and the means by which it is to be done, a prepayment is necessary before the property can be taken, and this following the condemnation in the mode pointed out in the enactment." The discussion following this statement of the question in controversy shows clearly that no other question was in the mind of the writer. This view is strengthened by the concluding portion of the opinion, citing Judge Cooley to sustain the proposition that the corporation may, if authorized, take "without first making payment." (Italics in opinion.) This is the only question discussed or decided, and, as said, it is not controverted.

In Freedle v. Railroad, 49 N. C. 89, and in McIntire v. Railroad, 67 N. C. 278, the question presented here did not arise. In Johnston v. Rankin, 70 N. C. 550, the charter of Asheville is not set out. The only point decided in respect to the right to proceed with the work is that the law did not require compensation paid before the taking. If, as contended, these cases hold that, without clearly expressed power in the charter, a board of town commissioners or directors of a private corporation may, without notice to the owner, locate a street or road on his property, and immediately, without other notice to him than the appearance of a number of men on his premises, tear away his houses and fences, cut down his trees, and take his property, then I most respectfully, but earnestly, dissent from them. To sustain the exercise of such arbitrary power, there should be unmistakable language used in the statute. How far the Legislature may permit it is not, in my opinion, a closed question. It may be said that it is of little importance to the owner, whose property is taken by an ex parte exercise of political sovereignty, either by a board of town commissioners or a board of nonresident directors of a corporation, to whom has been delegated this sovereign power, how, when, or by whom the assessment is made; and it must be conceded that much judicial warrant is found to sustain the position. I cannot hope to change the current of judicial thought in this court, and it is doubtless a vain assumption on my part to question its correctness. I hope, however, that another department of the government, to which, it seems, the citizen must look to safeguard his rights in this respect, will come to a state of mind which will enable us to say, in the language of the English Court of Chancery: "The hardship imposed on individuals, I think, and I am glad to think, has of late years been subject to a more anxious consideration than it used to be." The material wealth and prosperity of the country should, and we hope will, continue to grow. The great principles by which the security of life, liberty, and property has been preserved, the preservation of which is so essential and has contributed so largely to the present happy condition in which we live, may not be either sacrificed or in the slightest degree weakened by the demands of corporations, either public or private, to trespass upon the land of the citizen otherwise than is permitted by the clearly expressed will of the lawmaking power. A man's land should "stand condemned" when, and only when, every step which the law prescribes to that end has been taken. Every reasonable doubt should be resolved in favor of the citizen. It is well known that charters are obtained by those most interested in securing the largest delegation of power possible. The owner, whose property is to be condemned, has no opportunity to be heard. The constitutional provision requiring notice of the introduction of private laws has, by custom and construction, been practically abrogated. Power is ever aggressive, and often indifferent to individual rights. Recognizing these truths, taught by experience, the courts have wisely declared that all grants of power are to be construed strictly against the grant, and liberally in favor of the citizen.

In my opinion, under the clear terms of the charter, the land of the prosecutor did not "stand condemned" on May 29, 1905, and the entry thereon by the defendants was a trespass. There are other phases of the case which I do not care to discuss. I do not dissent from what is said in regard to notice given.

(140 N. C. 106)

GATTIS v. KILGO et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 22, 1905.)

LIBEL—COMMUNICATIONS—QUALIFIED PRIVILEGE.

The publication of proceedings of a college board of trustees in the investigation of charges against one connected with the college, which pamphlet was intended for circulation among the patrons of the college and among those likely to become such, was qualifiedly privileged, and therefore could not be made the basis of an action for libel, in the absence of proof of malice.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 32, Cent. Dig. Libel and Slander, § 133.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Moore, Judge.

Action by Thomas J. Gattis against J. C. Kilgo and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Graham & Devin, Guthrie & Guthrie, Argo & Shaffer, C. B. Watson, A. A. Hicks, S. M. Gattis, and J. N. Holding, for appellant. Robt. W. Winston, B. S. Boyster, T. T. Hicks, F. L. Fuller, and Aycock & Daniels, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. The court is of the opinion that the investigation of the charges against defendant Kilgo before the board of trustees of Trinity College was not absolutely, but qualifiedly, privileged, and so was the publication of the proceedings in the pamphlet known in the case as the "Blue Book," which was intended for circulation among the patrons of the college and among those likely to become its patrons. Any statement or communication is conditionally privileged when made bona fide about something in which (1) the speaker has an interest or duty (2) the hearer has a corresponding interest or duty, and (3) when the statement or communication is made in protection of that interest or in performance of that duty. It must be uttered in the honest belief that it is true. The standard of privilege is the standard of the law, not of the individual, and the privilege depends, not on what the individual may have supposed to be his interest or duty, but upon what a judge decides, as matter of law, his interest or duty to have been. The court determines what is and what is not privileged. The effect of the privilege is to cast on the plaintiff the burden of showing malice on the defendant's part in uttering or publishing the alleged slanderous words. If one exceeds the privilege, its protection to him ceases, and the ordinary rules of liability apply. Whether he has exceeded it, and whether he was actuated by malice, are ordinarily questions for the jury. 1 Jaggard on Torts, 530, 531. Proceedings before school boards, and religious, fraternal, and like organizations, are within the class having only a qualified privilege, and are protected by such privilege when it is properly used and not abused. 1 Jaggard, 539. Absolute privilege is generally confined to judicial and legislative proceedings and official communications of a public nature, where the interest of the public is directly concerned. 1 Jaggard, 526 et seq.

The plaintiff, having declared on the publication of the pamphlet, must show that the defendants were prompted by actual or express malice in making the publication. There is no cause of action alleged against the defendant Kilgo for slander in making his speech before the board, nor is there any alleged against the defendants Duke and Kilgo for libel in publishing the speech in the Morning Post and other newspapers. Testimony as to the latter publication was introduced to show malice in publishing and circulating the pamphlets. A majority of the judges sitting are of the opinion that there is no evidence of malice as to the defendant Duke, and that there is no evidence that the defendant Kilgo participated in the publication of his speech in the newspapers. Upon the question whether there is any evidence that the defendant Kilgo was actuated by malice in publishing the pamphlets, the judges are equally divided in opinion; two of the judges holding that there is evidence in the case—certainly when coupled with what was improperly excluded—which requires that the cause be submitted to the jury, and the other two judges holding that there is no such evidence.

It is not deemed necessary to review the evidence or to discuss the case, so far as the defendant Duke is concerned. No useful precedent would be furnished, as a case resembling this, even in its general features, is not apt to be again presented, and no new or important principle of law is involved. As to the defendant Kilgo, it has not been usual to do more than merely announce the result when there is a divided court, as diverse opinions of the judges in such a case could not possibly have the weight of precedents. There could be no opinion of the court. Governed by the law, as determined upon the facts by a majority of the court in respect to the defendant Duke, and by the course and practice of this court (when its members are equally divided in opinion) in respect to the defendant Kilgo, we must affirm the judgment of the court below, and the action will stand dismissed.

Affirmed.

CLARK, C. J., did not sit.

(140 N. C. 52)

R. T. WILSON & CO. v. LEVI COTTON MILLS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 22, 1905.)

1. CONTRACTS — CONSTRUCTION — QUESTIONS FOR COURT OR JURY.

The construction of a contract, whether committed to writing, contained in correspondence, or merely verbal, is a matter of law, and the meaning of its terms, if precise and explicit, is a question for the court, but if such meaning is doubtful and uncertain, or in case the terms of a verbal contract are disputed, it may be submitted to the jury under proper instructions.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 11, Cent. Dig. Contracts, §§ 767-770.]

2. SALES—TIME OF DELIVERY—EXTENSION BY BUYER.

Where plaintiffs sold cotton to defendant, to be shipped in April, May, or June, at plaintiffs' option, an order subsequently given plaintiffs by defendants to sell if July cotton should reach a certain price operated to extend the time of delivery until the last day of the month of July.

3. SAME—DELIVERY OF GOODS—EXCUSES FOR DEFAULT—REFUSAL TO RECEIVE.

Where a buyer broke its contract by refusing to accept the goods before the expiration of the time of delivery, the sellers were excused from making a tender and delivery of the goods, and were entitled to recover their price if they were ready, willing, and able to deliver, and otherwise to comply with their contract.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 43, Cent. Dig. Sales, §§ 363, 435.]

4. SAME—UNNECESSARY DELIVERY.

A buyer cannot complain of the act of the seller in making an unnecessary delivery, after the buyer's refusal to accept the goods, nor can he obtain any benefit thereby.

5. SAME—ACTIONS FOR PRICE—ISSUES.

In an action for the price of goods, issues submitting to the jury whether defendant refused to perform its part of the contract, and what damage, if any, plaintiff had sustained, were broad enough to permit defendant to present in every phase the defense of plaintiff's failure to deliver within the time fixed by the contract, and it was not reversible error to refuse further issues tendered by defendant.

6. SAME—ACTIONS FOR PRICE—DAMAGES.

In an action for the price of cotton, the loss in weight of the cotton should not be deducted in assessing the damages, where the allowance of such a loss was agreed upon in the correspondence constituting the contract of sale.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; Cooke, Judge.

Action by R. T. Wilson & Co. against Levi Cotton Mills. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Action for the price of cotton. Plaintiffs alleged that in March, 1904, they sold to the defendant 100 bales of cotton at $14.42 per 100 pounds, to be shipped by them and delivered at Rutherfordton, N. C., in April, May, or June, at their option, and to be paid for in lots of 25 bales each on the 10th, 20th, 25th, and 30th of July, of that year. This the defendant admitted. Plaintiffs further alleged that afterwards, by agreement of the parties, the day of shipment was postponed until July 29, 1904, at which time it was shipped to the defendant, who refused to receive the same. Defendant denied the postponement, but admitted its refusal to receive the cotton, and alleged that it was shipped after the time of shipment had expired. The evidence tended to show that after some telegraphic correspondence as to canceling the sale, upon request first made by defendant, the latter wrote the plaintiffs as follows: "Yours of June 15 is at hand and noted. Would it be satisfactory to delay shipment 20 days? Please advise as to this. Do you expect a corner in July or August cotton? If you can sell 50 bales when July reaches $12.50 or over, you may do so. This order is subject to cancellation any time before your placing order. May get you to sell other 50 bales." Plaintiffs replied June 20th that they could probably delay shipment 20 days, and would do so if they could, but they did not care for it to stand in the way of a favorable offer. They also stated that they would sell 50 bales when July contracts reached $12.50 or more. On June 25th defendant wired the plaintiffs as follows: "Sell, unless order revoked, first 50 bales July reaches eleven quarter or over." Plaintiffs replied: "We will execute this order if July reaches that point, which we fear is somewhat doubtful, unless we have some bad crop news." There was no other communication between the parties until July 23d, when plaintiffs, through their agent, Mr. Lee, inquired of defendant if it had any further directions to give in regard to the disposition of its cotton, to which the defendant replied that plaintiffs had not complied with their contract, and it did not then need the cotton, which was afterwards shipped and tendered to defendant, who refused to receive it. The issues submitted to the jury, with the answers thereto, were as follows: "(1) Did the defendant refuse to perform its part of the contract? Ans. Yes. (2) What damage, if any, has the plaintiff sustained? Ans. $1,710, and interest from July 23, 1904." The jury were instructed that, as the contract was in writing, it is the duty of the court to construe it, and that, if they believe the evidence, their answer to the first issue should be 'Yes.' Upon the second issue the court charged that the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price, $14.42, and the market price of the cotton at the place of delivery fixed by the contract, which witnesses testified was 11 cents, and that if they believed the evidence their answer to the second issue should be $1,710 and interest from June 23, 1904, the day on which defendant refused to receive the cotton. There was a judgment for the plaintiffs, and defendant appealed.

Stewart & McRae, for appellant. Pharr & Bell, for appellees.

WALKER, J. (after stating the case). There can be no doubt but that the construction of a contract is a matter of law. If committed to writing, the meaning of the terms, when they are precise and explicit, is a question for the court; but, if doubtful and uncertain, they may be submitted to the jury, with proper instructions, given hypothetically, as the case may require, to ascertain the meaning and intent of the parties. The law is the same as to verbal contracts. If the terms are explicit, the court determines their effect simply by declaring their legal meaning. If the parties dispute about the terms of the agreement, an issue of fact is raised as to the terms, to be decided by the jury, who should be guided by instructions from the court. Massey v. Belisle, 24 N. C. 170; Sizemore v. Morrow, 28 N. C. 54; Festerman v. Parker, 32 N. C. 474; Harris v. Mott, 97 N. C. 108, 1 S. E. 547. Gaston, J., says, in Young v. Jeffreys, 20 N. C. 216 (reprint, 357): "Where a contract is wholly in writing, and the intention of the framers is by law to be collected from the document itself, then the entire construction of the contract—that is, the ascertainment of the intention of the parties, as well as the effect of that intention—is a pure question of law, and the whole office of the jury is to pass on the existence of the alleged written agreement. Where the contract is by parol, the terms of the agreement are, of course, a matter of fact, and if those terms be obscure or equivocal, or are susceptible of explanation from extrinsic evidence, it is for the jury to find also the meaning of the terms employed; but the effect of a parol agreement, when its terms are given and their meaning fixed, is as much a question of law as the construction of a written instrument." This language summarizes the whole doctrine and is quoted with approval in the more recent case of Spragins v. White, 108 N. C. 449, 13 S. E. 171, where the question is fully discussed. The principle applies, of course, to agreements evidenced by written correspondence. Simpson v. Pegram, 112 N. C. 541, 17 S. E. 430; Lindsay v. Ins. Co., 115 N. C. 212, 20 S. E. 370. As the contract in this case was in writing, and as its terms, we think, are explicit and the meaning of the parties unmistakable, it becomes our duty to construe it and declare its legal effect.

Plaintiffs sold the cotton to defendant in March, 1904, subject to the stipulation expressed in the contract that they might at their option deliver in the following April,

May, or June. Defendant on the 18th day of June asked for an extension of the time fixed for delivery to July 8th. The request was not granted absolutely; but, if it had been, we do not think it would change the legal aspect of the case, or cause us to come to a different conclusion, because, before the time for delivery had fully expired—that is, on June 25th—defendant ordered plaintiffs to sell the cotton when the price for July reached 11¼ cents or more. This was a plain direction to hold the cotton for sale in July at not less than the price stated, as it could not be determined whether the price of cotton would reach that figure until the full month had expired, or until the last day of the month, as the market price is subject to fluctuation, and sometimes, as we know, to sudden and decided changes, and the event on which plaintiffs were authorized to sell might have happened on that very day. The correspondence shows, therefore, by strong and irresistible implication, that plaintiffs were to hold the cotton during the month of July or until the price specified could be obtained. We have no doubt that this is the true meaning of the contract as evidenced by the several writings. The order of defendant could not well have been executed under any other construction.

Defendant does not deny that it has failed to comply with the contract, if this is its proper meaning. Counsel in their brief frankly state that the sole question is whether the cotton was delivered within the time fixed by the contract; their contention being that the time of delivery was never changed by the defendant's letter of June 18th and the telegram of June 25th and the answers of plaintiffs thereto. They argue that the order to sell was not tantamount to an order to delay the shipment of the cotton, and that it could not be so unless the order to sell was for an indefinite time, and that plaintiffs did not so construe the order, as they did actually ship on July 29th. The position is not tenable. The order to sell was confined by its very terms to the month of July, the sale to be made when the price reached 11¼ cents. No inference adverse to the plaintiffs can be drawn from the fact that they shipped the cotton on the 29th, as defendant on the 22d had refused to take the cotton. This was a breach of its contract, and plaintiffs were not required to make any delivery—the refusal dispensing in law with any tender, and plaintiffs then being entitled to recover, if they were ready, willing, and able to deliver, and otherwise to comply with the contract on their part; and as to this there was no dispute. Grandy v. Small, 48 N. C. 10; Blalock v. Clark, 133 N. C. 306, 45 S. E. 642; Hughes v. Knott, 138 N. C. 105, 50 S. E. 586. If plaintiffs did more than the law required of them, the defendant has no reason to complain on that account and cannot benefit by it.

The issues submitted were broad enough for the defendant to present its defense in every possible phase. We have recently said: "It is not material in what form issues are submitted to the jury, provided they are germane to the subject of the controversy and each party has a fair opportunity to present his version of the facts and his view of the law, so that the case, as to all parties, can be tried on the merits." Deaver v. Deaver, 137 N. C. 240, 49 S. E. 113; Warehouse Co. v. Ozment, 132 N. C. 839, 44 S. E. 681. The issues submitted were sufficiently comprehensive within the rule stated, and the court properly rejected those tendered by the defendant. At least, there was no reversible error in doing so.

The loss in weight of the cotton should not have been deducted in assessing the damages, as it appears from defendant's letter of March 23, 1904, that a loss "not to exceed 3 pounds per bale from the invoice weights" was to be allowed.

We have carefully considered the case and weighed the arguments, so well presented in the briefs of counsel, and have not been able to discover any error in the rulings of the court.

No error.

(140 N. C. 100)

CALDWELL v. LIFE INS. CO. OF VIRGINIA.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 22, 1905.)

1. INSURANCE — FALSE REPRESENTATIONS — RECOVERY OF PREMIUMS PAID.

Where an illiterate woman was induced to take out life insurance by the agent's representations that she could "draw out" her claim at the end of ten years, where in fact the policy as written gave her no such privilege, she could, on discovering that fact, recover the money paid as premiums.

2. SAME—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action to recover an amount paid as insurance premiums on the ground of false representations which induced plaintiff to take out the policy, a charge to the effect that, if plaintiff paid the premiums after having ascertained that the policy was not what she contracted for, she could not raise the question of fraud unless she paid the premiums under protest, was not erroneous, as not based on the evidence, where there was evidence that when plaintiff first learned that there was something wrong with her policy she endeavored without success to have the matter adjusted, and went from one agent to another in her efforts to obtain satisfaction until her policy was finally canceled.

3. SAME—DAMAGES.

The measure of relief for false representations which induced plaintiff to take out a life insurance policy in the belief that she would be entitled to withdraw her claim at the expiration of 10 years, whereas in fact she was not entitled to anything at that time, is the amount of premiums paid by her, with interest.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; Justice, Judge.

Action by Dinah Caldwell against the Life Insurance Company of Virginia. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The plaintiff alleges that sometime during the year 1895 she was induced by the representation made to her by defendant's agent to take out policies upon her own life and the lives of her children in defendant company; that the agent represented to her, as an inducement to take out said policies, that at the end of 10 years she could withdraw the amount due her; that after paying the premium on said policies for a number of years she learned that she was not entitled to withdraw her money at the end of 10 years as represented. She charges that the representations upon the faith of which she took out the policies were false and fraudulent, and that she was deceived by them. She demands the return of the money paid by her, etc. Defendant company denies the material allegations of the complaint, and avers that, if she was misled by any statements made by the agent at the time the policies were issued, she soon thereafter had full knowledge thereof, and continued to pay the premiums, whereby she waived any right which she may have had, and ratified the contract as it was made and set out in the policies; that she failed to pay the premiums in accordance with the terms of the policies and forfeited the amount paid. The case was submitted to the jury upon a single issue. From a judgment following a verdict for the plaintiff, defendant appealed.

W. B. Rodman, for appellant. Plummer Stewart and C. D. Bennett, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the case). The testimony on the part of the plaintiff tends to show that she is an illiterate colored woman having ten (10) children; that some time during the year 1895, while she was engaged as a cook at the Buford Hotel, in Charlotte, the superintendent of the defendant company sent for her to come to his office; that upon going to the office he asked her if she had any objection to being "written up," to which she replied that she knew nothing about it—did not know what insurance meant. He said that he would tell her, to which she replied that, if he did, she would know nothing about it then, to which he replied, "You will have a nice hearse, nice carriage, and a nice funeral." She said, "I can't feel the ride in the hearse, and I can't see the funeral procession." He said, "You will have a heap of money," to which she responded: "I don't want the money, if I am dead. I have got to go to work at 3 o'clock in the morning, and am not going to take my money to pay insurance." He said: "I will tell you what you can do. You can come in for 10 years, and after 10 years you can go out." She said: "I don't know anything about this. I have been living with white people ever since I was born. I don't know anything about it, and I don't want to fool with it." He said: "Aunty, you can go in for 10 years." He said "that after 10 years I could draw out the claim, and if anything happened to me the claim would be paid"; that upon the faith of these representations she took the policies, paying for some years the weekly installment or premiums thereon; that some time thereafter a lady with whom she was employed read the policies, and in consequence of what she said to plaintiff she saw Col. Jones, a lawyer in Charlotte; that she afterwards went to the agents of the company and complained that the policies were not as represented; that some of the policies were taken up, and others given her in their stead; that after much going and coming she refused to pay any further premiums. She told the agent that her time was up, and he told her that if she got anything she would have to get it by law. We have not set out all of the testimony of the plaintiff. That portion which we have set forth, and there was nothing in her testimony contradictory thereof, shows the gist of the transaction. Defendant demurred to the evidence and moved the court to dismiss the action. We concur with his honor in his refusal to grant the motion. There was ample evidence that the plaintiff was led to believe that she could "draw out" at the end of 10 years. She had in her own, but unmistakable, way refused to be beguiled by the attraction held out to her regarding a fine funeral and a "heap of money" at her death. It was only when the agent held out the inducement that she could "draw out," which she understood, and he must have intended that she should understand, to mean getting the amount due her, at the end of 10 years, that she consented to take the policies, or, as the agent expressed it, "be written up." In what way, other than receiving the amount due her at the end of 10 years, was she to "draw out" her claim at the end of that period? It is hardly probable that it was in the mind of the agent to gain her confidence and secure her application by assuring her that, if at the end of 10 years she grew weary of paying the weekly installments, she should have the privilege of drawing out empty-handed, leaving the whole amount paid in the vaults of the company. She does not appear to be a person who would consent to be "written up" on such terms. If her testimony is true, she was induced to insure upon the representation made to her, as an inducement, that in her old age she should reap the fruits of her industry and economy during the 10 years. Her testimony in this respect is uncontradicted. The superintendent, with whom she had the conversation, was not introduced.

His honor carefully and correctly explained to the jury the law governing the case, placing upon her the burden of proof in the strongest language which this court has approved in cases where mutual mistake was alleged. He said: "The burden is upon the plaintiff to show by clear, strong, and convincing proof that this transaction was fraudulent, and that she was making these payments under representations made by the defendant that were not true. The burden, I say, is on the plaintiff to satisfy you that this was a fraudulent transaction." He instructed the jury, at considerable length, what constituted fraud in a transaction of this character, at all times putting upon the plaintiff the burden of proof. We find no error in this respect. He further charged them: "If you find that there was fraud in the transaction, and that afterwards the plaintiff ascertained that the policies were not what she contracted for with the agents, and that after this she went on and paid the premiums, and kept her life and the lives of the others insured, and took the benefit, then she could not raise this question of fraud, although there may have been fraud in the beginning, unless you further find that the defendant's collecting agent and local superintendent lulled her into security and led her to believe that she would get the face of the policies at the end of 10 years, or unless she paid the premiums under protest." To the last clause of this instruction the defendant excepted, for that there was no evidence that she paid under protest. Without undertaking to set forth the testimony, it is sufficient to say that we have given it a careful examination and find that when she first learned that there was something wrong with her policies she endeavored to get them straight, without success. She says that she would go to one agent, and he would send her to another, and this course was continued until they finally canceled the policies. She narrates her trials in her own simple and natural way, showing that she was bewildered in the intricate mazes and confusing obscurities of life insurance policies. In this respect she is not singular. In the only way open to her she was constantly protesting that something was wrong about her insurance. She does not appear to have received much light from the source to which she went and was entitled to go.

There was ample evidence to sustain his honor's charge and the verdict of the jury. She proved an excellent character. Her testimony, both in manner and matter, was well calculated to carry conviction to the minds of the jurors. The plaintiff is evidently one of the few remnants of a type of her race illustrating its highest virtues. In the simple duties of life incident to her station, she exhibits a store of saving common sense. When sought out and invited by an insurance agent to visit his office to discuss the most intricate, promising, and sometimes disappointing mode of investing surplus earnings, she tells the agent that she knows nothing of it, and will know nothing when he has illuminated the subject. It is not strange that she gets into trouble. She could not read the policies, and it is no serious reflection upon her intelligence to surmise that, if she could have done so, she would not have been very much wiser. She did resist the blandishment to which those of her race usually succumb—"a nice funeral"; nor did she surrender to the persuasive assurance, for which many accredited with more wisdom spend a life of slavery, "a heap of money" at her death. There is a vast deal of sound philosophy and sense in the answers made by her to the agent. When, however, the appeal is made to that fear which so constantly throws its dark shadow over human life, poverty in old age, and the assurance is given, as found by the jury, that at the end of 10 years she could draw out her claim, she consents to "be written up." His honor correctly announced the law which gives relief. The jury upon ample evidence have found the facts as testified by the plaintiff. It is admitted that the policies do not entitle her to receive the amount paid in, or any other amount, at the end of 10 years; that, on the contrary, she forfeits all that she has paid. Upon the verdict the law declares that, as she cannot have what was promised to her, she must have her money back, with interest. If the defendant has been compelled to carry the risk during the life of the policies without compensation, it must look to its accredited agent, whom the jury find made the false representation. This court has uniformly held that in such cases the measure of relief is the amount paid, with interest. Braswell v. Insurance Co., 75 N. C. 8; Lovick v. Insurance Co., 110 N. C. 93, 14 S. C. 506; Makely v. Legion of Honor, 133 N. C. 307, 45 S. E. 649.

The judgment must be affirmed.

(129 N. C. 526)

JONES et al. v. BALLOU et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1905.)

1. LOST INSTRUMENTS—DEEDS—ACTION TO ESTABLISH.

Though an action to establish a lost deed is only ancillary to some other relief, Clark's Code, § 233, subd. 3, providing that a complaint must contain a demand for such relief as complainant deems himself entitled to, having been construed to authorize any relief to which complainant is entitled under the facts and not inconsistent with the complaint, and Pub. Laws 1893, p. 37, c. 6, giving the right to bring an action to prevent a cloud on title, the superior court has jurisdiction of an action to establish a lost deed; the remedy before the clerk, under Clark's Code, § 56, not being exclusive.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 33, Cent. Dig. Lost Instruments, § 12.]

2. APPEAL—PRESUMPTION—ABANDONMENT OF EXCEPTIONS.

Exceptions not relied on in an appellant's brief are presumably abandoned.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, § 4256.]

3. LOST INSTRUMENTS — ESTABLISHMENT — DEEDS—EVIDENCE.

In a suit to establish a lost deed, there was no error in rejecting testimony as to the statement of a certain person that he owned no interest in the property; plaintiff not having claimed under such person, and he not being a party to the action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ashe County; W. R. Allen, Judge.

Action by T. J. Jones and another against J. R. Ballou and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

F. A. Linney and T. C. Bowie, for appellants. R. A. Doughton, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. This is an action to establish a lost deed, the record of which is also alleged to have been destroyed. The defendants moved to dismiss upon the ground that the action should have been brought before the clerk under section 56 of the Code. This motion was properly refused. That section is an enabling act, giving an additional, but not an exclusive, remedy. Jurisdiction in the superior court was held in McCormick v. Jernigan, 110 N. C. 406, 14 S. E. 971, and was tacitly recognized in Tuttle v. Rainey, 98 N. C. 513, 4 S. E. 475. See, also, 19 A. & E. Enc. 550, with authorities. In Cowles v. Hardin, 91 N. C. 231, Mobley v. Watts, 98 N. C. 284, 8 S. E. 677, and Hopper v. Justice, 111 N. C. 420, 16 S. E. 626, it was held that a party whose deed with its registration had been destroyed, instead of having it set up and recorded, could depend upon the rules of the common law to establish its contents whenever an occasion might arise, as in the course of a trial. Cowles v. Hardin, 79 N. C. 577, relied on by the defendants, simply holds that when the proceeding is brought by virtue of Code, § 56, the requirements of that section must be complied with. It is true that originally there was no relief at common law or in equity to decree the re-execution of a deed, except as an ancillary remedy to some other relief as ejectment or to enjoin a recovery and the like (Adams, Eq. § 167; McCormick v. Jernigan, supra); but chapter 6, p. 37, Pub. Laws 1893, gives the right to bring an action to prevent a cloud upon title, and this additional relief the plaintiffs are entitled to besides the decree for setting up and recording the deed, whether such relief is prayed for or not (Clark's Code [3d Ed.] § 233 [3], and cases there cited).

No other of the exceptions taken are relied upon in the appellant's brief, and we presume were abandoned (State v. Register, 133 N. C. 751, 46 S. E. 21) except the sixth, which was to the rejection of the evidence of C. D. Moore of a statement by Calvin Graybeal that he owned no interest in the property. The plaintiffs do not claim under said Calvin, and he is not a party to the action.

No error.

(140 N. C. 28)

In re STEWART.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 22, 1905.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—ALLOWANCE TO WIDOW AND CHILDREN—STATUTES.

Rev. St. § 3061, provides that a year's allowance of $300 shall be made to the widow of a deceased person and $100 in addition thereto for every member of the family beside the widow; and section 3062 defines "family" as every person, to whom the deceased or widow stood in place of a parent, who was residing with the deceased at his death, whose age did not then exceed 15 years. Held that, where the widow refused to assume the control and maintenance of two stepchildren under 15 years of age for a year after the death of her husband, she was only entitled to an allowance of $300; the allowance for the children being payable to their guardian.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stokes County; Cooke, Judge.

Application by Irene E. Stewart for a year's allowance to her as the widow of Frank P. Stewart, deceased. From a judgment of the superior court reducing a justice's allowance of $500 to the widow to $300, and making a further allowance of $200 to two of deceased's minor children, the widow appeals. Affirmed.

Application for year's allowance for Irene E. Stewart, widow of Frank P. Stewart, instituted before a justice of the peace. From the finding of the commissioners there was an appeal to the superior court, and from the ruling of the clerk an appeal was taken to the judge at term. The matter was heard upon an agreed statement of facts, of which the following are material to a decision of the case: Frank P. Stewart died testate on November 1, 1904, leaving an estate of the value of $3,490, all of which he bequeathed to Maud S. Haywood, his eldest child. W. W. Haywood, husband of the legatee, qualified as administrator cum testamento annexo on November 16, 1904, and took possession of the decedent's estate. At that time the widow, Irene Stewart, was ill at the home of her mother in Sampson county. On December 2, 1904, she dissented from the will of her husband, and on December 28th of the same year applied for her year's allowance. At the time of the death of Frank P. Stewart there lived with him two of his children by a former marriage, George B. and Frank P. Stewart, Jr., both under 15 years of age. While the widow was at the home of her mother, these two children were carried by the administrator to his home in Charlotte, where they have since resided and now reside. On March 15, 1905, the administrator wrote to the widow proposing to pay her an allowance of $500, if she would take the children of her deceased husband and keep them for one year, which proposition she declined, and made application to a justice of the peace for the allotment of her year's support. The justice allowed her $500, and upon appeal to the clerk of the superior court this allowance was affirmed. In the hearing before the clerk, W. W. Haywood, who had qualified as guardian of the two Stewart children, was made a party to this proceeding. Upon appeal from the ruling of the clerk to the judge in term, judgment was rendered reducing the widow's allowance to $300, and by consent of the administrator and legatee an allowance of $200 was made to the two children.

The widow excepted to this judgment, and appealed.

J. T. Morehead, W. P. Bynum, Jr., and G. S. Ferguson, Jr., for appellant. W. F. Harding, for appellee.

BROWN, J. (after stating the facts). In this proceeding for the allotment of a widow's year's allowance, the appellant contends that she is entitled to receive $300 for herself and $100 for each of the children for her use and benefit. The appellee, administrator of the estate and guardian of the two members of the family of the deceased under the age of 15 years, contends, on the other hand, that, inasmuch as the widow has declined to take the two children and keep them for one year and apply a portion of the money received as her allowance to their support, she is entitled to only $300, and not to an additional $100 for each of the children. We are of opinion that the contention of the appellee is right, both upon reason and authority. Statutes providing for the allotment of a portion of the property of a deceased person for the support of the widow and family for one year have been in force in this state since 1796 (chapter 469). The Legislature of that year recognized the hardship of the laws then existing whereby it was in the power of the administrator to expose to sale the whole crop and provisions of the deceased, and thereby deprive the widow of the means of subsistence for herself and family; and it was to prevent this hardship that they provided for the allotment to the widow of such part of the crop, stock, and provisions as may be "necessary and adequate for the support of the widow and family for the space of one year." Under this act the amount of the allotment was determined by the number dependent upon it for support. The purpose of the act was to provide support for the widow and to enable her to keep her family about her until provision could be made for their final disposition. Subsequent acts relating to this subject have not changed the original purpose of the Legislature in passing the act of 1796, but have merely made more definite the measure of the allotment, defined the word "family" as used in the act, and provided that in case there is no widow, or she dies before her allowance is allotted, there shall still be an allotment for the benefit of the members of the family surviving under the age of 15 years. This latter provision of our present statute (Rev. St. § 3063) apparently meets the objection to the former statute sustained in Kimball v. Deming, 27 N. C. 418, and subsequent cases, wherein it was held that the allowance was personal to the widow, and could not be set apart for the members of the family if there was no widow, or if she died before the allotment. The latest expression of the Legislature on this subject is contained in Rev. St. §§ 3060-3063, and it is upon the construction of this statute that the case before us depends.

Section 3061 (similar to section 2118 of the Code) provides for an allowance of $300 to the widow and "one hundred dollars in addition thereto for every member of the family besides the widow." Section 3062 (Code, § 2119) defines the "family" as "every person to whom the deceased or widow stood in place of a parent, who were residing with the deceased at his death and whose age did not then exceed 15 years." "The object of this last clause," says the present Chief Justice in Hollomon v. Hollomon, 125 N. C. 29, 34 S. E. 99, "was to exclude from the bounty children who might come in after such death to make themselves 'members of the family,' and evidently was not meant to embrace those who, as in the present instance, cease as a consequence of the death to be members of the family and chargeable as such to the widow; for Code, § 2116, says that the year's provision is 'for the support of herself and family.' The $300 is for her support. The additional $100 for each child under 15 years of age is not for her benefit, but to enable her to provide for such children, if any there be, who are members of the family. It would be 'sticking in the bark,' indeed, to take $200, which must come out of the property placed in the hands of the guardian for the support of these very children, and give it to the step-mother, who by the will is deprived of their custody and relieved of all expense of their support." We can see no distinction between the Hollomon Case and the case before us. The practical effect of the decision in that case is that membership in the family, which ceases upon the death of the father, cannot be made the basis for determining the amount of the widow's year's allowance, and the $100 designated by the statute as the amount allowed for each member of the family under 15 years of age must be used for their support. The refusal of the widow to accept the children, in the present case, as members of her family and contribute to their support, operates as a bar to her right to the allowance of an additional $100 for each of them just as effectually as if she had been deprived of their care by will. To permit her to use this money and refuse to contribute to the children's support would be a perversion of both the letter and spirit of the statute.

Affirmed.

(104 Va. 512)

PENCE v. LIFE.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 23, 1905.)

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF—ORAL CONTRACT FOR SALE OF LAND—PART PERFORMANCE.

A purchaser, after entering into possession of land under the contract of purchase and the payment of a part of the purchase price, entered into an oral agreement modifying the contract. He continued in possession. Held not a part performance sufficient to take the parol contract out of the operation of the statute of frauds.

2. WILLS—ELECTION—PROVISIONS FOR WIFE.

Code 1887, § 2271 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1182], authorizing a widow to elect to waive a provision for her in her deceased husband's will and demand her dower, only provides how a widow must proceed who desires to reject the provision made for her by her husband's will out of property other than her own; and, where a husband disposes of his wife's property and makes a provision for her by his will, she has the same right of election as any other person.

3. SAME—ELECTION BY WIDOW.

A husband disposed, by his will, of land belonging to his wife and also made provision for her. After his death and before the probate of his will she conveyed the property to a purchaser with covenants of general warranty. Held, that the wife elected to claim the land as her own by title paramount to the will, and her purchaser acquired a good title.

4. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—CONTRACT TO PURCHASE REALTY—DECREE.

A decree of specific performance of a contract for the sale of land should comply with the terms of the contract, and the purchaser should not be required to purchase without being given the privilege of executing a deed of trust to secure the price unpaid, as authorized by the contract.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Augusta County.

Suit by Josephine F. Life against James M. Pence. From a decree for complainant, defendant appeals. Modified.

Defendant, sued for the specific performance of a contract to purchase real estate, admitted the execution of the contract sued on, but alleged that it was superseded by a subsequent oral contract. Under the written contract possession was to be given defendant on March 15, 1902. He took possession on or before that date, and also paid a part of the purchase price. This was prior to the alleged parol agreement, and the purchaser continued in the possession.

J. M. Perry and H. H. Blease, for appellant. W. H. Landes and A. C. Braxton, for appellee.

BUCHANAN, J. This was a suit for the specific execution of an agreement for the sale and purchase of land.

Two grounds of defense were relied on by the grantee—one, that after entering into the contract sued on its terms had been changed by a subsequent parol agreement, under which he had gone into possession; the other, that the title to the "Ross parcel," nearly one-fourth of the tract purchased, was defective.

1. The alleged subsequent parol agreement was not proved as stated in the grantee's answer, and, if it had been, the acts of part performance proved were not sufficient to take it out of the operation of the statute of frauds.

As to the alleged defect in title to the "Ross land":

2. One of the parties through whom the vendor claimed to derive title to that parcel of land was Lettie Freeman. William Ross, who died in 1812, devised that land (115 acres) to his daughter, Lettie, who afterwards intermarried with Richard Freeman. He died February 6, 1870, leaving a will by which he gave to his wife, Lettie, certain personal property and a life estate in a farm designated as his "home place," which included the "Ross parcel" owned by his wife. Subject to the life estate given his widow, he devised that portion of the "home place" which embraced the "Ross parcel" to his granddaughter, Signora C. Swisher, and the residue to his daughter, Margaret M. Life. On the 16th day of that month his widow conveyed the "Ross parcel" in fee simple, with covenants of general warranty, to Margaret M. Life and her husband, Samuel Life. On the 28th of the same month, Richard Freeman's will was admitted to probate. On the 17th of the following May his widow departed this life without having renounced her husband's will in the manner prescribed by section 2271 of the Code of 1887 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1182]. On January 1, 1873, Margaret M. Life and her husband conveyed the land which was devised her by her father, and the "Ross parcel," to James K. McComb, and on the next day McComb conveyed both parcels to Samuel Life. The latter, by his will probated August 24, 1894, devised all his lands, including the "Ross parcel," to Josephine F. Life, his second wife, the vendor and appellee.

The contention of the appellant (the vendee) is that the title of the appellee is defective, in this: that Lettie Freeman, the widow of Richard Freeman, having failed to renounce the provisions of her husband's will in the manner provided by section 2271 of the Code, is presumed to have elected to take under the will, and consequently only had a life estate in the "Ross parcel," and at her death it passed in fee to Signora C. Swisher, to whom Richard Freeman had devised it.

The provisions of that statute have no application, as we understand them, to a case like that we are now considering. They were intended to provide how a widow must proceed who desires to reject the provisions made for her by her husband's will out of property other than her own, and to take such interest in his lands as the law gives her. Where a testator disposes of property belonging to his wife in her own right, and also makes provision for her by his will, she has the same right of election as to such property as any other person, and whether or not she has elected to take under or against the will is to be determined as in other cases. Penn. v. Guggenheimer, 76 Va. 889, 849, 850; Kinnaird v. Williams, 8 Leigh, 400, 31 Am. Dec. 658; Taylor v. Browne, 2 Leigh, 419.

In Penn. v. Guggenheimer, supra, the testator had disposed of certain property owned by his wife and also made provision for her by his will. It was held that the wife was put to her election, and that she could not choose both her own estate and the bequests and devises made in her favor. It was further held that her election need not be express, but might be implied, as in other cases of election, from her conduct, acts, omissions, and mode of dealing with the property.

In Taylor v. Browne, supra, the question was whether the wife's election could be made in any other way than by a renunciation of the will in the manner prescribed by statute. This court held that the act of assembly had no relation to a case of election to take by title paramount to the will or under the provisions of the will.

In Kinnaird v. Williams, supra, the testator, after giving several small legacies, devised all his real estate and slaves to his wife for life, and an interest in the proceeds of his other personal property after the payment of his debts. He devised the remainder interest in the lands to and for the benefit of other persons. Within a year after the testator's death, his widow instituted a suit against the other persons interested in the real estate under the dispositions thereof made in the will, claiming the whole of the lands as her own, by title paramount to the will, and recovered the same. After her death her sole devisee, who was her personal representative, instituted suit against the executor of her husband, claiming that she had, by recovering the real estate devised by her husband, renounced his will, and that she was entitled to the same interest in his personal estate as if he had died intestate. The trial court held that by recovering the land in fee, and thereby defeating the intentions of the testator, his widow was precluded from claiming as legatee, and that her failure to renounce the provisions of the will in her favor, in the manner and within the time prescribed by statute, precluded her from claiming as distributee of the personal estate, if such renunciation would, after the election she made, have conferred such right, and that consequently her devisee and personal representative was not entitled to recover upon either ground. Upon appeal that decree was affirmed by this court.

These cases and the authorities cited in them show, not only that the widow has the same right of election as other persons, where her husband disposes of her property and also makes provision for her by his will, but they also show that such election may be made expressly or impliedly. In the last-cited case it was held that claiming the land devised by title paramount to the will, suing for and recovering it from the parties interested under the will, was not only an election to take against the will, but was an actual taking in contravention of the will.

There can be no question of the election of the widow of Richard Freeman to claim the "Ross parcel" of land as her own by title paramount to the will. Her action in conveying it in fee simple with covenants of general warranty can be explained in no other way. Being the owner of the Ross parcel by title paramount to the will, and having elected to take against the will, she had the right to sell and convey it to any one who desired to purchase, whether that person was a devisee or legatee under her husband's will, or a stranger to it. This being so, it clearly appears that the alleged defect in the appellee's title is groundless, and that she is entitled to have the agreement sued on specifically enforced.

The trial court properly so decided, but its decree does not conform as clearly as it ought to the terms of the agreement of sale. No good reason existed why the appellant should be required to carry out the terms of the contract on his part and yet be denied the right to execute a deed of trust to secure the payment of the purchase money bonds not yet due, as he had the right to do under the agreement. See Watts v. Kinney, 3 Leigh, 293, 23 Am. Dec. 266.

In so far, therefore, as the decree appealed from varies the terms of the agreement of sale beyond what was rendered necessary by the fact that further installments of purchase money had become due and payable, it is erroneous, and to that extent should be corrected; but, as another installment of purchase money has become due since that decree was entered, this court will not modify it, but will affirm it in all other respects, and remand the cause to the circuit court, for further proceedings to be had, not in conflict with the views expressed in this opinion, awarding costs to the appellee as the party substantially prevailing.

(104 Va. 615)

LANE BROS. & CO. v. BOTT.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 23, 1905.)

1. APPEAL—IMPROPER ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

The general rule that the improper admission of evidence which may have been prejudicial, though it is doubtful whether it was or not, constitutes reversible error, is subject to the exception that if in such case there is a demurrer to evidence, and an alternative verdict, the admission of illegal evidence will not reverse, where, under the rules governing demurrers to evidence, the remaining evidence suffices to sustain a judgment for the demurree.

2. TRIAL—DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE—EFFECT.

Where, in an action for personal injuries, the evidence as to plaintiff's alleged contributory negligence is conflicting, and defendant, by demurring to the evidence, withdraws that question from the consideration of the jury, the court must find plaintiff not guilty of contributory negligence, if the jury might have so found.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURIES TO SERVANT—EXPLOSION OF BLAST IN ROCK QUARRY—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Where plaintiff, a quarry employé, during whose absence a hole for blasting was loaded, and who on his return was told by the superintendent, in response to his direct inquiry, that it was unloaded, was injured by an explosion while attempting to drill out the hole, in compliance with the superintendent's orders, he was not guilty of contributory negligence, as he had a right to rely on the superintendent's assurance, without employing precautions which ordinary prudence might otherwise have suggested.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 34, Cent. Dig. Master and Servant, §§ 675-677.]

4. DAMAGES—PERSONAL INJURIES—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

Where plaintiff, a quarry employé, had his left hand broken and otherwise injured, his face cut and burned with powder, and a section of his teeth knocked loose, his wage-earning capacity being reduced from $1.25 to $1 per day, a verdict of $1,205 was not excessive; there being no pretense that the jury was actuated by prejudice or partiality.

Error to Circuit Court, Shenandoah County.

Action by W. J. Bott against Lane Bros. & Co. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

Duke & Duke and Cabell & Cabell, for plaintiff in error. O'Flaherty & Fulton and Robert F. Leedy, for defendant in error.

WHITTLE, J. This is a personal injury case, in which judgment was rendered on behalf of the defendant in error (the plaintiff in the trial court) upon a demurrer to the evidence. It is a companion case to that of Lane Bros. & Co. v. Bauserman, 103 Va. 146, 48 S. E. 857, and, as both cases had their origin in a common accident, reference may be had to the opinion in the latter for a concise statement of the facts in the former case.

The Bauserman Case was submitted to a jury, and from an adverse verdict and judgment Lane Bros. & Co. obtained a writ of error to this court. The case was affirmed in all respects, except that the refusal of the lower court to permit certain questions to be answered was held to be reversible error. Hence it may be remarked that most of the assignments of error relied on here have been resolved adversely to the pretensions of the plaintiffs in error in the Bauserman Case.

The open questions in this case involve, for the most part, the action of the trial court with respect to the admission of certain alleged illegal testimony.

The general rule on the subject is that the improper admission of evidence, which may have been prejudicial, constitutes reversible error; and this is true, even though it be doubtful whether in fact such evidence was or was not prejudicial. Insurance Co. v.

Trear, 29 Grat. 255; Payne's Case (Va. Rep. Anno.) 31 Grat. 855, and note; N. & W. Ry. Co. v. Briggs, 103 Va. 105, 48 S. E. 521.

But the general rule is subject to the exception that "if in such case there is a demurrer to evidence, and an alternative verdict, and after disregarding upon such demurrer such illegal evidence, and treating the balance of the evidence as is proper under the rules applicable to demurrers to evidence, there is plainly enough evidence to sustain a judgment for the demurree, the admission of the illegal evidence will not reverse; otherwise, it will." Taylor v. B. & O. R. Co. (W. Va.) 10 S. E. 29.

From the standpoint of a demurrer to the evidence, applying the foregoing exception to the case in hand, the admissible relevant evidence is ample to sustain the judgment under review. In that aspect, the case presented is briefly as follows: The defendant in error, who was a laborer in the rock quarry of the plaintiffs in error, was absent from the quarry when the hole in question was loaded, and on his return several days afterwards was ordered by the acting superintendent to drill out the hole, when, in response to the direct inquiry, he was informed that it was not loaded. In obedience to orders, and relying upon the assurance of the vice principal, he and his unfortunate companions, operating a heavy, 12-foot steel churn drill, drove down upon a charge of powder, capped with an electric exploder, whereupon the explosion which resulted inflicted the injuries complained of.

The plaintiffs in error seek to escape liability on the ground that the defendant in error was guilty of contributory negligence. The evidence on that point was conflicting. The burden of establishing it rested upon the plaintiffs in error, who saw fit by demurrer to the evidence to withdraw that question from the consideration of the jury. The rule in such case is that, if the jury might have found the demurree not guilty of contributory negligence, the court must so find. But it is not necessary to invoke that principle in order to sustain the judgment of the trial court in this instance. The superintendent had lulled the defendant in error into a delusive sense of security by the false statement that the hole was unloaded, and he had a right to rely upon that assurance without employing precautions which ordinary prudence might otherwise have suggested.

Under these circumstances it is obvious that, upon a demurrer to the evidence, no other judgment could have been properly rendered in the case.

The remaining assignment of error, that the damages assessed by the jury ($1,205) are excessive and unreasonable, is without merit. There is no pretense that the jury were actuated by prejudice or partiality in arriving at their verdict, and the serious character of the injuries sustained by the defendant in error fully justified their finding. His left hand was broken and otherwise injured, his face cut and burned with powder, and a section of his teeth "knocked loose." Besides, it appears that his wage-earning capacity has been reduced from $1.25 to $1 per day.

Upon the whole case, the judgment is plainly right, and must be affirmed.

(58 W. Va. 317)

CAMPBELL et al. v. DOOLITTLE, Judge, et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Nov. 14, 1905.)

1. JUDGE—POWER IN VACATION—PROHIBITION—ISSUE OF WRIT.

The last clause of section 1 of chapter 110 of the Code of 1899, authorizing the issuance by a judge of the Supreme Court of Appeals, in the vacation of said court, of a rule to show cause why the writ of prohibition shall not issue, is not unconstitutional.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 29, Cent. Dig. Judges, § 129.]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—REMOVAL OF OFFICERS—MINISTERIAL ACT.

The action of the council of a city or town in removing from office officers who are by law removable by such body at pleasure, without notice and without cause, is not judicial or quasi judicial in character, although involving discretion, but only ministerial or administrative.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 40, Cent. Dig. Prohibition, § 32.]

3. PROHIBITION—WHEN LIES—REMOVAL OF CITY OFFICERS.

In attempting to interfere with such action by prohibition, a circuit court acts without jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 40, Cent. Dig. Prohibition, § 32.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Petition by C. W. Campbell and others for writ of prohibition against E. S. Doolittle, judge, and others. Writ allowed.

Holt & Duncan, Wallace & Fitzpatrick, Geo. I. Neal, and W. K. Cowden, for petitioners. Lace Marcum, Geo. J. McComas, E. E. Williams, and C. E. Hogg, for respondents.

POFFENBARGER, J. Five members of the police force of the city of Huntington obtained from the judge of the circuit court of Cabell county a rule against the council of said city to show cause why a writ of prohibition should not issue against that body to prevent it from removing them from office by the votes of a smaller number of members thereof than is required by the charter in such case. Afterwards C. W. Campbell and five others, all members of said city council, obtained from a judge of this court a rule requiring the judge of said circuit court to appear in this court to show cause against the issuance of a writ of prohibition to restrain him from further proceeding upon the said rule so issued by him.

The full membership of said council is 12, but one had resigned, and a controversy was pending as to whether his successor had been elected. On the occasion of the motion of said policemen from office, another member was absent, and the removal was effected by a vote of 6 to 4. The application for the prohibition against the council was based upon alleged illegality of the action taken; it being claimed that the charter required the votes of 7 members to effect such removal, a majority of the whole number of councilmen required by the charter. As ground for discharging the rule and dismissing the petition, unconstitutionality of the statute authorizing the awarding of such process in the vacation of the court is advanced. The Constitution merely confers upon this court original jurisdiction in cases of prohibition, without indicating the particular mode of its exercise. In doing so, it impliedly conferred upon the court all the powers inherent in and necessary to the exercise of such jurisdiction, and among these is the awarding of process to bring the parties before the court. Citation in every legal proceeding is the first, and an indispensable, step. Power to give it must exist in the court, else the exercise of jurisdiction is impossible.

A law of nature and necessity, as well as of convenience, prevents the court from remaining in continuous session. The Constitution does not contemplate it. But it guarantees protection to life, liberty, and property, and contemplates the exercise, through the courts, for the accomplishment of this great purpose, the chief desideratum of all government, of the functions and powers which by the common law are inherent in the courts of the land, and especially of the extraordinary writs, designed for the maintenance of regularity and due process of law in the proceedings of the inferior courts. For these vital purposes it declares that "the courts of this state shall be open, and every person, for an injury done to him, in his person, property or reputation, shall have a remedy by due course of law; and justice shall be administered without sale, denial or delay." Article 3, § 17. The power to award process, the incipient action in every exercise of jurisdiction, must exist somewhere at all times; else the courts are not open in obedience to this mandate. Long before the adoption of the Constitution, the common law and its principles obtained here, permeating and interwoven with every fiber of our political and social compact. The great guarantees just quoted from the Constitution are themselves part of that law, having been taken from Magna Charta, into which they had been incorporated as the ancient safeguards of liberty, long antedating in origin the Great Charter.

For what common-law powers courts and judges have we look to the methods of procedure of the old English courts. Prohibition, mandamus, and habeas corpus were in constant employment, especially in the great struggles for the maintenance of the supremacy of the common law over the Roman civil and ecclesiastical systems of law, and the constitution of the realm against encroachment of the sovereign. For these as well as other remedies the courts were always open, and a means of redress at hand for every injury, however suddenly it might occur. Process was ordinarily issued by the clerks of the courts, and extraordinary writs by the law courts, when in session, and, when not, resort might be had to the court of chancery for prohibition. 17 Vin. Abr. 547; Iveson v. Harris, 7 Ves. 257; In re Bateman, 9 Eq. Cas. L. R. 660; Saunderson v. Cloggett, 1 P. Wms. 663; Montgomery v. Blair, 2 Sch. & Lefr. 136; In re Foster, 24 Beav. 428; Anon, 1 P. Wms. 476. From an alteration in the number and arrangement of courts, no inference of intent to deprive the jurisdiction by prohibition of its virtue and efficacy arises, and its efficacy exists wherever original and general jurisdiction by that remedy is lodged. Such jurisdiction having been conferred upon this court, it takes necessarily the power to award through its judges in vacation process to bring the cause within the cognizance of the court, so that the remedy may be always available. Upon application of these principles, the Supreme Court of Missouri came to this conclusion in State ex rel v. Rombauer, 104 Mo. 619, 15 S. W. 850, 16 S. W. 502, and we think they fully sustain it.

Prohibition can only go against judicial action, or quasi judicial action. Fleming v. Commissioners, 31 W. Va. 609, 8 S. E. 267; Brazie v. Commissioners, 25 W. Va. 213; Hassinger v. Holt, 47 W. Va. 348, 34 S. E. 723; Hartigan v. Board of Regents, 49 W. Va. 14, 33 S. E. 698. Those policemen were removable at the pleasure of the council, without notice and without cause being shown. Acts 1901, pp. 401, 402, c. 150, §§ 15, 19; Acts 1905, p. 116, c. 8, § 1. No element of judicial power is perceived in this. The function is, in our opinion, purely administrative or ministerial. That the exercise of discretion enters into it does not make it judicial. There is judicial and nonjudicial, or legislative and executive, discretion. County Court v. Boreman, 84 W. Va. 87, 11 S. E. 747; County Court v. Armstrong, Id. 323, 329, 12 S. E. 488; Town of Davis v. Filler, 47 W. Va. 413, 35 S. E. 6; Richards v. Clarksburg, 30 W. Va. 491, 4 S. E. 774. Prohibition will not go against such action, though discretionary. Williamson v. County Court, 56 W. Va. 33, 48 S. E. 835.

As under no circumstances could such action be controlled by prohibition, said circuit court acted without jurisdiction in awarding the rule; and as upon application the judge thereof refused to discharge it, a writ of prohibition must go from this court against him and his co-respondents, the relators in his court, according to the prayer of the petition, with a judgment for costs to the relators here against all the respondents except the said judge.

(58 W. Va. 321)

WOOD v. GORDON, Mayor, et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Nov. 14, 1905.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—COUNCIL—MAJORITY VOTE.

Whenever the words, "the council for the time being shall by a majority vote of all the members elected," or words of like import, shall occur in the charter of a municipal corporation relative to the members of the common council thereof, they shall be construed to mean a majority of the whole number of members to which the common council is entitled under its charter.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 36, Cent. Dig. Municipal Corporations, § 207.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Petition by Warren Wood for writ of mandamus against H. C. Gordon, mayor, and others. Writ denied.

Holt & Duncan, Wallace & Fitzpatrick, Geo. I. Neal, and W. K. Cowden, for petitioner. Lace Marcum, Geo. J. McComas, E. E. Williams, and C. E. Hogg, for respondents.

McWHORTER, J. The common council of the city of Huntington, in the county of Cabell, is composed, under its city charter, of a mayor and 12 councilmen. At a meeting of said common council held at its council chamber in said city on the 19th day of June, 1905, the mayor presiding and 11 of the 12 members of council were present, when George L. Pickering, who was one of the members at the time, tendered his resignation as a member of the council, which resignation was accepted. The council then proceeded to the election of a member to fill the vacancy thus created. When Warren Wood and I. R. Titus, respectively, were placed in nomination, on a vote being taken, 6 of the councilmen voted for Wood and 4 voted for Titus, and the mayor declared Wood elected to fill the vacancy of the unexpired term of George L. Pickering, resigned, and Wood took and subscribed the oath of office as a councilman, and caused a certificate of said oath to be filed with the clerk of said city on the 20th day of June, 1905. On the 3d day of July, 1905, the circuit court of Cabell county awarded an alternative writ of mandamus against the mayor, requiring him to change said ruling made by him at the meeting of June 19th, whereby he had declared Wood elected councilman to fill the said vacancy, and to declare that neither the said Wood nor any other person was elected to fill the said vacancy. At a meeting of said council, held on the 3d day of July, 1905, the mayor changed his ruling in obedience to said alternative writ of mandamus, and declared that said Wood was not elected to fill the said vacancy in said council, and that no one was elected, and that said vacancy still existed; and the clerk of said council, who was present for the purpose of recording the proceedings and minutes of the council, refused under the direction of the mayor to enroll said Wood as a member of the council, and both the clerk and the mayor refused to recognize the said Wood as a member of the council. A motion was then made by a councilman that the minutes of the meeting of June 19, 1905, as read by the clerk, and showing that said Wood was duly declared by the mayor to have been elected a member of the council to fill the said vacancy, be approved, which motion the mayor refused to entertain, and likewise refused an appeal therefrom demanded by members of the council; but, the motion for appeal being put to a vote by a member of the council, the motion was carried by a vote of 6 for and 5 against, and the minutes of the meeting of June 19, 1905, as read by the clerk, were approved. On the 17th day of July, 1905, the alternative writ awarded against the mayor by the circuit court on the 3d of July was made peremptory, and the court declared that Warren Wood was not elected to fill the said vacancy, and that the same still existed. On the 17th day of July, 1905, the council again met in regular session, the mayor presiding, and took up for consideration the filling of the vacancy in the council declared by the circuit court to exist. When the same persons, Wood and Titus, were nominated for the position, a vote was taken, and out of 10 members of council present, 6 voted for Wood and 4 voted for Titus, when the mayor, presiding, declared that neither said Wood nor said Titus was elected, and that said vacancy still existed, from which ruling of the chair an appeal was taken, on which, by a vote of 6 against to 4 for, the decision was not sustained, and the said Wood was by the council declared elected a member of the council to fill the said vacancy, and said Wood again took the oath of office, and presented himself before the mayor and council, and demanded of them recognition as a member of the council; but the mayor refused to recognize said Wood as a member of the council, and the city clerk refused, under the direction of the council or in any way, to recognize him.

Warren Wood filed his petition in this court, praying for an alternative writ of mandamus to be directed to the common council of the city of Huntington, and to the said mayor and the 11 members of the council and the clerk of said city, naming the mayor, councilmen, and clerk, commanding them and each of them to permit said Wood "to participate in all the meetings and deliberations of said common council and to be accorded the privilege of voting upon all questions arising before said common council upon which other members thereof have the right to vote, and to otherwise recognize your petitioner as a member of said common council of said city, or show cause, if any, they or any of them can, why they or any of them should not do so."

The only question involved in this case is the construction of section 14, c. 150, p. 400, of the Acts of 1901, said chapter being the charter of the city of Huntington. Said section is as follows: "Wherever a vacancy shall occur from any cause in the office of mayor, councilman, treasurer, city clerk or city assessor, the council for the time being shall by a majority vote of all the members elected, fill the vacancy until the next general election, at which time a successor shall be elected by the qualified voters of said city."

The rule is well established that in the construction of statutes effect must be given as far as possible to every part thereof. Evidently the Legislature had some object in providing that a vacancy should be filled "by a majority vote of all the members elected." The number of members elected to said council was 12, of which 7 are required for a majority. If a majority of a quorum, or of the number then constituting the council after one or more had died or resigned, had been intended, the Legislature would have so provided by saying that a majority of the council as then constituted, or a majority of a quorum, as might be intended, should fill the vacancy. Pollasky v. Schmid, 128 Mich. 699, 87 N. W. 1030, 55 L. R. A. 614, 92 Am. St. Rep. 560, is a case exactly in point, where the Supreme Court of Michigan holds that "the number of votes necessary to pass an ordinance over a veto, under a statute providing that it shall be two-thirds of all the members elected to the council, must be based on the total number elected, although at the time of the vote one member has died and one resigned." And in Pimental v. San Francisco, 21 Cal. 351, the act provided that no ordinance should be passed, "unless by a majority of all the members elected to each board." The board of assistant aldermen was composed of eight members, and one of the eight had resigned, and four of the seven remaining had voted for the ordinance, and the court held that "the ordinance in question, therefore, not having received the vote of a majority of all the members elected, was never passed. It was in fact rejected, as much so as if every member had cast his vote against its passage. It was, therefore, for all purposes an absolute nullity." See, also, McCracken v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 591; San Francisco v. Hazen, 5 Cal. 169.

It is contended by counsel for petitioner that these cases do not apply in case at bar because they have reference to the passage of ordinances. I fail to see the force of this contention. The Legislature is providing for a vote of the council on a proposition before it, and, when it provides the number of votes to sustain or carry such proposition by the act of the council, it matters not what is intended to be done, the number of votes designated must be given or the motion fails. But it is further contended that there is no West Virginia or Virginia Case to the same effect as the cases cited. The question was never before this court, except in the case of Osburn v. Staley, 5 W. Va. 85, 13 Am. Rep. 640, and that was a case in which the passage of an act was called in question because the Senate, having 22 members when full, but having one vacancy, had but 21 members, and the act had been declared passed by the Senate, by but 11 votes; that being a majority of 21. The act was sustained by the court on the principle that an act of the Legislature must be held to be constitutional if there can be any doubt in its favor, and the court in some manner worked up a doubt, of which it gave the act the benefit, and saved it, while it says: "For these reasons, with all respect, it was the duty of the Senate to have declared the bill not passed." The constitutional convention which assembled in 1872, seeing the dilemma in which the Supreme Court was placed in order to save the act of the Legislature, which had so clearly conflicted with the Constitution, by section 32 of article 6 of the Constitution then adopted by it, provided against any similar action in the future. The writ of mandamus is refused.

(140 N. C. 123)

HUTCHISON v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 28, 1905.)

1. RAILROADS—OPERATION—TRAIN SERVICE—REGULATIONS—REASONABLENESS.

A regulation established by a railway company, providing that certain trains shall not stop at all stations, is reasonable, provided there are enough trains to serve the purposes of local travel.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Carriers, § 1068; vol. 41, Cent. Dig. Railroads, § 715.]

2. CARRIERS — PASSENGERS — CONTRACT OF TRANSPORTATION — DISCHARGING PASSENGER AT DESTINATION.

Where a person having a ticket calling for a regular station as her destination was permitted without objection to take a train which did not stop at that station, and she did not know that the train did not stop there, and there was nothing on the face of the ticket to show that it was not good on that train, it was the duty of the company to stop the train at that station to permit her to alight.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Carriers, § 1068.]

3. SAME — CARRYING BEYOND DESTINATION — PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

A passenger, recklessly and willfully carried, against her protest, beyond her destination, may recover punitive damages, under Code, § 1063, providing that passengers shall be put off at the destination to which they have paid, and that carriers shall be liable to the party aggrieved for any neglect or refusal in the premises.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Carriers, § 1083.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Catawba County; Council, Judge.

Action by Mattie Hutchison against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

S. J. Ervin, for appellant. Self & Whitener and Hufham & Williams, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. The feme plaintiff, a widow, bought a ticket from Hickory, N. C., to Liberty, S. C. The agent at Hickory told her she would make connection with the 1 p. m. train at Charlotte. On arriving at Charlotte, where she had to change cars, her train missed connection, and she took the next train, which left there at 10:20 p. m. This was a train which did not stop at all stations, Liberty being one of those at which, by the defendant's printed schedule, it did not stop; but the plaintiff testified that she was not aware of that fact, and no one so informed her. On the contrary, the conductor on the train, before getting to Charlotte told her she would miss connection, but that this 10:20 p. m. train from Charlotte would take her to Liberty that night; that in the 18 months previous she had twice traveled on that same 10:20 train, and each time had been put off at Liberty; that soon after leaving Charlotte the conductor, on taking up her ticket, exclaimed in a loud, imperative, and commanding tone: "What are you doing in here? You have no business in here. Who told you to get on here?" He kept repeating this, rebuking her, and she was deeply humiliated. She says she asked him to give her back her ticket and put her off at the first station (Gastonia); that, if he had done this, she would have spent the night there, and have gone on in the daytime next morning to Liberty, but, instead of this, he kept the ticket and later came back again, rebuking her in a loud voice, heard distinctly all over the coach, telling her she had no business in there, and saying, "I want to know who told you to get on," adding that she knew the train did not stop at Liberty; that he spoke in a very ill-natured tone and loud voice; that she tried to reason with him, and again asked him to put her off at the first stop; that he came back the third time with the same loud, boisterous charges; that when she did not reply, being very nervous and humiliated, he "looked at her very furiously and said, 'What if he didn't put me off there?'" To this she says she replied finally that she had paid her fare and did not deserve such indignities, and that he would hear from her; that at Gastonia he did not return her ticket, as requested, so she could stop; that he did not stop at Liberty, where her people were on the platform as she passed, having telegraphed her daughter from Charlotte that, having missed connection, she would be on that train, but she was carried past to Seneca, about 25 miles further on, where she was put out at 2:30 at night, and had to sit on the platform alone till 4:30, when she took the train back, reaching Liberty before daylight in a shattered, nervous condition, and walked in the dark up to her son-in-law's house alone, a half mile away, and was so exhausted by the nervous strain and exposure to the night air that she was ill, called in a physician, and was confined to her bed several days. The conductor, in his testimony, denied any discourtesy or rudeness, but says that he was polite and carried her on to Seneca because he suggested to her that she would get to Liberty 6 hours earlier by taking the north-bound train back than if she stopped at a station this side and waited for a south-bound train to Liberty, and that she consented to this.

In this conflict of evidence the jury found upon the issues submitted to them: "(1) Did the defendant wrongfully refuse to stop its train at Liberty and permit the plaintiff to depart therefrom? Yes. (2) Did the defendant maliciously or willfully, wantonly, and rudely mistreat and humiliate the plaintiff while a passenger on its train? Yes." The latter was a pure issue of fact, and the finding of the jury is conclusive; the judge having refused to set the verdict aside. As to the first issue, it is a reasonable regulation of the defendant that certain trains shall not stop at all stations, provided there are enough to serve the purposes of local travel, and it does not appear that there was not. If the plaintiff had been aware that this train did not stop at Liberty, she could not complain if she had been put off at Gastonia, the first stop, with her ticket indorsed with leave to pursue her journey by the next train stopping at Liberty. But she testifies that she had no such information; on the contrary, that she had twice in 18 months previously been on the same train, which stopped and put her off at Liberty. The notice on the printed schedule of the company was not brought home to her, and there was no evidence that she had any actual notice. There was nothing on the face of her ticket to show that it was not good on that train. It was the duty of the defendant to have had an agent at the gate (as is usual) to examine the tickets and allow no one to get upon a train which does not stop at his destination. Not having done this, but having received the plaintiff into this train without objection, with a ticket calling for Liberty, a regular station, as her destination, and she not knowing that this train did not stop there, it was the duty of the defendant to stop the train at that point for her.

On the question of damages his honor correctly instructed the jury that if the conductor maliciously or with wanton recklessness carried her by her station, or if he maliciously or wantonly mistreated and humiliated her, the jury could assess punitive damages. The authorities are plenary that the passenger is entitled to recover punitive damages for insult or mistreatment on the part of any employé of the common carrier. Williams v. Gill, 122 N. C. 970, 29 S. E. 879;

Strother v. Railroad, 123 N. C. 197, 31 S. E. 386; and many other cases. It is equally true that Code, § 1963, provides that passengers shall be put off at the destination to which they have paid, and that the carrier "shall be liable to the party aggrieved in an action for damages for any neglect or refusal in the premises," and that when the refusal to take on or discharge a passenger, where he is entitled to be received or discharged, is reckless and wanton, punitive damages may be recovered. Purcell v. Railroad, 108 N. C. 417, 12 S. E. 954, 956, 12 L. R. A. 113; Hansley v. Railroad, 117 N. C. 570, 23 S. E. 443, 32 L. R. A. 543, 53 Am. St. Rep. 600; Coleman v. Railroad, 138 N. C. 355, 50 S. E. 690. Certainly the plaintiff, an unprotected female, was entitled to recover, if recklessly and willfully carried against her protest 25 miles beyond her station, put out at 2:30 at night at a strange station, where she sits at dead of night two hours alone on the platform, and at last reaches her destination before day, to be met by no one, and has to walk to her daughter's house alone, and with shattered nerves has to take her bed and call in a physician. Holmes v. Railroad, 94 N. C. 323; Knowles v. Railroad, 102 N. C. 66, 9 S. E. 7. The authorities are uniform, here and elsewhere, that, if the passenger is carried by his station, he is entitled to damages, and if it is done recklessly or willfully, as the jury here find, he is entitled to punitive damages. The only decision we can find in the books to the contrary is Smith v. Railroad, 130 N. C. 304, 41 S. E. 481, which holds that, if there is no bodily harm or actual damages, a recovery cannot be had. That decision was by a divided court, and is in conflict with the statute (Code, § 1963) above quoted, and unsupported by precedent, and we take this first opportunity to correct and overrule it. In Thompson on Carriers, 86, it is said: "Carrying a passenger beyond his destination, in disregard of his request to be put off there, will afford a good ground of action; and this, though no bodily harm, mental suffering, insult or oppression, or pecuniary loss be shown"—citing Railroad v. Hurst, 36 Miss. 660, 74 Am. Dec. 785; Porter v. The New England, 17 Mo. 290; Railroad v. Nuzum, 50 Ind. 141, 19 Am. Rep. 703; Railroad v. McArthur, 43 Miss. 180; Railroad v. Whitfield, 44 Miss. 466, 7 Am. Rep. 699; Sunday v. Gordon, 1 Blatchf. & H. 569, Fed. Cas. No. 13,616; Thompson v. Railroad, 50 Miss. 315, 19 Am. Rep. 12. To the same purport, 1 Fetter, Carriers of Pass. § 300, citing Caldwell v. Railroad, 89 Ga. 550, 15 S. E. 678; Dave v. Steamboat Co., 47 La. Ann. 576, 17 South. 128; Strange v. Railroad, 61 Mo. App. 586; and there are many other cases to the same effect.

Upon examination of all the exceptions, and without discussing them seriatim, we find no error.

(140 N. C. 58)

CAVINESS v. FIDELITY & DEPOSIT CO. OF MARYLAND.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 22, 1905.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — DEVASTAVIT — PAYMENT OF FUNDS — REFUNDMENT.

Where an administrator, who was also one of the distributees of the estate, wrongfully paid therefrom money in excess of the amount to which he and his brother were entitled to R. for the purchase of certain stock for the benefit of himself and his brother, and R. had knowledge that the money so paid belonged to the estate, he was liable, in the absence of debts against the estate, to return to the administrator de bonis non only the excess over the amounts to which the administrator and his brother were entitled as distributees.

2. SUBROGATION—LIABILITY OF SURETY.

Judgment having been rendered against the administrator's surety for the amount of the devastavit, such surety was subrogated to the rights of the administrator de bonis non against R.

3. SAME.

Where an administrator wrongfully paid money belonging to the estate to purchase stock from R. for the benefit of the administrator and his brother, and R., with knowledge that the money so paid belonged to the estate, retained the stock as security for the balance of the price, the administrator's surety, on being compelled to make good the devastavit, was entitled to subject the administrator's interest in the stock to the payment of such liability, either by an equitable execution or by supplemental proceedings in the particular case.

Appeal from Superior Court, Randolph County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by J. M. Caviness, as administrator de bonis non of the estate of J. E. Cole, deceased, against the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland. From a judgment directing defendant W. S. Russell to pay into court $1,148.45 to be applied on a judgment in favor of plaintiff against defendant surety company and its principal, J. E. Cole, the surety company appeals. Affirmed.

L. W. Humphrey and Elijah Moffitt, for appellant. H. A. London & Son, for appellee Russell.

CONNOR, J. James E. Cole qualified on November 11, 1902, as administrator of J. E. Cole, deceased, and executed his bond in the penal sum of $18,000 with the defendant company as surety. On March 3, 1904, he was removed, and the plaintiff appointed administrator de bonis non of the estate. This action is prosecuted by the plaintiff against J. E. Cole and the surety company to recover the amount remaining, or which ought to be, in his hands belonging to the estate. The defendant surety company in its answer alleges that $5,000 of the assets of the estate were paid by the administrator to W. S. Russell on account of certain stock purchased by the administrator and his brother, T. A. Cole; that Russell had knowledge that the said sum was a part of the asset and property of the estate. The defendant claimed that it was subrogated to the rights of the plaintiff to call upon Russell to refund so much of said amount as should be necessary to indemnify it from loss on account of the devastavit of the administrator. Russell was made a party defendant, and filed an answer denying the material allegations of the defendant company's answer. From the admissions in the pleading, findings by his honor, and the verdict of the jury upon issues submitted, we gather the following facts: J. A. Cole died intestate leaving five distributees, two of whom were the administrator and his brother, T. A. Cole. Prior to February 5, 1903, the administrator received, on account of the estate, about $9,600. He held a note against one of the distributees for $1,136.92, and owed a note himself of $1,000. Subsequent to February 5, 1903, he received about $400. The total indebtedness of the estate did not exceed $200, the larger portion of which was paid prior to February 5, 1903, leaving in the hands of the administrator on that day about $9,400. On said February 5, 1903, he drew a check upon the assets of the estate in the Bank of Randolph, payable to himself and his brother, T. A. Cole, for $5,000, which was deposited in bank to their credit. On the same day he and his brother purchased from defendant Russell 180 shares of stock in the Enterprise Manufacturing Company, for $20,000, and, on account thereof, gave him a check on their bank account for $5,000; Russell retaining a lien on 166 shares of stock for the balance of the purchase price. Russell had knowledge of the source from which the $5,000 was obtained.

The court below found by an inspection of the accounts of the administrator that the balance due the plaintiff administrator d. b. n. from Cole, former administrator, was $3,699.58, and that the interest of said J. E. Cole and T. A. Cole in the estate was $3,851.55. It appeared that on October 15, 1903, the administrator paid to himself and his brother each $2,000 from the assets of the estate. On said day he paid Mrs. S. F. Caviness, one of the distributees, $2,000—the payment being made by surrender of her note and $862.08 cash. On November 10, 1903, he paid Mrs. Green, another distributee, $500. He paid the Marble & Granite Company $400, and for taxes, charges of administration, etc., about $200. He did not pay the note of $1,000, but it is charged to him in his account. His honor states that, in ascertaining the interest of J. E. Cole in the estate, he has deducted said note, and that he was of the opinion that defendant Russell was liable to account for the amount received by him, but was entitled to deduct therefrom the interest of J. E. Cole and T. A. Cole, which he ascertains to be $3,851.55, from the $5,000, leaving a balance of $1,148.45, for which he gives judgment against Russell, directing him to pay it into court, to be applied to the judgment for $3,699.58 against J. E. Cole and the surety company. From this judgment, the defendant surety company appealed.

No testimony is set out in the record or case on appeal; hence we cannot pass upon the second contention, which his honor said was made for the first time in the case on appeal. As between the plaintiff and the defendant J. E. Cole, there can be no doubt as to the correctness of the ruling and judgment. This is demonstrated by a simple calculation. The amount recovered will pay to the distributee, who has received nothing, the one to whom $500 has been paid, and the one to whom $2,000 has been paid, the amount due on their distributive shares, and leave in the hands of the plaintiff the exact amount due J. E. and T. A. Cole to equalize their share. The principle by which his honor was guided is announced in Grant v. Bell, 90 N. C. 559. The estate, so far as the plaintiff is interested, is settled by the judgment. The defendant surety company insists that it is subrogated to the rights of the plaintiff, and is entitled to call on the defendant Russell to refund to it the amount received from Cole, just as the plaintiff could have done. We entertain no doubt that in equity the company is subrogated to the rights of the plaintiff against Russell. Has it any other or higher right than the plaintiff had? Certainly, as between the other distributees and Cole, the latter was entitled to pay them and to retain himself, at any time during the administration, the amount to which each was entitled. No one except creditors could complain. If he paid more or retained more than was due, he was liable personally and on his bond for the excess. The defendant surety company says that the payment to T. A. Cole and appropriation by himself of the $5,000 was a devastavit. This is true so far as the amount was in excess of their interests. It is elementary that one asserting the right of subrogation stands in the shoes of the creditor to whose right he is subrogated. His rights are exactly those of the creditor whose debt he has paid. There is no privity of contract between Russell and the surety company. It is insisted that an administrator commits a devastavit by paying out the asset to a distributee before the expiration of one year from the date of administration. If there be debts unpaid, this is undoubtedly true; or if he pays one distributee more than his share, to that extent which is a devastavit.

This court has held that while the administrator is allowed by statute two years within which to settle the estate, he should, when there are no debts or other exigencies requiring the retention of the funds, pay them to the distributees, and that they may within the two years maintain an action for them. In Clements v. Rogers, 91 N. C.

63, this court refused to dismiss an action brought within the two years, when it was admitted that there were no debts outstanding. In Allen v. Royster, 107 N. C. 278, 12 S. E. 134, it was held that the plaintiff distributee was not required to allege the non-existence of debts; Merrimon, C. J., saying in response to a motion to dismiss because the complaint did not negative the existence of debts: "It need not necessarily allege that two years have elapsed next after the administrator qualified as such, and before the action begun, because the administrator might consent to account fully or partially with the next of kin before such lapse of time, and if there should exist a valid reason why he should not, he should set it up as matter of defense in a proper way. It might turn out that the court would require the administrator to account with the distributees in some measure, and stay the final account until the end of two years." If the distributees had sued the administrator at the time he paid the amount to his brother and himself, the court, upon the facts as they existed on that day, would have sustained the action, and required him to pay over the amount in his hands to all of the distributees. In the condition of the estate on February 5, 1903, no devastavit was committed in paying over to himself and his brother the amount due them; to that extent the payment was rightful. Russell is fixed with notice of the conditions as they existed on that day. If he had been called to account on February 6, 1903, Russell would have been compelled to the other distributees the difference between the amount received by him and the amount which was due J. E. and T. A. Cole. The fact that more than six months thereafter (October 15, 1903) he paid to himself and his brother $4,000, which was a devastavit of which Russell had no knowledge, cannot change or increase his liability, for that was fixed at the time he received the money, February 5, 1903.

We concur with the court below that Russell was not liable for any shortage on the part of Cole, administrator, which occurred after February 5, 1903. Suppose that he had paid Russell the exact amount due his brother and himself on February 5th, and six months thereafter committed a devastavit by appropriating other money belonging to the estate, is it possible that thereby Russell would have been made liable? Certainly there was no wrong done in paying T. A. Cole to the extent of his interest, and we are unable to perceive any reason why he was not entitled to retain the amount due himself on that day. The receipt of Russell in excess of the amount due, with knowledge of the facts, was wrongful, and, to the extent of the wrong done, he must answer to the surety company, just as he would, if called upon by the distributees, have been required to do. There is no suggestion that there was any actual fraud intended by Cole or Russell at the time of the payment. While the payment of the excess was unlawful, it is not inconsistent with an honest mistake in respect to the amount of their interests in the estate. It is sufficient that we find in the principles of the law a remedy commensurate with the wrong. If the defendant Russell still holds the stock, we can see no reason why the defendant surety company may not subject Cole's interest by an equitable execution or by supplemental proceedings. As all parties are before the court, it would seem this could be done in this action. Other parties may be brought in, and pleadings amended for that purpose, if the defendant company be so advised.

With the right to take further action as indicated, the judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed.

(140 N. C. 33)

LOWERY et al. v. BOARD OF GRADED SCHOOL TRUSTEES IN TOWN OF KERNERSVILLE.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 22, 1905.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES.

Statutes must be construed with reference to the Constitution, and, if susceptible of two constructions, the courts will adopt that one which renders them constitutional.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 10, Cent. Dig. Constitutional Law, § 46.]

2. SAME—DISCRIMINATION BY REASON OF RACE—PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Although Act 1905, entitled "An act to establish a graded school in the town of Kernersville, Forsyth county, North Carolina" (Laws 1905, p. 30, c. 11), uses the term "graded school" in the singular, yet, inasmuch as it is provided by section 4 that all children resident in the district within school age shall be admitted, it must be construed as directing the establishment of one school in which the children of each race are to be taught in separate buildings and by separate teachers, and, when so construed, it is not in violation of Const. art. 9, § 2, prohibiting discrimination in favor of, or to the prejudice of, either race.

3. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS—EXTENT OF DISTRICT.

Under Acts 1905, p. 30, c. 11, entitled "An act to establish a graded school in the town of Kernersville," providing (section 1) that the town of Kernersville is made a public school district, called the "Kernersville Graded School District," the district defined must be confined to the limits prescribed, and cannot include contiguous territory for the colored schools.

4. STATUTES—PARTIAL INVALIDITY.

If the general scope and purpose of a statute are constitutional, and constitutional means are provided for executing such general purpose, the entire statute will not be declared void because one or more of the details are not in accordance with the Constitution, provided the invalid part may be eliminated without affecting the general purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 44, Cent. Dig. Statutes, §§ 58-66.]

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—DISCRIMINATION BY REASON OF RACE—PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Acts 1905, p. 31, c. 11, § 7, establishing a graded school in the town of Kernersville, provides that the moneys which shall from time to time be apportioned under the general school law of the state to the said school district shall be turned over by the treasurer of the county to the treasurer of said school trustees, and that in apportioning the school fund said graded school shall be allowed the proportion of said fund per capita to the white children of school age. Held that, it being the apparent purpose of such section to empower the use of all public school fund apportioned to the graded school district to the white schools, it is in violation of the Constitution.

6. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS—CREATION OF DISTRICTS—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Acts 1905, p. 30, c. 11, § 4, establishing a graded school in the town of Kernersville, expressly confers on the board of trustees "exclusive control of the public interests, funds and property of the graded school district." Held, that such provision is sufficient to authorize the board to receive the money apportioned to both races and apply it in a way provided by the Constitution, independently of section 7 (page 31) of the act, which is unconstitutional.

7. SAME—DISTRICT PROPERTY.

Acts 1905, p. 31, c. 11, § 8, establishing a graded school in the town of Kernersville, provides that the property of the public schools for white children in the district shall become the property of the board of trustees, and that they may in their discretion sell the same and apply the proceeds to the use of the public graded school to be established. Held, that this does not authorize the board to take the school building previously provided for the colored children and use it for the whites.

8. SAME—FUNDS—APPORTIONMENT BETWEEN WHITE AND COLORED SCHOOLS.

The special tax directed by Acts 1905, p. 31, c. 11, § 6, establishing a graded school in the town of Kernersville, is not to be apportioned between the races per capita, but the school term for each race shall be of the same length during the year.

9. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—DISCRIMINATION BETWEEN RACES—PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The erection of a necessary school building for a large number of white children of the district is not a discrimination against the much smaller number of colored children of the district, for whom an ample building has been supplied.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 10, Cent. Dig. Constitutional Law, § 723.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; Bryan, Judge.

Action by W. A. Lowery and others against the board of graded school trustees in the town of Kernersville. From a judgment vacating the restraining order and refusing the injunction asked, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

At the session of 1905 of the General Assembly an act was passed and ratified entitled "An act to establish a graded school in the town of Kernersville, Forsyth county, North Carolina" (Laws 1905, pp. 30-32, c. 11). The portions of said act material to be noticed in the discussion of the exceptions by plaintiffs to the judgment appealed from are: Section 1. The town of Kernersville is made a public school district, to be called the "Kernersville Graded School District." Section 2 provides for the election of a board of trustees, consisting of five members. Section 3 directs the organization of the board and the election of proper officers. Section 4, that the trustees shall have exclusive control of the public school interests, funds, and property in the graded school district, shall provide rules for their government not inconsistent with law, fix the compensation of teachers, etc., shall make an accurate census of the school population of said district, as required by law, etc.; that all children resident in said district, between the ages of 6 and 21, shall be admitted to the school free of tuition charges. Section 6 directs the levying of a special tax, etc., provided that the question be first submitted to the qualified voters of said district at the municipal election in May, 1905. It is also provided that at the same time the proposition be submitted to the voters to issue coupon bonds, not to exceed the sum of $4,000, to be used in the erection of a suitable school building in said school district. Section 7, that the moneys which shall from time to time be apportioned under the general school law of the state to the said school district be turned over by the treasurer of Forsyth county to the treasurer of the said school trustees for the benefit of said school; provided that, in apportioning the school fund of said county, said graded school shall be allowed the proportion of said fund per capita to the white children of school age. Section 8, that the property, both real and personal, of the public school for white children, shall become the property of said graded school, and shall be vested in the said board of trustees, and their successors in trust, for the said graded school, and the said trustees may, in their discretion, sell the same, or any part thereof, and apply the proceeds to the use of the public graded schools to be established in said school district of Kernersville. Section 9 provides for issuing the bonds, etc., if approved by voters.

Plaintiff alleges that, pursuant to the provisions of said act, an election was held in the prescribed territory, on the first Tuesday in May, 1905, and that a majority of 16 of the voters of said district cast their votes in favor of levying the tax and issuing the bonds provided for by the act; that only nine days' notice of said election was given, whereby some electors who would have been against schools were prevented from voting; that the defendants who were elected trustees at said election have organized as provided in said act, and that the bonds have been prepared and delivered to them, and that they now threaten to sell them, etc.; that the board of commissioners of the town of Kernersville threaten to levy a tax upon the property and polls in said district for the support and maintenance of said schools, etc.; that the board of education threatens to turn over to defendants the property of the public school for white children and do all other acts and things directed by said act in that respect; that the town of Kernersville has a population of about 1,200, counting both white and colored persons; that the colored persons in said town own property valued for taxation at $8,534; that the said act is unconstitutional and void, in that it provides for no graded school for colored children within said district, that it discriminates to the prejudice of the children of the colored race, and gives to the children of the white race advantage denied to the children of the colored race; that the election was irregular and unlawful, for that only nine days' notice was given, and that it was held on Tuesday, instead of Monday. They demand that the defendants be enjoined from proceeding with the issuing of the bonds, etc., or levying the taxes, or doing any other of the several acts under and by virtue of the said act, etc. A restraining order was issued, with an order to the defendants to show cause why a permanent injunction should not issue, etc. Defendants answered, admitting the provisions of the act, the manner and time of holding the election, and that they were proceeding to discharge the duties imposed upon them by the several sections of the statute. They deny several immaterial allegations in this respect. They say they are advised that by the provisions of the act they are entitled to take charge of the colored school property in the district, and intend to do so, and use it for the purpose of a graded school for white children in the district, until they can build a schoolhouse suitable for school purposes as provided by the act; that they intend to use the money collected from the white and colored people of the town for the support and maintenance of the white graded school and colored school, so as to afford equal facilities for the school children of both races, as provided for the public schools in the several counties of the state. They further say that the county board of education have already turned over the property of the public school for white children of the district to the board of school trustees, and have already directed the money apportioned to the white children of the district to be turned over to said trustees for the benefit of the white schools under the provisions of the act; that the board of education have also ordered the treasurer of the county to pay to the school committee of the colored public school district, which embraces the town of Kernersville and considerable contiguous territory, the money to be applied to the maintenance of the school in the district, as heretofore, under the school law, which is amply sufficient to maintain the school for a period of not less than 4½ months, on conditions heretofore existing; that the public school district for colored people has in no way been changed or interfered with by these defendants, but they believe the money should have been turned over to the graded school trustees for said purposes, as well as the colored school property; that the colored school children within school age in the district number 68, and the white school children within said age number 307 (these numbers are ascertained by a census taken by defendant board of trustees); that heretofore there have been in the corporate limits of the town two public schoolhouses, used by each race separately; that the public school money raised in the county has already been assigned and apportioned to the colored school district, without regard to the act establishing the new graded school district. They further deny that the act discriminates against either race; that it nowhere provides that the tax collected from the colored residents of the town shall be applied exclusively to the support of the white school, nor exclusively to the colored school; nor do the defendants intend, nor have they ever intended, to apply the money arising from the taxes on property or polls of the colored residents exclusively to either race, there being nothing in the act requiring them so to do or forbidding them to apportion to the public school for the colored children sufficient sums of money to afford them equal school facilities with the children of the white race; that the house now used for the colored schools is amply sufficient to accommodate the children of that race. They further say that they are advised that the election was held in accordance with law and was fairly conducted; that the voters of the town knew of the day and attended the election, casting their ballots as they wished, etc. The defendants filed affidavits tending to sustain their answer.

Judge Bryan, upon the hearing, found that the election was held substantially as required by the act; that the qualified voters in the town had ample opportunity to register; that the proceeds of the bonds proposed to be issued were to be applied to building a schoolhouse for the white children in the district; that the building for white children is insufficient to accommodate them, and the erection of a building for additional accommodations was necessary; that the school building for the colored children was amply sufficient and commodious for said children. Being of opinion that the act provided a graded school district embracing all of the territory within the limits of the town of Kernersville for both races, without any unlawful discrimination for or against the children of either race resident therein, the court below held it was not unconstitutional, and vacated the restraining order and refused the injunction. The plaintiffs appealed.

Lindsay Patterson and T. F. Baldwin, for appellants. Watson, Buxton & Watson and Sapp & Hasten, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the facts). If we concurred in the construction put upon the act by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs, we should feel compelled to declare it violative of the Constitution. We do not propose to bring into question the decisions made by this court in Quitt v. Commissioners, 94 N. C. 709, 55 Am. Rep. 688, and Riggsbee v. Durham, 94 N. C. 800. The principle announced in those cases and uniformly adhered to by this court, that a law which directs the tax raised from the polls and property of white persons to be devoted to sustaining schools for white children and that raised from the polls and property of negroes to schools for negro children, is unconstitutional and void. In both of those cases, the language of the statute directing such distribution of the tax collected was clear and explicit. Smith, C. J., says: "The fund is divided by race distinctions, depending on the source from which the moneys are derived. This, as the judge decides, is forbidden by the Constitution, and, as the objects in view cannot be accomplished by using the funds as directed, or for any other purpose than the statutory requirements, it clearly ought not to be taken from the taxpayers at all, because this is but a means of effecting an illegal law." Conceding that, under the explicit language of section 2, art. 9, of the Constitution, there must be no discrimination in favor of or to the prejudice of either race, we proceed to ascertain whether there is imposed upon the defendant trustees any duty in respect to the establishment and maintenance of the Kernersville graded school, provided for by the act of 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 30, c. 11), inconsistent with this provision.

In discussing the language of the statute, it will be well to keep in view the universally recognized rule of construction which requires us to read the act in the light of and with reference to the Constitution of the state. The principle is well stated in Sutherland on Statutory Construction (Lewis' 2d Ed.) § 82: "Every presumption is in favor of the validity of an act of the Legislature and all doubts are resolved in support of the act. In determining the constitutionality of an act of the Legislature, courts always presume in the first place that the act is constitutional. They also presume that the Legislature acted with integrity and with an honest purpose to keep within the restrictions and limitations laid down by the Constitution." Peckham, J., in People v. Terry, 108 N. Y. 1, 14 N. E. 815, says: "In construing a statute which is susceptible of two constructions, one of which will render it valid and the other void, and both are equally reasonable, it is familiar learning that courts incline to and will adopt the construction which renders the act valid, rather than the one which avoids it." We will never assume that the Legislature intended to pass an unconstitutional act. "The courts may resort to an implication to sustain one act, but not to destroy it." Atlantic Water Co. v. Const. Water Co., 44 N. J. Eq. 427, 15 Atl. 581. This rule is quite elementary, and finds expression and application in the courts of every American state. It must be conceded that the act is not so clear as could be desired, nor does it conform in many important respects to the many other acts found in our statutes establishing graded schools.

Its defects are to be seen rather in omissions than positive provisions. We notice, first, the several criticisms made by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs. They say that it is manifest that it was never contemplated that there should be a school in the graded school district for the colored race; that only a school for the white race is provided for. We do not attach any importance to the term "graded school." While in other acts which we have examined the plural is used, we see no difficulty in finding in the act a positive direction to establish one school in which the children of each race are to be taught in separate buildings and by separate teachers. The Constitution expressly commands it to be done. This was well known to the draftsman and the Legislature. It will be noted that by section 4 the trustees are required to cause an accurate census of the school population in the district to be taken. It also expressly provides that all children resident in the district within the school age shall be admitted into the school free of tuition. It could not have been contemplated that, in defiance of the express language of the Constitution, all of the children of both races in the district should be admitted into one school building. The fair and only reasonable implication is that under one board of management, one superintendent, the school should be so arranged and separated as to meet the constitutional requirement in that respect. We do not suppose that the power of the defendant board to divide the district into as many sections, departments, or schools as the convenience or necessity of the children of the district demanded, would be questioned. It is a matter of common observation and knowledge that in the larger towns of the state the trustees of the graded or city schools divide it into sections and locate each section or school to meet the convenience of the people, and this is done under the general power to establish a graded school for each race. If the white children are so numerous and the territorial limits of the district so large that in the opinion of the board two school buildings with a separate corps of teachers are necessary, certainly, if within their means, they may establish them under the power to establish a school for white children. The same principle applies to a school for colored children. When a duty is imposed and power conferred upon a public agency, by necessary implication the duty and power to do the thing in the manner directed by the Constitution attach. In this connection it may be proper to say that we do not concur in the suggestion contained in the answer that the graded school district of Kernersville can be confined to the limits prescribed by the act in regard to the white school and include contiguous territory for the colored school. The school district prescribed by the act must include both races, and the taxes levied and collected upon the property and polls of both races in the district must be applied to the support and maintenance of a graded school for the children of both races—the schools to be separated and the children of each race to be taught in a separate school. In carrying out the provisions of the act, the imperative mandate of the Constitution that there shall be no discrimination in favor of or to the prejudice of either race must be observed. Thus construed, the constitutional requirement is complied with.

The act (section 4) expressly confers upon the board of trustees "exclusive control of the public school interests, funds and property in the graded school district as hereinafter provided." It is said that there are provisions in the act controlling this general grant of power which discriminates against the children of the colored race. Before discussing the provisions objected to, we wish to note that another well-settled rule in the construction of statutes is enforced by the courts. If the general scope and purpose of the statute are constitutional, and constitutional means are provided for executing such general purposes, the entire statute will not be declared void, because some one or more of the details prescribed or minor provisions incorporated are not in accordance with the Constitution, provided such invalid parts may be eliminated without destroying or materially affecting the general purpose. The rule is thus stated: "Where the unconstitutional portions are stricken out, and that which remains is complete in itself and capable of being executed in accordance with the apparent legislative intent, it must be sustained." 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. 570, in which a large number of illustrative cases are cited. This court has frequently recognized and enforced the rule. Berry v. Haines, 4 N. C. 311; Darby v. Wilmington, 76 N. C. 133; Cotton Mills v. Waxhaw, 130 N. C. 293, 41 S. E. 488. The difficulty is usually found in the application of the rule. The general purpose and scope of the act under examination are declared to be to establish a graded school in the town of Kernersville. This purpose is not only in accordance with the Constitution, but in furtherance of the right of the people to have the privilege of education and the duty of the state to guard and maintain that right. Dec. of Rights, § 27. The particular form and method of securing the right by the establishment of graded schools, when adopted by the people in accordance with law, has been uniformly maintained by this court. The district is clearly defined. The establishment of the school and levy of the tax are made dependent upon the will of all of the qualified voters within the district at an election to be held for that purpose. The tax is uniform upon all the property in the district, and the constitutional equation upon property and polls observed. All of the children within the school age are admitted, and, as we have endeavored to show, by reading the act in the light of the Constitution, this includes children of both races, to be taught separately. There is no discrimination in regard to the application of the tax in respect to races. A board of trustees is provided with ample power to execute the law.

The plaintiffs suggest that by section 7 it is provided that the money which shall be apportioned under the general school law to the school district shall be turned over to the treasurer of the trustees of the district for the benefit of said school, provided, that in apportioning the school fund of the county, the said graded school shall be allowed the proportion of the fund due per capita to the white children of school age. We are not quite sure that we correctly interpret this section. We find in other acts establishing graded schools a similar provision in regard to the application of the fund from the general school tax apportioned to the children within the district, but such fund is usually directed to be received by the trustees and applied under their direction. If it is the purpose and effect of the seventh section to empower the use of all of the public school fund apportioned to the graded school district for the white schools, it is clearly in violation of the Constitution. This money, after apportionment, belongs to the children of both races, and should be applied to the support of the schools for both races, without discrimination or prejudice. Some light is thrown upon the subject by the answer of the defendants. It seems that prior to the passage of this act the school district for the white children comprised the town of Kernersville, containing 307 children of school age; that the district for the colored children included contiguous territory, the number of colored children within the limits of the new district being only 68; that the public money from the general school fund has already been apportioned to the colored school district regardless of the act of 1905; and that it is only the money apportioned to the white children which is to be paid over to the defendant board. We gather from the answer that the defendant board supposed that the act of 1905 in no way changed the district established for the colored children. In this view his honor did not concur, nor do we. It is permissible for the school authorities, under the general school law in each county, to so arrange the districts as to meet the needs of each race, that they may be of different territorial boundaries. The reasons for doing so in many cases are obvious. When, however, a new district is created by the Legislature, with power to levy a special tax and maintain a graded or large public school under the control of a separate and special board, we are unable to see how the uniformity which the Constitution requires, as construed in Pruitt's Case, can be maintained, unless the district includes the children of both races. The difficulties in doing so are apparent. We think, therefore, that so much of section 7 as undertakes to distinguish between the races in regard to the money apportioned from the public school fund is invalid. This, however, does not affect the other portions of the act. We can see no reason why the defendant board may not, under the general power "to control the public school interests, funds and property in the graded school district," receive the money apportioned to both races and apply it in the way provided by the Constitution. There is nothing in the section prohibiting them from doing so.

Section 8 is also obscure in its terms. It provides that the property of the public school for white children in the district shall become the property of the board of trustees, and that they may in their discretion sell the same and apply the proceeds to the use of the public graded school to be established. We infer from other provisions of the act that it was deemed necessary to give the board express power to sell this property, for the purpose of providing another building with the amount received, together with the proceeds of the bond which they are by section 9 empowered to issue. The answer of the defendants in respect to their purposes in regard to this property is obscure. They say they are advised and believe they are empowered to take charge of the colored school property in the district, and that they are intending to use the property for the purpose of a graded school for white children in the district until they can build a more suitable house for school purposes. While the language of the answer would seem to be capable of the construction that they intend to take the property of the colored school and apply it to the use of the white school, this cannot be reconciled with other portions of the answer, in which they declare their intention to maintain a school for both white and colored children, affording them equal school facilities. They further say, and his honor so finds, that the present school building for the colored school is amply sufficient, whereas the building for whites is totally inadequate. Of course, the defendants have no right to take the school building now provided for the colored children and use it for the whites. We assume they have no such purpose. Their entire answer repels any such construction. However all this may be, it does not render the portions of the act establishing the school invalid.

It is the duty of the defendant board of trustees to proceed to establish a graded school, in which all the children of school age within the new district may attend; to separate the schools into two sections or departments, in one of which the white children shall be taught and in the other the colored children. The effect of the act is to take out of the original colored school district all of the property and children within the limits of the new district created by the act. In the provision made for executing the law, the board shall not discriminate against either race, but shall afford to each equal facilities. It is not intended by this that the taxes are to be apportioned between the races per capita, but that the school term shall be of the same length during the school year, and that a sufficient number of teachers, competent to teach the children in each section or building, shall be employed at such prices as the board may deem proper. If the board or its successors shall refuse to establish and maintain the school upon a constitutional basis and in accordance with the constitutional provisions, the courts have power, by the writ of mandamus, to compel them to do so. We gather from the answer that the defendants propose to execute the important trust reposed in them in accordance with law. There can be no possible room for doubt or controversy in respect to the two principles underlying and always controlling the establishment and maintenance of the public school system of this state. This system includes all public schools, or schools receiving for their support public taxes, either general or local. First, the two races must be taught in separate schools; and, second, there must be no discrimination for or against either race. Const. art. 9, § 2. In Revisal 1905, § 3990, the Legislature codified the Constitution and all statutes then in force involving these essential principles. They express the well considered and matured opinion of the people of the state upon this subject, of such vital importance to the welfare of all the people. Keeping them in view, the matter of administration is left to the Legislature and the various officers, boards, etc., appointed for that purpose. This court would be reluctant to declare invalid an act establishing any public school, when it had received the sanction of the people directly and locally interested, unless it was manifest that these principles were violated. Much must be left to the good faith, integrity, and judgment of local boards in working out the difficult problem of providing equal facilities for each race in the education of all the children of the state. Local conditions, relative numbers, and other well-recognized factors enter into the problem, and must be dealt with in a spirit of justice to all concerned, and to promote the honor and welfare of the state. In no sphere of our system of local self-government, under the guidance of a general superintendence and constitutional limitations, is the capacity of the people to govern themselves more strongly illustrated.

In this connection we wish to say that the language used in the opinion in Hooker v. Greenville, 130 N. C. 473, 42 S. E. 141, which seems to hold that in no other way than by a per capita distribution of all taxes collected for public schools can the Constitution be observed, does not meet our approval. It was not necessary to the decision of that case, and we call attention to it to exclude the conclusion that it is regarded as the opinion of this court. The learned and always candid counsel for the plaintiffs stated in his argument that he did not so construe the Constitution.

In regard to the bonds proposed to be issued, the proceeds to be used in the erection and furnishing of a suitable school building in the school district, we find nothing in the act to indicate that the use directed is prohibited by the Constitution. His honor finds that there are 307 white children and 68 colored children in the district, and that the erection of the building for additional accommodation of the white children is necessary; that the public school building for the colored children is amply sufficient and commodious. We are unable to perceive how or why the erection of a necessary school building for 307 white children is a discrimination against 68 colored children, for whom an amply sufficient and commodious building had been supplied. To require the same size building for 68 children as is furnished to 307 would be to keep the law neither in letter nor in spirit.

We have given anxious and careful consideration to the language of the act and the arguments of counsel, and we conclude that the general purpose and scope of the act are not in violation of the Constitution; that such sections as are subject to criticism do not so affect the statute as to render it invalid. The defendant board of trustees will, we are sure, as they express their purpose to do, discharge their duties so that all the children of both races shall have equal facilities to attend the schools under the constitutional restrictions provided. If they should not do so, the courts would promptly aid any class of persons discriminated against.

We concur with his honor that the election was valid. The judgment vacating the restraining order and refusing the injunction must be affirmed.

(140 N. C. 32)

SOUTHERN CHEMICAL CO. v. LACKEY
et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 22, 1905.)

APPEAL—ORDER OF RE-REFERENCE.

An appeal from an order for a re-reference to find a fact, entered on the hearing of exceptions to the report of the referee, is premature, and will be dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alexander County; Webb, Judge.

Action by the Southern Chemical Company against C. A. Lackey and another, executors of R. F. Lackey, deceased. From an order for a re-reference to a referee to find a fact, plaintiff appeals. Dismissed.

L. M. Swink, for appellant. R. Z. Linney and J. L. Gwaltney, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. Upon the hearing of the exceptions to the referee's report, the court ordered a re-reference to the referee to find a fact which the court deemed material. From this order the plaintiff appealed. The appeal is premature. Some things are settled, and this is one of them. The appeal is dismissed. Wallace v. Douglas, 105 N. C. 42, 10 S. E. 1043.

Appeal dismissed.

(139 N. C. 640)

STATE v. JOHNSTON.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 22, 1905.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS—RETAILING WITHOUT A LICENSE—EVIDENCE.

Defendant, who was not licensed to sell liquor, met B., and told him that he was going to another city and wanted to know if B. wanted any whisky. B. replied that he wanted one-half gallon, for which he paid defendant a dollar, without agreeing to pay any of defendant's expenses of the journey. Defendant returned next day, and delivered the whisky to B. in the city where the contract was made in which the sale of liquor was prohibited. Held, that such facts constituted a sale of liquor within the prohibited territory.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; Cooke, Judge.

Monroe Johnston was indicted for retailing liquors without a license, and from a judgment finding defendant not guilty on the special verdict, the state appeals. Reversed.

The Attorney General, for the State. Stewart & McRae, for appellee.

BROWN, J. It is unnecessary to set out the lengthy special verdict. It appears therein: That the sale of liquor is prohibited in the city of Charlotte, and was on July 15, 1905. That on the evening of July 15, 1905, Tom Brown, between the hours of 6 and 7 o'clock p. m., near the Southern Depot in the city of Charlotte, Mecklenburg county, N. C., met the accused, Monroe Johnston. The said Monroe Johnston told him that he was going to Salisbury, and wanted to know if he wanted any whisky. Tom Brown told him he wanted a half gallon of whisky. Monroe Johnston, the prisoner, agreed to bring him one-half gallon from Salisbury, for which he paid Monroe Johnston one dollar. That he was not to pay Monroe Johnston anything towards his fare to Salisbury and return. It further appears that on next morning defendant delivered to Tom Brown, in pursuance of his contract, the half gallon of whisky within said city.

In the view we take of this case, it is unnecessary to discuss the question of agency and the other legal aspects of the case, so ably and elaborately presented by the Attorney General in his argument and brief. We think the facts set out in the special verdict plainly disclose an agreement or contract to deliver to Tom Brown one-half gallon of whisky, entered into in the city of Charlotte on July 15th by the defendant, and a receipt of the agreed price; also a delivery of the whisky by the defendant the next morning in pursuance of the agreement. These facts constitute a sale of liquor upon the part of the defendant within the prohibited territory. The superior court should have adjudged the defendant guilty.

52 S.E.—18

Let the case be remanded, with instruction to proceed to judgment.

Reversed.

(140 N. C. 9)

HILL v. DALTON et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1905.)

1. BOUNDARIES—DESCRIPTION—PREDOMINANT CALLS.

Whenever a natural boundary is called for in a patent or deed, the line is to terminate at it, however wide of the course called for it may be, or however short of or beyond the distance specified.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 8, Cent. Dig. Boundaries, §§ 6-13.]

2. SAME.

Where a line was actually run by the surveyor, and was marked and a corner made, the party claiming under the patent or deed will hold accordingly, notwithstanding a mistaken description of the land.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 8, Cent. Dig. Boundaries, § 25.]

3. SAME—ESTABLISHMENT—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In a proceeding under Laws 1893, p. 44, c. 22, to establish a disputed boundary line, plaintiff may not, where there is a call for course and distance and a natural object or line of another tract, stop in his proof at the end of the call for course and distance, but must either show the location of the natural object or the line called for, or show that at the time his line was surveyed a line was run and another corner marked, corresponding with the call for course and distance, or that there never was any such object or line as called for.

4. SAME—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a proceeding to establish a disputed boundary line, where plaintiff claimed under a grant one of the calls of which was a line of a senior grant, testimony of a surveyor as to whether the call of plaintiff's grant, the beginning point being established as it was, would ever reach any line of the senior grant, was properly excluded.

5. EVIDENCE—DECLARATIONS AS TO BOUNDARY.

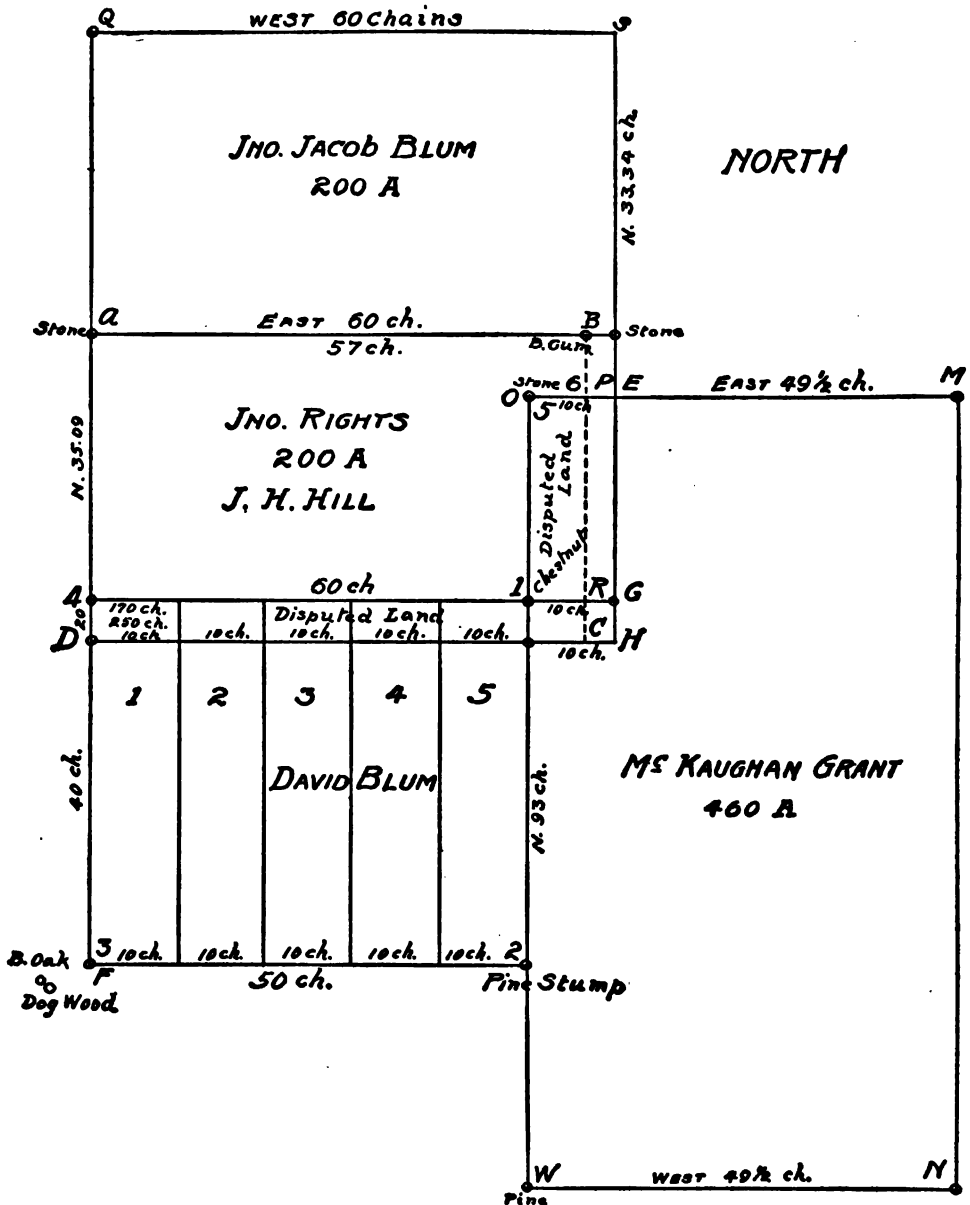

The declarations of a person deceased at the time of trial in regard to a corner or line in controversy are competent; provided the declarant had opportunity of knowing; had no interest in making the declarations at the time, and the declarations were made ante litem motam.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 20, Cent. Dig. Evidence, §§ 1129-1134.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; Cooke, Judge.

Proceedings by J. H. Hill against Thornton Dalton and others. From the judgment rendered, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The following is the map referred to in the opinion:

Manly & Hendren and Watson & Buxton, for appellant. Lindsay Patterson, for appellees.

CONNOR, J. This is a proceeding instituted pursuant to the provisions of chapter 48 of the Code, as amended by chapter 22, p. 44, Laws 1893, commonly known as the "Processive Act." The case was before us on appeal at the fall term, 1904, reported in 136 N. C. 339, 48 S. E. 784. The proceeding was conducted through its several statutory stages until it reached the superior court, and was then tried upon a single issue directed to the inquiry in respect to true line of plaintiff's land. It would be difficult to state the contentions upon which the exceptions to his honor's rulings are based, without reference to the map which was in evidence. Plaintiff introduced a grant to John Rights, bearing date January 14, 1795, describing a tract of 200 acres: "Beginning at a pine, Jacob Blum's corner; east, with his line, 57 chains, to a white oak in James McKaughan's line; south, 35 chains and 9 links, crossing two branches, to pointiers in said McKaughan's line; west, 57 chains, to a stake; north, 35 chains, 9 links, to the beginning." Plaintiff introduced several deeds, conveying said land by the same description, until the title vested in A. D. McCumbe. He then showed mortgage deed from McCumbe to Belo, containing covenants of seisin, against incumbranches, and general warranty; deed from Belo to plaintiff—all of said deeds containing same description. There was evidence, in respect to which there was no controversy, that the Rights grant began at the southwest corner of the Jacob Blum grant, located by the surveyor at a stone on the map at A. It was also shown that the 57 chains in the first call gave out at B; that there was a small black gum at that point. Those defendants, claiming under the McKaughan grant, introduced a grant to James McKaughan, bearing date November 9, 1784. This grant covered 460 acres: "Beginning at a pine on the west side of the creek; running north, 93 chains, to a pine; east, 49½ chains, to a black oak; south, 93 chains, to a pine; then west to the beginning." There was evidence tending to show the location of the grant as appears on the map at W, Q, N, M. Plaintiff denied that the McKaughan grant was correctly located. There was evidence tending to sustain plaintiff's contention in this respect. Plaintiff insisted that he was not called upon to locate the McKaughan grant, although called for by the Rights grant; that, as defendants claimed under the grant, the burden was upon them to locate it; that, if they failed to do so, he was entitled to locate his land according to the course and distance, disregarding the objects called for. If plaintiff is correct in his contention, his true lines would be A, B, C, D; thence to the beginning. His honor instructed the jury: "That the burden was on the plaintiff to establish the true boundary in dispute between the parties. That, as the grant under which plaintiff claimed called from its beginning point east 57 chains to McKaughan's line, the burden was on the plaintiff to establish by a preponderance of the evidence the true boundary line of the McKaughan grant." The court stated the same proposition in other forms, and declined to give an instruction asked by plaintiff, putting the burden upon the defendant. Plaintiff's exceptions present the question whether there was error in the instruction given and in refusing that asked.

Upon the former appeal this question was not presented or argued. We did not otherwise decide it than to say: "As the plaintiff is the actor, it would seem that the burden is on him to make good his contention." As the question is now fairly presented and has been argued, we deem it proper to treat it as open, and endeavor to lay down the rule for guidance in like cases in the future. In those cases which have been before this court involving the construction of the statute, we do not find any expression of opinion regarding the rule of practice in this respect. The proposition that the party holding the affirmative of the issue carries the laboring oar, or has the burden of making good his allegation, is elementary. He meets this requirement by introducing testimony which the court deems sufficient to take the case to the jury. He may, in certain cases, after the introduction of testimony, rely upon any presumption which the law raises and which becomes evidence from which, unless rebutted, he may call for a verdict. These principles are all of common knowledge and illustrated in practice by numerous cases in our Reports. The only question is the extent and manner of their application to this unique proceeding with which we are dealing. In the absence of any authority, courts are compelled to resort to "the reason of the thing." It is impracticable, if not impossible, to try and determine controversies of fact without adopting some principle or rule for determining which of the parties shall first produce testimony, or, in the language of the books "go forward." 1 Greenleaf, § 14; Thayer on Ev. 353. If no evidence had been produced, it is clear that the court would have instructed the jury to find the issue against the plaintiff; that is, that he had not established his line. It behooved him, if he would persuade the jury to find the fact to be as alleged, to introduce evidence. Therefore, in the ordinary acceptance of the term and as generally understood in practice, the burden of proof was upon him. We see no reason why the general rule should not apply in a proceeding instituted to establish a disputed line. The plaintiff says, conceding this to be true, he was only required to locate his land according to the calls in his grant; that he was entitled to have the lines called for, in the absence of any evidence on the part of the defendant, declared to be the true line. Upon this contention the inquiry arises, what is necessary for the plaintiff to show to locate his grant? He says that, having shown the beginning point to be at A, he may locate according to the calls by course and distance. This presents the question, what are the calls in the grant? and thus we reach the real question raised by his honor's charge and the exception thereto. His honor's opinion was that the controlling call in the first and second line is the McKaughan grant.

In Cherry v. Slade, 7 N. C. 82, Chief Justice Taylor examined the cases decided prior to 1819 and carefully reviews them in an able and exhaustive opinion. He discusses the history and reasons upon which the court had proceeded in questions of boundary, where there is a variance between the calls for course and distance and natural objects or lines of other tracts of land. Without undertaking to do more than refer to this "mine of learning," we find that the rules there announced have been uniformly followed by this court; "that whenever a natural boundary is called for in a patent or deed, the line is to terminate at it, however wide of the course called for it may be, or however short or beyond the distance specified. The course and distance may be incorrect from any one of the numerous causes likely to generate error on such a subject; but a natural object is fixed and permanent, and its being called for in the deed or patent marks beyond controversy the intention of the party to select that land from the unappropriated mass." There is a second rule which makes an exception to the first. "Whenever it can be proved that there was a line actually run by the surveyor was marked and corner made, the party claiming under the patent or deed shall hold accordingly, notwithstanding a mistaken description of the land." The rule is stated in Gilchrist v. McLaughlin, 29 N. C. 310: "When another known line is called for, and distance gives out before reaching the line called for, the distance is to be disregarded." Jefferson v. McGhee, 34 N. C. 332. In Corn v. McCrary, 48 N. C. 496, it is said that the line of another tract controls course and distance, and it makes no difference whether such line be marked or unmarked. Nash v. R. Co., 67 N. C. 413; Dickson v. Wilson, 82 N. C. 487. When the plaintiff introduced the John Rights grant, it was incumbent upon him to locate it in accordance with the controlling calls. When it appeared by the evidence of the surveyor that at the end of an east line of 57 chains there was no white oak or line of the McKaughan grant, it behooved him to go further, and show, either where the McKaughan line was or that the line relied on by him was surveyed, marked, and the corner marked at the end of the call. In the absence of any testimony in either respect, he had failed to locate his grant or establish his line; that being the matter in controversy. This may not be true in actions of a strictly adversary nature involving title. In such cases the plaintiff is ordinarily required only to make out a prima facie case; but here the plaintiff, actor, has undertaken to establish the true location of his line.

We are of the opinion, in this proceeding, that he may not, where there is a call for course and distance and a natural object or line of another tract, stop at the end of the call for course and distance, but must either show the location of the natural object or the line called for, or show that at the time his line was surveyed a line was run and a corner marked corresponding with the call for course and distance, or that there was never any such object or line, as called for. The question of title is not in issue in this proceeding. We confine our ruling to a proceeding for processioning or establishing a disputed line. The objective and controlling point in the location of the Rights patent is the white oak in the McKaughan grant, and until that is ascertained the plaintiff cannot ask the jury to find his true line as he contends. The defendants having shown the McKaughan grant and introduced evidence in regard to its location, the inquiry was narrowed to the single question whether such evidence was to be accepted by the jury as true. In considering the evidence it was necessary for the court to instruct them in respect to the burden of proof. If they believed the defendant's evidence in this respect, the plaintiff could not further proceed, but for the rule that they would disregard the course and distance and carry his first call to the nearest point in the grant. If they did not believe the evidence, the plaintiff had failed to locate his grant, and the jury would have been compelled to find that they could not locate his true line. The same result would follow if the evidence was so balanced that they could not say how the matter was. The law declares the McKaughan grant to be his boundary. The burden was upon him to show where it was. We concur with his honor's instruction. The jury followed the call as far as possible, and then made such deflections as were necessary to carry them to the McKaughan grant. An examination of the plats set out in several of the cases in our Reports show a much more radical departure from the course and distance to reach the natural object or line called for. The jury reached the McKaughan grant at 6 and ran back to 5, in this way answering the second call along the McKaughan line. A line from B to C would not, according to the location of the McKaughan grant, have met this call.

The plaintiff proposed to ask the surveyor: "If the true location of the McKaughan grant is, as appears on the map, W, 5, M, N, would the first call of the Rights grant, the beginning point being established at A, ever reach any line of the McKaughan grant?" Upon objection the question was excluded. The plaintiff stated that his purpose in asking the question was to show that the first line of the Rights grant, if extended, would not strike the line of the McKaughan grant anywhere, and therefore the McKaughan grant was not properly located. This inquiry presents the question, in another aspect, passed upon in this case in the former appeal. The question in controversy was the location of the Rights grant. To do this it was necessary to locate the McKaughan grant. The proposition was to show that the latter was not properly located, because it did not correspond with the former. If permitted, it would be to establish the lines of the senior grant, the controlling object, by the lines of a junior grant, the very object which was controlled by the senior. The fact that the course and distance called for in the junior grant did not reach the line of the senior grant was no evidence of the location of the latter. This would be to reverse the rule by having the junior grant, the location of which is the matter in controversy, to control the location of the senior. For the reasons given and upon the authority cited in the former opinion, we sustain his honor's ruling.

Plaintiff testified that, after he purchased, McCumbe pointed out the corner of the land.

He was then asked, "What corners did he point out to you?" Objection by defendant sustained, and plaintiff excepted. McCumblie was dead at time of the trial. It is abundantly settled in this state that the declarations of a person deceased, at the time of the trial, in regard to a corner or line in controversy, is competent, provided the declarant had opportunity of knowing, had no interest in making the declaration at the time, and that it was ante litem motam. In Sasser v. Herring, 14 N. C. 340, the rule is stated, and in Hamilton v. Yow, 136 N. C. 357, 48 S. E. 782, Mr. Justice Walker restates it, in the light of all of the decisions of this court, which are cited and the language of several of them quoted and commented upon. It is needless to do more than refer to that well-considered opinion. That the admission of the declaration of a single person under the limitations prescribed is an exception to the general rule is conceded. It is also said that the concession made by the court in this respect was largely due to the peculiar condition existing in the early settlement of our state. It would seem that the reason of the rule suggests that it should not be extended beyond its original scope. The plaintiff did not bring himself within the well-defined limitations upon which such declarations are admissible. There is nothing in the record to show or indicate whether the declaration, if made, was ante litem motam. Before the declaration in any aspect was admissible, the plaintiff should have brought it within the well-defined limitations in respect to time, interest, death and knowledge of the declarant.

It is not clear that the declaration is not incompetent for another reason. There is no difficulty in saying as a matter of law what the boundaries of the Rights grant are. The only difficulty is in saying where they are. There is but one way in which the plaintiff can avoid the rule which carries his first line to the McKaughan grant, by showing that at the time the line was surveyed it was marked and the corner marked. To show the declaration of a deceased owner otherwise competent as to the corners of the Rights land would be but slight, if any, evidence of the McKaughan grant. Caraway v. Chancy, 51 N. C. 361; Roberts v. Preston, 100 N. C. 243, 6 S. E. 574.

We have examined the record with care, and find no error in his honor's ruling. The judgment must be affirmed.

(140 N. C. 65)

PACE et al. v. CITY OF RALEIGH.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 22, 1905.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS — REGULATION — ELECTION — PETITION — SIGNERS — QUALIFICATIONS.

Const. art. 6, §§ 1, 3, 4, provide the qualifications of voters and declare that every person shall be able to read and write, unless registered under another clause, before being entitled "to register," as required by section 3, and that before he shall be entitled to "vote" he shall have paid his poll tax for the previous year. Laws 1903, p. 290, c. 233, § 7, requires an order for a municipal election to determine whether saloons shall be licensed in lieu of a city dispensary on petition of one-third of the "registered voters" therein for the preceding municipal election, and section 9 declares that "any person entitled to vote for," etc., "shall have the right to vote at such election." Held, that "registered voters" did not include all persons whose names were on the permanent registration roll at the preceding municipal election, but only included those who had paid their poll tax as required and were entitled to vote.

2. ELECTIONS — REGISTRATION LISTS — RIGHT TO PURGE.

The aldermen of a city, being entitled to purge the registration lists in determining the persons entitled to vote at a municipal election by striking off those voters who have died or become disqualified by removal or otherwise, could also strike off such as were not entitled to vote because of the constitutional disqualification of not having paid their poll tax.

3. APPEAL — SCOPE OF REVIEW — EXCEPTIONS.

Under the express provisions of Supreme Court Rule 27 (39 S. E. vii), objections other than that the court did not have jurisdiction, or that a cause of action was not stated, cannot be considered on appeal without exceptions taken at the trial.

Brown and Walker, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Justice, Judge.

Mandamus by the state, on relation of J. M. Pace and others, against the board of aldermen of the city of Raleigh. From an order granting the writ, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Application for mandamus. The plaintiffs and others presented a petition to the board of aldermen asking that an election be called to determine whether saloons should be licensed in said city for the sale of intoxicating liquor in lieu of the existing city dispensary. The committee to whom the petition was referred reported that they found on the registration books 1,826 names, but, that 233 of those registered had moved and 35 had died, leaving 1,568 valid registered names; that after purging in the same manner from the petition the names of those who had removed or died there remained on the petition 543 names. Upon further reference to ascertain how many of those upon the registration books and the petition, respectively, were entitled to vote by having paid the poll tax for 1904 on or before May 1, 1905, as required by the Constitution, it was found that 266 persons on the registration list had not so entitled themselves to vote, of whom the names of 113 were on the petition. The board thereupon authorized any one entitled to vote at the proposed election to come forward and add their names to the petition or to withdraw them, whereupon there were 10 names added to the petition and 22 were withdrawn. The board found, in accordance with the above figures, that there were 1,302 registered voters, of whom 418 had signed the petition, being "16 names less than one-third of the registered voters who were registered at the last municipal election," and refused to order an election. This proceeding was brought for a mandamus against the board of aldermen to order the election, which being granted, the defendants appealed.

R. H. Battle, W. B. Snow, and W. N. Jones, for appellant. Argo & Shaffer and W. B. Jones, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. Chapter 233, p. 290, Laws 1903, provides:

"Sec. 7. It shall be the duty of the governing body of any city or town, upon the petition of one-third ($\frac{1}{3}$) of the registered voters therein, who were registered for the preceding municipal election, to order an election to be held," etc.

"Sec. 9. Any person entitled to vote for members of the General Assembly shall have the right to vote at such election, in all boxes provided, and any such voter who is in favor of the manufacture," etc., "and every such voter who is in favor of barrooms or saloons shall vote a ticket on which shall be written or printed," etc.

The sole question presented is, who are the persons entitled to sign a petition for an election under this statute, which requires "one-third ($\frac{1}{3}$) of the registered voters therein, who were registered for the preceding municipal election." The plaintiffs contend that a "registered voter" is any one who is duly and lawfully registered. The defendants contend that a "registered voter" must not only be registered, but he must also be a voter—I. e., "entitled to vote"—which right the Constitution denies to one who is merely registered; that it is further necessary that he shall have paid his poll tax. In short, the plaintiffs contend that any one who is registered is a voter, though he may not be an actual "voter" entitled to vote; while the defendants contend that he must not only be registered, but also a voter.

The plaintiffs are not entitled to their mandamus unless they can maintain their proposition that registration makes any one who is duly and lawfully registered a "voter." Who is a voter? Webster's International Dictionary defines "Voter: One who votes, who is entitled to vote." This is the definition in section 9 of this act (chapter 233, p. 290, Laws 1903) which says, "Any person entitled to vote for," etc., "shall have the right to vote at such election." The language of the Constitution is not ambiguous. The constitutional amendment, now article 6, § 4, provides: "Every person presenting himself for registration shall be able to read and write any section of the Constitution in the English language; and before he shall be entitled to vote, he shall have paid on or before the first day of May of the year in which he proposes to vote, his poll tax for the previous year, as prescribed by article 5, section 1, of this Constitution." Then, after the authorization of a permanent roll for those registering under the "grandfather clause," it is again added: "Provided, such person shall have paid his poll tax as above required." Before one is lawfully a voter he must be "entitled to vote," and from above it is plain that being registered does not entitle one to vote, for it is added, both as to those whose names are upon the ordinary and the permanent roll, "and before they are entitled to vote" they shall have paid their poll tax (if liable for poll tax under article 5, § 1, of the Constitution). Under the constitutional provisions prior to the amendment, every male person, born in the United States or naturalized, 21 years old, resident in the state 12 months and in the county 90 days (who was not disqualified by conviction of felony), was an "elector" (or "qualified voter," as the decisions styled him for lack of a better word), and, when registered, was entitled to vote. As the Constitution then stood, nothing more was required, and such person was a "registered voter." But the constitutional amendment made a radical change. It is now before us for the first time, and decisions as to "qualified voters" and "registered voters" under the former constitutional requirements as to suffrage throw no light upon the meaning of the new clauses which have taken their places in the Constitution.

Under the constitutional amendment of 1890, now Const. art. 6, § 1, every male person, born in the United States or naturalized, and possessing qualifications set out in this article, shall be entitled to vote, "except as herein otherwise provided." Section 2 requires two years' residence in the state, six months in the county and four months in the precinct (with disqualification by conviction of a penitentiary offense). Section 3 prescribes that a person offering to vote shall be a legally registered voter "as herein prescribed." Section 4 then provides that, in addition to the above qualifications as to age and residence, "every person presenting himself for registration shall be able to read and write any section of the Constitution in the English language" (unless registered under the "grandfather clause" later set out); "and before he shall be entitled to vote he shall have paid" on or before May 1st of that year, "his poll tax for the previous year" (if liable thereto under article 5, § 1); and even as to those registered under the grandfather clause and upon the "permanent record," who "shall forever thereafter have the right in all elections by the people in this state" (unless disqualified for crime) there is added, "Provided, such person shall have paid his poll tax as above required." This shows that under the former provisions one qualified by age and residence (and not disqualified by crime) was an "elector," and became upon registration a "registered voter"; but under the constitutional amendment one qualified by age and residence (and not disqualified by crime) is entitled to register, provided, further, he can read and write, as required, or can register under the "grandfather clause," but it is carefully added that in neither of those cases shall he become "entitled to vote" unless, further, he shall have paid his poll tax (if liable thereto) at the time prescribed. The constitutional amendment was carefully thought out and fully debated, both in the convention and before the people. There were doubtless good reasons, of public policy, for prescribing that no one, though otherwise qualified and duly and lawfully registered, should be entitled to vote unless he shall have paid his poll tax. Before that is done, he may be registered, but he cannot be a "registered voter," because he cannot vote. The General Assembly could prescribe such terms as it thought proper as a prerequisite to ordering an election. It could have dispensed with any petition, or it need not have required one-third or, indeed, that the petitioners should be "registered voters"; but, having done so, we are only authorized to hold those to be voters who the Constitution says are "entitled to vote"—i. e., those who, besides being lawfully registered, upon possessing the necessary qualification, have further paid the poll tax (if liable). The object in requiring one-third of the "registered voters" to join in the petition was doubtless to avoid the expense, turmoil, and heated controversy incident to an election of this kind, unless at least one-third of those entitled to vote in such an election should indicate their desire that such election should be held.

The order of the board of aldermen was proper upon the facts before them. In the view we take of the case, we have not found it necessary to express any opinion upon the right of the board to purge the registration list, though there are authorities which seem to justify that course. Duke v. Brown, 90 N. C. 127, 1 S. E. 873; Rigsbee v. Durham, 99 N. C. 348, 6 S. E. 64. Nor have we been inadvertent to the fact that under the former constitutional provision one who was an "elector" (i. e., qualified to register) was eligible to office, though not registered, and that under the "amendment" no one is eligible to office unless he is a "voter"—i. e., registered upon proper qualification and having paid his poll tax (if liable). There is no hardship in this. The same public policy which requires the payment of poll tax and registration, in addition to the qualification as to age and residence, to constitute a "voter," can surely require the same as to one who asks the suffrages of voters. If it be conceded that the board of aldermen had no right to purge the registration lists, then clearly the mandamus could not issue, for the petition with its 543 names did not contain one-third of the names (1,826) upon the registration lists. If the aldermen can purge the registration lists by striking off those voters who have become disqualified by removal or otherwise, they can surely purge it by striking off those who have never been entitled to vote because of the constitutional disqualification of not having paid their poll tax. It does not appear in the record that the tax list was the sole evidence resorted to, nor that such evidence was not corroborated by notice to the parties (as is probable) or otherwise, nor that any person affected alleged that his poll tax had been paid in fact, as would have been done if there had been any doubt as to any name which had been disallowed. Certainly there is no exception in the record to the method pursued, nor to the truth of the finding of nonpayment of poll tax as to any person, nor was any objection on that ground presented even in the argument here; but the plaintiffs earnestly and correctly contended that an appeal must be considered solely upon the exceptions set out in the record, save only exceptions that the court did not have jurisdiction or a cause of action is not stated, which objections alone can be taken for the first time in this court (rule 27 [39 S. E. vii] and cases cited in Clark's Code, pp. 921-924), and these objections are not open to the plaintiffs.

If the plaintiffs had any doubts as to the correctness of the findings of fact as to the nonpayment of poll tax by any one, they should have contested it before the aldermen, and could again have tried that point de novo before the judge; for, while the findings of fact by a superior court judge are binding upon us, the findings of fact by the aldermen were open to review before the superior court. In re Deaton, 105 N. C. 59, 11 S. E. 244. But, so far from the plaintiffs contesting the truth of the findings of fact as to the nonpayment of poll tax, the judgment recites that in the superior court it was "admitted by the parties, plaintiffs and defendants, that the only question to be considered in the case * * * is one of law, to wit, whether under section 7, c. 233, p. 290, Laws 1903, the payment of poll tax on or before May 1st of the year in which he offers to vote should be applied as a test of competency to sign the petition." This was the sole question that was, or could be, presented to us on the appeal. No one is disfranchised by this opinion, but it is simply held that upon the findings of fact, to which the plaintiffs made no exception, one-third of those entitled to vote at the proposed election have not signed the petition. This would not, of course, be an estoppel, nor preclude a further ascertainment of the fact in any election at which any party affected might offer to vote.

The judgment below is reversed.

BROWN, J. (dissenting). I regret to differ with my Brethren in any case, and especially in this, in which my natural inclinations strongly prompt me to concur. But my convictions are strong that the board of aldermen illegally struck from petition the names of a large number of those who had the legal right to sign it. I am of opinion (1) that the board had no power to strike them off for the alleged nonpayment of poll tax; (2) that the board has no authority to pass upon such fact; (3) that, if they have such authority, they exercised it in an illegal manner and based their finding upon utterly incompetent evidence.

1. The right to petition for an election in certain cases is a right of the private citizen given by law. It is as much a legal right to those to whom it is given as the right to vote is to those who possess the necessary qualifications. In my judgment the qualifications necessary to legally petition for an election include only those which are necessary to enable a person to register and thereby become what our Constitution plainly calls a "registered voter." These do not include payment of poll tax. The language of the statute is as follows: "Sec. 7. That it shall be the duty of the governing body of any city or town, upon the petition of one-third ($\frac{1}{3}$) of the registered voters therein, who were registered for the preceding municipal election, to order an election to be held," etc. Chapter 233, p. 290, Acts 1903. The Constitution (article 6, § 3) enacts that "every person offering to vote shall be at the time a legally registered voter as herein prescribed." Section 2 prescribes the only qualifications, but one, necessary to become a registered voter, referred to in section 3. These are residence in the state for two years, in the county six months, and in the election district four months, preceding the election. Section 4 adds the other, an educational qualification. There is, of course, the well-known disqualification for crime. Thus the man who registers becomes, in the language of the Constitution, a "registered voter." He may exercise the right or not as inclination or duty may prompt him. But before he can exercise it he is required by section 4 to pay his poll tax for the previous year, and such payment must be made on or before May 1st of the year in which he purposes to vote. When the Legislature used the words "registered voter" it used them in the sense in which they are employed in the Constitution and as previously defined by the courts. This is an elementary principle of the construction of statutes. This court as long ago as 1875 has made a broad distinction between a registered voter and a qualified voter, and that distinction has been generally recognized both by the General Assembly and the judiciary. Mr. Justice Rodman, speaking for a unanimous court, says: "A qualified voter is one who is entitled to register as a voter, and who is also qualified to vote after such registration." Railroad Co. v. Caldwell, 72 N. C. 493. Again he says in the same opinion:

"But in the idea of the Constitution the terms 'qualified voters' and 'registered voters' are not exactly co-extensive." See, also, Norment v. Charlotte, 85 N. C. 389. Having shown that the right to become a "registered voter" is a distinctive right given by the Constitution, and so recognized by the courts, the Legislature is presumed to have used the term in the significance so given it. The right to become a registered voter antedates the time fixed for the payment of poll tax, and therefore it follows that a registered voter, within the plain meaning of the Constitution, is one who has registered, but has not paid his poll tax. When he does the latter, he becomes a fully qualified voter. If the General Assembly had intended that only qualified voters should sign the petition, it would have used those words, and not the term "registered voters." It had the same power to require one as the other as a condition precedent to holding the election. With perfect deference for my Brethren, it seems plain to me that they have by judicial construction read into the statute words which the General Assembly never intended to place there. Inasmuch as the disability arising from not having paid poll tax post-dates registration in all cases, it is evidently regarded in the Constitution and statute as a temporary disability to vote, and not as a barrier to becoming a registered voter. The failure to pay this tax does not authorize the erasure of the delinquent's name from the registry of voters. It only disables him to vote at the succeeding election. When he registers he is made a registered voter by force of the Constitution. He may fail to pay poll tax for ten years, and then exercise his right to vote by the payment of poll tax for one year only. But ordinarily and with unchanged conditions he is not required to register but once. The failure to pay the tax does not affect in any way his status as a registered voter. So that, when the law says one-third of the registered voters for the preceding municipal election, it does not mean registered voters who might not be free to vote at a present election from failure to have paid poll tax by the 1st of the preceding May; but it means all whose names are upon the registration books as standing, permanent voters; that is, all who are potential voters. I have not reviewed the authorities cited in defendant's brief, because they are not noticed in the opinion of the court, and have, in my judgment, no application to the point under discussion, for the reason that we are now considering the law which prescribes qualification for petitioners for an election, and not qualifications for voters at an election.

2. We were invited by counsel on both sides to scrutinize this record with care. I have done so, and in the investigation of the case another reason, not mentioned in argument or brief, has occurred to me which greatly strengthens my conviction that the General Assembly used the words "registered voters" advisedly and in the sense they have always been used; that is, because the statute falls to give to the city authorities any power to determine who has not paid poll tax and fails to declare how the fact shall be proven and what evidence is necessary. It provides no machinery for this purpose. Whether a man is a registered voter can be easily determined by a simple inspection of the registration books. Whether or not he has paid his poll tax cannot be determined by an inspection of the tax-books. If that were allowed, the sheriff or tax collector could temporarily disfranchise any one by failing to enter the payment. The Legislature of 1901 was not willing to place the registered voter in the power of the tax collector, and so under the general election law enacted at that term the tax lists constitute no evidence whatever. They are utterly incompetent to prove anything. The entries of payment are ex parte. The voter has no control over them, and they are not evidence against him upon the fact of payment. There is no law that I can find that requires the sheriff to make the entry of payment of taxes upon the lists. Such entry is his own act, for his own convenience, and is not a public record. Noble v. Douglass, 56 Kan. 92, 42 Pac. 328. The act of 1901 provides that it shall be the duty of every sheriff and tax collector, between the 1st and 10th days of May, 1902, and biennially thereafter, to certify under oath a true and correct list of all persons who have paid their poll tax for the previous year on or before the 1st day of May, to the clerk of the superior court, who shall, within 10 days, record the same in a book to be provided for that purpose, keeping each township separate, and certify a true copy thereof to the chairman of the board of elections for such county. This is evidently for information for purposes of challenge. If it were permissible to refer to the taxbooks to determine who has paid poll tax, this certified list would be the best evidence of that fact, and not the sheriff's entries on the books. This list is the evidence provided for the board of elections, but it is not made evidence against the voter. The record in this case shows that the committee of the board of aldermen, appointed for the purpose of determining who had paid poll tax, referred only to the sheriff's taxbooks and accepted the entries there as conclusive evidence.

If the construction of the statute adopted by the majority of the court is the true one, and it was the intention of the Legislature that the words "registered voter," plain and unequivocal as they are, should mean "qualified voter," is it not strange that the governing bodies of cities and towns are given the naked power, necessarily implied under the court's construction, to determine who are qualified voters, and left without a vestige of machinery for such determination? Is it that the qualifications of a voter are to be left for determination to the uncertain judgment of a board of aldermen, to be allowed or denied in the absence of the voter and without the right to be heard? The statute does not suggest any means of determining who are and who are not qualified voters. It is silent as to the tax books. Where, then, is the authority to consult the sheriff's office for guidance? Where is the right to accept the sheriff's entries or lack of entries as conclusive of the payment or nonpayment of poll tax? It cannot be found in the statute. And yet the logical result of the opinion of the court is to construe into the act this authority. Is such a construction reasonable? I answer this by again referring to the general election law, enacted by the Legislature of 1901 and considered and approved by the Legislature of 1903, to show an unwillingness on the part of the Legislature to leave the right of suffrage to any such control, and to show the unusual care in providing machinery for the determination of the qualifications of a voter. Following the requirement that no person shall be entitled to vote unless he shall have paid his poll tax in accordance with the Constitution, the act provides: "Every person liable for such poll tax shall, before being allowed to vote, exhibit to the registrar his poll tax receipt for the previous year, issued under the hand of the sheriff or tax collector of the county or township where he then resided: * * * Provided, that in lieu of such poll tax receipt it shall be competent for the registrar and judges of election to allow such person to vote upon his taking and subscribing the following oath: 'North Carolina, ——— County: I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that on or before the first day of May, of this year, I paid my poll tax for the previous year, as required by article 6, section 4, of the Constitution of North Carolina.'" In enacting this provision the Legislature recognized that the exercise of the right of suffrage should be favored and not discouraged, and that the method of determining the existence of the right should be simple. It is true that the determination of the board of aldermen as to the payment of poll tax by the signers of the petition does not involve the right to vote, but only the right to call an election. But it matters not that the right to vote is not directly involved. The right to petition is a legal right conferred by the act, and this court says depends upon the right to cast a vote. Under the court's construction of the statute a resident of the city of Raleigh, or of any other city, although a registered and qualified voter, may be denied a voice in calling an election, because the board of aldermen in an ex parte proceeding, when he is not present, with no evidence before it save the tax list of the sheriff, may find that he is not a qualified voter. A supposed state of facts will show the injustice of the court's construction. A. has signed the petition for an election. The sheriff's tax list does not show that he has paid his poll tax. The board of aldermen on such negative and incompetent evidence erase his name from the petition. On the day of election he presents his tax receipt, or makes oath that he has paid his poll tax, and votes at the election, which he was denied the right to call. In this case the voter is refused the right of petitioning for a municipal election in which he has the right to vote.

As a further evidence of the importance of this machinery for determining the qualifications of a voter, it is provided by the general election law that the failure of the sheriff to give a tax receipt is a misdemeanor, and he is required, upon application and affidavit of the applicant that his receipt has been lost, to provide a duplicate receipt. The act, however, provides no penalty for a mistake in the list of persons who have paid their poll tax, and does not even require the entry to be made on the taxbooks, other than the list to be furnished the clerk of the court, which was not referred to by the board of aldermen in this case. That the taxbooks are subject to mistakes cannot be doubted. Is the voter, then, to be given no opportunity to correct such mistake, or make oath to the payment of his poll tax, and be entitled thereby to sign the petition? It seems to me to be a strained construction of the legislative intention to hold that, in the face of the specific machinery of the general election law for determining the qualifications of a voter, they should empower the governing bodies of towns and cities to adopt any method they should see fit to adopt to determine so important a matter. Is the voter, whose right to sign the petition is attacked, given the right by the terms of the statute, either express or implied, to be present when the matter is considered? Is he entitled to any hearing? Is he entitled to notice? Can he present his tax receipt or make oath that he has paid his poll tax? Can he show that he is exempt from poll tax? The statute gives no such rights. Then I must assume that these rights are denied him, and this assumption is supported by the facts in this case. The report of the committee of the board of aldermen of the city of Raleigh, in explaining the method pursued in determining the qualifications of the signers of the petition, says: "We examined the taxbook of the sheriff of Wake county for the year 1904, and found that two hundred and sixty six (266) persons whose names are on the registration books failed to pay their poll taxes for the year 1904 on or before May 1, 1905. Of these 266 names, we find 113 on the petition of persons whose names are on the registration books who failed to pay their poll taxes for the year 1904 on or before May 1, 1905." Is their conclusion justified? They say they examined the taxbooks only. They made such examination in the absence of the voter, and yet on this sort of incompetent evidence they conclude that the poll tax has not been paid and deny "registered voters" the right to petition for an election. Has the right of suffrage so far lost its sanctity that its exercise can be made dependent upon conclusions drawn from such evidence? Books, possibly incorrect, a committee, possibly mistaken, and from this the conclusion is drawn that 113 petitioners, all of whom are absent, have failed to pay their poll tax. And this unwarranted method is indorsed by this court because Mr. Webster defines a voter to be "one who votes, who is entitled to vote." It appears to me that this is a forced construction, and that it could not have been the intention of the Legislature to empower a board of aldermen to determine in an ex parte proceeding the qualifications of one offering himself as a voter, when the general election law was so solicitous in protecting the registered voter's right to prove his qualifications.

That the construction of a statute should be reasonable is familiar learning. That it should be construed in the light of existing legislation on the same subject is also well settled. What is a reasonable construction of the statute before us? The Legislature intended to provide a simple, convenient, and cheap method of petitioning and calling an election. A petition of a specified number of citizens was open to the objection that women and children, who are citizens in the broadest sense of the word, might sign it. A specific number of qualified voters was inconvenient, because, as I have pointed out, it would involve a cumbersome and tedious method of determining who are qualified voters. The Legislature met these objections by adopting the only alternative, the "registered voter," and provided that an election must be called "upon the petition of one-third ($\frac{1}{3}$) of the registered voters of any city or town." They did not use the word "voters" alone, because it is coextensive with qualified voters, and because it means, as the court defines it, "one who votes; one who is entitled to vote"; and there would be difficulty in determining this question. But they qualified it with the word "registered," thereby intending that the registration books, containing the names of the existing registered voters, should be final in determining the number of citizens having the right to sign a petition.

3. Assuming that the board has the implied power to determine who have not paid the poll tax, I am convinced that, without any wrongful purpose on their part, they have mistakenly exercised such power in an illegal manner. Although this point was not argued before us, it arises upon the complaint for mandamus. Omitting the voluminous exhibits attached to the complaint, it is short and simple, and alleges that the board wrongfully refused to count 118 names rightfully on the petition. It is the duty of the court to consider any view of the law where in the board may have erred in refusing to count those names. In Scott v. Life Ass'n, 137 N. O. 521, 50 S. E. 221, this court based its judgment solely upon a view of the law not mentioned in the record, and upon entirely different grounds than those assigned in argument. In the first place, I incline to the opinion that the board had no right to delegate its authority to a committee of two to pass on the fact of payment of poll tax. It is the exercise of practically a judicial function, and the board should have passed upon the matter themselves by a majority in regular session. In the second place, if the board has this implied power, in its exercise they should pursue the method pointed out in the election law. The voter's right to petition being a statutory right, and in the opinion of the court dependent upon his right to vote, should be passed upon in the same manner as his right to vote. The board should have summoned the 118 petitioners before them and called upon each to produce his tax receipt, or have given him the opportunity to take the oath I have quoted. It is not admitted in the complaint that these 118 citizens and registered voters, or any of them, have not paid their poll tax, and this plaintiff would have no right to make any such admission for them. Each petitioner has the personal right to have notice, be present, and be heard when his individual right to sign the petition is contested upon such ground, as much so as when his right to vote is challenged at the polls on election day upon the same ground. Then he is present and is heard in defense of his legal rights. Such just and reasonable right has been denied by the defendant in this case to each of the 118 petitioners whose names were arbitrarily stricken from the petition.

The court in its opinion says: "If it be conceded that the board of aldermen had no right to purge the registration lists, then clearly the mandamus could not issue, for the petition did not contain one-third of the names upon the registration list." This, of course, could only be true if the names of those who had not paid the poll tax are added to the registration lists, and those names on the petition who had not paid poll tax were not restored to the petition. If we restore the names to one, we must restore them to the other. It was admitted below, conceded here, and is expressly found by Judge Justice and acquiesced in by all, that if nonpayment of poll tax was not a disqualification, then the necessary one-third of voters had signed the petition. The count stands thus:

Original registration.....	1,828
Dead and removed.....	538
Registered voters.....	1,568
Necessary one-third.....	528
On petition.....	543
Names taken off by request.....	22
	521
Names added by request.....	18
	534

Excess on petition over one-third of registered voters..... 11

The above is the true estimate of those who are reported not to have paid poll tax and who are registered and on the petition. If they are excluded, then the petition lacks 16 of having one-third of registered voters. In view of the report of the committee as to the examination of the tax lists, I am at a loss to understand the statement in the opinion that it does not appear that the tax list was sole evidence before them. That is the plain statement in the report of the committee. "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius." No one disputes the right of the board to purge the registration books of the dead and removed; but, payment of poll tax not being a necessary qualification to register, the board has no right to purge the registration books of registered voters who are alleged not to have paid poll tax. Registrars and poll holders themselves cannot do that. How can it be logically said that a voter's name can be practically stricken from the registration books for the lack of a qualification not required to put it there? In behalf of these 118 private citizens, whose legal rights have been denied them, and who have practically been declared disfranchised without notice, hearing, or competent evidence, I enter my respectful dissent to the opinion and judgment of the majority of the court in this case.

I am authorized to say that Mr. Justice WALKER concurs in this dissent.

(124 Ga. 297)

PORTER v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1905.)

1. ARREST—AUTHORITY TO ARREST WITHOUT WARRANT — VIOLATION OF ORDINANCE — FLIGHT.

Pen. Code 1895, § 896, is applicable alike to state and municipal arresting officers. If an offender against a municipal ordinance is endeavoring to escape from justice, the marshal or policeman may lawfully arrest him without a warrant whilst so endeavoring to escape. But where it is not shown that the person attempted to be arrested by the marshal had violated any ordinance of the town, other than by proof of a verbal complaint made to the officer by another that the person sought to be arrested had created a disturbance, and he eluded the officer to prevent an illegal arrest, his avoidance of the officer by flight is not such an endeavor to escape as would justify his arrest without a warrant.

2. ASSAULT AND BATTERY — SHOOTING — RESISTING ILLEGAL ARREST.

The offense which one commits who fires at an arresting officer attempting an illegal arrest with a gun, and misses him, when such resistance is unnecessary to defend himself from the illegal arrest, is that of unlawfully shooting at another not in his own defense.

3. HOMICIDE—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO MURDER—EVIDENCE—RELEVANCY.

The ordinances of the town, defining disorderly conduct and prescribing the duties of the marshal, were relevant, as showing the authority of the marshal to make arrests for misconduct such as that he was informed the defendant was guilty of.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Stewart County; Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Oscar Porter was convicted of assault with intent to murder, and brings error. Reversed.

W. B. Hudson, Geo. Y. Harrell, and B. F. Harrell, for plaintiff in error. F. A. Hooper, Sol. Gen., and Graham & Forrester, for the State.

EVANS, J. Oscar Porter was convicted of the offense of assault with intent to murder. It appeared on the trial that the marshal of the town of Lumpkin was approached by a negro, John Anderson, upon the public square of the town, and requested to arrest the defendant upon a charge of disorderly conduct. The defendant was at the time but a short distance from the marshal, and had full opportunity to observe the marshal and Anderson in conversation. After listening to Anderson's complaint the marshal followed the defendant, who was walking down the street. The marshal quickened his pace, and the defendant also walked faster, when the marshal called him by name and told him to stop, whereupon the defendant ran in the direction of his home and disappeared from the marshal's view. The officer, some half or three quarters of an hour afterwards, discovered the defendant on the public square, sitting upon some piping with a gun resting upon his lap. The officer attempted to approach him unobserved, for the purpose of making an arrest upon the complaint which had been made to him. When the marshal got within 10 feet of the defendant, the latter suddenly sprang up, fired at the marshal, and then ran off. He was afterwards captured in another county. The marshal was in uniform and carried a club, but made no attempt to use it before he was fired upon. The marshal had no warrant for the defendant's arrest. No ordinance of the town was violated by the defendant in the officer's presence. At the time of the occurrence the mayor of the town "was at home, sick." An ordinance of the town, defining disorderly conduct and providing for the punishment of one guilty thereof, was introduced in evidence by the state, and also an ordinance defining the duties of the police force. The defendant in his statement contended that the shooting was accidental. In his motion for a new trial the defendant complains that the court erred in admitting in evidence the above-mentioned ordinances of the town, and also in charging the jury, and in refusing a certain request to charge. The motion was overruled, and error is assigned on the judgment denying the defendant a new trial.

1. The third ground of the amended motion assails the instruction of the court, therein excepted to, as contradictory and as not applicable to the facts of the case, and as being objectionable because it assumes that a marshal of a town may legally arrest without a warrant an offender against a municipal ordinance. The charge excepted to was as follows: "A marshal of a town has the right to arrest a person for the violation of the ordinances of the town, without any warrant for the purpose of doing so. It is not required that a city marshal or policeman shall have warrants to make such arrests; or, in other words, if they make the arrest without a warrant, that would not be an illegal arrest. While that is true, an officer of a city, a marshal or a policeman, would not be authorized, or rather it would be illegal, to arrest or attempt to arrest for an offense not committed in the presence of the officer, unless there was some other reason for which the law would authorize an arrest to be made, or an attempt to be made, without a warrant or a process of law for making such arrest. While that is true, if an ordinance of a city or town be violated by a person, and it should be reported to an officer that such ordinance had been violated, or that there had been a violation of a certain ordinance by a person, and such person should be attempting to flee, and make his escape, then such officer would have the right to proceed to make such arrest without a warrant; and if, in doing so, the person so fleeing resists arrest, and with a deadly weapon attempts to take the officer's life, he would be guilty of an assault with intent to commit murder." It is evident from an analysis of this instruction that the court meant that the power of arrest without a warrant could be lawfully exercised by a marshal, where the offender was attempting to escape. The language used in the beginning implied an unqualified power of arrest without a warrant, and might have misled the jury. Construing the whole charge complained of as an instruction that an officer without a warrant may arrest an offender who is endeavoring to escape, we think it was unauthorized by the facts. A reference to the statement of facts will disclose that the defendant, at the time of the shooting, was not attempting to escape, nor was he at the time trying to elude arrest by flight. On the contrary, what the defendant then did was to resist arrest. If the marshal could lawfully arrest without a warrant, the defendant could not legally interfere with the officer in the discharge of his duty.

The trial judge was evidently of the opinion that under the circumstances detailed by the marshal, upon whose testimony the state relied for a conviction, he was justified in attempting to arrest the defendant without a warrant, inasmuch as the defendant had taken to flight when first approached by the officer. Exception is taken to the following charge upon this subject: "Now, if you believe from the facts of this case that this defendant, Oscar Porter, had violated some of the penal ordinances of the town of Lumpkin, Mr. Bell, and if he was then in the presence of or in sight of the defendant, and the defendant attempted to flee, evade an arrest by escape, the city marshal would have the right to proceed to make that arrest without waiting to get any due process of law for the purpose of doing so; and if, in his endeavor to make that arrest under those circumstances without any warrant, the defendant should resist him and attempt to take his life, as charged in the indictment, he would be without justification in doing so, and the jury would be authorized to so find—a verdict finding the defendant guilty." The complaint made of this charge is that it did not correctly state the law applicable to the case, in that it amounted to an instruction that the "marshal could arrest the defendant upon mere request or demand, without a warrant or process," provided the defendant saw the party report him or demand his arrest for a past offense, and that, if the defendant attempted to prevent such arrest by flight, his mere effort to prevent such arrest would authorize his subsequent arrest; that the charge assumed there had been a violation of a municipal ordinance by the defendant, although there was no evidence that this was true; and that the charge excluded from the consideration of the jury the question whether or not there was any sufficient legal excuse for not obtaining a warrant before undertaking to make the arrest. Other instructions to the jury are excepted to on the ground that they likewise presented to the jury a theory of the case not authorized by the evidence and the law applicable thereto. These exceptions to the charge of the court seem to call for a somewhat extended review of the law relating to the right of a municipal peace officer to arrest, without warrant, a person who may have committed a violation of a municipal ordinance not in the immediate or constructive presence of the officer.

At common law certain officers were authorized to arrest without warrant under peculiar circumstances. Hale says: "There are certain officers and ministers of public justice that virtute officii are empowered by law to arrest felons, or those that are suspected of felony; and that, before conviction, and also before indictment. And these are under a greater protection of the law in execution of this part of their office upon these two accounts: (1) Because they are persons more eminently trusted by the law, as in many other acts incident to their office, so in this; (2) because they are by law punishable, if they neglect their duty in it. And therefore it is all the reason that can be that they should have the greatest protection and encouragement in the due execution of their office, since their actings herein are not arbitrary, but necessary, duties—not permissions—and under severe punishments in their neglect thereof. And hence it is that these officers that are thus intrusted may, without any warrant, but from themselves, arrest felons and those that are probably suspected of felonies; and, if they be assaulted and killed in the execution of their office, it is murder. And, on the other side, if persons that are pursued by these officers for felony or the just suspicion thereof—nay for breach of the peace or just suspicion thereof—as night walkers or persons unduly armed, shall not yield themselves to these officers, but shall either resist or fly before they are apprehended, or, being apprehended, shall rescue themselves and resist or fly, so that they cannot be otherwise apprehended, and are upon necessity slain therein because they cannot be otherwise taken, it is no felony in these officers or their assistants that upon inevitable necessity they kill them, though possibly the parties killed are innocent, for by their resistance against the authority of the king in his officers they draw their own blood upon themselves. The officers that I herein principally intend are (1) justices of the peace, (2) sheriffs, (3) coroners, (4) constables, (5) watchmen. And when I mention these I also include all that come to their aid and assistance; for every man in such cases is bound to be aiding and assisting these officers, upon their charge and summons, in preserving the peace and apprehending of malefactors, especially felons." 2 Hale's P. C. 85, 86. The term "policeman" has been held to be the legal equivalent of "watchman" at common law, with respect to the power to arrest without warrant. State v. Evans (Mo.) 61 S. W. 590, 84 Am. St. Rep. 669. Section 896 of our Penal Code of 1895 is a codification of the common law on the subject of arrest, with, perhaps, a slight enlargement of the power of arrest. That section reads as follows: "An arrest may be made for a crime by an officer, either under a warrant, or without a warrant if the offense is committed in his presence, or if the offender is endeavoring to escape, or for other cause there is likely to be a failure of justice for want of an officer to issue a warrant." In Thomas v. State, 91 Ga. 206, 18 S. E. 305, and in Brooks v. State, 114 Ga. 6, 39 S. E. 877, it was held that this section was applicable to municipal peace officers, such as policeman or town marshal.

The law is very jealous of the liberty of the citizen. In proportion as the offense is less serious, the greater the formality prescribed for the exercise of the power to deprive the citizen of his liberty. If the offense be a felony, an arrest may be made by a private person or an officer without a warrant, if the citizen suspected of the felony is endeavoring to escape; but, if the offense be a misdemeanor, then, even before an officer will be authorized to arrest, he must bring himself within the exception provided in Pen. Code 1895, § 896. It has been held that the prosecution of one charged with the violation of a municipal ordinance is not a "criminal case," within the meaning of that clause of our Constitution which preserves the right of trial by jury. Williams v. City Council, 4 Ga. 509; Floyd v. Commissioners, 14 Ga. 354, 58 Am. Dec. 559. On the other hand, such a prosecution has been held to be a "criminal case," within the meaning of the statute providing within what time a bill of exceptions must be tendered and signed. Barnett v. Atlanta, 109 Ga. 166, 34 S. E. 322. But whether the violation of a municipal ordinance be a crime in the usual sense of the term or merely an offense against the public, to be known by some more appropriate name, the citizen cannot be deprived of his liberty because of his infraction of the ordinance, unless at common law he was liable to arrest, or the power to arrest is given by statute. Under the citation from Hale, the power to arrest for such a minor offense without a warrant did not exist at common law. Therefore it must depend upon statute, and there is no statute, of which we are aware, authorizing a municipal police officer to make an arrest, save in compliance with the terms of the above-cited section of our Penal Code. As to the right to arrest without a warrant, under the common law or the charter power conferred upon a municipality, see Voorhees on Arrest, § 112 et seq., and McQuillin on Munic. Ord. § 306.

That the infraction of a municipal ordinance may not amount to either a felony or a misdemeanor, but is merely to be regarded as a violation of a municipal precept touching appropriate and becoming conduct on the part of the citizen, does not dispense with the requirements of the law with regard to issuing a warrant for his apprehension. That he has committed a very slight offense affords no reason for treating him as a criminal who has forfeited his personal right of liberty, and who may therefore be arrested without any formality whatever. The suggestion may be made that it is inconvenient or impracticable to procure a warrant before making the arrest of such an offender, especially in a large city where there would be difficulty in ascertaining his whereabouts and serving a warrant upon him. But the obvious reply to this suggestion is that our General Assembly has not as yet seen fit to authorize police officers to deprive a citizen of his liberty at their own time and pleasure upon bare suspicion or upon mere information that he has been guilty of the violation of an ordinance of the municipality. Again, it may be said that in incorporating certain towns and cities no provision has been made by the Legislature for the issuing of warrants for the apprehension of offenders against municipal ordinances. If this be true in point of fact, then the effect of such omission would be, not to abrogate the general law on the subject of arrest or to deprive the citizen in any measure of his right of personal liberty, but to afford the municipality no means of bringing the offender to account other than those for which the general law makes provision. The courts cannot undertake to supply the omissions of the legislative department of the state, but are bound to enforce the law as they find it.

So far as the town of Lumpkin is concerned, the somewhat recent act whereby it was granted a new charter unquestionably confers upon the mayor the power to issue warrants for the apprehension of persons charged with a violation of the ordinances of that town. Acts 1902, p. 492, § 9. In Williams v. Sewell, 121 Ga. 665, 49 S. E. 732, this court held that "A municipal charter which imposes upon the mayor the duty of seeing that the ordinances of the town are faithfully executed, and confers upon him jurisdiction to try all persons charged with violating such ordinances, authorizes the mayor to issue a warrant for the arrest for trial of one charged with the violation of an ordinance; and this is true, notwithstanding the charter does not in express terms authorize the mayor to issue a warrant for such purpose." So, it would seem, there was not "likely to be a failure of justice for want of an officer to issue a warrant"; the mayor being in town, though "at home, sick." That he was so incapacitated by his illness as not to be able, on the afternoon of the arrest or upon the following day, to attend to official business, does not appear. The name and identity of the accused were known. Haste was not imperative. Certain it is that the arresting officer did not undertake to make the arrest because of the impracticability of getting the mayor to issue a warrant, because he did not pretend that he based his right to apprehend the defendant upon any such ground. The case appears to have been tried upon the theory that the officer had a right, without a warrant, to arrest the defendant as an offender who was seeking to escape from justice, not one who had merely evaded an illegal arrest in the first instance and who had afterwards resisted with unlawful force a renewal of the officer's unauthorized attempt to place him in custody.

The charge of the court was not adjusted to the facts brought to light by the evidence. So far as appears, the defendant never manifested any intention of leaving the community or going beyond the corporate limits of the town. He refused to stop when ordered by the marshal to do so, and evaded the attempted illegal arrest by running off in the direction of his home. Some half or three-quarters of an hour afterwards he again appeared on the public square, thereby negating any impression the marshal may have had that he intended to become a fugitive from justice. When first approached by the marshal, the defendant could either have resisted the unlawful arrest by the use of all necessary force or have avoided the attempted arrest by running away from the officer. Thomas v. State, 91 Ga. 205, 206, 18 S. E. 305. He chose the latter alternative and successfully eluded arrest. After arming himself with a gun he reappeared on the public square. With what intention does not affirmatively appear. He was not an "escape," nor was he making any attempt then to escape, but was quietly sitting down and conversing with some other negroes. When the officer suddenly confronted him, he immediately shot at, but missed, him. He may have intended, when he returned with his gun, to resist any renewed attempt to arrest him; but he indicated no intention to become a fugitive from justice until he committed the grave offense of unlawfully shooting at the officer.

The court was requested to charge the jury that "every man, however guilty, has the right to shun an illegal arrest by flight; and when an attempted arrest is illegal, and the defendant prevents such illegal arrest by flight, the exercise of this right of flight should not and would not subject him to be arrested as a fugitive endeavoring to escape." This request was pertinent to the case, and should have been given, for the jury should have been instructed that the evasion of the illegal arrest which the defendant accomplished by running away from the officer when first approached by him, about sundown, did not render the defendant a fugitive from justice whom the officer might thereafter arrest, without a warrant, as an "escape," whenever and wherever the officer might find him. If one accused of a misdemeanor or a violation of a municipal ordinance may oppose an illegal arrest with commensurate resistance, or by flight, it would be begging the question to say that an evasion of an illegal arrest by flight would authorize his arrest as a fugitive endeavoring to escape.

In granting a new charter to the town of Lumpkin in 1902 the General Assembly provided that the mayor should "have control of the marshal and his duties and of all special officers" appointed for any purpose, and that he might "cause the arrest and detention of all rioters and disorderly persons in said town before issuing his warrant therefor." Acts 1902, p. 492. But the marshal was not clothed with any authority in the matter of arrest, in addition to that he might exercise under the general law, while not acting in concert with or under any specific orders from the mayor. It is not to be presumed the General Assembly was unacquainted with the general law on the subject of arrest, or acted unadvisedly in ignorance of the local conditions in that town, when the above-mentioned provision was made with respect to the circumstances under which the formality of issuing a warrant could be dispensed with. We must be content with the scheme for bringing petty offenders to justice which the Legislature has, in its wisdom, seen fit to adopt.

2. To slay an officer who is without authority of law to make an arrest for a misdemeanor, where the motive of the slayer is merely to avoid an illegal arrest, would be manslaughter and not murder. Croom v. State, 85 Ga. 718, 11 S. E. 1035, 21 Am. St. Rep. 179; Williford v. State, 121 Ga. 176, 48 S. E. 962. While one who has committed a misdemeanor may use proportionate force in resistance to an illegal arrest, yet, if the means employed to prevent his detention are disproportionate to the effort made to take him into custody, such disproportionate resistance is unlawful; and, if such unlawful resistance culminates in a homicide, the party seeking to avoid arrest is guilty of voluntary manslaughter. If he fires at the arresting officer with a gun and misses him, and such resistance is unnecessary to defend himself from an illegal arrest, the offense is no more than an unlawful shooting at another, not in his defense, and does not amount to an assault with intent to murder. Thomas v. State, supra. From the evidence it appears that the marshal attempted no bodily harm in bringing about the arrest of the defendant, and that the defendant's firing at him with a deadly weapon was without excuse. The defendant claimed in his statement that the discharge of the gun was accidental. The marshal's testimony indicated that it was intentionally discharged at him. Accordingly the case made out by the evidence was one of unlawfully shooting at another, while the defendant's statement presented the defense of accidental shooting. The verdict of the jury, finding the defendant guilty of the offense of assault with intent to murder, was wholly unauthorized.

3. The ordinance of the town, defining disorderly conduct and prescribing the duties of the marshal, were relevant, as showing the authority of the marshal to make arrests for misconduct such as he was informed the defendant was guilty of. But, while the marshal had authority to make arrests for violations of the ordinances, he could not lawfully make an arrest without a warrant, save under the circumstances enumerated in the Code section above cited. The purpose of that section is to guard the citizen against summary apprehension for a petty offense not committed in the presence of the arresting officer, and with the commission of which he is not charged under oath by the person who makes complaint to the officer, when the circumstances are not such as to justify an arrest without first procuring a warrant.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring, except BECK, J., not presiding.

LUMPKIN, J., with whom CANDLER, J., joins (concurring specially). I concur in the judgment granting a new trial in this case, but I am unable to concur in all of the reasoning on which this judgment is based. The charge of the presiding judge clearly contained one or more errors which necessitate the granting of a new trial. A patent error consisted in submitting to the jury for determination whether the defendant had in fact violated some of the penal ordinances of the town of Lumpkin, when there was no evidence whatever that he had done so. The proof on this subject was merely that the marshal had been informed that such a violation had taken place.

Somewhat greater latitude is allowed in regard to arresting for a felony than for a misdemeanor, but I am not prepared to concur in the idea that greater formality is required in arresting violators of municipal ordinances than criminals, under the state law. This is not directly stated to be the rule in the opinion of the majority, but the reasoning seems to lead to that result. The legislative intent appears to be that under some circumstances arrests for disorders may be made without a warrant. Thus, in reference to towns and villages for which incorporation is provided in Pol. Code 1895, § 683, it is declared (section 705) that it shall be the duty of the mayor to see that the peace and good order of the town or village are preserved, and that persons and property therein are protected, and to this end he may cause the arrest or detention of all riotous and disorderly persons in the town or village before issuing his warrant therefor. The charter of the town of Lumpkin contains a similar provision. The charter of Temple contains authority to the clerk to issue certain writs, including warrants, though not mentioned in Williams v. Sewell, 121 Ga. 665, 49 S. E. 732. See Acts 1901, p. 658, § 23. By Pen. Code 1895, § 902, conductors of passenger trains are invested with powers of police officers while on duty, and authorized to detain persons guilty of disorderly conduct on the train, and have them delivered to the proper authorities for trial as soon as practicable. In McRae v. Americus, 59 Ga. 168, 27 Am. Rep. 390, Bleckley, J., said: "Police ordinances are at once family rules on a large scale and state laws on a small scale. * * * In a city, we think, a man may fight in a way to violate an ordinance, without being guilty of an assault and battery." In Queen v. Atlanta, 59 Ga. 323, Jackson, J., said, in a concurring opinion: "To hold a police court to strict pleading would be to destroy, almost, if not altogether, its usefulness." See, also, Johnson v. Americus, 46 Ga. 80; Floyd v. Eatonton, 14 Ga. 354, 58 Am. Dec. 559; Williams v. Augusta, 4 Ga. 509; Hood v. Von Glahn, 88 Ga. 414, 14 S. E. 564; Littlejohn v. Stella, 123 Ga. 427, 51 S. E. 390. A policeman performs the duty of arresting, both for offenses against the state and those against municipal ordinances. He partakes both of the nature of a constable and a watchman at common law, with such added powers as may result from legislation.

As to the right to arrest without a warrant at common law, and as to night watchmen, see 4 Bl. Com. 292; 2 Hale's P. C. 98. The decisions cited from this state in the majority opinion arose in cases of arrests for offenses against the state, but if section 896 of the Penal Code of 1895 is to be treated as applying to arrests by policemen or marshals for violation of municipal ordinances, and as impliedly requiring a warrant, that section authorizes such an arrest without a warrant "if the offense is committed in his presence, or the offender is endeavoring to escape, or for other cause there is likely to be a failure of justice for want of an officer to issue a warrant." A policeman under city ordinances is as much under the protection of the law in making an arrest as any public officer. Johnson v. State, 30 Ga. 426. The expression "in his presence" does not necessarily mean in his sight. In Ramsey v. State, 92 Ga. 53, 17 S. E. 613, it was held that "an officer may arrest without warrant for wife-beating, if he arrives at the scene during the progress of or immediately after the beating; he being attracted thereto by the noise of the disturbance or the outcry of the woman." In Brooks v. State, 114 Ga. 6, 39 S. E. 877, it was held that "if a policeman, at a late hour of the night, hear a pistol shot within two blocks of his beat, and immediately thereafter discover a man running from the direction of the shot and towards him, he has a right to arrest him without a warrant." In Harrell v. State, 75 Ga. 842, it was held that "policemen ought to assist each other in arrests, and, when one hails another to stop a man running to a bridge which carries him into another jurisdiction, it is the duty of that other to seize and arrest the fugitive." In Thomas v. State, 91 Ga. 204, 18 S. E. 305, the evidence of the policeman was that he was called to arrest the accused by an old woman who kept a boarding house on the corner of Oak and Third streets, in the city of Macon, whose name he did not know or had forgotten; that she stated to him that the accused had broken into her trunk and had taken $29 and a few cents, and a coat; that she described the accused, and said she wished the policeman to look out for him; and that this was about three hours after the property had been stolen. The court charged: "If you believe from the evidence that the officer had been notified to look out for him as a thief, and that evening he approached to arrest him, and the defendant fled before the officer drew the weapon and without endeavoring to attack the defendant in any way, the defendant, while fleeing and the officer pursuing, drew the pistol and fired upon him, and you believe the pistol was a weapon likely to produce death, you would be authorized to convict him of assault with intent to murder." It was held that "this charge assumes that the facts enumerated would constitute probable cause for making the arrest without a warrant, whereas they might or might not; and whether they would or would not would be for the determination by the jury in the light of all the circumstances attending the case, including the facilities for obtaining a warrant according to the spirit of section 4723 of the Code." Thus, where it was attempted to make an arrest for the violation of a criminal law of the state, it was held that the jury should determine whether there was probable cause for making the arrest without a warrant.

In the present case I am of the opinion that there was sufficient evidence to authorize the judge to submit to the jury whether the offender was endeavoring to escape, or for any cause there was likely to be a failure of justice for the want of an officer to issue the warrant, if indeed the warrant was necessary. There was evidence to show that, when complaint was made to the marshal of the town, the accused saw what was occurring and began to leave; that, when, the marshal approached him, he ran away and could not be overtaken. If it should appear that one is guilty of disorderly conduct in violation of a municipal ordinance, and, upon seeing a policeman or the town marshal approaching leaves the scene, starts in a walk, breaks into a run, and finally escapes from sight in the gathering gloom of the evening by running, so that he cannot be found for the time being, it seems to me that it may well be submitted to a jury whether he was endeavoring to escape. It is true that the defendant obtained his gun, and about a half or three quarters of an hour later in the evening was found on the public square, where he attempted to kill the marshal when the latter appeared coming around the corner. The mere fact that he did not leave town is not conclusive that he was not attempting to escape. Very often the more populous centers afford a better means of hiding and escaping from justice than the sparsely settled country; nor is the fact that he obtained his gun and was seen on the public square such conclusive proof that he did not intend to escape as to authorize this court to assume the functions of a jury and determine that fact. It may be suggested that it was illogical for him to return to the public square, if he intended to escape altogether, and that so doing indicated that the intention was only to escape from illegal arrest. To borrow the thought of a great jurist, it is illogical to commit crime; and, if one does an illogical thing, it is not surprising that he does it in an illogical way, or acts illogically afterwards. The fact that the man ran and escaped from something is unquestionable. Whether his purpose was to escape altogether from arrest, or whether it was only to evade an illegal method of arrest, may well be left to the jury. This court may take judicial cognizance of many things, but I do not think that we can take cognizance of whether a fleeing violator of law intends to escape from arrest, or only from illegal arrest. Generally violators of law who flee are more interested in escaping arrest than in the question whether the officer is acting with due formality, or whether the arrest is to be classified as legal or illegal. In many instances of the commission of disorder, when the peace officer appears, the guilty parties immediately cease their violation of law and walk or run away. Strictly speaking, the offense is often not committed under the eye, or in the immediate presence of, the officer. But the gathered crowd is there. The disorder is going on until he appears or is sent for. Perhaps there are visible evidences of a breach of the peace or of disorder abandoned at his approach, and surely the perpetrators will not be allowed to escape on the theory (determined by the court, not the jury) that they were running away from the scene of the offense lest they be arrested without a warrant. To lay down such a rule would be to largely destroy the efficiency of peace officers. While illegal arrests are to be discountenanced, and are no more approved by me than by my Brethren, yet I think, under the evidence in this case, it was proper—certainly if the offense had been proved to have been committed by the defendant—to submit to the jury whether he was escaping, and whether the officer rightly undertook to arrest him without a warrant.

(124 Ga. 399)

PROVIDENT SAVINGS LIFE ASSUR.
SOC. v. GEORGIA INDUSTRIAL CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1905.)

1. MORTGAGES—COVENANTS—INSURANCE.

A covenant in a security deed that the borrower is "to keep the improvements on said premises insured in company or companies acceptable to [the lender] against loss or damage by fire," in a stated amount, and "also to fully insure all buildings to be erected on the premises [thereby] conveyed, with loss, if any, payable to" the lender, is not a covenant to pay in advance the insurance premiums. If the borrower procures the issuance of insurance policies on his own credit, and delivers them to the lender agreeably to his obligation, the covenant to keep insurance is not broken until the insurance policies are canceled by the insurance company.

2. INSURANCE—POLICY—CANCELLATION.

Where the policy stipulation was that it could be "canceled at any time by the company by giving five days' notice of such cancellation," and in the "loss payable clause" it was provided that the company reserved the right to "cancel this policy at any time, as provided by its terms, but in such case" the policy should "continue in force for the benefit only of the [lender] for ten days after notice to the [lender] of such cancellation," when it should cease, and that the insurance company should "have the right, on like notice, to cancel this agreement" relatively to the insured, the policy could not be canceled by the insurance company without giving the five days' notice to the insured.

3. MORTGAGE—ACCELERATING DEBT.

A provision in a security deed for accelerating the maturity of the debt should not be so construed as to work hardship on the borrower, where there has been a bona fide effort on his part to comply with his covenant, and the circumstances are such that his efforts at compliance were apparently acceptable to the lender. In such a case, when there has been no waiver of the covenant by the lender, good faith requires that he should, before undertaking to enforce the provisions of the deed accelerating the maturity of the debt for noncompliance with the terms of the covenant, afford to the borrower a reasonable opportunity to fully meet his obligations thereunder.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

Action by the Georgia Industrial Company against the Provident Savings Life Assurance Society. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

On March 25, 1904, the Georgia Industrial Company borrowed $40,000 from the Provident Savings Life Assurance Society, giving its promissory note for that sum, payable three years after date, and secured by a loan deed covering a tract of land in Hancock county. This deed contained the following covenants: (1) So long as the indebtedness, or any part thereof, remained unpaid, the borrower was to pay all taxes, etc., and agreed "to keep the improvements on said premises insured in company or companies acceptable to [the lender] against loss or damage by fires or lightning, in the sum of at least thirteen thousand dollars ($13,000), and also to fully insure all buildings to be erected on the premises hereby conveyed, with loss, if any, payable to" the lender or its assigns, "as their interest may appear, and that any tax assessment or premium of insurance not paid when due" might be paid by the lender or its assigns, and any sum so paid should be added to the amount of the principal debt, and should draw interest from the time of the payment at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, and be covered by the security of this deed. (2) The borrower further covenanted and agreed that, "in case of any default in the due payment of interest upon said principal debt at and when the same shall become due, or the due performance of any of the covenants herein expressed to be performed by the [borrower], and a continuance of said default for a period of ninety days, the said principal note, together with any and all sums paid for account of the [borrower], in accordance with the provisions above set forth," should, at the option of the lender or its assigns, "then and thereby became due and payable forthwith, with accrued interest and all expenses and costs of collection," etc.; time being of the essence of this contract. (3) In case the debt secured by this deed should not be paid when it became due "by maturity in due course, or by reason of a default, as above provided," then the lender or its assigns might "enter upon said premises, and collect the rents and profits thereof, and [might] sell the said property at auction, at the usual place for conducting sales at the courthouse in the town of Sparta, in Hancock county, in said state, to the highest bidder for cash, first giving four weeks' notice of the time, terms, and place of such sale, by advertisement once a week in the newspaper in which the sheriff's advertisements for Hancock county are published; all other notice being hereby waived" by the borrower. In January, 1905, the Provident Savings Life Assurance Society gave notice to the Georgia Industrial Company of its election to call the loan, claiming that the covenant respecting the keeping up of insurance and the improvements upon the premises covered by the loan deed had been broken, and that the default had continued for a period of more than 90 days. Shortly thereafter the assurance society took steps to exercise the power of sale conferred upon it by the loan deed, and advertised the property for sale on the 7th day of April, 1905. On April 5th the Georgia Industrial Company filed a petition to enjoin this proposed sale of the property, alleging in its petition that there had been no default arising out of a failure on its part to comply with its covenants under the loan deed, and that the assurance society was proceeding without right to exercise the power of sale therein provided for. The court issued a rule nisi, and on the interlocutory hearing passed an order enjoining the sale. To the granting of this temporary injunction the assurance society excepts.

W. H. Burwell and Jas. H. Gilbert, for plaintiff in error. Walter McElreath, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. (after stating the foregoing facts). 1. It appears that shortly after the loan was negotiated, the Georgia Industrial Company delivered to the assurance society certain insurance policies, amounting in the aggregate to $13,000, containing a stipulation that any loss sustained thereunder should be payable to the assurance society as its interest might appear. Some of these policies were issued by a firm of insurance agents without requiring the Georgia Industrial Company to first pay the premiums, thereon. Subsequently repeated demands were made upon it to pay these premiums, which the company neglected to do. On July 12, 1904, the insurance agency notified a representative of the assurance society that the efforts made to collect the past-due premiums on these policies had wholly failed, and that the companies issuing the policies had determined to cancel them for this reason. The representative of the assurance society requested the insurance agency to abstain from taking such action, and agreed in behalf of his principal that it "would hold itself responsible for, and would pay," the premiums on these policies, and also the renewal premium on another of the policies, which would expire on August 4, 1904, and which he requested the insurance agency to have "renewed in due course for the benefit of" the assurance society. The insurance agency assented to this proposal, and refrained from canceling the policies for nonpayment of premiums, relying upon the promise made by the representative of the assurance society that it would assume responsibility for the payment of premiums. Neither the insurance agency nor any representative of the assurance society notified the Georgia Industrial Company of this understanding and agreement. On July 29th the insurance agency addressed a letter to the president of that company, giving notice that one of the policies would expire on August 4th and requesting him to fill out and return an inclosed application for its renewal. The president of the company did so, the policy was accordingly renewed, and the insurance agency thereafter called on the company for payment of the renewal premium of $170 and accepted from it a partial payment of $100 thereon. Subsequently the insurance agency, despairing of being able to collect from the Georgia Industrial Company the unpaid premiums on policies issued to it, called on the assurance society for payment of the same, and payment thereof was made by it through its representative on January 23, 1905. Between July 12, 1904, and the end of the year, its local representative had been from time to time advised by the insurance agency of its unsuccessful efforts to collect these premiums, and reminded that the policies were being kept in life in reliance upon the promise made in behalf of his principal that payment by it would be made when required by the insurance companies. He regarded the continued failure on the part of the Georgia Industrial Company to pay the insurance premiums as amounting to a breach of its covenant to keep the improvements on the premises covered by the loan deed insured as therein stipulated, and accordingly, on January 16, 1905, gave written notice to that company that, inasmuch as it had failed to comply with this covenant, the assurance society had elected to exercise its option to declare the loan to be due and payable forthwith, and that the company would "also be held accountable for all premiums of fire insurance paid and to be paid by the society in connection with this matter." So far as appears, this was the first intimation the Georgia Industrial Company had that the assurance society had entered into any agreement with the insurance agency with respect to the payment of premiums. As late as January 3, 1905, the company was advised by a letter written by the secretary of the assurance society, and sent from its office in New York, that one of the policies would expire on the 15th of that month, and that the society would be "pleased to receive a renewal of the same, or other acceptable insurance, on or before that date." The assurance society now insists that the Georgia Industrial Company failed to keep up the required amount of fire insurance in compliance with its covenant, and that its default in this respect dates from the 12th day of July, 1904, since which time the requisite amount of insurance has been kept in life solely by reason of the society's agreement to pay premiums, and not upon the faith of any credit extended to the company by the insurance companies or their agents.

The policies of insurance which were issued to the Georgia Industrial Company were not invalid or ineffectual because of the nonpayment of any premium, and could not become so until the insurance companies canceled them pursuant to the terms therein expressed. When the insurance companies issued these policies without demanding payment in advance of the premiums, they became immediately binding. Their delivery to the insured or its creditor at the instance of the insured was equivalent to an express waiver of prepayment of premiums. The insurance companies could thereafter cancel the policies only upon the terms and conditions of the contract with the insured as expressed in the policies. Each of them contained this stipulation: "This policy shall be canceled at any time by the company by giving five days' notice of such cancellation." In the "loss payable clause" it was provided that: "The company reserves the right to cancel this policy at any time, as provided by its terms; but in such case this policy shall continue in force for the benefit only of the society for ten (10) days after notice to the society of such cancellation, and shall then cease, and this insurance company shall have the right, on like notice, to cancel this agreement." Under the terms of the policy, if there had been no "loss payable clause" attached, the giving to the insured of five days' notice of intention to cancel was a condition precedent to the cancellation of the policy. Where there is a "loss payable clause," and it is sought only to cancel this clause, ten days' notice must be given to the party to whom the loss is made payable. If the company desires to cancel the policy in its entirety, both as to the insured and as to the party who holds it as security, five days' notice is required to be given to the insured, and ten days' notice to the person named in the "loss payable clause." No notice of an intention to cancel any of the policies was ever given to the Georgia Industrial Company prior to the date on which the assurance society announced its election to call the loan. The evidence warranted the conclusion that, up to that date at least, the insured was under the bona fide belief that the policies were still in force and were being kept in life upon the faith of the credit extended to it by the insurance companies through their agents. The notification given to the assurance society by the insurance agency of an intention to cancel the policies for nonpayment of premiums was not notice to the insured; and the agreement between the assurance society and the insurance agency that, upon the assurance of the payment of premiums by the society, the policies would not be canceled, could in no wise affect the rights of the insured under the policies, the insured not being a party to this agreement and being wholly ignorant of such an arrangement. The policies of insurance evidenced what was in the nature of a tripartite contract, and two of the parties thereto could not, by any such secret understanding between them, deprive the other party to the contract of any benefit assured to him thereunder. Otherwise, it would be within the power of a mortgagee and an insurance company to secretly terminate the insurance and declare a default in a covenant by the insured to keep up insurance on the mortgaged property, when by the very terms of the insurance contract a default had not occurred. The borrower's covenant was to keep the improvements on the premises insured, not to pay the insurance premiums in advance. If the borrower procured the insurance in accordance with the terms of this covenant, the covenant was not broken because the insurance companies, after extending credit to the borrower, instead of exacting cash payment of the premiums, became dissatisfied because payment was unduly deferred and expressed to the lender an intention to cancel the policies for nonpayment of premiums. The insurance companies had the right to cancel the policies upon giving to the insured five days' notice of an intention to do so; but, until this notice was given the insured, the policies were binding on the insurance companies, and afforded to the lender all the protection with which they would have surrounded the lender had payment of the premiums been made in advance. As no notice of an intention to cancel the policies was given to the insured, they remained of force, independently of the secret understanding between the insurance agency and the lender, up to the time the loan was called on January 16, 1905. The lender could not proceed to sell the property pledged as security for the loan under the power of sale contained in the loan deed until a default in keeping up the insurance had occurred and had continued for a period of 90 days. The borrower was not in default because of nonpayment of insurance premiums when the loan was called, and yet the property was advertised for sale April 7, 1905, less than 90 days after the insured for the first time was informed of the lender's undertaking to guaranty payment of the insurance premiums if the companies, which had extended credit to the borrower therefor, would refrain from canceling any of the policies and keep them in force for the benefit of the lender. The court below, therefore, rightly held that the failure on the part of the insured to pay the insurance premiums did not constitute a continuing breach of the covenant to keep the improvements on the premises insured for the protection of the lender.

2. The borrower's covenant was to keep up insurance, in an amount not less than $13,000, for the benefit of the lender, on the improvements upon the premises described in the loan deed. These improvements were not of such value as to enable the borrower to secure insurance thereon for that amount, and the lender did not, therefore, insist upon a literal compliance with the covenant. On the contrary, the lender, with knowledge that certain buildings belonging to the borrower were located on the right of way of a railway company, and not upon the premises covered by the loan deed, accepted policies of insurance taken out on these buildings for the lender's protection, and treated the insurance thus effected, in addition to that represented by other policies tendered at the same time, as amounting to a substantial compliance with the terms of the covenant. Strict compliance therewith was therefore waived. One of the policies delivered by the Georgia Industrial Company to the assurance society was taken out on a dwelling house which was neither located on the premises covered by the loan deed nor erected on land to which the company had title. The policy stipulated that it was to be regarded as void if the insured did not have the title in fee to the land on which the building was located. The assurance society contends that, at the time it accepted this policy as security, it believed the house was located on the premises included in the security deed, and that its discovery that the dwelling house was located on other land was made pending the present litigation. It further insists that as this policy was included among those making up the total amount of insurance covenanted to be effected and maintained, and as this policy was void from its inception and afforded the society no protection, the covenant of the Georgia Industrial Company has never been kept, either literally or substantially. It is not denied that the land on which this house was built is not embraced in the tract described in the security deed, nor that the fee-simple title to the land is in one other than the insured. But evidence was submitted in behalf of the company authorizing a finding that it had an insurable interest in the house, and that it acted in good faith in effecting insurance thereon and tendering the policy to the lender in an effort to comply substantially with the covenant to keep the improvements on the premises described in the loan deed insured to an amount not less than $13,000. The president of the Georgia Industrial Company deposed that, from certain facts narrated by him, he inferred that the assurance society had knowledge concerning the true location of this dwelling house. The evidence offered in this connection was not such as to warrant the conclusion that the assurance society had actual knowledge of the fact that the house was not located on the premises included in the loan deed, but was sufficient to support the finding of the court that the insurance on this house was effected in good faith by the borrower in a bona fide effort to insure the lender against possible loss. The manifest purpose of the covenant to keep the improvements on the premises insured was for the better securing of the loan. If, in a bona fide effort to comply substantially with this obligation, the covenantor, acting under the belief that the lender had signified a willingness to waive a strict compliance with the covenant, which was impossible of literal performance, tendered to the lender a policy taken out on a building in which the covenantor had an insurable interest, but which was not located on the premises described in the loan deed, nor on land to which the covenantor had a fee-simple title, and the policy was accepted and retained by the lender without knowledge of the facts, and with no intention to waive any right under the covenant, good faith on the part of the lender would require that it should, upon discovery that the policy afforded it no protection, return the policy to the covenantor and afford it an opportunity to substitute acceptable insurance, before arbitrarily declaring that the covenantor was in default and demanding an immediate payment of the loan. The contract contemplated that the borrower should effect insurance which was acceptable to the lender. The time for rejecting policies of insurance which were not acceptable was when the policies were tendered to the lender in an effort by the borrower to comply with the terms of the covenant. So long as the assurance society retained the policy taken out on the dwelling house, the Georgia Industrial Company might well assume that the former recognized that there had been a substantial compliance with the terms of the covenant. Of, course, the assurance society, by retaining the policy in ignorance of the true state of facts, did not waive its right to exact compliance with the covenant; but, when it discovered that the policy of insurance in its possession was upon property not included in the loan deed, it should have promptly offered to return the policy and made demand upon the covenantor to substitute therefor a policy which was acceptable, unless the Georgia Industrial Company had by deception and artifice perpetrated an actual fraud upon it by inducing it to accept the policy in the first instance, and was therefore knowingly and deliberately in default from the beginning of the transaction. The court below expressly ruled that, so far as this branch of the case was concerned, it should be made to turn upon the question of the good faith of the Georgia Industrial Company in effecting this particular insurance, and tendering the policy to the assurance society. While provision for accelerating the maturity of a secured debt was not generally to be regarded as in the nature of forfeitures, yet such provisions should not be so construed as to work hardship where there has been a bona fide effort to comply with the obligations assumed by the borrower. Rounsavell v. Crofoot, 4 Ill. App. 671. The presiding judge found that the Georgia Industrial Company had acted in good faith in its efforts to keep its covenant; and he did not abuse his discretion in refusing to treat the partial failure to comply therewith, as such a default as would give the assurance society, an immediate right to exercise the power of sale, without offering to return the policy objected to, and affording the covenantor a reasonable opportunity to substitute insurance which was satisfactory.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 69)

TOWSEND v. STATE.

SAME v. BROACH.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT—FRAUDULENT BREACH.

The act approved August 15, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 90), entitled "An act to make it illegal for any person to procure money, or other thing of value on a contract to perform services, with intent to defraud, and to fix the punishment therefor, and for other purposes," is not repugnant to the Constitution of Georgia, nor to the Constitution of the United States, for any of the reasons assigned in the demurrer to the accusation based upon a violation of the terms of said act.

2. SAME—EVIDENCE.

But, the verdict being without evidence to support it, the court erred in not granting a new trial.

3. HABEAS CORPUS—ILLEGAL DETENTION.

Inasmuch as the act above referred to was not void as being unconstitutional, the detention of the defendant under the sentence of the court upon his conviction of the offense of being a common cheat and swindler under the provisions of said act was not illegal.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Floyd County; Harper Hamilton, Judge.

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; Moses Wright, Judge.

Jim Towsend was convicted of crime, and brings error. Reversed.

He also brings habeas corpus against T. B. Broach, jailer. Judgment for defendant, and petitioner brings error. Affirmed.

H. F. Sharp, for plaintiff in error. W. H. Ennis, Sol. Gen., for defendants in error.

BECK, J. Towsend was accused of being a common cheat and swindler under the provisions of the act approved August 15, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 90); the accusation charging that, after having contracted to perform certain services for the prosecutor, he procured money and other things of value from him with intent not to perform the services, "to the loss and damage of" the prosecutor. The accused demurred to the accusation, on the ground that it did not set out with sufficient certainty the articles of merchandise alleged to have been advanced. He also demurred on the ground that the statute under which the defendant was accused was void, being contrary to the principles contained in article 1, § 1, par. 17, of the Constitution of Georgia, as well as contravening the federal Constitution, and violating the law in reference to peonage as contained in section 5528 of the United States Compiled Statutes of 1901. Both demurrers were overruled, to which the defendant excepted pendente lite, and the case preceeded to a trial. Upon the hearing the prosecutor testified that under the contract referred to in the accusation he was to furnish the accused with 25 acres of land and a mule, the accused was to furnish the labor and supplies, and they were to divide the proceeds of the crop. It was further agreed that the prosecutor was to procure the supplies for the defendant, and that the defendant was to pay him for them out of the defendant's share of the crop. The prosecutor also testified: "He rented the land from me, and agreed to cultivate the land on the halves." The defendant in his statement contended that he had rented the land from the prosecutor, and that, as to the money he had gotten from the prosecutor, he intended to work for one Hight in order to get money with which to pay it; that he was thus at work for Hight when he was arrested. The jury returned a verdict of guilty. The defendant made a motion for a new trial, upon the general grounds, and because the court refused written requests to give in charge the following: "A cropper is not a hirer in the sense of the statute." "Confinement in jail is good and sufficient excuse for not complying with his contract." "Before you can convict, the state must show that, before the defendant was confined in the jail of Floyd county, the time had come when the money was to be paid or the labor performed." The court overruled the motion, and the defendant excepted.

1. The contention of the plaintiff in error that the court erred in overruling his demurrer upon all the grounds thereof, which are substantially set forth above, is settled adversely to him by the ruling of this court in the case of Lamar v. State, 120 Ga. 312, 47 S. E. 958. The ruling in that case is clearly adverse, also, to his contention that the act approved August 15, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 90), is repugnant to peonage statutes, "for that its ultimate object is imprisonment for debt." "It is reasonably clear that, in enacting the statute now under consideration, the Legislative purpose was not to punish one simply for a failure to pay a debt, but was to punish the act of securing the money or property of another with a fraudulent intent not to perform the service, the promise to do which was the consideration of such money or property. * * * Our statute is not subject to such a construction." Lamar v. State, supra; Banks v. State, 52 S. E. 74.

2. But, while the court properly overruled the demurrer to the accusation, the contention of plaintiff in error, in his motion for a new trial, that the verdict in the case was contrary to the evidence and to the law, contains, as it seems to us, an assignment of error that is meritorious. Under the prosecutor's own testimony the relation between him and the plaintiff in error was not one of hirer and employé, or of landlord and cropper, but was that of landlord and tenant. There is nothing in the record to show that the relation of landlord and cropper existed between the prosecutor and the accused. It is true that the prosecutor did testify that he was "to furnish supplies," but in immediate connection with this it is disclosed that he meant, by the expression "furnish supplies," that he was to let the defendant have them on credit; the latter being expected to pay for them out of his half of the crop. That the contract between them was one of rental is shown, also, very clearly by the defendant's statement, which is substantially in accord with the testimony of the prosecutor; and the court should have granted a new trial on the ground that the verdict was contrary to law and the evidence. Except as indicated in the above, no errors of law were committed.

3. Subsequently to the conviction of the defendant, he filed his petition for habeas corpus against Broach, deputy sheriff and jailer of Floyd county, alleging that his conviction and the ensuing sentence against him were void upon the same grounds as those set forth in the demurrer. The court denied the petition and refused the writ, to which ruling the plaintiff in error excepted, and by writ of error brought said ruling to this court for review. It follows, from what we have said in the first division of this opinion, that there was no error in the court's action and judgment upon the petition for habeas corpus.

Judgment in the one case reversed; in the other affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 72)

JAMES v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

1. STATUTES—TITLE OF ACT.

The act of February 26, 1877 (Acts 1877, p. 335), prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors upon the Island of St. Simons, is not unconstitutional as containing matter different from that expressed in its title, nor as referring to two subject-matters.

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS—REPEAL OF STATUTE.

If there is an irreconcilability between the domestic wine act of February 27, 1877 (Acts 1877, p. 33), and the act referred to in the preceding note, the conflict extends only to the sale of that class of wine, the sale of which is the subject of the general law, and the local act would be unrepealed, so far as it related to intoxicating liquors other than wine of the character referred to in the general law.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Brunswick; A. D. Gale, Judge.

Mimie James was convicted of illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, and brings error. Affirmed.

The accused was arraigned upon an indictment in which it was charged that she "unlawfully did sell and barter intoxicating liquors on the Island of St. Simons, in the county of Glynn." The indictment was preferred under an act (Acts 1877, p. 335) of which the following is a copy:

"An act to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors of any and every kind upon the Island of St. Simons, in the county of Glynn.

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of Georgia, that from and after the passage of this act, it shall not be lawful for any person to sell, or barter, in any quantity whatever, intoxicating liquors of any kind upon the Island of St. Simons, in the county of Glynn, or upon any river, creek, inlet, within the boundary line of said island.

"Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, that any person violating the first section of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction in any court having jurisdiction of misdemeanors, shall be fined a sum not less than one hundred or more than five hundred dollars, in the discretion of the court, or imprisoned at the discretion of the court, not less than two or more than twelve months."

A demurrer was filed, which set up that "the act is unconstitutional: First. Because it contains matter different from that expressed in the title. (a) The title refers to a prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors, and the body of the act prohibits not only the sale, but the barter, of such liquors. (b) The title prohibits the sale upon the Island of St. Simons, in the county of Glynn, and the body of the act prohibits the sale not only upon the island, but upon any river, creek, or inlet, within the boundary line of said island. (c) The title of the act contains no language indicating a purpose to make the sale or barter penal, while the body of the act makes such sale or barter a misdemeanor. Second. The act was repealed by the domestic wine act of 1877 (Acts 1877, p. 33). Third. The act contains two subject-matters, the sale and barter of intoxicating liquors upon the Island of St. Simons, and relates to the sale and barter, not only upon the island, but upon streams within the boundary lines of said island, and provides a penalty for both the barter and the sale of intoxicating liquors." The demurrer was overruled, and the accused excepted.

J. D. Sparks, for plaintiff in error. Jno. W. Bennett, Sol. Gen., and J. T. Colson, for the State.

COBB, P. J. A sale in its broadest sense comprehends any contract for the transfer of property from one person to another for a valuable consideration. Century Dictionary; Cain v. Ligon, 71 Ga. 694, 51 Am. Rep. 281. It is often used in a more limited sense as embracing only those contracts which are founded upon a money consideration. In an act prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors the word "sale" is to be construed in its broad and comprehensive sense, and therefore includes what is commonly known as barter and exchange. McGruder v. State, 83 Ga. 616, 10 S. E. 281 (5); Griffin v. State, 115 Ga. 577, 41 S. E. 997 (4); Paschal v. State, 10 S. E. 821, 84 Ga. 326. The word "sale" in the title authorized legislation upon the subject of barter. The title of the bill indicates a purpose to provide legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors upon the Island of St. Simons. This is sufficiently broad to authorize legislation reaching every part of that island. That provision in the body of the act which in terms makes the provisions of the act applicable to rivers, creeks, and inlets within the boundary line of the island is therefore within the terms of the title. The title does not in terms refer to a penalty to be imposed for a violation of the provisions of the act. But the word "prohibit," which appears in the title, is sufficiently broad to authorize legislation making penal the sale which is prohibited by the act. The law cannot effectually prohibit an act unless some penalty is imposed for its violation. Without penalty there would be no effectual prohibition. Even though the title omits the usual words "and for other purposes," a penalty for its violation is germane to the scheme of the act as indicated by its title, which is to prohibit the sale of liquors. In Sasser v. State, 99 Ga. 54, 25 S. E. 619, the title referred simply to prescribing the method of granting licenses for the sale of liquor, and increasing the fee for such licenses, and language of this character was not broad enough to embrace the subject of a penalty for the sale without a license. The act did not contain two subject-matters. The subject-matter of the act was the prohibition of the sales of every nature and kind of intoxicating liquors upon all of the territory embraced within the limits of the island. The subject-matter of the act was thus single; and while it dealt with both sale and barter, and sales upon land and sales upon water, it was at last merely an act to prohibit the sale in all parts of the island.

The act under which the indictment was preferred was approved February 26, 1877, and the domestic wine act was approved February 27, 1877. The domestic wine act related merely to sales in quantities not less than one quart by manufacturers of wine made from grapes the product of vineyards in this state. If the passage of this general law had the effect to repeal any part of this local law for St. Simons Island, it certainly did not repeal it in its entirety. If any part of the prior local act was repealed by the subsequent general law, only such part was repealed as is in irreconcilable conflict with the general law. The indictment was in the language of the local act, and was therefore a good indictment under that act. If upon the trial it should appear that the accused was a manufacturer of wine from grapes, within the terms of the domestic wine act, and sold only the wine referred to in that act and in the manner therein referred to, then the question as to whether the local act was repealed, so as to authorize the sale of such wine, might become material. But if it appeared that the accused sold intoxicating liquors of a character not referred to in the domestic wine act, or if she sold domestic wine in quantities not authorized by that act, she could be properly convicted of a violation of the local act. The indictment was not subject to any of the objections set up in the demurrer.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 75)

BASS v. LAWRENCE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

1. STATUTES—SUBJECT-MATTER—TITLE.

The title of the act approved December 15, 1900 (Acts 1900, p. 345), to wit, "An act to cause and establish a new charter for the city of Milledgeville; to establish the office of recorder; to enlarge the jurisdiction of the police court; to more accurately regulate the power of the mayor and aldermen of said city relative to the public streets; to provide methods of contesting elections; to confer power upon the mayor and aldermen to assess and collect taxes and licenses; to authorize condemnation of private property for public purposes; to authorize the establishment of a city chain-gang; to confer jurisdiction upon the mayor and aldermen over the city cemetery and other public property; to regulate the establishment of nuisances; to authorize the collection of gross-sales tax; to provide for support of schools within the limits of said city, and for other purposes"—contains only one subject-matter, and that is the grant of a new charter to the city of Milledgeville, with such incidental powers as are germane to that object.

2. SAME — PROVISIONS NOT INCLUDED IN TITLE.

The sixty-fifth section of the act (Acts 1900, p. 364) which provides that "all ordinances or ordinance, or any part, clause, or section of any act or acts now in force in said city, which is not in conflict with this act, are hereby continued to be a part of the charter of said city, and are hereby declared of full force and effect," is broader than the title of the act, and such provision is void because it is variant from what is expressed in the title.

3. SAME—EFFECT.

But the entire act is not void. The remainder of the act is complete in itself, and capable of being enforced independently of the provisions of the sixty-fifth section (Acts 1900, p. 364), and is therefore valid.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—POLICE COURT—AUTHORITY—HABEAS CORPUS.

The police court had full jurisdiction to enforce the ordinances of the city and to impose sentences for their infraction and where a person pleads guilty to the violation of an ordinance the validity of which is not questioned, and is in the custody of the proper officer by virtue of the sentence lawfully imposed by the court, his detention is not illegal.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Baldwin County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

Habeas corpus proceedings by E. E. Bass against J. H. Lawrence. From a judgment remanding petitioner, he brings error. Affirmed.

Hines & Vinson, for plaintiff in error. J. E. Pottle, Sol. Gen., and Allen & Pottle, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. The contention of the plaintiff in error is that he is illegally restrained of his liberty, for the reason that the judgment and sentence of the recorder's court of the city of Milledgeville is void, because the act of the General Assembly granting a new charter to that city, approved December 15, 1900 (Acts 1900, p. 345), is violative of paragraph 8, § 7, art. 3, of the Constitution of this state (Civ. Code 1895, § 5771), in that the act contains matter which is not expressed in its caption, and also embraces two separate and distinct subject-matters. The title of the act is as follows: "An act to cause and establish a new charter for the city of Milledgeville; to establish the office of recorder; to enlarge the jurisdiction of the police court; to more accurately regulate the power of the mayor and aldermen of said city relative to the public streets; to provide methods of contesting elections; to confer power upon the mayor and aldermen to assess and collect taxes and licenses; to authorize condemnation of private property for public purposes; to authorize the establishment of a city chain-gang; to confer jurisdiction upon the mayor and aldermen over the city cemetery and other public property; to regulate the establishment of nuisances; to authorize the collection of gross-sales tax; to provide for support of schools within the limits of said city, and for other purposes." The 65th section (page 364) of the act provides: "That all laws contained in the several acts granting charter powers and privileges to said city, or the mayor and aldermen thereof, and the several acts amendatory thereof, and all ordinances or ordinance, or any part, clause, or section of any such act or acts now in force in said city which is not in conflict with this act, are hereby continued to be a part of the charter of said city, and are hereby declared of full force and effect." It is insisted that the matter embraced in this section is entirely distinct from the objects of the legislation as expressed in the title of the act.

In Mayor of Macon v. Hughes, 110 Ga. 795, 36 S. E. 247, after an elaborate collation and examination of the previous adjudications of this court, it was held that, where the title of an act specifies some of the objects for which the statute was passed, and contains the general expression "and for other purposes," any legislation could constitutionally be embodied in the body of the act which was germane to the general subject expressed in its title. If the words "and for other purposes" had been omitted, the matter in the body of the act would be limited by the caption. The whole of the act would not be void, but that portion of the body of the act to which no reference was made in the title would fail, as being opposed to par. 8, § 7, art. 3, of the Constitution. Sasser v. State, 99 Ga. 54, 25 S. E. 619. So, under the constitutional provision that "no law or ordinance shall pass which refers to more than one subject-matter, or contains matter different from what is expressed in the title thereof" (Civ. Code 1895, § 5771), an act may be good in part and void in part, or the act may be absolutely invalid. If both the title and the body of the act contain separate and distinct subject-matters, the act will be void in its entirety, since it would be impossible to tell what particular object rather than another of those referred to the legislation was intended to accomplish. But if only one subject-matter is covered by the title of the act, the fact that matter not therein referred to is embraced in the body of the act will not necessarily render it wholly inoperative. To the extent that certain provisions found in the body of the act are not referred to in its title, it will be unconstitutional. It will be operative, however, as to those provisions which are covered by its title, if the legislative scheme will not be defeated by the rejection of so much of the matter embraced in the body of the act as is not referred to in its caption. If the legislative intent, as expressed in the title, can be given effect by enforcing such of the provisions of the act as are referred to in its caption, then the enactment may be deemed complete, and capable of enforcement save as to such additional provisions as render it in part unconstitutional.

It was urged by counsel for the plaintiff in error that this view is antagonistic to that announced by this court in Brieswick v. Brunswick, 51 Ga. 639, 21 Am. Rep. 240. Even a cursory examination of that case will suffice to show that Chief Justice Warner, who wrote the opinion of the court, did not intend to be understood as saying the whole of the act then under consideration was void, but only one of its provisions, which was not referred to in its title. All that was decided was that this provision, which was similar to that embraced in section 65 of the act creating a new charter for the city of Milledgeville, related to a subject-matter different from that referred to in the title, and that to this extent the act was invalid, because violative of the constitutional inhibition above mentioned. It is manifest that the court did not undertake to hold that, because the body of the act embraced provisions relating to more than one subject-matter, the act was void in its entirety. If such was the view entertained by the court, there was no occasion for the Chief Justice to take pains to point out that the provision of the act which was declared to be unconstitutional was not covered by the caption of the act, because not germane to the purpose therein expressed.

The decision rendered in the Brieswick Case may be regarded as controlling in the present case in so far as the constitutionality of section 65 of the act now under consideration is concerned. But eliminating that section, the act is complete in itself, and capable of being enforced independently of the provisions therein contained. The title of the act fully covers what is embraced in its body regarding the establishment of a police court, to be presided over by an official known as the "recorder," the maintenance of a chain gang, and the carrying into effect of the various other purposes referred to in the caption. As to all of these matters, the act is constitutional, and it follows that the police court was not without jurisdiction to enforce the ordinance of the city, or to impose sentence upon the plaintiff in error upon his plea of guilty to the charge of having violated one of them which he recognized as being valid, and the validity of which he does now undertake to call into question. His detention was not, so far as appears, illegal, and the court below did not err in refusing to discharge him from custody.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 78)

EDWARDS v. CITY OF ATLANTA.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — VIOLATION OF ORDINANCE—PROOF OF VENUE.

In a proceeding before a recorder's court of a city against a defendant charged with violating a municipal ordinance, it is necessary to show the venue of the offense, and this is not sufficiently done by showing that the matter under investigation took place at "Ponce de Leon Park"; it not appearing from the evidence whether or not the place so designated is within the tract of land described in the act of 1877, by which certain land was included within the corporate limits of the city of Atlanta for police purposes. See Acts 1877, pp. 141, 142; Code of Atlanta 1899, § 18.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

George Edwards was convicted of violating an ordinance of the city of Atlanta, and brings error. Reversed.

Jos. W. Humphries and Jno. D. Humphries, for plaintiff in error. J. L. Mayson and W. P. Hill, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 78)

STARR v. CITY OF ATLANTA.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — VIOLATION OF ORDINANCE.

This case is controlled by the decision of this court in Edwards v. City of Atlanta (this day decided) 52 S. E. 297.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

John Starr was convicted of violating an ordinance of the city of Atlanta, and brings error. Reversed.

J. W. Humphries and Jno. W. Humphries, for plaintiff in error. J. L. Mayson and W. P. Hill, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 79)

BRYAN v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

1. JURY—CHALLENGE TO ARRAY.

A challenge to the array is an objection to all the jurors collectively because of some defect in the panel as a whole.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 31, Cent. Dig. Jury, §§ 541, 543.]

2. SAME—CHALLENGE TO POLL.

Where it was contended that certain members of the jury whose names appeared on the panel had just before been members of a jury who had found a verdict of guilty against another person charged with gaming while playing in the same game involved in the charge against the defendant, the point should have been raised by a challenge to the polls, and not to the array.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; Geo. T. Cann, Judge.

G. D. Bryan, Jr., was convicted of gaming, and brings error. Affirmed.

Bryan was charged with gaming, and found guilty. There was direct evidence to show his guilt. He moved for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was contrary to law and evidence, and also because the court overruled a challenge to the array of jurors put upon him, on the ground that it did not contain an impartial jury, because of the panel of 24 jurors put upon him 10 had the same day been members of a jury who found against another person a verdict of guilty of the offense of gaming while playing in the same game involved in the charge against this defendant. The motion was overruled, and the defendant excepted.

Twigg & Oliver, for plaintiff in error. W. W. Osborne, Sol. Gen., for the State.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts). A challenge to the array is an objection to all the jurors collectively because of some defect in the panel as a whole. If some of the jurors included in the panel are not impartial, this cannot be properly reached by a challenge to the array, but by a challenge to the polls. Upon proper challenge of a juror on the ground that he was a member of the jury on a previous trial involving the same transaction, the court will investigate the question, and if the juror be found incompetent, he will be set aside for cause. The motion for a new trial states that "for this reason this defendant challenged the array thus put upon him, upon the ground that the said panel did not contain an impartial jury, and asked the court to discharge said ten jurors, and fill the panel with ten impartial jurors." But in the order overruling the motion for a new trial the presiding judge made the following statement: "In connection with the additional grounds of the motion, it is proper to state that the challenge to the array was oral. There was no challenge to the poll, nor request to examine any juror upon his voir dire; no particular juror was challenged." It thus appears that the challenge was made to the array, instead of to the polls. See Pen. Code, § 972; Eberhart v. State, 47 Ga. 598; Blackman v. State, 80 Ga. 785, 7 S. E. 626; Schnell v. State, 92 Ga. 459, 17 S. E. 966; Thompson v. State, 109 Ga. 272, 34 S. E. 579; Teal v. State, 119 Ga. 102, 45 S. E. 964; Crew v. State, 118 Ga. 645, 38 S. E. 941; Wells v. State, 102 Ga. 658, 29 S. E. 442; Brown v. State, 104 Ga. 736, 30 S. E. 951; Lewis v. State, 118 Ga. 803, 45 S. E. 602; Rawlins v. State (Ga.) 52 S. E. 1.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 81)

RALPH v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS—CONFRONTING WITNESSES.

The constitutional right of one accused of an offense against the laws of this state to be confronted with the witnesses contemplates that they shall be examined in his presence, and be subject to cross-examination by him.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 14, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, §§ 1538-1548.]

2. SAME—DEAF AND DUMB DEFENDANT.

Where a defendant is deaf and cannot hear the evidence of the witnesses for the state, the presiding judge should permit some reasonable mode of having their evidence communicated to him.

3. SAME—PROCEDURE.

Under the recitals of the bill of exceptions and the note of the presiding judge, there was no abuse of discretion in the manner in which this was done, nor does it appear that any injury resulted to the accused therefrom.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Dawson; A. M. Raines, Judge.

Horace Ralph was convicted for, pointing a pistol at another, and brings error. Affirmed.

Ralph was tried in the city court of Dawson upon an accusation charging him with pointing a pistol at another. The bill of exceptions sets out the contention of the plaintiff in error in the following language: "When the case was called for trial, defendant's counsel stated in his place that his client could not hear anything that the witnesses might state in their testimony in said case; that the defendant could read and write; and if the testimony should be written out, the same could then be read and understood by said defendant. Counsel for defendant, in behalf of his client, then asked the court, in view of the situation and in order to give the defendant his constitutional right to be confronted by the witnesses testifying against him, to have the evidence taken down and furnished to the defendant in writing, so that he might read it, and thus be informed of what the witnesses might testify against him. The court declined to grant this request, stating that there was no official stenographer, and that there was no way to have the evidence reported. Counsel then informed the court that he could get an expert typewriter to take the evidence and typewrite it as the witness testified on the stand, and let it be read by the defendant, and thus acquaint him with the testimony. His honor then stated that he could not allow this to be done, as it would take too much time, and that the only thing which he could allow would be to let the counsel write down the testimony as the trial progressed as usual, and give it to his client on paper to be read by him. The trial of the case then proceeded in the ordinary way, and defendant was represented by only one attorney." The presiding judge added the following note: "The court allowed defendant's attorney to write out the evidence of the witnesses and show to his client. The court saw counsel writing and turn it over to defendant, but does not know what he had written for his client to see." The defendant was convicted, and excepted.

Jas. G. Parks, for plaintiff in error. M. J. Yeomans, for the State.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts). Under the Constitution every person charged with an offense against the laws of this state should be confronted with the witnesses testifying against him. Const. art. 1, par. 5 (Civ. Code 1895, § 5702). This provision guaranties that witnesses for the state shall be examined in the presence of the accused, and be subject to cross-examination by him. Confrontation in criminal law has been defined to be the act of setting a witness face to face with the prisoner, in order that the latter may make any objection he has to the witness, or that the witness may identify the accused." Black's Law Dict. "Confrontation"; Anderson's Law Dict. "Confront." In Mattox v. United States, 158 U. S. 237, 15 Sup. Ct. 337, 39 L. Ed. 409, Mr. Justice Brown, referring to a similar provision in the Constitution of the United States, says: "The primary object of the constitutional provision in question was to prevent depositions or ex parte affidavits, such as were sometimes admitted in civil cases, being used against the prisoner in lieu of a personal examination and cross-examination of the witness, in which the accused has an opportunity, not only of testing the recollection and sifting the conscience of the witness, but of compelling him to stand face to face with the jury, in order that they may look at him, and judge by his demeanor upon the stand and the manner in which he gives his testimony whether he is worthy of belief." See, also, State v. Mannion, 19 Utah, 505, 57 Pac. 542, 45 L. R. A. 638, 75 Am. St. Rep. 753; Summons v. State, 5 Ohio St. 325. If the accused be deaf or blind, this will not prevent his being subject to trial because upon being confronted by the witnesses his physical infirmity will lessen his capacity to utilize that right. The accused says that he is deaf but can read. Had he been both deaf and illiterate, certainly he could not claim that he could not be lawfully tried for a criminal offense. In the proper administration of justice, however, the court shall give a person accused of crime a reasonable opportunity to obtain the benefit of this constitutional right. If he is deaf, such opportunity should be allowed for communication to him of the testimony of the witnesses by the sign language employed by deaf mutes, or by writing, or in some other manner which would be reasonable and proper, under the circumstances, to insure him a full and fair exercise of his legal rights. The exact manner in which this result should be arrived at must depend upon the circumstances of the case, and to a considerable extent be left to the sound discretion of the court. If there is no official stenographer, the court cannot be required to stop the trial, and incur the expense of employing one. To have the testimony of each witness taken down stenographically, and then arrest the progress of the trial until the stenographer can transcribe his notes, and the defendant can read what had thus been written, would be cumbersome. Nor will the court be compelled to employ a typewriter for that purpose. The defendant, knowing of his infirmity, should make provision for his own assistance, and not require the court to practically destroy an orderly trial. Whether an expert operator upon a typewriter and a machine were accessible, or whether the use of such a machine in the courthouse during the trial would interfere with the proper conduct of the business, were matters addressed to the sound discretion of the presiding judge. He allowed the counsel for the accused to write out and exhibit to him the testimony. It does not appear how many witnesses testified, or whether this was a matter of slight or grave inconvenience, nor does it appear that the accused was not fully apprised of the evidence introduced against him. It may be inferred from the judge's note that he allowed time and opportunity for the taking down and exhibition to the accused of the testimony, and it is not shown that any harm resulted from the method adopted by the court.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 116)

CARR v. CITY COUNCIL OF AUGUSTA.
DELANEY v. CITY COUNCIL OF AUGUSTA.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

1. CERTIORARI—WHEN LIES—ACTS OF MUNICIPAL COUNCIL.

When a municipal council acts in a legislative, executive, or ministerial capacity, its action is not subject to review on certiorari.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Certiorari, §§ 33-39.]

2. SAME.

When a municipal council acts in a judicial capacity, its action is subject to review on certiorari.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 9, Cent. Dig. Certiorari, §§ 33-39.]

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS — REVOCATION OF LICENSE—REVIEW.

The authorities of a municipality may revoke a license to sell liquor granted by them at any time without trial or notice, and when a revocation of such license is thus accomplished, it is in the exercise of the executive powers of the municipality, and the action is not subject to review on certiorari.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 29, Cent. Dig. Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 113, 116, 117.]

4. SAME.

When a charter of a municipal corporation contains the usual general welfare clause, and confers the power to control and regulate the sale of liquor, the authorities of the city may pass an ordinance providing that the conviction of a holder of a license to sell liquor in a court of competent jurisdiction of any violation of the law regulating the sale of liquor shall work a revocation of the license.

5. SAME—EVIDENCE OF CONVICTION.

When the ordinance of the charter indicated in the preceding note provides that the clerk of council shall submit to council "each and every conviction," the ordinance contemplates that evidence of the conviction shall be submitted by the clerk before action is taken revoking the license.

6. SAME—REVIEW.

In determining whether the evidence submitted is sufficient to authorize a revocation of the license under the ordinance, the municipal council acts in a judicial capacity, and its judgment is subject to review on certiorari.

7. SAME.

A municipal council cannot justify a revocation of a license to sell liquor under its general power to revoke such license at pleasure, when it appears from the resolution revoking the license that the same was not passed in pursuance of its general power, but apparently under the authority of an ordinance declaring a given act to be a sufficient cause for revocation.

8. CERTIORARI—ANSWER—PROCEDURE.

The judge should have required the municipal council to file an answer to the allegation in the petition for certiorari that there was no evidence before it as to the conviction of the parties whose licenses were revoked. Upon the coming of such answer, he should have determined whether the evidence before it, if there was such, was sufficient to authorize the passage of the resolution; the resolution being in the nature of a judgment declaring the license forfeited.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Application of James Delaney for writ of certiorari to the city council of Augusta and by one Carr for the same. Writs denied, and petitioners bring error. Reversed.

Saml. H. Myers, N. M. Reynolds, and Salem Dutcher, for plaintiffs in error. C. Henry Cohen, for defendant in error.

COBB, P. J. The city council of Augusta granted a license to sell liquor to the firm of Delaney & Co., of which James Delaney was a member, and also granted a similar license to Carr. After the licenses were granted, and before they had expired, the city council passed an ordinance making it the duty of the council to declare the forfeiture of any license if the dealer should be convicted, in any court of competent jurisdiction, of a violation of any federal, state, or municipal regulation governing the sale of liquor, and imposing it as a duty upon the clerk of the council to submit to the council each and every conviction, as above indicated, of every person holding a license from the city. The clerk reported that Delaney and Carr had each been convicted in the city court of Richmond county for violation of the state law governing the sale of liquor, and the council passed a resolution declaring the licenses held by Delaney and Carr forfeited, the forfeitures to take effect 10 days after the passage of the resolution. While the ordinance did not provide that notice of the intention to revoke should be given to the party holding the license, the council permitted Delaney and Carr to be heard through their attorneys before the resolution was passed. Delaney and Carr each applied for the writ of certiorari to review the action of the council in passing the resolution revoking the licenses. The petition was sanctioned, and at the hearing the judge dismissed each petition, and each of the defendants excepted.

In each petition it is alleged that, at the time the resolution forfeiting the license was passed, the council had before it no evidence of the fact recited therein. This allegation was denied in the answer to the certiorari as originally filed. Upon exception to this the denial was stricken, and then an exception was filed to the answer because the allegation was not answered at all. The council demurred to this exception, upon the ground that it was not necessary for an answer to be made to such an allegation, and this demurrer was sustained. Each bill of exceptions contains an assignment of error upon the striking of the exceptions just referred to and upon the dismissal of the petition.

It is said that the petition was properly dismissed for the reason that a proceeding of a municipal council could not be reviewed by certiorari. But the Code declares that the writ of certiorari will lie for the correction of errors committed by justices of the peace, corporation courts, and councils, and any inferior judicatory, or any person exercising judicial powers. Civ. Code 1895, § 4634. It is therefore to be determined whether a municipal council, when proceeding to declare forfeited a license which had been issued by it, is exercising judicial power. If such action is in the exercise of judicial power, an error committed may be corrected on certiorari. The duties of a municipal council are varied; some are merely ministerial, some are legislative, some are executive, but there are still others which are judicial in their nature, and the determination of where the legislative or ministerial duty ends and where the judicial duty begins is often attended with extreme difficulty. Harris on Certiorari, § 48. Where the duty is purely ministerial or purely legislative, the error cannot be corrected by certiorari. But where the duty imposed upon the municipal council clearly requires the exercise of judicial powers, or even the exercise of quasi judicial powers, the general rule is that an error committed may be reviewed on certiorari. 1 Smith, Mun. Corp. § 561. When a municipal council passes an ordinance, it acts in its legislative capacity, and certiorari will not lie. But when after having passed an ordinance, it proceeds to enforce the same, according to its terms, against one who has become liable to a penalty provided by the ordinance, in the determination of whether such person has violated, and has thereby become subject to be proceeded against under its provisions, a municipal council is exercising a judicial power of the same nature that any court would exercise in investigating whether a given person has violated a given law. The action of the council, no matter by what name it might be called—order, resolution, or otherwise—which declares that a person has laid himself liable to penalties prescribed in the ordinance, is a judgment of the council, which can only be reached by the exercise of judicial functions; that is, an application of the law as laid down in the ordinance to the facts that appear before the council at the time the resolution is passed. The ordinance, in effect, imposed a penalty upon one holding a license to sell liquor when he did any one or more of the acts referred to in the ordinance. The ordinance devolved upon the council the determination of the question of fact as to whether he had been guilty of the acts declared illegal. Without reference to whether the ordinance was invalid for not providing notice to the party proceeded against for a forfeiture of his license, the act of the council declaring the person proceeded against guilty of a violation of the ordinance was in its very nature a judicial act. See Black on Intoxicating Liquors, § 195.

In the case of Sprayberry v. Atlanta, 87 Ga. 120, 18 S. E. 197, it was held that a municipal corporation which had authority under its charter to regulate the retail of ardent spirits within its limits, and at its pleasure license such retailers, etc., and also the power to pass such ordinances as seemed to be proper for the peace, good order, and health, etc., and good government of the city, had full authority to provide by ordinance that the conviction in the state courts of one licensed to retail liquors of a violation of the state statutes in reference to the sale of spirits should work an immediate revocation of the license of such person. The authority of the city council of Augusta under the charter of the city being substantially as broad as the authority of the council of Atlanta, the Case of Sprayberry is controlling on the question as to whether the council of Augusta had authority to pass the ordinance in question, so far as charter authority is concerned. It is said, though, that the state has legislated fully in reference to the forfeiture of liquor licenses, and that by the act of 1891, now contained in Pen. Code, § 452, the authority to revoke a license for the sale of liquor on the ground set forth in the ordinance is vested exclusively in the judge of the state court trying the defendant for violation of some law regulating the sale of liquor. The section provides that, if any vender of intoxicating liquors shall be convicted of a violation of any law controlling the liquor traffic, it shall be a part of the sentence that the license shall be forfeited.

It was held in Newman v. State, 101 Ga. 539, 28 S. E. 1005, before sentence forfeiting the license could be legally imposed, the indictment should set forth that the accused was a regularly licensed vender of intoxicating liquors. It may be that a licensed vender of intoxicating liquors is indicted without this fact being averred in the indictment, which was the fact in Newman's Case; and, if so, his license cannot then be revoked by sentence, under the ruling in that case. But without reference to this, we see no reason why this statute should be construed as giving exclusive authority to the judge of the state court to provide for the revocation of the license for the causes named in the statute. There is no such conflict of the implied powers of the corporation, resulting from the provisions of the charter above referred to and the terms of the act of 1891, as would require a holding that the power of the municipality was necessarily taken away by implication when the act of 1891 was passed. Under the terms of the ordinance, before a forfeiture could be declared, it must appear that the party proceeded against had violated some lawful regulation in reference to the sale of liquor. Even conceding that the ex parte proceeding was legal (and upon this we now express no opinion), it was necessary that at the time of the proceeding there should be sufficient evidence before the council to authorize a finding by them that the person whose license was sought to be forfeited had done one or more of the acts prohibited by the ordinance. The proceeding to forfeit the license was in its nature a judicial proceeding, which would culminate in a judgment depriving the party of the right which he had under a license granted him by the city. The judge of the superior court on the application of the party affected by the judgment thus rendered could review the action of the council on certiorari. When the petition for certiorari in terms alleged that the council acted without any evidence, an answer should have been filed to this allegation, and, upon the coming in of the answer, the judge should have determined whether the evidence before the council was sufficient to authorize the resolution or judgment rendered by them. It was therefore erroneous to strike the exception to the answer that it did not reply to the allegations of the petition that there was no evidence before the council at the time the resolution forfeiting the license was passed.

But it is said that the city council had authority to revoke the license at pleasure, and this is true. Melton v. Moultrie, 114 Ga. 462, 40 S. E. 302; Ison v. Griffin, 98 Ga. 623, 25 S. E. 611. If in the exercise of its right the city had passed an ordinance or resolution simply revoking the license, this would have been done in the exercise of its executive powers, and the courts would not have reviewed the same on certiorari. But when they attempt to revoke the license for cause, under the provisions of the ordinance providing that a certain act shall be sufficient cause for the revocation of the license, and do not proceed under their general discretionary power, then the determination by the council of the question as to whether the person holding the license has made himself amenable to the provisions of the ordinance declaring a certain act to be sufficient cause for revoking the license requires the exercise of judicial powers, and renders the action subject to review on certiorari. In Asbell v. Brunswick, 80 Ga. 503, 5 S. E. 500, it was held, where a municipal council had the right to remove a policeman without a trial, as well as to remove him after trial, that if the council proceeded under the latter method, their judgment of removal was subject to review on certiorari, while if they proceeded under the former method, their action would have been in the exercise of their executive powers, and not subject to review on certiorari. See, also, Gill v. Brunswick, 118 Ga. 85, 44 S. E. 830; Mayor of Macon v. Shaw, 16 Ga. 172.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 86)

MILNER v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—CONFESSIONS — ADMISSIBILITY.

"Whether subsequent confessions, of themselves wholly unexceptionable, were made under previous influences still operating on the mind, is a question not of law for the court, but of fact for the jury." Pines v. State, 21 Ga. 227.

2. SAME—NEW TRIAL.

In order for the admission of illegal evidence to constitute a sufficient ground for a new trial, the motion should show that the illegal evidence was objected to when offered, and the specific objection thus made must also be set forth.

3. SAME—VERDICT CONTRARY TO LAW.

A ground of a motion alleging that the verdict is contrary to a specified part of the charge of the court will be construed to mean that the verdict is contrary to law.

4. HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE.

There was sufficient evidence to authorize the verdict.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Spalding County; E. J. Reagan, Judge.

Ralph Milner was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

L. P. Goodrich, D. J. Bailey, and Robt. T. Daniel, for plaintiff in error. O. H. B. Bloodworth, Sol. Gen., Jos. D. Boyd, and Jno. C. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the State.

BECK, J. Ralph Milner was tried on an indictment for murder, and convicted. The state proved the corpus delicti by several witnesses, and proved a confession of the defendant by one witness, the sheriff of the county, and also by another witness, one Terrell, that the defendant in his statement on a preliminary trial circumstantially and positively admitted and confessed the crime with which he was charged. In the incriminating statement upon the preliminary trial the defendant averred that when he killed the deceased, one Rufe Farley, who at the time was armed with a gun, commanded him to do the act, saying, "Damn ybu, you have got to kill him, and if you don't I will kill you;" that when the deceased approached the place near which the killing occurred, he said to the defendant, "Hello, Ralph; have you found anything to kill?" to which the defendant replied, "No sir; I haven't found anything;" that he then joined the deceased, and walked along with him; that Farley came over to where they were, and walked "in behind" defendant with his gun cocked; that they walked along, talking to the deceased, and just before the shooting Farley said to the defendant, "Are you going to do what you said?" whereupon the defendant raised his gun, and shot the deceased "without taking any sight," the gun being within about two feet of the deceased's head when he shot; and that, after the deceased fell, Rufe Farley beat him with a stick and robbed him. The defendant's confession was corroborated by proof of the corpus delicti and numerous circumstances attending the commission of the crime. There was nothing to show that more than one other person besides the deceased was present at the killing. The defendant made a statement in substance as follows: "When I shot, I shot at a fishhawk. * * * I told Mr. Terrell and Mr. Head that [referring to his confession] because I thought that they were trying to get me out. How I come to believe in Mr. Terrell, he wanted to hire me again in the spring, and I thought he was trying to get me out. He told me he would get me out, and wanted me to work for him, and said he would get me a lawyer." After being convicted, the defendant made a motion for a new trial upon several grounds; the first three being the general grounds and the others being as follows: "(4) Because the court erred in permitting the witness Terrell to testify what the boy stated on the next day after this confession was obtained, and in the presence of this witness on the preliminary trial, said witness sitting in the courtroom inside the bar railing. The testimony of the witness which should not have been allowed to go to the jury is as follows: 'He went on to tell about his killing Sam Jones. He said on Thursday afternoon he went down in the woods, close to where Sam was killed, and he had his gun, and was hunting squirrels. He stayed awhile there, sitting on a stump near where he killed old man Sam. Rufe Farley came to him about sundown, and he said that old Sam Jones was coming down through a piece of corn from the pasture, driving a cow. He said Rufe stepped up to him, and took a cut shell of his own gun and put it in Ralph's gun, and taken a shell out of his pocket and put it in his own gun, and picked up a big red-oak stick, seven or eight feet long and about eight inches round, and said, "Yonder comes a man that owes me money and won't pay. Damn you, you got to kill him, and if you don't, I will kill you." He said that old man Sam Jones came along the woods and said: "Hello, Ralph, have you found anything to kill?" He said, "No sir; I haven't found anything," and got up and walked along with him. Rufe Farley came over the upper side of the road, out of the edge of the woods, and walked in behind him with his gun cocked. He went along talking to old man Sam, and got close to where old man Sam was killed, and Rufe said to him, "Are you going to do what you said?" and Rufe had his gun cocked on him; that he raised his gun and shot him. They asked him if he took any sight, and he said he didn't, he just raised his gun. He had the gun about two feet of the old man Sam's head when he shot. As soon as he shot, old man Sam fell, and he broke and run towards his home. He said that Rufe done the beating of him with the stick, and the robbing of him, and such as that.' Defendant claims that the admission of the above testimony was error, because it was made next day after the confession was obtained from the defendant by promise of reward, and that this testimony was made in the presence of the same man who obtained the previous confession, and was made under the influence of the same promise, and in the presence of Terrell, who obtained the first confession. (5) Because the court erred in admitting the pocketbook containing some money. There was no evidence that this pocketbook or money were ever in the possession of the deceased, and the admission of it by the court was error, because it injured the defendant, as evidence had been introduced that the old man had been robbed, and the jury would infer, from the court admitting this pocketbook and contents of same, that it had been the property of the deceased, and had been taken from him by the defendant." Defendant further alleges error in the sixth and seventh grounds of his motion, because the verdict was contrary to the charge of the court. Upon the overruling of his motion for a new trial, he excepted.

1. After the questions raised in the first three grounds of the motion, which were the usual and general grounds, the first assignment of error is upon the admission of the alleged illegal testimony of the witness Terrell, who was permitted to testify to a statement made by the defendant upon a preliminary trial (whether of the defendant or another is not clear from the record) to the effect that he had shot and killed the deceased, but that he did so because one Rufe

Farley commanded him to do so, threatening him with death if he refused. There is nothing in the record to suggest that this statement was not made freely and voluntarily and after proper caution, save that the witness Terrell was present at the trial and sitting within the rail inclosing the bar, and because of this presence and proximity of Terrell there was a continuance of the inducement under which it was insisted that the first confession had been obtained. The court refused to exclude the evidence of the witness, and permitted its introduction. The course pursued by the trial judge in permitting the testimony to go to the jury was in accordance with the repeated rulings of this court. We will presume, in the absence of any complaint to the contrary, that in its general instructions the court charged the jury to determine, from all the evidence in the record, the circumstances under which the statement containing the confession was made, whether or not the same was freely and voluntarily made, as well as to determine whether the influence under which the previous confession was improperly obtained was still operating on the mind of the accused; and that if they should find that the statement was not freely and voluntarily made, or that the mind of the accused was still affected by previously exerted influences of an improper character, they should not consider or give any weight whatever to the alleged confession. We are not unaware that there are many and very respectable authorities to the contrary. "When once a confession under improper influence is obtained, the presumption arises that a subsequent confession of the same nature flows from the like influence; and this though the subsequent confession was made to a different person from the one holding out the inducement." 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. (2d Ed.) 542, and numerous citations supporting the text. But in the case at bar we apply the rule of our own court, and without reluctance, especially as it is evident from the record that the first confession obtained (which was excluded by the trial court in its evident but commendable determination to protect the rights of the accused) was itself made under such circumstances that if they aroused hope in the breast of the defendant it must have been hope springing from "seed of his own planting," and this is not the hope that excludes a confession, though made under its influence. "The hope that excludes is that, and that only, which some other person kindles or excites. Some inducement must be held out by another person, tending, according to human nature and the law of human motives, either to overpower the will or seduce it, either to coerce through fear, or persuade through hope." Bohanan v. State, 92 Ga. 32, 18 S. E. 302. Under no circumstances would we relax the just and salutary rule that excludes confessions made or obtained under the influence of hope or fear, but, on the other hand, confessions freely and voluntarily made are evidence that should be submitted to the jury, who, under proper instruction and admonition from the court, can be trusted to give them their proper weight; and in this case they were duly admonished to reject the confessions if they were not freely and voluntarily made. The trial judge upon this point instructed the jury in the following appropriate language: "If you believe that Terrell held out any inducement to the defendant, or did or said anything that caused him to entertain a hope of benefit, no matter how slight, then if he afterwards made a confession to other parties, if you believe that hope aroused in his mind by Terrell, if there was any such hope aroused by any action of Mr. Terrell, if you believe that that hope was still bearing in his mind at the time he made any other confessions, if he made any other confessions, on the idea and acting upon any hope that may have been held out to this defendant by the witness Mr. Terrell, although the confession has gone in the evidence, it is not to be considered in this case." There was ample evidence in corroboration of the direct confession made by the defendant, including such significant circumstances as blood upon the defendant's gun and on his knife, as well as tracks, indicating that they were made by his shoes, which led from the place of the murder to his home. A careful consideration of all the evidence and the defendant's brief and incoherent statement would convince any mind that he is guilty of the wicked and shocking crime ascribed to him.

2. The next ground of the motion (the fifth) raises the question of the admissibility in evidence of a certain pocketbook and its contents, but this question is raised here for the first time, and, as it is not alleged what objection was urged when it was offered in evidence in the court below, or that any objection was there made, it is presumed that none was made, and "reasons why certain evidence should not have been admitted cannot be considered in this court, unless they appear to have been urged before the trial judge and at the proper time." Grace v. McKinney, 112 Ga. 425, 37 S. E. 737.

3. No other errors of law are complained of. The evidence authorized the verdict.

Affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(140 N. C. 138)

GWYN-HARPER MFG. CO. v. CLOER
et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 28, 1905.)

1. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS—PLEADING—RELIEF.

Where defendants in their answer set up a mistake in a deed under which they claim, the court may award a reformation of the deed, although there is no prayer therefor, if the allegations of the answer and the findings of the jury upon appropriate issues justify such relief.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 42, Cent. Dig. Reformation of Instruments, § 147.]

2. PLEADING—ISSUES—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action to recover lands and for damages for trespass, defendants in their answer set up a mistake in a deed, but tendered no issues as to such mistake, and took no exception to the issues submitted, which were whether plaintiff was the owner of the lands, and whether defendants had trespassed thereon, and the amount of damage sustained. Held, that evidence in support of the allegations of mistake in the answer was inadmissible under the issues.

Appeal from Superior Court, Caldwell County; Webb, Judge.

Action by the Gwyn-Harper Manufacturing Company against W. R. Cloer and others. From the judgment rendered, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Action to recover certain lands and for damages for a trespass thereon. These issues were submitted: "(1) Is the plaintiff the owner of the lands described in the complaint or any part thereof? A. Yes; south of dotted line from four to seven. (2) Have the defendants or either of them, trespassed upon the land described in the complaint? A. No. (3) What damage, if any, has plaintiff sustained? A. (No) Nothing." From the judgment rendered plaintiff appealed.

Edmund Jones, for appellant.

BROWN, J. The plaintiff alleges in the complaint that it is the owner and entitled to the possession of the land described therein, and that the defendants unlawfully entered and trespassed thereon. The defendants deny those allegations and in their answer also make the following allegation as a foundation for correcting and reforming the deed, viz.: "(4) The defendants admit that in the year ——— the defendant E. F. Cloer executed a deed to one Monroe Minish for the land described in the first paragraph of the complaint, but they aver that the last call in the description was erroneous; that said call, instead of being thence 'north to Cloer's back line,' should have been 'west to Cloer's back line'; that the error was due to the mistake and oversight of the draftsman, J. C. Harper, now deceased, and was made by mutual mistake and oversight of the grantor, the said E. F. Cloer, and the grantee, Monroe Minish, or by the mistake of E. F. Cloer and the fraud of Monroe Minish. Having answered the complaint fully the defendants ask that they go hence without day and recover their costs."

52 S.E.—20

The defendants do not pray for a reformation of the deed, as they should have done, but the court would award it if the allegations of the answer and the findings of a jury upon appropriate issues justified it. Upon the trial, the defendants introduced E. F. Cloer, who claims to be the owner of the land in dispute, and proposed to prove by him that at the time of the sale of the land by him to Minish in March, 1881, a mistake was made in the calls of the deed; that instead of north to Cloer's back line as shown in the deed, the call should have been west to Cloer's back line, and running west as contended for by defendants the land in dispute would have been left out of the boundary conveyed to Minish. The plaintiff excepted to the introduction of this evidence. We think the exception well taken. The form of the issues did not justify the reception of such evidence. There was no exception to the issues by either party, and no other issues were tendered by the defendants. If the defendants relied upon the equitable matter set out in the answer, it was their duty to tender appropriate issues upon which the facts set out in their fourth allegation could be found. If the plaintiff desires to meet such new matter by denying it, and also by averring that he is an innocent purchaser for value without notice, and that the defendants are guilty of laches in correcting his deed, he should file a proper replication to the answer, and upon the trial should tender appropriate issues. Upon the form of the issues, we hold his honor erred in admitting the evidence.

New trial.

(140 N. C. 140)

ELLER et ux. v. CAROLINA & W. RY. CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 28, 1905.)1. JUDGMENT—MERGER—SPLITTING CAUSE OF ACTION.

Where plaintiff brought an action against a railroad for damage to her baggage, which contained a bridal trousseau, and recovered judgment therefor, she could not thereafter maintain a separate action for mental anguish caused by the injury to her trousseau, but she should have collected all the damage to which she was entitled in her original suit.

2. ACTION—JOINDER OF CAUSES OF ACTION—PARTIES AND INTEREST INVOLVED.

Under Code, § 267, authorizing the joinder of certain causes of action, but requiring the causes of action so joined to all belong to one of the classes specified and to affect all the parties to the action, a husband and wife cannot join their separate actions for damages for mental anguish caused by defendant's negligence and recover one sum in satisfaction of their several claims.

3. DAMAGES—REMOTENESS—MENTAL ANGUISH. Mental anguish, experienced by a prospective groom on the damaging by a railroad of the wedding trousseau of his bride to be, was too remote a form of damage to entitle the groom to recover therefor against the railroad, which did not know of the intended marriage.

Appeal from Superior Court, Catawba County; Councill, Judge.

Action by Albert Eller and wife against the Carolina & Western Railway Company. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

On September 5, 1904, the feme plaintiff, then Dora Anderson, was a passenger on defendant's train from Granite Falls to Hickory. She had, as baggage, a valise of the kind usually known as a "telescope," containing clothing, letters, photographs, and other articles, which was checked to Hickory and should have arrived at its destination on the 5th of said month, but did not arrive until the evening of the 7th. The feme plaintiff was going to Hickory for the purpose of being married to her coplaintiff, Albert Eller, to whom she was at the time engaged. The wedding had been set for the morning of the 6th, but in consequence of the delay in receiving her baggage it had to be postponed until the 7th, as her wedding trousseau was in the valise. When her baggage was tendered to her she refused to take it, as the valise was torn and her clothes were wet and muddy and so badly damaged that they could not be used. She alleges that by reason of the premises she suffered great mortification and mental anguish, and seeks to recover damages on that account. It appears that she had already sued the defendant in an action for the nondelivery of her valise and the damage to the property. That suit was settled, and she received from defendant $30, and the clothes were returned to her. At the close of the testimony, the court, on motion of defendant, dismissed the action. Plaintiffs excepted and appealed.

Self & Whitener, for appellants. J. H. Marion, T. M. Hufham, and Witherspoon & Witherspoon, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the case). The general rule in the law of damages is that all damage resulting from a single wrong or cause of action must be recovered in one suit. The demand cannot be split and several actions maintained for the separate items of damage. Plaintiff recovers one compensation for all loss and damage, past and prospective, which were the certain and proximate results of the single wrong or breach of duty. Pierce on Railroads (1881) 300, 301, and note 1. The rule is different where there is a continuing wrong, or the wrong is repeated, as in the case of a nuisance or trespass, or where there is a new trespass distinct from the original one. Hale on Damages, 77, 78. Generally speaking, the redress the law affords for the commission of a wrong is pecuniary compensation. Plaintiff may recover what we call nominal damages, which are really no pecuniary compensation, but which merely ascertain or fix his right or cause of action. Lord Holt has well said: "Surely every injury imports a damage, though it does not cost the party one farthing, and it is impossible to prove the contrary; for a damage is not merely pecuniary, but an injury imports a damage when a man is thereby hindered of his right. As in an action for slanderous words, though a man does not lose a penny by reason of the speaking them, yet he shall have an action. So, if a man gives another a cuff on the ear, though it cost him nothing—no, not so much as a little diachylon—yet he shall have his action; for it is a personal injury." Ashby v. White, 2 Ld. Raymond, 938 (Smith's L. C. 425). The idea here is, as we see, that there is damage in the contemplation of law, though the injury involves neither loss nor pain, because the man's right to be protected in his person and reputation has been violated. Cooley on Torts (2d Ed.) 69. "When the clear right of a party is invaded in consequence of another's breach of duty, he must be entitled to an action against the party for some amount." Denman, C. J., in Clifton v. Hooper, 6 Q. B. 468. It was held in Fray v. Goules, 1 El. & El. (102 E. C. L.) 839, that an attorney is liable for compromising his client's suit, contrary to instructions, even though it turned out that he acted with reasonable prudence and bona fide and for the actual benefit of his client, there being no loss whatever, much less an appreciable one. It is only when the gist of the action is damage that the maxim "de minimis non curat lex" applies, and that the law no longer distinguishes between no appreciable damage and no damage at all. Hale, Damages, 27, 28. In Bond v. Hilton, 47 N. C. 149, the court, in a full discussion of this question, says: "Wherever there is a breach of an agreement, or the invasion of a right, the law infers some damage, and, if no evidence is given of any particular amount of loss, it gives nominal damages by way of declaring the right, upon the maxim, 'Ubi jus, ibi remedium.'" And again: "In every contract implying a duty to be performed, the neglect of that duty gives, in law, a cause of action to the opposite party, under the above maxim, and when the law gives an action it gives damages for the violated right, and, if no actual damages be shown, the plaintiff is entitled to nominal damages." Where there is an invasion of another's right, the cause of action is the wrong, or what we technically call "the injury," which entitles him at least to nominal recompense to vindicate his right, and the consequences which immediately flow from that injury, in the way of loss or damage, are but matters of aggravation. Hale, Damages, 77. In Fetter v. Beal, 1 Salk. 11, plaintiff recovered damage for an assault and battery by which his skull was broken, and afterwards, upon the falling out of a piece of his skull, he brought an action for additional damage. The former recovery was held to be a bar to the latter action. Holt, C. J., said: "As to the case of a nuisance by water dropping from the eaves of the house, every new dropping is a nuisance; but here is not a new battery, and in trespass the grievousness or consequence of the battery is not the ground of the action, but is only the measure of damages which the jury must be supposed to have considered at the former trial." In the same case, as reported in 1 Lord Raym. 692 (and it appears to have been considered as a very important one and controlling as an authority), Lord Holt further says: "This is a new case, to which there is no parallel in the books. Every one shall recover damages in proportion to his prejudice which he hath sustained; and if this matter had been given in evidence, as that which in probability might have been the consequence of the battery, plaintiff would have recovered damages for it. The injury, which is the foundation of the action, is the battery, and the greatness or consequence of that is only in aggravation of damages. In some cases the damage is the foundation of the action, as in the action by the master for battery of his servant, 'per quod servitium amisit'; but here the battery only is the foundation of the action, and this damage, which might probably ensue, might and ought to have been given in evidence, and must be intended to have been given in evidence in the former action, and that the jury gave damages for all the hurt that he suffered; for if the nature of the battery was such as probably to produce this effect, the jury might give damages for it before it happened." Sedgwick thus states the rule: "It thus appears that fresh damages merely will not always give a fresh action, and a judgment in a suit founded on a single act of tort will be a conclusive bar to a second suit for the same injury, although harmful consequences have made themselves apparent subsequent to the first suit, as it will be held that in the first verdict the plaintiff recovered all he was entitled to claim. Hence the statute of limitations runs from the time of the breach." 1 Sedg. on Damages (8th Ed.) § 84. He also states well the distinction between mere items of damage for a single tort and the repetition of the trespass or tort itself. "In the case of a personal injury," says he, "the act complained of is complete and ended before the date of the writ. It is the damage only which continues and is recoverable, because it is traced back to the act; while in the case of a nuisance, it is the act which continues, or, rather, is renewed day by day. The duty which rests upon the wrongdoer to remove a nuisance causes a new trespass for each day's neglect." 1 Sedg. Damages, § 88. The question is fully discussed and the distinctions clearly drawn, by Battle, J., in the leading case of Moore v. Love, 48 N. C. 215. See, also, Hatchell v. Kimbrough, 49 N. C. 163.

We do not decide that mental anguish is an element of damage in a case of this kind; but if, for the sake of argument, we concede that it is, the same plaintiff could have had such damages as she was entitled to recover on that account included in her former judgment or settlement. Having elected not to do so, she is precluded now from claiming any such damages. Her right to them, if right she ever had, is merged in the former recovery. She could carve out as large a slice as the law allowed, but she could not cut but once. "No one should be twice vexed for the same cause" is a maxim of the law we are not disposed to disregard, and which it is well strictly to enforce.

Plaintiff Albert Eller also asked for damages for mental anguish caused by defendant's negligence, and it is alleged in the complaint that the two plaintiffs "seek to recover one sum in satisfaction of their several claims for the causes herein set out." If plaintiffs had any valid causes of action against defendant, they could not thus join them. Code, § 267. There was no formal objection taken to the misjoinder; but we notice it, so that attention may be called to this important provision of the law, which is mandatory, and intended to protect a substantial right of defendant, and not merely directory. Plaintiff Albert Eller has not stated any cause of action entitling him to recover damages. Those that he claims are, in any view of the case, entirely too remote. Defendant did not know of the intended marriage, and therefore could not have contemplated any damage to him, even if he would otherwise be entitled to recover. Cranford v. Tel., 138 N. C. 162, 50 S. E. 585. The case cited settles the law against his contention.

No error.

(140 N. C. 146)

REID v. ATLANTA & C. AIR LINE RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 28, 1906.)

1. RAILROADS—COLLISIONS AT STREET CROSSING—NEGLIGENCE.

A railroad company is negligent in backing an engine over a street crossing at night without any warning and without a man with a light on it to keep a lookout along the track.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 41, Cent. Dig. Railroads, § 999.]

2. SAME—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—LAST CLEAR CHANCE.

In an action against a railroad company for negligent death resulting from a collision on a crossing, the defense of contributory negligence was not available, where there was a negligent failure of its employees to avail themselves of the last chance of avoiding the injury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 41, Cent. Dig. Railroads, §§ 1096-1098.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; Cooke, Judge.

Action by James Reid, as administrator, against the Atlanta & Charlotte Air Line Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Civil action for wrongfully and negligently causing the death of plaintiff's intestate. The usual issues in such cases were submitted. There was evidence to the effect that on or about February 24, 1905, about 8 o'clock at night, the plaintiff's intestate was run over and killed by an engine of the defendant; and there was evidence tending to show that at the time of the killing the intestate was endeavoring to cross the railroad at Second street crossing in the city of Charlotte, that there were several tracks there used by the defendant in shifting and otherwise, that the street ran down these tracks for some distance, and it was usual and customary for persons who were passing over the crossing at this point to walk part of the way down the main line of the track, and the intestate was at such point at the time she was run over and killed. The evidence of the plaintiff tended further to show that, at the time intestate was killed, the engine was backed on the crossing and ran over the intestate without warning of any kind, without any light on the front end as the train moved, and without any one stationed so as to give warning if danger or collision was imminent. There was evidence of the defendant that at the time of the injury the bell was rung, a light was properly placed, and a lookout kept. Under the charge of the court there was a verdict and judgment for plaintiff, and defendant excepted and appealed.

W. B. Rodman, for appellant. Pharr & Bell, for appellee.

HOKE, J. The charge of the judge below was full and clear. The jury have accepted the plaintiff's version of the occurrence, and there is no error presented which gives the defendant any just ground of complaint. The court in substance told the jury that, where an engine was backing on a crossing in the nighttime, it was the duty of the engineer to sound adequate warning and to keep a man with a light at the front of the engine as it was moving, so as to keep a lookout adequate for safety; and, if there was failure in this respect and an injury resulted, there would be a negligent breach of duty; and, if these duties were performed, there was no negligence on the part of the defendant, and the first issue would be answered "No." This is the rule laid down in Purnell's Case, 122 N. C. 832, 29 S. E. 953. There Furches, J., delivering the opinion said: "As we understand the matter, there must be both a man and a light at night, and a man and a flag in the day. It may be one person, but he must have a light." The fact that the crossing may also be used as a part of the railroad yard, or that this term was used by the court under the circumstances of the present case, does not at all change the principle.

On the first issue as to contributory negligence the court charged the jury, among other things: "(3) It is the duty of persons, before going upon the track of a railroad company, to stop and look and listen for any train that may be moving, or, being upon the tracks of such company in its yards where there are several tracks used for shifting cars, to be continually alert and on the lookout for a moving train; and if a person fails in this duty, and in consequence of such failure is injured by a moving train, the person would be guilty of contributory negligence. (4) The burden of the first issue is upon the plaintiff; the burden of the second issue is upon the defendant." The court further charged the jury as follows: "(5) If the jury shall find that the plaintiff was walking on the railroad track, and that the defendant was backing its engine along the track in the nighttime in the direction of the plaintiff, and that there was no light at the time on the back part of the engine and no agent there to keep a lookout along the track, or, being there, failed to exercise reasonable care in looking ahead along the track for any person on or near the track, or that no bell was ringing, and if the jury shall find that the engine so moving ran against or upon the intestate and killed her, and if the jury should further find that, if the bell had been ringing and there had been a proper light on the engine, the intestate would have had notice of the approaching train in time and would have escaped the danger, or that if there had been a person stationed on the engine and was exercising reasonable care in keeping a lookout along the track, he would have discovered the intestate in time to have avoided striking her, then the jury should answer the first issue 'Yes' and the second issue 'No.' (6) If the jury are not satisfied by the greater weight of the evidence that the intestate was killed by a moving train or engine of the defendant, they will answer the first issue 'No.'"

Objection is made to section 5 of the charge, for that it practically declared that the defense of contributory negligence would not avail the defendant under the conditions stated. This part of the charge does have the effect complained of, and there is no error in the ruling. The intestate had gone to the crossing at Third street in the effort to cross the road, and was told by an employé of the defendant that a freight train then obstructed the crossing at that point, and she had better try the Second street crossing. Following these instructions she essayed the latter crossing and was endeavoring to cross, when the engine backed upon her, and her death resulted.

The intestate here was no trespasser, and there was no contributory negligence in the mere fact that she was then upon the road. She was where she had a right to be; and, if she was run over and killed by the engine, under the circumstances stated in this portion of the charge, there was no contributory negligence. Upon either postulate of the specified portion of the charge, there was a negligent failure on the part of the defendant's agents or employees to avail themselves of the last clear chance of avoiding the injury, which would render the misconduct of the defendant the sole proximate cause of the intestate's death. The case is controlled by the decisions in Lloyd v. Railroad, 118 N. C. 1010, 24 S. E. 805, 54 Am. St. Rep. 764; Stanley v. Railroad, 120 N. C. 514, 27 S. E. 27; Purnell v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 832, 29 S. E. 953; McIlhane v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 995, 30 S. E. 127.

There is no error, and the judgment must be affirmed.

(140 N. C. 110)

FITZGERALD v. CITY OF CONCORD.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 28, 1905.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — DEFECTIVE CULVERTS—REPAIR—DUTY IMPOSED.

Under Code, § 3803, requiring that cities and towns shall provide for keeping in proper repair the streets and bridges thereof, in the manner and to the extent that they may deem best, and may cause such improvements as may be necessary, etc., a town is not only bound to originally construct its sidewalks, drains, culverts, etc., in a sound condition, but is required to use reasonable care and continued supervision to keep them so.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 36, Cent. Dig. Municipal Corporations, §§ 1591, 1612.]

2. SAME—DEFECTS—NOTICE.

In an action for injuries to a pedestrian, caused by a defective culvert in a street, plaintiff is bound to show, not only that the defect existed and that an injury was caused thereby, but that the officers of the town knew, or by ordinary diligence might have discovered, the defect, and that its character was such that injuries to travelers therefrom might reasonably be anticipated.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 36, Cent. Dig. Municipal Corporations, §§ 1641-1652.]

3. SAME—EVIDENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where plaintiff was injured by falling into a hole in a culvert in a street at night, of the existence of which she had no knowledge, and could not see by reason of the darkness, and there was evidence that the culvert had been in a defective condition for several weeks, the town's negligence in failing to repair the same, etc., was for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 36, Cent. Dig. Municipal Corporations, § 1747.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Cabarrus County; Justice, Judge.

Action by Rachel Fitzgerald against the city of Concord. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Action for negligence. There was evidence of the plaintiff tending to show that she was injured while walking along the streets of Concord, by reason of falling through a defective culvert. The plaintiff herself, on the principal question, testified, as follows: "I live on South Crowell street. On July 28, 1905, as I was going on my direct way home, down West Depot street and crossing the same, I entered South Crowell street on the bridge or culvert at the entrance of said street, and fell into a hole in the culvert. The plank seemed to be partly broken. As I went down, the planks held me fast, and I could not get out. I fell with all my weight on my left foot, very badly spraining it, and injuring my hip. I pushed down the plank with my hand and crawled out, and crawled over to a storehouse at the intersection of the streets. By holding to the house and getting the support of a stick, I was able to get to a near neighbor's house, and remained there during the night. The night was a very dark one, and there was no lights on the street, as the storm had put them out. I had not noticed this place before in the street." J. D. Gordon, a witness for the plaintiff, on his examination in chief testified: "I do business at the intersection of West Depot and South Crowell streets. I knew the culvert in question. The hole was 16 or 18 inches in diameter. The culvert was as long as the width of Crowell street, and was over the ditch on the south side of West Depot street. It was about 20 feet long, and was crossed by all who enter South Crowell street from West Depot street. It was used by those who enter the street walking and in vehicles. The culvert was considerably worn and covered with dirt. The top planks were worn, sagged, and broken, and could be seen through, and had been in this condition for several weeks before the plaintiff says she was hurt. South Crowell street is one of the principal streets in Concord. I saw the plaintiff afterwards, and she was limping, and is still limping." On the close of the testimony for the plaintiff, on motion of defendant, there was judgment of nonsuit, and the plaintiff excepted and appealed.

W. G. Means and M. B. Stickley, for appellant. Montgomery & Crowell and L. T. Hartsell, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the case). There was error in directing a nonsuit in this case, and the plaintiff is entitled to have her cause submitted to a jury. The governing authorities of a town are charged with the duty of keeping their streets and sidewalks, drains, culverts, etc., in a reasonably safe condition; and their duty does not end at all with putting them in a safe and sound condition originally, but they are required to keep them so to the extent that this can be accomplished by proper and reasonable care and continuing supervision. Code, § 3803; Bunch v. Edenton, 90 N. C. 481; Russell v. Monroe, 116 N. C. 720, 21 S. E. 550, 47 Am. St. Rep. 823. In Bunch's Case, Merrimon, J., for the court, says: "It was the positive duty of the corporate authorities of the town of Edenton to keep the streets, including the sidewalks, in 'proper repair,' that is in such condition as that the people passing and repassing over them might, at all times, do so with reasonable ease, speed, and safety. And proper repair implies also that all bridges, dangerous pits, embankments, dangerous walls, and the like perilous things very near and adjoining the streets, shall be guarded against by proper railings and barriers. Positive nuisances on or near the streets should be forbidden under proper penalties, and, when they exist, should be abated." The town, however, is not held to warrant that the condition of its streets, etc., shall be at all times absolutely safe. It is only responsible for negligent breach of duty, and, to establish such responsibility, it is not sufficient to show that a defect existed and an injury has been caused thereby. It must be further shown that the officers of the town "knew or by ordinary diligence might have discovered the defect, and the character of the defect was such that injuries to travelers therefrom might reasonably be anticipated."

It will be observed that actual notice of a dangerous condition or defective structure is not required, but notice may be implied from circumstances, and will be imputed to the town if its officers could have discovered the defect by the exercise of proper diligence. As pertinent to the present inquiry, it is stated in 1 Shearman & Red. Neg. § 369: "Unless some statute requires it, actual notice is not a necessary condition of corporate liability for the defect which caused the injury. Under its duty of active vigilance, a municipal corporation is bound to know the condition of its highways, and, for practical purposes, the opportunity of knowing must stand for actual knowledge. Hence, when observable defects in a highway have existed for a time, so long that they ought to have been observed, notice of them is implied, and is imputed to those whose duty it is to repair them; in other words, they are presumed to have notice of such defects as they might have discovered by the exercise of reasonable diligence." And again, in the same section: "It is only reasonable that notice of latent defects should not be so readily presumed from their continuance as open and obvious defects. If these were so dangerous as to challenge immediate attention, the jury is justified in finding a very short continuance of such condition to constitute sufficient notice. Active vigilance is required to detect defects from natural decay in wooden structures, like bridges, plank sidewalks, and the like, which will necessarily become unsafe from age; but the most that ought to be required is the use of ordinary diligence by making tests and examinations, with reasonable frequency, to ascertain whether they are safe or not. It has been held that notice will not be implied, unless the defect was so open and noticeable as to attract the attention of passers-by. But travelers are not charged with any duty to search for defects in a highway as road officers are, and the better rule in our judgment is that knowledge of a defect may be inferred, notwithstanding it may have escaped the attention of all travelers, or even of an officer frequently passing by. It is not a question whether all passers-by actually noticed a defect, but whether it was noticeable." And the decided cases support the doctrine as stated. Jones v. Greensboro, 124 N. C. 310, 313, 32 S. E. 675; Kibele v. Philadelphia, 105 Pa. 41; Kunz v. Troy, 104 N. Y. 346, 10 N. E. 442, 58 Am. Rep. 508; Pomfrey v. Saratoga, 104 N. Y. 459, 11 N. E. 43.

On the question of notice implied from the continued existence of a defect, no definite or fixed rule can be laid down as to the time required, and it is usually a question for the jury on the facts and circumstances of each particular case, giving proper consideration to the character of the structure, its material, the time it has been in existence and use, the nature of the defect, its placing, etc. We have adverted only to the evidence most favorable to the plaintiff's demand, as this is required where a nonsuit is directed on the defendant's motion.

Applying the above principles to the testimony so considered, we are of opinion, as stated, that the plaintiff is entitled to have the question of the defendant's responsibility submitted to the jury under proper instructions from the court, and to that end a new trial is awarded.

New trial.

(104 Va. 657)

NORFOLK & W. RY. CO. v. SPENCER'S ADM'X.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 7, 1905.)

1. EVIDENCE—MORTALITY TABLES.

In an action for death, standard mortality tables are admissible to show the probable expectancy of the life of deceased.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 17, Cent. Dig. Death, § 84; vol. 20, Cent. Dig. Evidence, § 1520.]

2. NEGLIGENCE—ACTION—INSTRUCTIONS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

The court instructed that, although plaintiff's intestate might have been guilty of negligence, and although that negligence might in fact have contributed to the accident, yet, if defendant could, in the result, by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, have avoided the accident, plaintiff's negligence would not excuse defendant. Held, that the instruction was proper in form.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 37, Cent. Dig. Negligence, §§ 115, 392.]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURIES—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action for the death of a locomotive engineer in a collision between his train and another, evidence held sufficient to warrant a finding that the engineer of the other train could have moved his train after knowledge of the danger, so as to have avoided the accident.

4. SAME—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action for the death of a locomotive engineer in a collision between his train and another, held, that it was a question for the jury whether the conductor of the other train was guilty of negligence in having his train standing beyond the limits prescribed by an order.

5. NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS—DISCREDITING OPPOSITE WITNESS.

As a general rule, a new trial will not be granted to enable the moving party to discredit an opposite witness.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 37, Cent. Dig. New Trial, §§ 221-223.]

6. MASTER AND SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action for the death of a locomotive engineer in a collision between his train and another, evidence held sufficient to warrant a finding that there was negligence in failing to put down torpedoes as a warning to deceased.

7. APPEAL—REVIEW—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence on the question of negligence is conflicting, the verdict will not be disturbed unless palpably erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, §§ 3935-3937.]

8. SAME—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

The Supreme Court will not undertake to pass upon the weight of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, §§ 3928-3943.]

9. MASTER AND SERVANT — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action for the death of a locomotive engineer in a collision between his train and another, held, that the question of contributory negligence was one for the jury.

10. APPEAL—REVIEW—QUESTION OF FACT.

Where it is impossible to say that reasonable men might not differ in their judgment on the question of contributory negligence, the Supreme Court will not disturb a verdict for plaintiff.

Error to Corporation Court of Roanoke.

Action by Essie Spencer, as administratrix of Arthur T. Spencer, against the Norfolk & Western Railway Company. Judgment in favor of plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Wm. Gordon Robertson, for plaintiff in error. Smith & King, for defendant in error.

HARRISON, J. This writ of error brings before us for review the record of an action at law, brought by the defendant in error to recover damages of the plaintiff in error for the alleged negligent killing of the plaintiff's intestate in a collision between two trains of the defendant company.

The collision occurred at a point on the Roanoke & Southern branch of the Norfolk & Western Railway, about three miles south of Starkey station, and near to bridge 1,813, between a freight train, with 2 engines, 52 cars, and a caboose, which was traveling north, and a work train, which was standing still, headed south. Arthur T. Spencer, the plaintiff's intestate, was the engineer on the front engine of the double-header, which was derailed at a point near the south end of the bridge, and went down the bank, inflicting injuries from which Spencer died three days later.

The trial, which was in the corporation court for the city of Roanoke, resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of Spencer's administratrix for $10,000.

The first bill of exception is to the action of the corporation court in admitting the evidence of W. S. McClanahan, who was introduced to show, by standard tables of mortality, what was the probable expectancy of life of a man 26 years of age. In the argument here this exception was properly abandoned. Virginia & S. W. Ry. Co. v. Bailey, 104 Va. —, 49 S. E. 23-37.

The second bill of exceptions is to the court's action in giving the four instructions asked for by the plaintiff. The learned counsel for the defendant company has at this bar withdrawn his objection to instructions Nos. 1 and 3. It will be therefore only necessary to refer to Nos. 2 and 4.

Instruction No. 2 is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that, although the plaintiff's intestate may have been guilty of negligence, and although that negligence may in fact have contributed to the accident, yet if the defendant or engineman of the work train could, in the result, by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, have avoided the accident which happened, then plaintiff's intestate's negligence will not excuse the defendant, and the plaintiff is entitled to recover."

This instruction follows substantially the form that has been employed since the doctrine contained therein was first announced by this court. Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Anderson's Adm'r, 31 Grat. 812, 31 Am. Rep. 750; Johnson's Adm'r v. C. & C. Ry. Co., 91 Va. 176, 21 S. E. 238; Seaboard & Roanoke R. Co. v. Joyner's Adm'r, 92 Va. 354, 23 S. E. 773; Washington, etc., R. Co. v. Lacey, 94 Va. 460-476, 26 S. E. 834.

This instruction is further objected to upon the ground that there was no evidence upon which to base it. This position is not tenable. The work train was standing in a cut, about 225 feet south of bridge 1,813, when the engineer in charge called in his flagman. The evidence tends to show that when the flagman, in response to the call, reached the engine of the work train, he "hollered" to the engineer and said, "For God's sake, get out of here; there is a train coming down the mountain;" that the engineer did not move his engine, and the flagman made no effort to stop the coming train; that the engineer had time, after the warning given by the flagman, to have run his train back as far as the middle of the bridge, thus putting a distance of 332 feet between the two trains, with the view unobstructed, and both trains going in the same direction; and that, if the engineer of the work train had moved back promptly upon receiving notice of the coming freight train, no collision could have occurred.

This evidence was sufficient to justify instruction No. 2, and the plaintiff was entitled to have that view of the case submitted to the jury.

Instruction No. 4 tells the jury, in substance, that if they believe from the evidence that the plaintiff's intestate received the injury complained of in consequence of the negligence of the conductor, the engineer, or the flagman of the work train in not carrying out the rules and regulations of the defendant company, they must find for the plaintiff, unless the jury shall also believe from the evidence that the plaintiff's intestate was guilty of contributory negligence, and that the burden of proving such contributory negligence was upon the defendant.

It is contended that this instruction is erroneous, because there is no evidence tending to connect either the conductor or the engineer of the work train with the accident.

The evidence already adverted to in commenting upon instruction No. 2 is equally pertinent in connection with the objection urged to this instruction. In addition, there was other evidence which contributed to the basis for the instruction under consideration. The order which the conductor of the work train received the morning of the day the accident occurred gave him the right to work between Roanoke and bridge 1,813. At the time of the accident his train was 225 feet south of bridge 1,813. He was therefore outside of his working limits. Conceding that, if necessary, the conductor could have his work train standing beyond the limits prescribed by the order, it was for the jury to say, under the evidence, whether it was negligence to be beyond those limits on this occasion, and whether or not such negligence, if any, contributed to the accident. A careful examination of the record shows that there was sufficient evidence tending to show negligence on the part of each of the persons mentioned in instruction No. 4 to justify its being given.

The third and last bill of exceptions is to the action of the court in overruling the motion of the defendant company to set aside the verdict of the jury. Three grounds are alleged in support of this motion: (1) Misdirection of the jury; (2) after-discovered evidence; and (3) that the verdict was contrary to the law and the evidence.

The first ground has been disposed of by what has been said in considering the objections to the instructions.

The second ground rests upon an affidavit of W. J. Knighton, the conductor of the work train, as to a statement made to him by E. G. Halslip two or three days after the accident. E. G. Halslip was examined at the trial on behalf of the plaintiff, and was followed immediately by W. J. Knighton on behalf of the defendant company, who was called a second time to the stand after being fully examined, cross-examined, re-examined, and recross-examined, thus affording him ample opportunity to tell all that he knew about the case. His affidavit shows that the object of a new trial was that he might state that E. G. Halslip, a witness for the plaintiff, had on one point made to him a different statement from that made by this witness on the stand.

Without considering whether or not the additional evidence of Knighton, relied on as a ground for a new trial, is material, and likely to produce a different result, or whether or not reasonable diligence would have secured such evidence at the trial now under review, it is sufficient to say that the general rule is, subject to rare exceptions, to refuse a new trial when the sole object is to discredit a witness on the opposite side. Brugh v. Shanks, 5 Leigh, 649; Thompson v. Commonwealth, 8 Grat. 637; Brown v. Speyers, 20 Grat. 296; Read's Case, 22 Grat. 924-946.

As already seen, the sole object of the motion for a new trial on the ground of after-discovered evidence was to discredit the testimony of the witness E. G. Halslip, who had testified on the opposite side. In the light of the authorities cited, the after-discovered evidence relied on was insufficient to warrant a new trial.

The third ground upon which the motion to set aside the verdict rests is that the verdict was contrary to the law and the evidence.

At the time of the accident, the work train was standing on a sharp curve in a deep cut a short distance south of a long trestle, called "bridge 1,813," so that it was out of view of the engineer of the freight train until he was within 30 feet of it. Two work trains were engaged between Roanoke and bridge 1,813, under an order issued the day of the accident, which required them to protect themselves against each other and against all trains. For their protection, each was furnished with two flagmen, one of whom was required to protect his train from trains approaching from the north, and the other against trains approaching from the south. Rule 399a of the defendant company required the flagman to go three-fourths of a mile, or 23 telegraph poles, from the work train, and place one torpedo on the rail, on the engineer's side, and then to go back at least 7 telegraph poles farther, or one mile from his train, and place two torpedoes on the same side, 10 yards apart, and then return to the twenty-third telegraph pole, and remain there until called in by the whistle of his engine. The evidence tends to show that the flagman violated this rule, and failed to put down the torpedoes necessary as a warning to the plaintiff's intestate. It also tends to show that the defendant was guilty of negligence in other particulars, already adverted to in considering the instructions.

Whether or not the defendant company was guilty of negligence was a question of fact for the jury. Where the evidence is conflicting, as in this case, the verdict will not be disturbed unless palpably erroneous. H. & W. Ry. Co. v. Perrow, 101 Va. 345, 43 S. E. 614; Morlen v. N. & A. T. Co., 102 Va. 622, 46 S. E. 907.

Nor will this court undertake to pass upon the weight of the evidence or the credibility of the witnesses. This is the province of the jury, which the court will not usurp. The jury should be left free in each case to determine, in view of all the circumstances, what witnesses, or what part of the evidence of any witness, they will credit.

N. & W. Ry. Co. v. Poole's Adm'r, 100 Va. 148, 40 S. E. 627. If the evidence introduced on behalf of the plaintiff was believed by the jury, and that of the defendant disbelieved, we could not say that their verdict was palpably erroneous, or that it was not justified.

It is contended that the plaintiff's intestate was guilty of contributory negligence. This was also a question of fact for the jury, and was submitted to them under full instructions as to the law, given without objection, on behalf of the defendant company. The deceased was discharging his duties as a locomotive engineer under the following order, which is known in the record as the "slow order": "To all concerned: Until further notice, all trains will reduce speed to six miles per hour while passing over bridge 1,813, Winston district." The deceased is charged with a violation of this order, which is the foundation for the charge of contributory negligence. It is to be observed that the collision took place before the freight train reached the bridge mentioned in the order, but it is contended that the deceased was approaching the bridge at a rate of speed that would have prevented him from reducing it to six miles per hour while crossing the bridge. The evidence of the speed of the train is conflicting. One witness puts it at 6 miles an hour, another at 8, and still another at 20 miles per hour, and the evidence on that point tends to show that the speed could have been reduced to 6 miles an hour by the time the bridge was reached.

Under the evidence, it is impossible to say that reasonable men might not differ in their judgment upon the question whether or not the plaintiff's intestate was guilty of negligence, and therefore this court would not be warranted in disturbing the verdict of the jury. Southern Ry. Co. v. Aldridge's Adm'r, 101 Va. 142-149, 48 S. E. 333.

For these reasons, the judgment must be affirmed.

(38 W. Va. 333)

VALE v. SUITER & DUNBAR.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 21, 1905.)

1. CONTRACTS—ACTION ON EVIDENCE.

A written contract, between other parties than the parties to a suit, which is referred to in the written contract sued upon and to any extent supplements the same, is admissible in evidence upon the trial.

2. EVIDENCE—DECLARATIONS—RES GESTÆ.

Communications between a party to a suit and his employes, not in the presence of the adverse party and of which he has no notice, are not admissible in evidence in his behalf, unless they are a part of the res gestæ.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 20, Cent. Dig. Evidence, § 1073.]

3. TRIAL—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE—MOTION.

When a motion is made to strike out a portion of the testimony of a witness, the part of the testimony desired to be stricken out must be particularly and definitely pointed out.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 46, Cent. Dig. Trial, § 246.]

4. CONTRACT—FAILURE TO PERFORM.

Where a party by his own contract creates a duty or charge upon himself, his undertaking must be substantially complied with under any and all circumstances. To excuse a performance, his contract must provide for it.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Mason County.

Action by A. W. Vale against Suiter & Dunbar. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants bring error. Reversed.

C. E. Hogg, Somerville & Somerville, and Hollis C. Johnson, for plaintiffs in error.
W. R. Gunn and J. S. Spencer, for defendant in error.

McWHORTER, J. This is an action of assumpsit, brought by A. W. Vale against Suiter & Dunbar in the circuit court of Mason county, to recover from defendants a balance claimed by him to be due for sawing into lumber and ties timber furnished him at his portable sawmill by defendants on what was known as the "William Miller Two-Mile Creek Farm," in Mason county, filing with his declaration a bill of particulars showing a balance due plaintiff of $860.42. The defendants entered their plea of non assumpsit and filed a special plea in writing, setting up a contract in writing made on the 5th day of May, 1900, between the plaintiff and the defendants, whereby the plaintiff, in consideration that the defendants would pay him 5 cents for each tie manufactured from said timber, and $3 per thousand for all other lumber or mill stuff, except ties gotten out, covenanted and agreed with said defendants that he would set up and put in good running order, with a capacity of 10,000 to 12,000 feet per day, a portable sawmill, with proper attachments for cut-off saw and edger, on said farm, and that he would make three sets for sawing on said premises, and use good judgment in getting out all the lumber possible that would be marketable from the logs of said timber, and agreed to saw standard ties, 6x8 inch, 8 feet long, and 6x9 inch, 8½ feet long; that he would furnish a grader for the inspection of the lumber and superintend the stacking of the same on the yard; that he would have the said mill set within six weeks after the signing of said agreement; that he would run the same steadily, save when prevented from so doing by unavoidable accidents, and saw all timber as ordered by defendants, including oak, poplar, ash, hickory, linn, elm, buckeye, walnut, sycamore, and beech, quartered oak excepted, and that afterwards the parties extended said contract on same terms as the original so as to include two additional sets of said mill on said farm; that said plaintiff, not regarding his said several covenants, promises, and agreements, did not set up and put in good running order, with a capacity of from 10,000 to 12,000 feet per day, a portable saw-mill, with proper attachments for cut-off saw and edger, on the farm, and did not use good judgment in getting out all of the lumber possible that would be marketable from the logs gotten out of said timber, and did not furnish a grader for the inspection of said lumber, and did not superintend the stacking of the lumber as per agreement, and did not run the mill steadily, save when prevented from so doing by unavoidable accidents, and did not saw all timber as ordered by the defendants, including the various kinds of timber mentioned, and that by reason of plaintiff's failure it became necessary for defendants to employ a man to do the grading plaintiff agreed to have done, and were compelled to take down lumber and regrade and restack the same, whereby the defendants were damaged to the amount of $138.27; and that by reason of plaintiff's failure to run said mill steadily as agreed said defendants were delayed three months in getting out said lumber and having the same marketed and getting returns therefrom, by reason of which they were damaged on account of such delay—for interest on money they were compelled to borrow, the sum of $120; for insurance on said lumber for three months by reason of plaintiff's failure to comply with the said clause of the agreement, $31.89; for three extra men they were compelled to keep for three months by reason of plaintiff's failure to comply with said clause of said agreement, $330; and for loss of time suffered by G. W. Sulter and S. A. Dunbar for three months each by reason of such failure of plaintiff, $600; and for damages occasioned by flood to stock on yards which defendants were prevented from removing in time to avoid flood by reason of plaintiff's failure to run said mill steadily, except when prevented from so doing by unavoidable accidents, $175; and by reason of such delay for three months defendants forfeited a contract which they had with Ellis & Ellis, of Baltimore, which expired on December 31, 1900, and which contract defendants could and would have fulfilled but for such failure of plaintiff, whereby they suffered damage to the amount of $250; also forfeited another contract for the same reason with Clark & Clark for the sale of ties, whereby they suffered damages to the amount of $171.99; and that said defendants by reason of the said premises had sustained damages amounting in the whole to a large sum of money, to wit, the sum of $1,817.10, which was still due and unpaid and owing from the plaintiff to defendants, and which was there pleaded as an offset against the plaintiff. Such plea was verified by S. A. Dunbar, one of the defendants, to which special plea in writing plaintiff filed his general replication in writing, and denied the truth of said plea, and prayed that the same might be inquired of by the country. A jury was impaneled and sworn to try the issue. In the course of the trial of the case the defendants took bills of exceptions numbered, respectively, from 1 to 21, which were signed, sealed, and saved to the defendants, the first 19 of which were exceptions to the rulings of the court in relation to the admission of testimony claimed to be improperly admitted.

Exception No. 1. V. C. Bobo, a witness introduced by plaintiff, was asked: "Please state whether you allowed any assistance that you rendered at the breakdowns or anything of the kind to interfere with your duties as measurer, tallier, and grader of lumber sawed by Mr. Vale's mill on the William Miller Two-Mile Creek farm?" which he was permitted to answer over the objection of the defendants. He answered, "I did not." The witness had been employed by plaintiff in the capacity indicated by the question, and had at times, as it appears from the evidence, assisted about the mill in some other matters, and the object of the question was to show that his duties as measurer and grader were not interfered with by such assistance rendered by him in other matters. The defendants do not rely upon this exception in their brief, and I see no valid objection to the testimony. Plaintiff had a right to have the question answered. If there was not sufficient work in the line to employ witness' whole time, he could properly be engaged otherwise when not so employed.

Bill of exceptions No. 2 relates to questions asked on cross-examination by plaintiff of the witness G. W. Sulter, and which questions were permitted to be asked and answered over the objection of the defendants, relating to the timber that was cut to be sawed and shipped. This exception, likewise, is not relied upon by defendants, as it is not mentioned in their brief.

Bills of exceptions Nos. 3 and 4 relate to testimony referring to a contract in writing between Graham & Blessing on the one side and Sulter & Dunbar on the other, dated March 2, 1900, in relation to the hauling of the timber by Graham & Blessing for Sulter & Dunbar on the William Miller Two-Mile Creek farm to the mill of plaintiff. One of the objections to the introduction of this testimony set out in said bills of exceptions was that it was thereby attempted to prove the contents and provisions of a contract in writing by oral testimony, using secondary evidence without laying the grounds therefor, the plaintiff being in possession of the primary evidence. 1 Greenl. on Ev. § 82; 7 A. & E. E. L. (1st Ed.) 85; 2 A. & E. E. L. (2d Ed.) 535. The contract itself was the best evidence of its contents, and it was improper to hear the testimony of witnesses as to what its contents were, and especially giving a construction of it. When improper testimony has been admitted over the objection of the opposite party, the presumption is that he was prejudiced by the admission of such testimony, unless it affirmatively appears that in fact he was not prejudiced by it. Hall v. Lyons, 29 W. Va. 410, 1 S. E. 582; Taylor v. Railroad Co., 33 W. Va. 39, 10 S. E. 29; Dent v. Pickens, 34 W. Va. 240, 12 S. E. 698, 26 Am. St. Rep. 921 (Syl., part 4). "Where illegal evidence is admitted against the objection of a party, it will be cause for setting aside the verdict, unless it clearly appear that the objecting party was not prejudiced thereby." The testimony referred to in said bills of exceptions Nos. 3 and 4 should not have been introduced.

It is proper at this point to consider bill of exceptions No. 19, which goes to the introduction in evidence by the plaintiff of the contract of March 2, 1900, between Suiter & Dunbar, of the one part, and Blessing & Graham, of the other. It is claimed by the plaintiff that it was properly introduced because of its provisions under which the plaintiff's mill was to be supplied with logs, and the supervisory right reserved by defendants to forfeit the contract and personally furnish the logs at the mill themselves; that as between Vale and Suiter & Dunbar the loggers were the agents and employes of the defendants, and that the failure of the loggers to supply the mill, which to any extent caused the delay of the plaintiff in his sawing, was contributory negligence chargeable to defendants, and that to such extent plaintiff was not liable for injury resulting from such delay, and that it was proper evidence as showing that the loggers' measurement was to be "mill measurement," and "which is to be taken and made by the said first and second parties and mill operators jointly and shall be the basis of all settlements under this contract." While this contract of March 2, 1900, was between the defendants and Graham & Blessing alone, and they were the only parties to it, yet there is a reference to this contract in the contract of May 5, 1900, between the plaintiff and the defendants, as being the contract under which the logs were to be supplied to the mill to be sawed by the plaintiff. This contract of March 2d was fully identified as the contract under which the mill was to be supplied with logs, and under it, upon the failure on the part of the loggers, Graham & Blessing, the defendants were entitled to forfeit this contract and themselves furnish the logs; and the same contract provided that plaintiff, Vale, should look to Graham & Blessing for damages for any delay in furnishing logs. The contract was relevant as showing that Graham & Blessing were the agents and employes of defendants, and that their delay or failure was that of defendants; and it also contained provisions for measurements, which were to be "mill measurements," and under it the measurements were to be taken by the three parties, Suiter & Dunbar, Graham & Blessing, "and the mill operators jointly." Thus it was a necessary supplement to the contract of May 5th between plaintiff and defendants, as that contract in itself made no provision for measurements and no provision whatever for supplying logs to the mill. Without the contract of March 2d, that of May 5th would be manifestly incomplete, and, being so, the former necessarily became a part of the latter by the reference to it, in so far as it supplements it and is not inconsistent with it. 9 Cyc. 770; 1 Whar. Law of Ev. §§ 618, 619. The court did not err in admitting the contract of March 2, 1900, in evidence.

Bill of exceptions No. 5 relates to the cross-examination of Lee Arrington, witness called on behalf of the defendants. The questions objected to as propounded by counsel for plaintiff on cross-examination were: "Q. What were those dead culls worth at the time they were left there in the hollow? A. I don't hardly know. Q. Would you have bought them? A. Yes, sir; I would have bought them at some price." This was a legitimate cross-examination, the defendants having examined the witness concerning the culls in question, and there was evidence tending to prove that plaintiff was to be paid for sawing culls.

Bill of exceptions No. 6 concerns the examination of the plaintiff as a witness on behalf of himself, giving his opinion of V. C. Bobo as to his competency and capacity as a grader of lumber, and the court was asked to instruct the jury to disregard the answer of the witness, which motion was overruled. This, under Purkey v. Transportation Co. (W. Va.) 50 S. E. 755, and cases there cited, is inadmissible as evidence, and the court should have instructed the jury to disregard it.

Bill of exceptions No. 7 relates to the examination of the plaintiff as a witness, by his counsel, in relation to other mills which he had in operation, where he speaks of two other mills—one in Gallia county, Ohio; the other in Meigs county, Ohio. What other mills plaintiff was running or had in operation elsewhere was wholly immaterial and irrelevant. Counsel for plaintiff contend that this evidence may not have been pertinent, but it was absolutely harmless, and applies the same remarks to the evidence set out in bill of exceptions No. 8. While this error alone would not be sufficient, perhaps, to reverse the case, it is irrelevant and should not have been admitted, and, as there must be another trial, it is proper to here say so.

Bill of exceptions No. 8 refers to the questions asked the plaintiff, A. W. Vale, on re-examination, in relation to what he did on receiving a telegram from his men, dated January 7, 1901, which seems to have been in relation to the demoralizing effect the report about the prevalence of smallpox had upon his men, when he was permitted to show that he had sent to his employé, J. D. Farley, a telegram to "Keep in close and go ahead. A. W. Vale." "Q. In pursuance of that, you may state whether the men did keep in close and go ahead. A. Part of them refused to obey that and left. A few of them stayed and went ahead and finished the job; but they went away, so that they were a broken crew, and they could not go ahead and move to another job and set up the mill. Q. Please state whether or not you abandoned your operations at that time, or whether you went ahead and did the best you could. A. We went ahead and did the best we could under the circumstances." This evidence was concerning communications between the plaintiff and his employés, not in the presence of the defendants or either of them, and of which they had no notice. The purpose of it was evidently to impress upon the minds of the jury that plaintiff had been at the time diligently striving to comply with the terms of his contract by running the mill steadily. The communications were self-serving and improper to be introduced as evidence. Scott v. Shelor, 28 Grat. 891; 20 Cent. Dig. § 1068.

The evidence objected to by the defendants, as set out in bill of exceptions No. 9, is touching the evidence of Vale tending to show that he had no trouble with regard to paying his men, and no complaint by them because they were not promptly paid, which he had a right to show.

Bill of exceptions No. 10 is of the same character as the evidence set forth in bill of exceptions No. 7, and the questions therein complained of were improper, except the last question, which was: "Please state whether or not, in your opinion, you had the necessary men at this mill to operate it in accordance with the terms of your contract." I see no objection to this question, and the answer thereto was proper, in so far as it was responsive to the question; but it was improper for the witness to show the sufficiency of the force at the mill in question by a comparison with the forces he had at the other mills he was running in Ohio, as witness attempted to show in his answer.

Bill of exceptions No. 11 relates to the evidence of the witness Bobo, called for plaintiff, and his attempt to prove the instructions given by plaintiff to Bobo in regard to the grading of the lumber. This evidence should have been rejected, for the same reasons given for the rejection of the evidence set out in bill of exceptions No. 8.

Bill of exceptions No. 12 relates to evidence of the sawing of ties of a larger size than any provided for in the written contract. The court's action in overruling the objection to this evidence should be sustained, and counsel for the defendants seems to be of the same opinion, as they failed to notice it in their brief.

As to bill of exceptions No. 13, the first part of the evidence objected to, relative to the instructions from plaintiff to his employé, Mr. Bobo, should have been sustained, for the reasons given in relation to bills of exceptions Nos. 8 and 11. The other questions objected to, relative to the payment by the plaintiff to his hands, were not improper.

Bills of exceptions Nos. 14, 15, and 16 relate to testimony concerning the contract of March 2, 1900, between Suiter & Dunbar and Blessing & Graham, for the cutting and hauling of the timber, and what was to be done thereunder. The said contract being properly admitted in evidence, the evidence complained of under these bills of exceptions was properly admitted; the same not being given as construing said written contract, and not inconsistent therewith.

The evidence complained of being admitted, as set out in bill of exceptions No. 17, is of the same character as that in bill of exceptions No. 6, and was improper for the reasons there given.

Bill of exceptions No. 18 complains that the court overruled the defendants' motion for the exclusion of all that part of the testimony of the witness Blessing in regard to the contract of March 2, 1900, but points out no particular part thereof. The motion was too indefinite and uncertain, and the court did not err in overruling the motion.

In the course of the trial the defendants asked the court to give to the jury certain instructions in writing, which are set out in full in bill of exceptions No. 20, and are numbered therein, respectively, from 1 to 16, inclusive, of which Nos. 1, 5, 9, 10, 11, 15, and 16 were given by the court. And the court refused to give those numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 12, 13, and 14. The defendants excepted to the ruling of the court in refusing said last-named instructions. No. 2 is as follows: "The jury are hereby instructed that the phrase 'unavoidable accident' means that which is not occasioned in any degree, either remotely or directly, by the want of such care or skill as the law holds every man bound to exercise. And the jury are further instructed that an abandonment of the operation or working of the mill by the men or hands in the employ of the plaintiff, hired by him to saw the lumber and the ties, occasioned by any cause whatsoever, is not 'unavoidable accident' within the meaning and contemplation of the law and the true construction of the contract between the plaintiff and the defendants bearing date May 5, 1900, if the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff made no effort to get other men or hands in their place to continue to saw lumber and ties under said contract after the abandonment of the operation of the mill by the men already theretofore employed." This instruction fails to present the true issue in the case. It was not a question of the effort made by the plaintiff to get other men or hands in the place of those who had abandoned his work, or of his failure to make any effort, but whether he could, by due diligence, have procured them and continued thereby to prosecute the work according to the terms of his contract. The agreement on the part of plaintiff was that "the party of the second part shall place a mill on said premises and have the same set within six weeks from the signing hereof, and shall run said mill steadily, save when prevented from so doing by unavoidable accident." This was binding upon the plaintiff, and it was his duty, after the mill was set, to run it and keep it in constant operation, and was only excusable when prevented by unavoidable accident. "Things improbable in contracts must be performed. A thing impossible may be excused." Trustees of Schools v. Bennett, 27 N. J. Law, 513, 72 Am. Dec. 373. "The rule is well established that, where a party by his own contract creates a duty or charge upon himself, his undertaking must be substantially complied with under any and all circumstances. To excuse a performance his contract must provide for it." Bacon v. Cobb, 45 Ill. 47; Steele v. Buck, 61 Ill. 343, 14 Am. Rep. 60; Beebe v. Johnson, 19 Wend. 500, 32 Am. Dec. 518; Stees v. Leonard, 20 Minn. 494 (Gil. 448); Booth v. Mill Co., 60 N. Y. 487; Brewer v. Tysor, 48 N. C. 180; James River & Kanawha Co. v. Adams, 17 Grat. 427. Instruction No. 3 is similar to No. 2, and liable to the same criticism.

Instruction No. 4 tells the jury that if they believe from the evidence that plaintiff began the work of sawing lumber and ties under the contract of May 5, 1900, some time in the latter part of July, and that his mill had a capacity to saw from 10,000 to 12,000 feet per day, and that by steadily running said mill plaintiff could have sawed all the lumber and ties charged by him against the defendants, specified by him in his bill of particulars, on or before November 28, 1900, except any unavoidable accident occurring during that period, and if they further believe from the evidence that a failure to saw the lumber and ties for defendants charged in said account during said period occasioned the defendants any loss or damage as specified in defendants' special plea, then they must ascertain from the evidence what such loss or damage amounted to, and allow and assess the same in favor of the defendants. This is the issue raised by the special plea, and to which the plaintiff filed a general replication; and there being evidence tending to prove his ability to have done such sawing as specified in the instruction, and further evidence tending to prove the damages resulting from such failure to do the sawing, the jury are properly told that the bare fact—that is, the fact alone—that the men quit was not sufficient to excuse plaintiff for his failure to run the mill steadily. The instruction was clearly right and should have been given.

Instruction No. 6 tells the jury that if they believe from the evidence plaintiff made no active and diligent effort to secure men to take the places of those who quit him in November, 1900, and by making such effort he could have procured other men in the place of those who quit his employment on account of smallpox, then the bare fact that the men who were at work in his employment sawing the ties and timber under the contract of May 5, 1900, quit his employment because of the alleged prevalence of smallpox in the city of Gallipolis will not excuse the plaintiff for his failure to run the mill steadily after the latter part of November, 1900, until he resumed work in January, 1901. Under the authorities hereinbefore cited this instruction should have been given, as it tells the jury that, if they believe from the evidence that by due diligence he could have procured help and continued the work, he was not justified in letting the mill remain idle, as he was under contract to keep it in constant operation.

The seventh instruction is as follows: "The jury are hereby instructed that if they believe from the evidence that the men in the employ of the plaintiff, Vale, quit the work of sawing lumber and ties for the defendants on or about November 28, 1900, because of the prevalence of smallpox, or the reputed prevalence of smallpox, in the city of Gallipolis, in the state of Ohio, the fact that such men did so quit his plaintiff's employment will not excuse the plaintiff from running his mill steadily thereafter, unless the jury further believe from the evidence that the plaintiff actually did make a reasonable and diligent effort to secure other men to run his said mill after the former men quit his employment." For the reasons stated in relation to instructions Nos. 2 and 3, the closing part of this instruction, to make it good, should have been, "unless the jury further believe from the evidence that the plaintiff could by due diligence have procured sufficient competent force to enable him to carry on his work according to the contract of May 5, 1900, after his men had so quit his employment."

Instruction No. 8 reads as follows: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the men in his (plaintiff's) employ were on the West Virginia side of the Ohio river, and that the reputed prevalence of smallpox was confined to the city of Gallipolis, distant some two miles or more, and if the jury further believe from the evidence that the reputed cases of smallpox in Gallipolis were under quarantine, that steamboats were still running on the Ohio river, that trains were still running on the railroads passing through and by Gallipolis, and that this state of facts prevailed at the time the men in the employ of the plaintiff, working on the saw-mill of the plaintiff located on the Miller Two-Mile Creek farm, at the time the said men actually left the said sawmill and quit working thereon, then the jury should take all these matters into consideration; and if they further believe that there was no imminent danger to the said men in the employ of the plaintiff of the spread of smallpox among them from the city of Gallipolis, then the jury are instructed that the fact that said men did quit the employment of the plaintiff and refused to operate said mill will not excuse the plaintiff for a failure to run the mill steadily after the latter part of November, 1900, the time when the said men did quit his employment, until January 2, 1901." This instruction, to make it good, should have added to it, "unless they further believe that by exercise of due diligence he could not have procured men," or words of like import.

Instruction No. 12 relates to the sawing of ties of a larger size than those specified in the contract of May 5, 1900, and tells the jury "that if the plaintiff sawed such ties without any notice to the defendants that he would charge a greater rate than five cents per tie (the price specified for the ties to be sawed under the said contract), then the jury were instructed that they could not allow to the plaintiff any greater sum than the five cents per tie provided for in the said contract." This instruction was properly refused, because the ties differed from those specified in the contract, were larger, and were not sawed under said contract.

Instruction No. 13 is bad because it instructs the jury "that if the mill commenced work and running at its full capacity the plaintiff could have sawed the lumber and ties charged for in his account filed with his declaration in this cause by the time the men in his employment actually quit work in the latter part of November, 1900, and if the jury further believe from the evidence that the plaintiff's failure to finish the sawing of such lumber and ties by that time caused the defendant's damages to any amount on the specification of damages, or any of them, set forth in the defendants' special plea filed in this cause, then the jury should assess and allow the defendants damages by reason thereof in such sum as the evidence in this cause shows that the defendants did thereby sustain." This instruction, in my opinion, is bad because it contemplates the running of the mill "to its full capacity," when the contract provides that he should "run said mill steadily." The requirement that the mill should be run "to its full capacity" places upon the plaintiff a burden which his contract does not authorize; but, the majority of the court being of opinion that the instruction is good, it should have been given, and the court erred in refusing it.

Instruction No. 14 reads: "The jury are hereby further instructed that if they believe from the evidence that Graham & Blessing had a contract with Sulter & Dunbar for the hauling of all the timber on the Miller Two-Mile Creek farm and that under their said contract said Graham & Blessing had 15 months from the time their said contract was made with said Sulter & Dunbar in which to haul said timber to the mill or mills, the jury are hereby instructed that, because said Graham & Blessing did have such length of time in which to haul all of the said timber on said land to the mill or mills to be sawed, this length of time permitted by Sulter & Dunbar to Graham & Blessing will not excuse any delay on the part of the plaintiff to finish sawing under his contract of May 5, 1900, which plaintiff could have reasonably avoided; and if the plaintiff could have finished his sawing in the exercise of reasonable diligence sooner than the plaintiff actually did conclude the sawing of lumber and ties under said contract of May 5, 1900, and that such delay caused the defendants damages, then the jury are instructed to allow to defendants any such damages as the evidence shows them to have sustained by reason of such delay." This instruction was improper to be given to the jury without a qualification to the effect that "unless it further appears that plaintiff was delayed by the failure of defendants, or their employes, Graham & Blessing, to keep the mill supplied with timber," and to the extent of such delay caused by the failure to furnish timber defendants would not be entitled to damages sustained by such delay.

For the reasons herein stated the verdict of the jury is set aside, the judgment reversed, and the case remanded to the circuit court of Mason county for a new trial to be had therein.

(53 W. Va. 325)

KELLER v. KELLER.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Nov. 14, 1905.)

DIVORCE—TEMPORARY ALIMONY—NOTICE.

An order for temporary alimony, made in vacation in a divorce suit, without notice, is void.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Barbour County.

Suit by Lafayette Keller against Cordella A. Keller for divorce. From an order granting alimony and dismissing the cause, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Chas. M. Murphy, for appellant. Wamsley & Coberley, for appellee.

BRANNON, P. Lafayette Keller brought suit in Barbour county against Cordella A. Keller for divorce, and filed his bill and took some depositions. The defendant appeared before the judge in vacation, and filed an answer resisting her husband's suit, and asking temporary alimony. Without notice to the plaintiff or appearance, the judge made an order requiring the man to pay his wife $200 for temporary alimony and maintenance of her defense, and ordered the answer to be filed. Afterwards in term the husband moved the court to set aside said order for alimony, but the court refused to do so, and ordered that the suit be stayed until the money be paid. The court suppressed certain depositions taken by the plaintiff as taken in defendant's absence. At a subsequent term an order appears saying: "The court doth on its own motion dismiss the cause for want of prosecution."

The order requiring the payment of alimony without notice is void. The answer could not be received as a pleading legally in the cause in vacation, and thus justify the order. A court cannot admit pleadings or take any steps in vacation except by statute. Kinports v. Rawson, 29 W. Va. 487, 2 S. E. 85; 4 Ency. Pl. & Prac. 337. If the answer had been filed in term, upon it an order could have been made in term, without notice, because a party must always be in court to observe what orders are made in the suit. But as to proceedings in vacation it is different. A judge can in vacation make an order for temporary alimony, under Code 1899, c. 64, § 9, but the adverse party has right to defend a motion for temporary alimony. 14 Cyc. 754. As he has right to defend the motion, it follows that he must have notice of a motion to be heard in vacation. Coger v. Coger, 48 W. Va. 135, 35 S. E. 823; Handlan v. Handlan, 37 W. Va. 486, 16 S. E. 597.

It was error to suppress the depositions taken April 29, 1902, on the theory that the defendant was not present. The taking had been duly adjourned to that date.

It was error to dismiss the suit. How could there be prosecution of it when the court had stayed it, and thus prohibited the plaintiff from prosecuting it? We suppose that the plaintiff was considered as not prosecuting the suit because he had not paid the alimony; but that order, being void, was no warrant for the order to stay or the order dismissing the suit.

We reverse the order allowing the alimony, that suppressing the depositions, that staying and that dismissing the suit, and remand the cause for further proceedings.

(124 Ga. 97)

WALKER v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—SECOND APPEAL.

The facts appearing in the present record are substantially as in the record of the case brought to this court at the last term, when the law applicable thereto was decided. Walker v. State, 50 S. E. 994, 122 Ga. 747.

2. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the allegations of an indictment are legally sufficient to describe and define the criminal act charged, it is not error for the court to instruct the jury that, upon proof of these allegations beyond a reasonable doubt, the jury is under a duty to convict.

3. SAME.

A charge that, if one took orders for the sale of whisky at the time and place and in the manner alleged in the indictment, he would be guilty of the offense defined in Pen. Code 1895, § 428, is not rendered erroneous because the court did not charge, in immediate connection therewith, that if the defendant acted as agent of the buyer in the transaction, he would not be guilty; it appearing that the court did elsewhere in the charge state this proposition in the language of a written request preferred by the defendant's counsel.

4. CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS.

While it is the duty of the court, whether requested or not, to charge the jury the appropriate law on the substantial issues of a case, yet a defendant who submits a written request for a charge on a material issue, which charge, as requested, is given in charge to the jury, cannot complain that the proposition therein embraced should have been elaborated by the court.

5. SAME—OBJECTIONS TO EVIDENCE.

When evidence is offered and its admissibility is challenged, counsel may state the reason why such testimony should be allowed; and if what he says is in good faith, and not calculated to prejudice the jury, it affords no ground for declaring a mistrial, and the objecting party cannot justly complain thereof, especially when the court instructs the jury that they should not be influenced thereby.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Dublin; J. E. Burch, Judge.

Freeman Walker was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

See 50 S. E. 994.

Malcolm D. Jones, J. S. Adams, and Jos. L. Anderson, for plaintiff in error. G. H. Williams and W. C. Davis, for the State.

CANDLER, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 100)

EDWARDS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS—ILLEGAL SALE—EVIDENCE.

Under Pen. Code, § 431, if a person sells, without the license and taking the oath prescribed by law, any of the liquors therein named, he is guilty of a misdemeanor; and it is not necessary for the state to allege or prove that such named liquors are intoxicating.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 29, Cent. Dig. Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 233, 265.]

2. SAME—INTOXICATING CHARACTER OF LIQUOR—EVIDENCE.

Where, if the defendant was guilty of selling liquor without a license, under the evidence it was either whisky or brandy. It was not necessary to prove that whisky or brandy was intoxicating. Evidence of the taste and effect of drinking the liquor purchased could be considered in determining what it was; but, if in fact it was whisky or brandy, the defendant would not be acquitted because the state failed to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that it was intoxicating. Snider v. State, 7 S. E. 631, 81 Ga. 573, 12 Am. St. Rep. 350.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Jonesboro; E. M. Blablock, Judge.

Will Edwards was convicted of selling liquor without a license, and brings error. Affirmed.

J. W. Wise, for plaintiff in error. Jno. B. Hutcheson, for the State.

LUMPKIN, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 126)

ATLANTA & W. P. R. CO. v. ATLANTA, B. & A. R. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 9, 1905.)

1. EVIDENCE—JUDICIAL NOTICE.

The courts will take judicial notice of a charter granted to a railroad company by the Secretary of State, under the general law providing for the incorporation of such companies.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 20, Cent. Dig. Evidence, § 26.]

2. EMINENT DOMAIN—PROPERTY SUBJECT—LANDS OF RAILROAD COMPANY — PRESENT USE.

A railroad company incorporated under the general railroad law may institute condemnation proceedings to acquire the property of another railroad company, if the property sought to be condemned is not in actual use for railroad purposes by the company owning the property, and is not necessary to the present needs of such company. Property acquired and held by a railroad company in anticipation of future needs, and not used and not shown to be needed for present use by such railroad company, stands upon the same footing as ordinary private property, so far as the right of another railroad company to condemn it for railroad purposes is concerned.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 18, Cent. Dig. Eminent Domain, §§ 111, 117, 118.]

3. SAME—FUTURE NEEDS.

When, in a proceeding by one railroad company to condemn the property of another railroad company, it appears that the property sought to be condemned is not actually used by the railroad company which owns it for railroad purposes, and is not presently needed for such purposes, the right of condemnation will not be defeated merely because it appears that at some time in the future such property will be needed by such railroad company for railroad purposes. In such a case the future needs of the first company must yield to the present lawful needs of the second company.

4. INJUNCTION—CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS.

No sufficient reason appears for reversing the judgment refusing to grant the injunction.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

Bill by the Atlanta & West Point Railroad Company against the Atlanta, Birmingham & Atlantic Railroad Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

This was an application for an injunction by the Atlanta & West Point Railroad Company, hereinafter referred to as the "West Point Company," against the Atlanta, Birmingham & Atlantic Railroad Company, hereinafter referred to as the "Birmingham Company," to prevent the latter company from condemning, for use as a part of its main line, property in the city of Lagrange, Troup county, owned by the former company. The judge refused to grant the injunction, and the West Point Company excepted. It is averred in the petition that the West Point Company is one of the oldest railroads in the state, and for a period of more than half a century has operated a line of railroad from Atlanta to West Point; that it is operated in connection with the Western Railway of Alabama, which operates a line of railway from West Point to Opelika, Ala.; that the business of the company has increased from year to year, and it now does a large volume of business; that it has heretofore operated the line from Atlanta to Opelika as one division, but the local business between these points has so largely increased that it has become necessary to divide this division into two divisions, one from Atlanta to Lagrange, and the other from Lagrange to Opelika; that the creation of these two divisions will necessitate the extension of its yard and the enlargement of its terminal facilities at Lagrange, which will bring about a change of its depots, both passenger and freight, at that point; that, in anticipation of this, the company secured lands adjacent to its present property in the city of Lagrange, to be used in the enlargement of its terminals, and it has now a complete plan, as indicated by a map which is attached to the petition, which requires the use of this additional property so acquired; that while this additional property is not now actually in use, the plan contemplating its use has been perfected, and arrangements have been made to carry into effect this plan, which is absolutely essential to the proper conduct of its business as a common carrier; that the Birmingham Company is a corporation under the laws of this state, "recently incorporated," authorized to construct a railroad from Montezuma, Ga., to Birmingham, Ala., and from Atlanta, Ga., to Wedowee, Ala., and this company has served a notice of its intention and purpose to condemn a portion of the property which the West Point Company acquired for its terminal facilities in the city of Lagrange; that the acquisition of this property is not necessary for the carrying out of the purpose for which the Birmingham Company was incorporated, and the taking of the property would seriously impair the ability of the West Point Company to discharge those duties imposed upon it under its charter as a common carrier; and that the Birmingham Company has no authority under the law to take the property of the West Point Company. The answer of the Birmingham Company sets up that the property which it seeks to condemn has never been devoted by the West Point Company to any public use, and it will not be necessary to the proper exercise of the duties imposed upon the West Point Company to use the property sought to be condemned; and it is distinctly alleged that this property can be taken without in any way impairing, embarrassing, or materially affecting the West Point Company in the transaction of any of the business which it has, or which it may reasonably expect to have in the near future. At the hearing numerous affidavits were introduced by both parties on the various questions raised by the pleadings. The bill of exceptions assigns error on the refusal to grant the injunction, and also upon a number of rulings made by the judge on the admissibility of evidence.

Dorsey, Brewster & Howell, for plaintiff in error. J. L. Sweat, Hatton Lovejoy, and Rosser & Brandon, for defendant in error.

COBB, P. J. The charter of the Birmingham Company does not appear in the pleadings. The petition alleges that it is a corporation of this state "recently incorporated." It is well settled in this state that the courts will take judicial cognizance of the powers of a railroad company incorporated under an act of the General Assembly. The law requires the acts to be deposited in the office of the Secretary of State, and the court notices without proof the contents of all acts that are so deposited. Since the power to incorporate a railroad company has been taken away from the General Assembly and conferred upon the Secretary of State, the law requires that the application for a charter and the charter itself shall be recorded in the office of the Secretary of State. If the court can judicially notice a charter granted in an act of the General Assembly, which is merely required to be deposited in the office of the Secretary of State, we see no reason why like notice should not be taken of a charter granted under a general law, which requires the application, as well as the charter itself, to be recorded in the office of that officer. It has been held that where an act of the General Assembly requires the Governor to issue a proclamation, the court will take judicial notice of the contents of that proclamation as it appeared upon the minutes of the executive department. Ragland v. Barringer, 41 Ga. 114.

2. Under the general law for the incorporation of railroads, a railroad so incorporated is authorized "to acquire, purchase, hold, and use all such real estate and other property as may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of said road, and the stations, wharves, docks, terminal facilities, and all other accommodations necessary to accomplish the object of said corporation, and to condemn, lease, or buy any land necessary for its use. * * * To cross, intersect, or join or unite its railroads with any railroad heretofore or hereafter to be constructed, at any point in its route, or upon the ground of any other railroad company, with the necessary turnouts, sidings, and switches, and other conveniences necessary in the construction of said road, and may run over any part of any railroad's right of way necessary or proper to reach its freight-depot, in any city, town or village through or near which said railroad may run, under the limitations hereinafter named; but in crossing another railroad, either over, under, at grade, level or otherwise, it shall be at the expense of the company making the crossing, and in such way and manner, at the time of construction, as not to interfere with said railroad in its regular travel or business." Civ. Code 1895, § 2167, pars. 3, 6. "In the event any company does not procure from the owner or owners thereof by contract, lease or purchase, the title to the lands or right of way or other property necessary or proper for the construction or connection of said railroad and its branches or extensions, or its depots, wharves, docks, or other necessary terminal facilities, necessary or proper for it to reach its freight or passenger depot, in any city, town or village, in the state, as hereinafter provided, said corporation may construct its railroad over any lands belonging to other persons, or over such rights of way or tracks of other railroads as aforesaid, upon paying or tendering to the owner thereof, or to his or her or its legally authorized representative, just and reasonable compensation for said lands or said right of way. When the compensation is not otherwise agreed upon, it shall be assessed and determined in the manner provided in this Code. Civ. Code 1895, § 2170. The power of condemnation conferred by the foregoing provisions of law may be exercised by a railroad company to appropriate to its use not only the property of an individual, but also the property of a corporation. The property of another railroad company may be condemned if the property thus sought to be acquired is not actually used by the other company for railroad purposes, and it will not be needed by that company for such purposes in the immediate future. Property owned by a railroad company, which it does not use for railroad purposes, and which will probably not be needed in the near future for such purposes, so far as the right of another railroad company seeking to condemn it is concerned, stands upon the same footing as other property not dedicated to a public use. Property so held by a railroad corporation is private property, owned for private purposes. It is not at all impressed with a public use, and is subject to be taken, under the exercise of the right of eminent domain, under the same circumstances that the property of a private individual may be so taken. Where the property is already in use for railroad purposes, or where it is manifest that it will be presently needed by the corporation to carry fully into effect the purposes of its creation, then the right of another railroad company to acquire it by condemnation is subject to restrictions which are not applicable where the property is not actually in use or needed for present use. Where property is already dedicated to a public use, it may, under the exercise of the power of eminent domain, be subjected to another use, but with the restriction that it cannot generally be so subjected if the second use either destroys or seriously impairs the first use. A condemnation having such an effect can only be had when there is expressed, unequivocal legislative authority permitting it. A general legislative authority to condemn will not be construed to give power to take, when such taking will be inconsistent with a prior public use to which the property has been dedicated. Under a general power to condemn property, a railroad company cannot condemn the property of another company, already used by it for railroad purposes, when the effect of such condemnation would be to destroy the use of the property by the former company, or to seriously impair the rights of the former company therein. City Council v. Georgia R. Co., 98 Ga. 161, 26 S. E. 499. Under a general power to condemn, one railroad company cannot acquire property of another railroad company, already set apart for use as a depot or as a yard for the drilling of cars, when it is manifest that the appropriation by the second company would be either to destroy the rights of the first company, or seriously impair the first company in the use of its property for the purpose of which it was set apart. Where a company has acquired property for the purpose of enlarging its depot, or its yard, or its terminal facilities, and is presently proceeding to adapt such newly-acquired property to the use for which it was acquired, such newly-acquired property would, under such circumstances, as to the rights of another company to condemn, be fully safeguarded by the same restrictions as if the plans which were actually in progress had become completed when the condemnation proceedings were instituted. But where a railroad company, in anticipation of its future needs, acquires property, and it is not in use, and not presently needed, and it is merely held to be used in the future at such times as the needs of the company may require it, the right of condemnation exists in favor of another company, which can only be defeated by showing that the condemnation would interfere with a present necessity of the company which owned the property.

3. The evidence authorized a finding by the judge, not only that the property sought to be condemned was not actually used by the West Point Company for railroad purposes, but that it would not be needed by it for such purposes at any time in the near future. Upon the latter point the evidence was conflicting, but the judge could find, and no doubt did find, from the evidence that the property was purchased for future use, and that the present needs of the West Point Company were not such as to require it to be used for railroad purposes. Under such circumstances, the future needs of the company must yield to the present lawful needs of the new company seeking a right of way through the city of Lagrange.

4. The bill of exceptions contains numerous assignments of error upon rulings made by the judge upon the admission and rejection of evidence, but none of these are of such material nature as to require discussion in the light of what has been said in the preceding portion of this opinion. There was no evidence to authorize a finding that the Birmingham Company had located its line otherwise than in good faith, for the purpose of carrying out the object of its incorporation, which was to serve the public in the most satisfactory way that a railroad corporation could render that service, and incidentally reap such benefit from that service as is always contemplated shall flow as a compensation for the services rendered. We see no reason for reversing the judgment refusing to grant the injunction prayed.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 141)

HILL v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 10, 1905.)

CRIMINAL LAW—NEW TRIAL—APPEAL.

The evidence was sufficient to authorize the verdict of guilty, and, the presiding judge having refused a new trial, this court will not interfere. The question of whether or not section 122 of the Penal Code was applicable to the class of employees involved in this case was abandoned in the argument.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; Moses Wright, Judge.

R. P. Hill was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Bunn & Trawick and Dean & Dean, for plaintiff in error. W. H. Ennis, Sol. Gen. for the State.

LUMPKIN, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 144)

MATHEWS et al. v. PARKER, Constable.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 10, 1905.)

1. JUSTICE OF THE PEACE—CERTIORARI—PETITION—SUFFICIENCY.

A petition for certiorari must allege error so specifically and distinctly that a reviewing court may understand the ground of error relied on. Clements v. McCormick Machine Co., 42 S. E. 222, 115 Ga. 851. Such a petition, which sets forth all the evidence submitted on the trial before a jury in a justice's court, and alleges that the verdict complained of is against the weight of the evidence and without evidence to support it, sufficiently complies with this rule.

2. ERROR—REVIEW—GRANT OF NEW TRIAL.

The Supreme Court will not disturb the first grant of a new trial upon certiorari, when the verdict was not demanded by the evidence. Brantley v. Taylor, 49 S. E. 262, 121 Ga. 475. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Tattnall County; T. A. Parker, Judge.

Action between A. J. Mathews and others against Evans Parker, constable. From an order of the superior court granting a new trial on certiorari from a justice, Mathews and others bring error. Affirmed.

W. M. Lewis, for plaintiffs in error. W. L. Wilson and A. B. Hutcheson, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 145)

WALDEN et al. v. WALDEN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 10, 1905.)

1. JUDGMENT—RES JUDICATA.

A verdict or other finding not followed by a judgment, will not serve as an estoppel by res judicata.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 30, Cent. Dig. Judgment, § 1020.]

2. PLEADING—OBJECTION TO PLEA.

Objection to a plea insufficient in law may be made by motion to strike the plea, and this practice is to be commended; but the same result may be accomplished by objection to evidence which is offered in support of the plea.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 39, Cent. Dig. Pleading, §§ 1093, 1433-1436.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Jefferson County; H. M. Holden, Judge.

Action by W. M. Walden and others against William Walden. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs bring error. Reversed.

Roger & Stephens, for plaintiffs in error. Cain & Hardeman, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. This was a suit for land. The defendant filed a plea in abatement, to the effect that he was the purchaser of the land under an execution sale, and that prior to the sale the plaintiffs had filed statutory claims to the levy of the fl. fa., and on the trial of the issue thus joined verdicts were rendered against the claimants, declaring the land subject to the lien of the fl. fa. By agreement of counsel the sole issue submitted was that raised by this plea. Upon the conclusion of the evidence the court directed a verdict for the defendant. Plaintiffs sued out a dire t bill of exceptions, complaining of rulings of the court on the admission of evidence, and that the evidence did not demand the verdict.

The plea in abatement was defective in substance as an estoppel by res adjudicata, in that it failed to allege that judgments were entered upon the verdicts returned in the claim cases; but the plea was not attacked by demurrer on this or upon any other ground. In all other particulars the plea was sufficiently specific. The identity of the parties, the subject-matter, and pleadings in the claim cases were averred with ample elaboration. It appeared that the verdicts returned in the claim cases had been rendered at preceding terms of the court in which the present case was pending, and that the time for filing motions for new trial had expired. But, even though it was too late to move for a new trial, the verdicts could not, of themselves alone, be urged as an estoppel by res adjudicata. It has been ruled by this court as settled law that a verdict, not followed by a judgment, will not serve as an estoppel, and that it is essential that a judgment be entered on the verdict before the parties will be concluded as to the matters in controversy. Carstarphen v. Holt, 96 Ga. 703, 23 S. E. 904; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 97 Ga. 795, 25 S. E. 385; Webster v. Mortgage Co., 93 Ga. 278, 20 S. E. 310; Harris v. Gano, 117 Ga. 934, 44 S. E. 11.

Good practice would require that the plaintiffs should take advantage of the fatal defect in the defendant's plea either by demurrer or by a motion to strike made before verdict. However, when the verdicts returned in the claim cases were tendered in evidence, objection was made to their reception, on the ground that they were unaccompanied by any judgment. The court overruled this objection. The defendant closed his case on the plea in abatement, without introducing any judgment, whereupon the plaintiffs made a motion to dismiss the plea on this and other grounds. The court properly declined to dismiss the plea because of the failure to prove a fact which was not therein alleged; but the motion to exclude the verdicts, unless they were accompanied by a judgment raised the point that the verdicts, of themselves, were insufficient to create an estoppel by res adjudicata, and the court should have ruled out the verdicts when the defendant failed to show that judgment had been duly entered upon them. See, in this connection, Crew v. Hutcheson, 115 Ga. 511, 42 S. E. 16, Kelly v. Strouse, 116 Ga. 872, 43 S. E. 280. The plaintiffs accomplished the same result by objecting to the evidence offered in support of the plea, which could more properly have been reached by presenting a motion to strike the plea. Doubtless it was the intention of counsel, by moving to dismiss the plea on the ground that it was not sustained by sufficient evidence, to urge the point that, in the absence of any judgment entered upon the verdicts in the claim cases, they could not have the effect of creating an estoppel by res adjudicata. But the motion to dismiss for the reasons actually assigned was without merit, since a plea should not be stricken merely because it has not been sufficiently supported by evidence offered to sustain it. However, as we have pointed out, the motion to exclude the verdicts because they were unaccompanied by any judgment sufficiently raised the objection that the plea was bad for failure to allege that judgments had been duly entered upon the verdicts. Taking this view of the matter, we hold that the court should have excluded the verdicts; and as, in the absence of this evidence, the plea in abatement could not be sustained, the defendant was not entitled to a verdict in his favor.

It is unnecessary to review the various other assignments of error upon the admission of evidence offered in support of the plea in abatement.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 147)

PENNINGTON v. AVERA.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 10, 1905.)

1. LOGS AND LOGGING—SALE OF GROWING TIMBER—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT.

An owner of land entered into a contract with the proprietor of a sawmill for the sale of "all the timber for sawmill purposes" on a given parcel of land. A portion of the purchase money was to be paid as soon as the "sawmill was located ready for sawing on said land." If this amount was not paid, the mill was to be removed from the land before "sawing any timber thereon." There were stipulations "that the stumps from which such sawmill timber is sawed or cut shall be two feet high, and not less, from the ground, and no timber is to be sawed or cut from said land * * * that is less than 14 inches in diameter;" that "any stumps less than two feet high, or any timber cut less than 14 inches in diameter, shall be a violation of this contract and a termination thereof;" and that the buyer was "to have twelve months in which to saw said lumber." Held, that only such portions of the trees as were capable of being sawed into lumber passed under the contract.

2. EVIDENCE—PAROL TO EXPLAIN CONTRACT.

In the trial of an action founded on a written contract of the character above indicated, parol evidence is inadmissible to show that at the time the contract was entered into it was the intention of the parties that the limbs and tops of trees were to pass under the contract, as well as such portions of the trees as were capable of being sawed into lumber.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Jefferson County; H. M. Holden, Judge.

Action by E. C. Avera against A. F. Pennington. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Avera brought suit against Pennington upon a promissory note. The defendant filed a plea, alleging that the plaintiff, by a written contract, sold to the defendant all the timber upon 300 acres of land; the consideration being that defendant was to pay $1,800, and saw for plaintiff 10,000 feet of lumber, and $1,200 has been paid, and the 10,000 feet of lumber delivered. The defendant under his contract had 12 months within which to remove the timber purchased. After cutting the trees, the plaintiff had prevented him from removing the tops and limbs, which the defendant had sold for firewood at 20 cents per cord, there being 5,000 cords; and, in view of the foregoing the defendant claims as damages by way of recoupment against the plaintiff $1,000 for 5,000 cords of wood at 20 cents per cord. The contract attached as an exhibit to the defendant's answer contained the stipulations set forth in the first headnote. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, disregarding the plea of recoupment. A motion for a new trial upon the general grounds was made by the defendant, and amended by the addition of the following ground: "Because the court rejected parol evidence offered by the defendant, tending to show that at the time of the execution of the contract the plaintiff and defendant agreed that the defendant had the right to all the tops, limbs, and trees unfit for timber within the dimensions specified, and defendant could use the same as he saw fit; that the defendant sold this wood at 20 cents per cord, there being 5,000 cords, within the time named in the contract, and it would have been removed from the land within that time; and that the defendant was wrongfully prevented by the plaintiff from delivering the wood." The motion was overruled, and the defendant excepted.

R. L. Gamble and Cain & Hardeman, for plaintiff in error. Jos. K. Hines and B. F. Walker, for defendant in error.

COBB, P. J. 1. "Timber" is not a word of invariable meaning. It may be used to designate wood suitable for building houses or ships, or for use in carpentry, joinery, etc., or trees cut down and squared, or capable of being squared, or cut into beams, rafters, boards, etc., or growing trees suitable for constructive uses, or trees generally, or woods, or a single piece of wood, whether suitable for use in some construction or already in use. Century Dict. Or the body, stem, or trunk of a tree. Bour. Dict., Rawle's Revision. The meaning to be given the term depends upon the connection in which it is used, and sometimes upon the occupation of the person who uses the term. In construing a contract where the word appears, it is not only proper, in determining what is intended by the parties, to look to the terms of the contract, but also the occupation of the contracting parties, and the purpose for which the contract was entered into. See, in this connection, United States v. Stores (C. C.) 14 Fed. 824. In the present case it is contended by one party to the contract that the term "timber" therein used conveyed all of the trees of the dimensions stated, except the stumps two feet high from the ground. The other party contends that under the contract only such portion of the trees was conveyed as was capable of being sawed into lumber. The controversy is as to the limbs and tops, which, it is conceded, could not be converted into lumber. The contract was for all the timber for sawmill purposes, which means all the timber suitable for sawmill purposes. Martin v. Peddy, 120 Ga. 1079 (4), 48 S. E. 420; Allison v. Wall, 121 Ga. 823 (6), 49 S. E. 831. It is said that the contract was, in effect, for the sale of the trees, that the words "for sawmill purposes" were descriptive of the trees that passed, and that all of the trees of the size indicated, any portion of which was capable of being converted into lumber, passed under the contract. Of course, there may be a valid sale of trees which would pass to the purchaser every part and portion thereof. When, however, the contract under consideration is taken in its entirety, it does not appear that the parties had in mind any transaction involving the sale of the trees as such. The buyer was to locate a sawmill upon the premises. He was to have a given time to saw that which he bought into lumber. When the trees were cut for the purpose of sawing, a stump of a given height was to be left, and any cutting which left a stump of less than that height was to be a violation of the contract, and terminated the same. On the one side was the owner of the land and the trees; on the other side was the operator of the sawmill. The terms "timber for sawmill purposes," construed to mean timber suitable for sawmill purposes, was to such an extent descriptive of the article sold that all timber which could be sawed into lumber became the property of the buyer, and could be used by him for any purposes he saw fit, whether lumber or otherwise. Gray Lumber Co. v. Gaskin, 122 Ga. 342 (5), 50 S. E. 164. The fact, however, that the buyer was a sawmill man is to be looked into in determining whether, under the contract, it was the intention of the parties that any greater portion of the trees would pass than that which would be converted into lumber in the event the buyer saw fit so to use the same. When the occupation of the buyer is taken into consideration, and the contract is construed as a whole, the proper conclusion to be reached is that it was the intention of the parties that only such portions of the trees as were capable of being converted into lumber passed under the contract.

2. Complaint is made that the court rejected testimony that it was the intention of the parties at the time the contract was made that the buyer was to have the tops, limbs, and trees unfit for timber of the dimensions specified under the contract. There was no error in rejecting this evidence. The contract was in writing, and properly construed was unambiguous, and the effect of the evidence would have been to vary the terms thereof. In the case of Richards v. Gilbert, 116 Ga. 382, 42 S. E. 715, relied on by counsel for plaintiff in error, the parol evidence as to the understanding between the parties that at the time of the execution of the mortgage it was understood that certain counters and tables which were in the store of the mortgaged premises was admitted without objection, and the case was decided upon the evidence as it appeared in the record. Attention is called to this fact in Wolff v. Sampson, 123 Ga. 400, 51 S. E. 335.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 396)

ROUNTREE v. JONES.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1905.)

JUDGMENT — DORMANCY — ENTRY OF EXECUTION.

An entry of the execution on the general execution docket will not prevent the dormancy of a judgment rendered in the superior court, where the execution has not been placed on the execution docket of that court within seven years from the rendition of the judgment.

Candler and Lumpkin, JJ., dissenting.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Brooks County; R. G. Mitchell, Judge.

Action by S. S. Rountree, surviving partner, against M. F. Jones. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

S. S. Rountree, as surviving partner of A. J. Rountree & Son and A. J. Rountree & Co., alleging himself to be an execution creditor of William Jones, seeks to enjoin the commission of waste by the defendant, M. F. Jones, upon land alleged to be owned by the estate of William Jones, and included in a homestead which had been set apart to him and which had not terminated. On the hearing for an interlocutory injunction, the court, after considering the evidence, refused to grant an injunction, and the plaintiff assigns such refusal as error in his bill of exceptions. The controlling question is as to the dormancy of the judgments on which the plaintiff's executions issued. Three executions were tendered in evidence: (1) One in favor of A. J. Rountree & Son against Martha J. Jones and William Jones, issued from the superior court of Brooks county on February 23, 1894, based on a judgment rendered November 7, 1893, with the following entries thereon: "Entered on General Execution Docket, Feby. 23, 1894. James D. Wade, Jr., Clerk." "No property to be found on which to levy this fi. fa. Feb. 11th, 1901. A. J. Conolly, Shff." "Received $10.31 from A. J. Rountree & Son, in payment of my cost. Oct. 3, 1895. J. D. Wade, Jr., Clk." Also an entry of levy on land lot 494, made by the sheriff on May 2, 1905. (2) An execution in favor of A. J. Rountree & Son against Martha J. Jones and William Jones, issued from the superior court of Brooks county on February 23, 1894, upon a judgment rendered November 7, 1893, with the following entries: "Entered on General Execution Docket, Feby. 23, 1894. J. D. Wade, Jr., clerk." "No property to be found on which to levy this fi. fa. A. J. Conoly, Sheriff. Feb. 11th/1901." (3) An execution in favor of Rountree & Co. against Martha J. Jones and William Jones, issued from the superior court of Brooks county on June 13, 1891, and based on a judgment rendered May 7, 1891, with the following entries thereon: "Entered on General Execution Docket, June 13th, 1891. J. D. Wade, Jr., Clerk." "Received from defendants the cost on this execution Oct. 1st, 1894. J. D. Wade, Jr., Clk." "No property on which to levy this fi. fa. June 4, 1898. A. J. Conoly, Sheriff." "I have this day levied the within fi. fa. on the north half of lot of land No. 473 in 12th district of Brooks county, Ga., containing 204½ acres, as the property of William Jones, one of the defendants. Nov. 14, 1901. A. J. Conoly, Shff." "We, the jury, find the property not subject. C. W. Dennis, Foreman." The first-named execution, with the following entry, was entered February 11, 1901, on the execution docket of the superior court of Brooks county: "No property to be found on which to levy this fi. fa. Feb. 11, 1901. A. J. Conoly, Shff." The second execution, with the following entry, was on Feb. 11, 1901, recorded on the execution docket of Brooks superior court: "No property to be found on which to levy this fi. fa. A. J. Conoly, Shff. Feb. 11, 1901." The third-named execution was, on January 1, 1899, entered on the execution docket of the superior court of Brooks county, with these entries indorsed thereon: "Received of defendants the cost on this execution. Oct. 1st, 1894. J. D. Wade, Jr. Clerk." "No property on which to levy this fi. fa. June 4th, 1898. A. J. Conoly, Sheriff."

D. W. Rountree and J. D. Wade, Jr., for plaintiff in error. L. W. Branch, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. (after stating the facts). It will appear from the foregoing recitals that more than seven years had elapsed since the rendition of the different judgments before they were entered on the execution docket of the superior court of Brooks county. The judgments were therefore dormant. "In order to prevent dormancy of a judgment, it is required that an execution shall be issued on such judgment, and placed upon the execution docket within a period of seven years from the date of the rendition of the judgment." Easterlin v. Sewing Machine Co., 115 Ga. 305, 41 S. E. 595; Civ. Code 1895, § 3761. When this section of the Code was considered in Hollis v. Lamb, 114 Ga. 740, 40 S. E. 751, it was held that the act of 1885 (which is codified in section 3761) "made practically but one change in the law, * * * and that was that the entries made on an execution by the officer, which were sufficient to prevent its dormancy, should be entered upon the execution docket of the court from which it issued," and that dormancy could also be prevented, without compliance with the terms of the act of 1885, if the plaintiff did any public act indicating an active and bona fide attempt to enforce his execution against the property of the defendant within the stated period. Counsel for the plaintiff in error frankly concedes that the entry of the executions on the general execution docket "does not meet the requirement of Civ. Code 1895, § 3761, which requires that an execution and the entries thereon shall be placed "upon the execution docket of the court from which the same issued;" but he does contend that the record of the executions and the entries thereon upon the "general execution docket" was such a public act as would, between the parties, arrest the running of the dormancy statute. This identical question was before this court in the case of Columbus Fertilizer Co. v. Hanks, 119 Ga. 950, 47 S. E. 222, and was decided by a divided court. In the opinion of the majority, the ruling was announced that a judgment will not be kept in life and the running of the dormancy statute arrested by a record of an execution and its entries on the general execution docket; and further, that an entry on the general execution docket was not such a public act as would prevent the judgment from becoming dormant. The arguments supporting both the majority opinion and the dissent were forcibly presented, and the writer, after much deliberation, believes the conclusion reached by Chief Justice Simmons in the majority opinion states the correct view on the subject.

Plaintiff in error further contends that the executions were not dormant because of the effort of the plaintiff to subject this land to the lien of his fi. fa. by an equitable proceeding, which terminated in an adverse decree in 1894. In support of this contention, he refers to the following recital of fact in the bill of exceptions: "It was admitted that a bill in equity was filed by the plaintiffs, in which it was sought to subject this lot, together with other lands, to several fi. fas. of Rountree & Co. and A. J. Rountree & Son, and that by decree rendered at the May adj. term, 1894, this lot was held to be exempt from levy and sale at that time because same was homestead." If this quoted extract had appeared in the bill of exceptions, with nothing to indicate the contrary, it might well be assumed that the fi. fas. therein referred to were the same as the ones which are concerned in the present suit. However, the bill of exceptions shows that the definite article "the," which was therein inserted immediately preceding the words "several fi. fas. of Rountree & Co. and A. J. Rountree," was stricken. No other inference can be drawn from the striking of this single word, so definite in its application, than that the fi. fas. in the present suit are not identical with any of those involved in the former equitable litigation. Had their identity appeared, perhaps this would have amounted to such an act of public nature as would have avoided dormancy.

Something was said in the briefs about a pending claim case which would save the execution from dormancy. The only hint about a claim case was a reference in the answer to a claim case which was pending in the Supreme Court. The record before us does not disclose that the fi. fas. now under consideration were those under which an attempt was made to subject other land of the defendants in execution, or that the litigation arose within seven years from the date of the judgments. Hence, this reference to a claim case, made in the defendant's answer, standing alone, does not constitute an admission that the plaintiff took any steps towards enforcing the executions, which had the effect of arresting the dormancy statute.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except CANDLER and LUMPKIN, JJ., dissenting.

CANDLER, J. (dissenting). I can add nothing to what was said by Mr. Justice Turner in his dissenting opinion in the case of Columbus Fertilizer Co. v. Hanks, 119 Ga. 955, 47 S. E. 222. With the views there expressed I was then, and am still, in accord, and I am therefore compelled to dissent from the judgment of the majority in the present case.

(124 Ga. 154)

BOOTH et al. v. ROSIER.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 10, 1905.)

CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION.

B., as the transferee of a security deed, and N., as the transferee of another security deed, were proceeding to execute the powers contained in said deeds by advertising for sale the tracts of land described and conveyed in each of said deeds, respectively, which said tracts were subdivisions of a common tract. R., who had purchased the equity of redemption of the property conveyed by each of said deeds, and who claimed title to both of said tracts, and proposed to contest the title of B. and N., filed a petition for injunction against N., and agreed with B. that the advertisement of sale under the power in the latter's deed should be withdrawn pending the judicial adjudication of the claims of N. and R., "and the expense of said advertisement will be paid by such person as should not prevail in the case." N. prevailed in the contest between N. and R. Thereupon R. paid principal, interest and costs, but not attorney's fees to N., and tendered to B. the amount of principal and interest of her notes, for securing the payment of which her said deed had been executed, and paid the advertising fee, as agreed. B. refused to receive the amount of said tender unless 10 per cent. in addition, as attorney's fees, should also be paid. This R. refused to do, and deposited the amount of his tender with the clerk of the court, and B. readvertised for sale the property described in her deed, insisting that she was entitled to recover attorney's fees; whereupon R. filed his equitable petition, setting forth the foregoing facts, and praying that B. be restrained and enjoined from further proceeding under the power of sale. Upon the hearing of the rule, the court below granted the injunction as prayed for. Held, that B. was not entitled to attorney's fees, and that the court did not err in so ruling.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Action by J. M. Rosier against E. B. Booth and F. W. Capers. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

J. M. Rosier filed his equitable petition against Mrs. Edith B. Booth and F. W. Capers, her attorney, praying that the defendants be restrained and enjoined from advertising the land of petitioner for sale under a power contained in a security deed held by Mrs. Booth as transferee, and alleging, in substance, as follows: On November 17, 1900, one Pearson conveyed the land now sought to be sold to John D. Sheahan to secure a debt of $500. Sheahan transferred the deed to Mrs. Booth. Pearson sold his equity in the land to one Driggers, who sold it to the Planters' Loan & Savings Bank, and the bank, on February 10, 1905, conveyed the same to petitioner, who has likewise become the owner of the bond for title issued by Sheahan to Pearson at the time the deed was executed, and petitioner is now in possession of the land. One of the interest installments of the note given to Sheahan by Pearson contemporaneously with the security deed became due December 1, 1904, and was not paid; whereupon Mrs. Booth, the transferee of the note and deed, elected to mature the entire debt, principal and interest, and proceeded, through her attorney, Capers, to advertise the land for sale under a power contained in the deed. The advertisement, however, was withdrawn, by agreement between petitioner and defendants, pending the trial of the case of petitioner against H. P. Nichols, under the terms of which agreement petitioner paid the expense of advertising incurred by the defendant Booth. On June 1, 1905, which was after the adjudication of the case of Rosier v. Nichols, the petitioner tendered to the defendant Booth the amount of principal and interest due upon the debt, but she refused to accept the same, demanding in addition thereto 10 per cent. of the principal as attorney's fees. Petitioner declined to pay the additional 10 per cent., alleging that the obligation to pay attorneys was void, as neither he nor his grantor, Pearson, had been sued, and filed defenses which had not been sustained, nor had they been given notice of an intention to sue. Rosier then deposited the amount due, principal and interest, with the clerk of the superior court, thus making his tender continuous. On June 26, 1905, Mrs. Booth notified Rosier of her intention to advertise and sell the property under the power contained in the deed given to secure the debt. Sheahan is dead, and one Schweigert is his executor, and petitioner prays that the defendants be restrained from advertising the property for sale, and that the debt secured by the deed be decreed paid, the deed satisfied and canceled, and Mrs. Booth and her grantor, by his executor, be required to comply with the terms of the bond for title, and to reconvey the property upon the payment of the debt. The power in the deed under which the defendants are attempting to sell the land is substantially as follows: "Now, if default is made in the payment of said note, or any part thereof, or any of the interest thereon when due, * * * then the whole amount of said note shall, at the option of the holder, * * * become immediately due and payable without notice to the first party; and in the event said note shall be collected through an attorney at law, * * * or by sale of the property, * * * the said party of the first part hereby agrees * * * to pay all costs and collection, including 10 per cent. attorney's fees on the same, and the said party of the second part shall have the right to proceed * * * to sell the property, * * * first giving public notice of the time, terms, and place of sale, and of the property to be sold, by advertisement once a week for four weeks in some newspaper printed and published in the county in which the land is situated."

In their answer the defendants admit all the plaintiff's allegations, except that petitioner is ready and willing to pay the debt due Mrs. Booth, which they deny, because petitioner refuses to pay the amount demanded by defendants as attorney's fees. They also deny the allegation that petitioner had filed no defense to the claim of Mrs. Booth, averring that petitioner had brought a bill seeking to enjoin the collection of Mrs. Booth's debt, and unnecessarily and unjustly delayed and hindered the said Mrs. Booth in the enforcement of her legal right to collect her debt, which bill had been adjudicated to be without merit. Defendants further deny that the debt due by Pearson to Mrs. Booth was paid off and discharged by the tender of the principal and interest, and that the power of sale in said deed is dead. Upon the trial of the rule to show cause why the injunction prayed for should not be granted, the following agreed facts were submitted in evidence: The original petition in the case of Rosier v. Nichols, brought to the April term, 1905, of the Richmond superior court, the substance of which is set forth in the report of that case in 123 Ga. 20, 50 S. E. 988, the admitted facts that Frances E. Talbert and Horace C. Pearson were each children by Mary Pearson, and each derived title to their respective tracts of land through the deeds referred to in the petition of Rosier v. Nichols, and that each under like deeds "pledged said tract with John D. Sheahan." Affidavits were submitted to support the contentions of both petitioner and defendants, the contents of which, however, are not essential to a clear understanding of the case. The agreement entered into by the petitioner and defendants, whereby Mrs. Booth agreed to withdraw the advertisement of the sale of the property pending the adjudication of the case of Rosier v. Nichols, is as follows: "J. M. Rosier, being in possession of what is generally known as the Pearson property, and claiming title thereto, and against which Horace P. Nichols has a claim for some $300 and interest, and Edith B. Booth a claim for $500 and interest, the validity of which claims are disputed by said Rosier, it is agreed between counsel of the respective parties: (1) That said Rosier will institute suit contesting the claim of said Horace P. Nichols. (2) That the advertisement in the Chronicle of notice of sale by H. P. Nichols and Edith B. Booth shall be withdrawn pending the judicial adjudication of these claims, and the expense of said advertisements will be paid by such person as shall not prevail in said case." Rosier was cast in the suit, and he paid the expense of the advertisements. The injunction was granted, and the defendants excepted.

L. W. Capers, for plaintiffs in error. W. K. Miller, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. (after stating the facts). It will be observed in this case that there is no contractual obligation on the part of Rosier to pay attorney's fees, nor was he a defendant who had as such filed a plea which he afterwards failed to sustain. Plaintiff in error must rely upon the stipulation in the deed and note for the right to proceed for attorney's fees. But that stipulation was void, not merely voidable, unless the defendant in error or Pearson had done some act to give vitality and force to that stipulation; and the only act that could have been done to give force and effect to the obligation to pay attorney's fees, embodied in the note and security deed, was to file a plea which upon trial should have proved to be without merit. Under Civ. Code 1895, § 3867, as it stood before the act of 1900, an obligation to pay attorney's fees upon a note in addition to the stipulated rate of interest, whether such obligation be contained in the note or in the deed, is void unless that obligation is given force and effect by the defendant's filing a plea or pleas which are not sustained. The section last referred to was under construction in the case of Hall v. Pratt, 103 Ga. 258, 29 S. E. 764, and in discussing its effect Lumpkin, P. J., said: "All contracts to pay attorney's fees incorporated in promissory notes or other evidences of indebtedness must be construed in the light of section 3867 of the Civil Code of 1895, which by operation of law constitutes a part of all such contracts, and renders them void 'unless a plea or pleas be filed by the defendant and not sustained.' A promissory note, therefore, which stipulates for the payment of attorney's fees in the event of its collection by law, must be construed as if it embraced a condition to the effect that such promise is not to be binding unless the maker of it files a plea or pleas and fails to sustain the same." Plaintiff in error himself invokes the ruling in the case of Hall v. Pratt, supra, and contends that it is in one respect analogous to the case at bar, in that in both there is a third party who is attempting to escape the conditions of the statute by holding his principal passive while he urges a meritless defense; but the supposed analogy does not exist, for in the case just cited the party denying in vain his liability for attorney's fees was not a third party relatively to the contract there sought to be enforced, and which contained an obligation to pay attorney's fees, for he had indorsed the note, and thereby became a party to the contract embodied therein, and, as the writer of that opinion says, "he also undertook and promised on his part the payment of attorney's fees in the event he filed and failed to sustain a plea."

The plaintiff in error contends that Rosler's bill against Nichols was an attack upon the title of Booth as well as Nichols. The record in this case and that in the case of Rosler v. Nichols, 123 Ga. 20, 50 S. E. 988, does not support this contention. Booth would not have been concluded by a decision in behalf of Rosler in the case of Rosler v. Nichols. She had expressly declined to accept a proposed agreement to the effect that the judgment in the latter case should be conclusive as to her. So Rosler had not sued Booth, or failed to maintain as against her a meritless defense. If the latter had been delayed in the prosecution of her remedy, she had been delayed by an agreement voluntarily entered into by her counsel to await the termination of a judicial contest that made her way plain before her, and she is not entitled to attorney's fees as against this defendant in error.

As to Pearson, the grantor in the deed and maker of the obligation to pay attorney's fees, that obligation is void. He has not been sued, or, if the proceeding to exercise the power of sale in the deed be analogous or equivalent to a suit against him, it was voluntarily abandoned in consequence of an agreement with a third party, and the promise to pay attorney's fees, so far as it affects him, is absolutely void. He never did aught to give it life or force. Stoner v. Pickett, 115 Ga. 653, 42 S. E. 41; Demere v. Germania Bank, 116 Ga. 317, 42 S. E. 488.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 215)

SMITH v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 13, 1905.)

1. HOMICIDE—INSTRUCTIONS.

The charge of the court was adjusted to the facts of the case as presented by the evidence, in no view of which was the homicide either voluntary or involuntary manslaughter.

2. CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS—REASONABLE DOUBT.

A correct charge presenting the law as to reasonable doubt concerning the whole case is all that one accused of a criminal offense is entitled to. It is not incumbent upon the court to carve the case or the evidence into different propositions, and apply the rule as to reasonable doubt to one or more of them severally.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 14, Cent. Dig. Criminal Law, § 1991.]

3. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

There is no merit in the complaint of the accused that the court failed to correctly instruct the jury as to how they should arrive at the truth of the case as disclosed by the testimony. The court fairly and impartially presented to the jury the contention of the respective parties, and the evidence warranted the conviction of the accused.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Washington County; B. T. Rawlings, Judge.

Fred Smith was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

The plaintiff in error, Fred Smith, was indicted for murder, the indictment charging him with shooting one Pete Threat. When the case was called for trial, the Solicitor General announced that he had ascertained that the name of the person killed was Pete Threat, and proposed to nolle pros. the indictment, and draw another, charging the accused with the murder of Pete Threat. Thereupon counsel for the accused waived the "seeming defect in the indictment on that account, and agreed to go to trial waiving said defect, and agreeing that the party referred to as killed was the same party as named in the indictment." A trial was had accordingly, the accused interposing the defense that another, and not he, had fired the shot that killed Pete Threat, whom the evidence disclosed was killed while sitting in a chair in one corner of a house at which a dance was in progress. An altercation had occurred in the middle of the floor as to who should be the partner of one of the women present, and she and several other women gathered in the corner where Threat was sitting, apparently asleep, and began "fussing." He took no part in the controversy. According to testimony delivered by some of the state's witnesses, the accused, without any provocation or excuse, drew his pistol, and fired in the direction of the crowd gathered around Threat. One of the witnesses swore that the accused had been sitting in a window across the room, and that without any warning he got up from the window, leaned over, and shot, saying, "I shoot you damn niggers about trying to fuss in here," and that he started to shoot again, when his sister exclaimed, "My brother! Stop him! Stop him! He is ruint." The accused had previously taken no part in the altercation, nor was his sister or any other relative involved in it. Evidence in behalf of the accused was introduced which tended to sustain his defense that he did not fire his pistol, but that another of the men in the room drew his pistol and fired the fatal shot, apparently without reason or any justification. The jury returned a verdict of guilt.

ty, and the accused excepts to the overruling of his motion for a new trial.

Evans & Evans, for plaintiff in error. Alfred Herrington, Sol. Gen., and Jno. O. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the State.

EVANS, J. (after stating the facts). 1. In view of the evidence upon which the state relied for a conviction, the court very properly charged the jury that should they find the accused fired a pistol into a crowd of persons engaged in a difficulty in a house where a dance was going on, and the shot struck a person and killed him, that notwithstanding the accused may have fired at no particular person, but fired for some reason of his own to stop the difficulty, recklessly, and without regard to human life, and with a disregard as to whom he should kill, the shooting would be an unlawful one, and he would be guilty of murder if he fired the pistol intentionally where people were fussing among themselves, and not with him, though he had no intention to shoot any particular person. The complaint that this charge was not warranted by the evidence is not well founded. It presented the theory of the state, and in the same connection the court presented the contention of the accused that he was not the one who fired into the crowd. In no view of the evidence would the jury have been authorized to find that the accused was guilty of either voluntary or involuntary manslaughter, so there is no merit in the further complaint of the accused that the court did not instruct the jury as to the law bearing on the subject of manslaughter. Where, in a case such as the present, there is no circumstance connected with the killing which shows any provocation or mitigation, the law presumes malice. Pen. Code 1895, § 62; Cook v. State, 98 Ga. 201, 18 S. E. 823.

2. In charging upon this branch of the case, the court told the jury that should they find the accused did not fire the pistol, and had nothing to do with firing it, but it was fired by some one else, it would be their duty to find the accused not guilty. It was not, as is insisted by counsel for the accused, incumbent upon the court to add: "Or, if you have a reasonable doubt as to these things, it would be your duty to give the defendant the benefit of the doubt and acquit him." The law relating to reasonable doubt was elsewhere in the charge fully presented, and the presiding judge concluded his charge by cautioning the jury that, should they have "a reasonable doubt as to whether or not the defendant fired the shot—did the shooting"—then it would be their duty to find him not guilty. The court, therefore, fully met every requirement of the law touching this phase of the case. McDuffie v. State, 90 Ga. 786, 17 S. E. 105; Carr v. State, 84 Ga. 250, 10 S. E. 626.

3. In giving to the jury the rules by which they were to be governed in determining the credibility to be given to the witnesses who had been called on to testify, the court directed the jury to look to the manner of the witnesses on the stand, and instructed them that, should they, "in looking at the testimony in this manner, ascertain any bias or prejudice, relationship (if any such exist), or anything that influences their testimony," the jury could take the same into consideration in making up their verdict; and that they should also look to the opportunity the witnesses had to know the facts about which they testify, and "take into consideration all the facts and circumstances attending the introduction of the testimony, and give to the testimony of the witnesses such weight and credit" as the jury might believe it was entitled to. This instruction is excepted to on the ground that the jury were thereby limited, in their consideration of what had been proved, to the "manner of the witnesses on the stand," and to the "facts and circumstances attending the introduction of evidence," and were not permitted to look to the evidence itself to ascertain whether any bias, prejudice, or relationship, or anything else existed which influenced the testimony of the witnesses, or to ascertain what was the truth of the case. The instruction to which exception is taken was given in connection with other instructions on the same subject, and the jury could not have been thereby misled into the belief that they were not to look to the testimony itself, as well as to the circumstances attending its introduction, in determining its probative value.

Another complaint is that the court, in stating the contentions of the respective parties, gave a stronger emphasis to the side of the state than to that of the defendant, in that the court informed the jury that the state contended that the "facts and circumstances as proven showed that this homicide was murder," and, on the other hand, merely stated that "the defendant contended that he was not guilty of the charge," which statement "was calculated to impress the jury that the defendant was depending upon his own statement alone, rather than upon the sworn evidence, while the state was relying upon sworn evidence." The accused could not have been prejudiced by this fair statement of the issue presented for determination by the jury. So far as appears, he was afforded an impartial trial, and his conviction was fully warranted by the evidence.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 223)

BENNETT & CO. v. FARMERS' & MERCHANTS' BANK.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 13, 1905.)

1. APPEAL—REVIEW—REFUSAL OF NEW TRIAL.

Where a ground of a motion for a new trial alleged that the court erred in admitting in evidence, over objection, the warehouse book of a certain company, in the absence of any evidence as to the correctness thereof, as movant contends, while kept by a named person, "it being the entries made by him that were sought to be proven by the books," and where such ground stated that "movants contend" that the admission of the evidence was error because the rules of law laid down for the introduction of books of account were not complied with, but neither set out the entries alleged to be inadmissible, nor showed that this ground of objection was urged at the time when the evidence was tendered, such ground does not raise any question for adjudication by this court.

2. SAME—WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS.

The ground of the motion for a new trial, alleging that certain evidence was admitted which was objected to as hearsay, was not mentioned in the brief of counsel for the plaintiffs in error, and will be treated as not urged.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 3, Cent. Dig. Appeal and Error, §§ 4256, 4259.]

3. APPEAL—REVIEW.

The verdict is supported by the evidence. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Sandersville; P. R. Talliaferro, Judge.

Action between Bennett & Co. and the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank. From a judgment, Bennett & Co. bring error. Affirmed.

G. H. Howard and Evans & Evans, for plaintiff in error. Marion Turner, E. W. Jordan, and J. K. Jordan, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 224)

STEWART v. SOUTHERN BELL TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 13, 1905.)

1. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—CURING ERROR.

"Due care according to age and capacity is all the law exacts of a child of tender years. Ordinary care, which is that of every prudent man, is not the standard for a child." W. & A. Railroad Co. v. Rogers, 30 S. E. 804, 104 Ga. 224. A charge fixing such a standard for a child of tender years would be erroneous; but when, in immediate connection with the charge establishing the usual standard of ordinary care, the court instructs the jury correctly as to the true degree and measure of diligence and care which a child must observe under the actual circumstances, the inappropriate charge does not constitute reversible error.

2. NEGLIGENCE—INJURY TO CHILD—INSTRUCTIONS.

The plaintiff's case was based upon the negligence of the defendant's servants in cutting down a pole in a street without taking proper precautions to insure the safety of persons using the street within reach of the falling pole. The court's charge fairly stated plaintiff's contention. In the absence of a written request for a more specific statement of her contentions as to the constituent elements of the alleged negligence, the charge was sufficiently comprehensive.

3. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

The judge having charged the jury that they should determine the questions at issue in the case by the evidence, it was not incumbent upon him to further instruct them that they should determine any particular one of the issues by the evidence, especially in the absence of a written request to do so.

4. NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

The verdict was authorized by the evidence, and there was no error in any of the other charges complained of, requiring a reversal.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Sandersville; P. R. Talliaferro, Judge.

Action by Mamie Bell Stewart, by her next friend, against the Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Mamie Bell Stewart, a child eight years old, was hurt by a falling post of the Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company. By next friend she brought suit against that company for damages, alleging that her injury was sustained by reason of the negligence of the company's servants who were engaged in cutting down the post, which was upon the public highway, "without the use of guy wires, ropes, or props with which the fall of said pole could be controlled," and without having "some person stationed at or near the said pole to notify the public, or warn them of impending danger," and that "they failed to notify the said Mamie Bell Stewart of her danger in time for her to avoid the same; she being a child only eight or nine years of age." The defendant company answered, admitting that the pole was cut down in the public street without the use of guy wires, ropes, or props, but denying liability, averring that one of its servants was stationed near the pole for the purpose of warning the public, and that the plaintiff was warned of the danger and admonished to keep away, but she disregarded the warning, and was hurt by reason of her own gross negligence. Upon the trial of the case there was some conflict in the evidence in reference to the time when the plaintiff was warned. The witnesses for the plaintiff testified that she was notified too late to get out the way of the pole, and that she was allowed to walk directly under it just as it was falling, without being told of her peril; while the defendant's witness swore that she was given ample notice, and that the servants of the defendant did all in their power to prevent the injury, which was caused by the plaintiff's gross negligence in disregarding all warning and running under a falling pole. The plaintiff herself testified that she was not warned of the danger, nor was she conscious of it until it was too late to save herself, but upon being cross-examined she said: "If I had stopped when they hollered and told me to look out, I wouldn't have been hurt. The truth is I thought I could get over there before that pole fell on me. * * * When those young men hollered and told us to look out, the other children stopped, but I didn't; I just run ahead anyway. The young men did everything they could to keep it off me." The child's mother testified that she was a "smart, bright little girl." The jury brought in a verdict for the defendant, and the plaintiff made a motion for a new trial upon the general grounds, and because of certain errors alleged to have been committed in the charge of the court. The extract, "Now, I charge you further, if the plaintiff by ordinary care could have avoided the consequences to herself caused by the defendant's negligence, she is not entitled to recover," is assigned as error, for the reason that it tended to instruct the jury that the usual standard of ordinary care is applicable to a child of tender age, as the court had in a previous portion of the charge given the definition of ordinary diligence as contained in Civ. Code 1895, § 2898. It appears from the record that immediately preceding the language quoted the judge had instructed the jury as follows: "The question also will arise what would amount to due care on the part of a child eight years of age? Now, I charge you that due care in a child eight years old is such care as its capacity, mental and physical, fits it for exercising in the actual circumstances of the occasion and situation, and is determined by the jury. When of tender years, and consequent immaturity of understanding, a child is not amenable to so high a standard of diligence. In regard to his or her own safety as that which adults are obliged to observe. Such care as the capacity of the particular child enables it to use naturally and reasonably is what the law requires upon the part of the child." Error is also assigned because the court stated to the jury that the contention of the plaintiff was that while she was passing across a public street the defendant company "cut down a pole upon her, and that defendant * * * failed to exercise that ordinary diligence and care in cutting down said pole that they ought to have taken, and on account of their failure to do so she had been injured," instead of stating to the jury plaintiff's true contention, which was that the defendant was "grossly negligent in cutting down the said pole across the street without having the proper appliances to control the falling of the pole, and thus protect the traveling public from danger, and that the failure to so secure the falling pole was gross neglect, which amounted to an invasion of the right of the public; and further, that plaintiff had the right to be on the said street, and was not under any necessity to take precautionary measures to escape an unforeseen danger." The charge, "Was the plaintiff warned, when the axman was cutting down the pole, of danger, and was she of sufficient mental capacity to understand the danger before her, and did she voluntarily rush into the danger and was thereby injured? If you should find these facts to be established by the proof in this case, then plaintiff would not be entitled to recover," is assigned as error, because, as plaintiff contends, it tended to instruct the jury as to the particular acts which would constitute negligence, instead of leaving to the jury to decide what was and what was not negligence on the part of the child. This portion of the charge is further attacked because the word "warned," as used therein, was misleading to the jury, leaving them to construe that any warning, no matter at what time given, was sufficient to shift the negligence upon the plaintiff. Plaintiff further contends that this charge was an intimation by the court that the plaintiff voluntarily rushed into danger. The motion further assigns error because "the court failed to charge that if plaintiff used due care for a child of her age and mental capacity, and that defendant was negligent, she would be entitled to recover, but charged instead that she must have used ordinary care, thereby placing upon plaintiff a burden which she was not charged with under the law;" and again, "because the court failed to charge that they [the jury] were to determine from the evidence what would be due care upon the part of the plaintiff, and that they must look to the evidence, and see whether or not she did use such care as she was capable of exercising, under the actual circumstances and the situation actually existing at the moment." The motion was overruled, and the plaintiff excepted.

W. E. Ormistead and E. W. Jordan, for plaintiff in error. Hardwick & Hyman and Hunt, Chipley, Osborne & Lawrence, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. (after stating the facts). 1. Had the court charged without qualification that, "if the plaintiff by ordinary care could have avoided the consequence to herself caused by defendant's negligence, she is not entitled to recover," the duty of this court, under the facts of the case, to reverse the judgment of the court below would be clear; but while the trial judge instructed the jury in the language of this extract from his charge, he also charged, in immediate connection with the same, the proper rule as to the standard of care and diligence for a child of tender years. In the instruction immediately preceding that quoted, the trial judge had given the jury the following explicit directions: "Now, gentlemen, you ask this question: Was the plaintiff warned, when the axman was cutting down the pole, of danger, and was she of sufficient mental capacity to understand the danger before her, and did she voluntarily rush into the danger, and was thereby injured? If you should find these facts to be established by the proof in this case, then the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover; but if, on the other hand, you find that she was not warned, and that the defendant was not exercising proper care and proper diligence, and she was hurt—injured—then she would be entitled to recover. The question also will arise, what would amount to due care upon the part of a child of eight years of age? Now, I charge you that due care in a child eight years old is such care as its capacity, mental and physical, fits it for exercising in the actual circumstances of the occasion and situation, and is determined by the jury. When of tender years, and consequent immaturity of understanding, a child is not amenable to so high a standard of diligence in regard to his or her own safety as that which adults are obliged to observe. Such care as the capacity of the particular child enables it to use naturally and reasonably is what the law requires upon the part of the child." The court below here imposed upon the defendant the duty of exercising due care and diligence, and also of warning the plaintiff, and fully, clearly, and unmistakably instructed the jury as to the law for determining what is due care upon the part of a child. He directed their minds to the very question that would arise in their investigation—the question of care and diligence of one of plaintiff's age. Construing the entire charge together, we are constrained to believe that the jury could not have failed to understand what constitutes due care on the part of one of the plaintiff's tender years, and that the plaintiff was not required to prove on her part conformity to any higher standard.

2, 3, 4. The headnotes deal sufficiently with the other assignments of error in the motion for a new trial.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 228)

LEWIS v. OWENS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 13, 1905.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—LABORER'S LIEN—FORECLOSURE.

Under the contract in this case, as established by the evidence in the record, the relation of landlord and cropper existed between the plaintiff and defendant; and under the rulings in other cases decided by this court the plaintiff was entitled, upon the completion of her contract of labor, to foreclose her special laborer's lien against the defendant.

2. SAME—DEFENSES.

And where the undisputed evidence proved that the cropper had completed her contract of labor, save that a part of the crop remained ungathered and was seized by the sheriff under levy of valid process against her landlord, she being thus prevented by the law from completing her contract according to its terms, it was error to dismiss her case "on the ground that the evidence showed the contract of labor had not been completed by the plaintiff at the time she foreclosed her laborer's special lien."

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Sandersville; Frank Mitchell, Judge.

Action by Bettie Lewis against Henry Owens. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Bettie Lewis brought an action against Henry Owens to foreclose a laborer's special lien for labor performed. It appeared upon the trial that the plaintiff had contracted with the defendant to work a one-horse farm "on halves." Under the terms of the contract Owens was to furnish the land, a mule and his feed, and all necessary farming implements, while it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to furnish all labor necessary to make and gather the crop. The undisputed evidence was that the plaintiff furnished the labor and made the crop and had almost harvested it, when she was stopped by the sheriff under foreclosure proceedings brought by the owner of the land against Owens; it appearing that Owens rented the land from another. When the landlord foreclosed, the plaintiff brought the present action. It further appears that after the foreclosure by the sheriff he hired the plaintiff to gather that portion of the crop still remaining in the fields, but has paid her nothing for that service. Moreover the sheriff seized the crop which had been gathered by the plaintiff before the levy was made, as well as that which was gathered by him, and sold it all at auction. At the conclusion of the evidence the plaintiff announced closed, whereupon the defendant moved the court to dismiss the case on the ground that the contract of labor had not been completed at the time the plaintiff sought to foreclose her lien. The motion was sustained and the case dismissed, to which ruling the plaintiff excepted.

Evans & Evans, for plaintiff in error.
Howard & Jordan, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 239)

MEDICAL COLLEGE OF GEORGIA v. RUSHING.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 13, 1905.)

1. COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES—ACTIONS—SERVICE OF PROCESS—OFFICERS.

The Medical College of Georgia is a public eleemosynary corporation, and neither by its charter, nor by laws adopted under authority of its charter, is a member of the faculty of that institution, or the dean thereof, such an officer or agent of the corporation as is contemplated in Civ. Code 1895, §§ 1899, 1900, providing for service of suits against a corporation by serving one of its officers or agents.

2. PROCESS—ISSUE.

The clerk of the city court of Richmond county has no power, without some direct and express order of the court, to issue more than one process in a suit against a single defendant.

3. COURTS—JURISDICTION—PLEADING—RULING ON DEMURRER.

As the defendant had not been legally served, the court was without jurisdiction to pass upon a demurrer filed by the defendant, under protest that it was not legally before the court.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Richmond County; W. F. Eve, Judge.

Action by James L. Rushing against the Medical College of Georgia. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

James L. Rushing brought suit against the Medical College of Georgia, a corporation, in the city court of Richmond county. The petition was filed on the 16th day of August, 1904, and process was attached returnable to the September term, 1904, of the court. Service of this suit was made on Dr. De Saussure Ford, and the following entry of service was made: "State of Georgia, Richmond County. I have this day served the defendant, Dr. DeSaussure Ford, president of the Medical College of Georgia, personally with a copy of the within petition and process, at Augusta, Ga., this 17th day of August, 1904. G. E. W. Britt, Deputy Sheriff, R. C. Ga." On September 16, 1904, the Medical College filed a traverse to this return of service, making the deputy sheriff a party, who, by leave of the court, amended his return of service so as to make it recite that service upon the defendant had been perfected by serving a copy of the petition and process personally upon Dr. De Saussure Ford, "dean of the faculty of the Medical College." On September 20, 1904, the clerk of the city court, under the direction of the plaintiff's attorney, and without any order of court, detached the original process, and attached to the petition a new process, returnable to the November term, 1904, of that court. A copy of the petition, accompanied by a copy of this new process, was on September 25th served by the deputy sheriff upon W. B. Young, as president of the Medical College. On November 15, 1904, the defendant filed a motion to vacate this entry of service and dismiss the suit, on the ground that the first process attached to the petition was made returnable to the September term, 1904, of the court, and that the clerk was without power, in the absence of an order of court, to detach this process after the convening of the September term, and attach another process to the petition, calling upon the defendant to answer at a later term. The defendant further moved to vacate the entry of service upon Dr. Ford, as dean of the faculty, and to dismiss the suit, on the ground that the original entry of service, as amended by the officer, failed to disclose that the person upon whom service was made was either an officer or agent of the corporation. On November 30th all of the pending issues as to service, both of law and of fact, were submitted to the judge for determination, who reserved his decision until January 20, 1905, when he overruled the traverse to the return of service, and declined to grant either of the motions to vacate the return of service and dismiss the petition. The defendant filed exceptions pendente lite to these rulings of the court. Subsequently, on March 1, 1905, the case came on to be heard upon a demurrer to the plaintiff's petition.

The court overruled the demurrer, and to this ruling the defendant excepted by suing out a bill of exceptions to this court.

Wm. H. Fleming, for plaintiff in error.
F. W. Capers, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. (after stating the facts). 1. The suit was against the Medical College of Georgia, a public eleemosynary corporation and a branch of the University of Georgia. See Acts 1828, p. 111; Acts 1829, p. 107; Acts 1833, p. 130; Pol. Code 1895, § 1300. The original service was upon Dr. Ford, who was designated in the return of service as the "president of the Medical College of Georgia," but who, in the amended entry of service, was designated as "dean of the faculty of the Medical College." The undisputed facts brought to light on the trial of the traverse to the return of service disclosed that Dr. Ford was not the president of the college, but was elected a professor or instructor by the board of trustees, and that his co-instructors in the college, comprising the faculty, had selected him as their dean or executive head. The duty of managing the institution and examining into its affairs devolved upon the board of trustees. Act Dec. 20, 1828, § 4. The trustees, together with the regular professors in the institution, were constituted a board of examination, the duty of which was to decide on the merits of such candidates as may have studied in the institution, and complied with all the conditions imposed by the board of trustees as preliminary to the examination, and to confer the degree of bachelor of medicine on such as might be worthy of the same. Id. The trustees have authority to fill all vacancies in their body which may occur by death, resignation, or otherwise. Id., p. 112, § 10. The fourth article of the by-laws provided that the officers of the board of trustees should be a president, vice president, secretary, and treasurer, and an executive committee of three to be elected at each annual meeting. It was admitted that the professors in the Medical College were not paid salaries by the trustees, but that the faculty of the college, when elected by the board of trustees, took charge of the management of the college, and collected their own tuition fees, and met the expenses of the operation.

No argument is needed in support of the proposition that a teacher or instructor in an incorporated academy or college is in no sense an officer of the corporation. The co-operation of teachers and trustees as a board of examiners to decide on the merits of candidates for a degree to be conferred by the college relates solely to the educational feature of the project, and does not enter into the business management of the institution. In an ordinary private corporation, whose creation is primarily for the personal gain of its stockholders, and which in the conduct of its affairs employs agents to carry on the general business, service of process on the corporation may be effected on any agent who has some sort of control or authority over some department or sphere of the corporation's business, but not upon a mere employé or servant. Southern Bell Tel. Co. v. Parker, 119 Ga. 721, 47 S. E. 194. Where the corporation is eleemosynary in its nature, and not conducted primarily for private gain, and its affairs are administered and superintended by a board of trustees or officers appointed for that purpose, persons employed to effectuate the general objects of the corporation cannot be said to be its agents, rather than its employées. A teacher in a college is employed to instruct the students. Many methods may be adopted to raise money with which to pay their salaries. It may be derived from an endowment, or from appeals to the general public, or from matriculation fees. The mode of providing the teacher's compensation does not affect the character of their employment. If the trustees of a school contract with teachers that their compensation is to be measured by the tuition fees less the expenses of operation, it cannot be contended the relation of the teacher to the school has been altered by this method of compensation. The arrangement, therefore, between the board of trustees and the faculty whereby the faculty was to defray the expenses of operating the college, and receive as compensation the tuition fees, will not serve to render the faculty or its dean either an officer or an agent in such a sense that process against the corporation may be served upon him so as to conclude the corporation.

2. As has been demonstrated, the service upon Dr. Ford as dean of the faculty of the Medical College was not binding on the corporation. The clerk had no authority, without an express order of court, to detach the original process which had been served upon Dr. Ford, and deliver the petition, with the second process attached thereto, for service upon the president of the college. "There being but one suit, one petition, one defendant, the clerk has no power, without some direct and express order of the court, to issue more than one process. A second process issued by him of his own will, after the appearance term of the case, is void." Peck v. LaRoche, 86 Ga. 314, 12 S. E. 638; Rowland v. Towns, 120 Ga. 74, 47 S. E. 581.

3. The demurrer was heard after the court's refusal to vacate the return of service and dismiss the suit. The defendant had duly protested that it had not been properly and legally brought before the court, and therefore did not, by interposing its demurrer, waive service. Inasmuch as the court erred in holding that the defendant had been legally served, its subsequent ruling on the demurrer was nugatory and of no effect.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(124 Ga. 354)

TOWN OF WADLEY v. LANCASTER.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1905.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATION — CONTRACTS — PURCHASE OF FIRE ENGINE.

Under the Constitution of 1877 a municipal corporation cannot lawfully purchase a fire engine and apparatus and give negotiable promissory notes therefor, payable annually through a series of years; nor can a resolution passed at a mass meeting of citizens authorize such contract.

2. SAME—BILLS AND NOTES—INDORSEMENT—RIGHTS OF INDORSEE—DEFENSES.

A promissory note to the vendors, under a contract of the character described in the preceding note, payable to them or their orders, is invalid, even in the hands of a bona fide indorsee for value before it became due.

3. SAME — UNAUTHORIZED CONTRACTS — RETENTION OF BENEFITS—ESTOPPEL.

Although but one of the notes given in part for the purchase price of the property may have been paid, and possession of the property may have been retained, this did not prevent the municipal corporation from setting up the illegality of the contract in defense to a suit on the note.

4. SAME—RECEIVERS—GROUND FOR APPOINTMENT.

The holder of such note by indorsement from the original payee was not authorized to have a receiver appointed to take possession of the property, sell it, and pay the note.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Jefferson County; H. M. Holden, Judge.

Action by Lizzie O. Lancaster against the town of Wadley. There was judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Lizzie O. Lancaster brought suit against the town of Wadley, alleging as follows: On June 18, 1896, the defendant, acting through its intendant and aldermen, in pursuance of a resolution unanimously passed at a public mass meeting of citizens held for that purpose, purchased from Armstrong & Co., agents for a company dealing in apparatus for extinguishing fires, a quantity of such apparatus for the total sum of $1,200. Of the purchase price $200 was paid in cash, and five notes for $200 each, payable annually, were given. All the notes were paid except the last. Being payable to order, the note was negotiable, and the plaintiff purchased it for value in open market before due. The defendant is still in possession of the fire apparatus and making use thereof, and has never tendered it back either to the plaintiff or to the seller, but refuses to pay the last note. The prayer was that a receiver or commissioner be appointed to take charge of the property, and make sale thereof, or of so much as might be necessary to pay the amount of the note; that a general judgment be rendered against the defendant for the amount due on such note, principal, interest, attorney's fees, and costs to be first paid out of the proceeds of the sale of the apparatus; and if they should not be sufficient, then out of any other property of the defendant subject to levy and sale. The copy note set out in the petition began, "On the first day of November, 1901, we promise to pay," etc. It contained no reference to the town of Wadley, but was an ordinary promise to pay the sum of $200, with 7 per cent. interest, payable semiannually, and with a provision for attorney's fees if collected by an attorney after maturity. It was signed "G. S. Johnson, Mayor," and had on it the statement "Attested by A. A. Chance, Clerk of Council, Wadley, Ga." Indorsed on it was the name of "J. A. Spier, Chairman Finance Committee of town of Wadley, Ga." Under this was the indorsement of the payees. The defendant demurred to the petition. The demurrer was overruled, and it excepted.

Phillips & Phillips, for plaintiff in error.
Wm. H. Fleming, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts). The Constitution declares that no municipality shall incur any debt, except for a temporary loan or loans to supply casual deficiencies of revenue, without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified voters thereof, at an election for that purpose, to be held as may be prescribed by law. Const. art. 7, § 7, par. 1; Civ. Code 1895, § 5898. To do so is to violate the Constitution and to incur a debt illegally. For a municipal corporation to purchase a fire engine and apparatus, paying a part of the purchase money in cash and giving notes for the balance payable in installments extending over several years, amounts to the creation of such a debt, and, if done without the authority of an election, is illegal. City Council of Dawson v. Dawson Waterworks Co., 106 Ga. 696, 32 S. E. 907; Hudson v. Marietta, 64 Ga. 286. The cases of Danielly v. Cabaniss, 52 Ga. 211, and Black v. Cohen, 52 Ga. 621, were decided prior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1877. The Constitution of 1868, which was in force at that time, contained no such provision as that above referred to. Those decisions held that, where a municipal corporation has lawful authority to issue bonds or negotiable notes, they were binding in the hands of innocent purchasers, notwithstanding irregularity in the manner of the execution of the power. The town of Wadley, however, was not lawfully authorized to create such an indebtedness as is represented by the note sued on.

It is urged that the town, having retained and used the property, and having paid all except the last note, has ratified the acts of its officials in creating the indebtedness, or has estopped itself from denying the legality of such debt as against the bona fide purchaser of the note. "Powers of all public officers are defined by law, and all persons must take notice thereof. The public cannot be estopped by the acts of any officer done in the exercise of a power not conferred." Pol. Code 1895, § 268. What a municipal corporation was without authority to do its officers could not make lawful by ratification. Dorsett v. Garrard, 85 Ga. 734, 11 S. E. 768. In City of Dawson v. Dawson Waterworks Co., 106 Ga. 734, 32 S. E. 922, it is said: "Even if a benefit has been received by one of the contracting parties from a contract which is void because prohibited by the Constitution, or because contrary to public policy, the receiving of such benefit will not prevent the party receiving it from setting up, against a suit to enforce the contract, the defense that the contract was illegal and void." Covington R. Co. v. Athens, 85 Ga. 367, 11 S. E. 663. True, in those cases, the benefit was not in the form of personal property received and held; but the principle would not be different where the action is at law to enforce the illegal contract. The want of constitutional authority appears on the face of the petition. In the cases of Ford v. Cartersville, 84 Ga. 213, 10 S. E. 732, and Lott v. Waycross, 84 Ga. 681, 11 S. E. 558, the right of a municipal corporation to make an annual contract for a supply of water and lights was considered as giving the right to recover for gas and water consumed during the year. See, also, Cartersville, etc., Co. v. Cartersville, 89 Ga. 683, 689, 16 S. E. 25.

It is said that the town cannot retain the property under the contract of purchase, and at the same time refuse to pay the balance of the purchase money on the ground that the contract was illegal; and the plaintiff prays that the court appoint a receiver or commissioner to take possession of the property, sell it, and apply the proceeds to paying the note held by her. The plaintiff did not sell the property to the defendant; nor has she ever had title to it, or any lien or claim upon it; nor is it alleged that the payees who indorsed to her are not solvent and able to reimburse her. The property was not purchased with money advanced by her to the town, or arising from a sale to her of its note or obligation. The defendant had possession of the property long before the plaintiff obtained the note. What she acquired from the original payees was simply the transfer of a promissory note which the town had no authority to give. The suit is by her as indorsee. While certain allegations and prayers of the petition appear to have been drawn with a view to obtaining equitable relief, yet the case made at last rests on the validity of the note. The prayers are that a commissioner or receiver sell the property and pay the note, principal, interest, and cost, and that a general judgment be rendered on the note. It being illegal, the case based on it, and the effort to enforce it as a valid contract, must fail.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concurring.

(104 Va. 684)

FOREMAN v. GERMAN ALLIANCE INS. ASS'N.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Dec. 14, 1905.)

1. EVIDENCE—ACTS OF AGENT—EXISTENCE OF AGENCY.

Where M. & Co., being both agents for defendant insurance company and for a building and loan association, paid certain premiums for the loan association accruing on policies issued by defendant on property in which the loan association had an interest, a receipt given by M. & Co. to the loan association for the aggregate of eight insurance premiums, one of which was the premium on the policy sued on, not appearing to have been given by them as agents of defendant insurance company, was not admissible as against it.

2. INSURANCE — VACANCY — FORFEITURE — KNOWLEDGE OF AGENTS.

Where M. & Co. were both the agents of defendant insurance company and of a building and loan association, for whose benefit certain property was insured by them, knowledge of the vacancy of the property acquired by M. & Co. as agents of the loan association, and not while attending to the affairs of the insurance company, and not shown to have been present in the minds of M. & Co. at the time they did any act with reference to the insurance as agents of the defendant, was not notice to defendant sufficient to constitute a waiver of a forfeiture by reason of such vacancy.

Error to Law and Chancery Court of City of Norfolk.

Action by C. B. Foreman against the German Alliance Insurance Association. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Robt. W. Mallet, for appellant. White, Tunstall & Thom, for appellee.

BUCHANAN, J. This was an action of assumpsit, instituted against the German Alliance Insurance Association on a fire insurance policy by C. B. Foreman, for the benefit of the Prudential Building & Loan Association.

The defense of the insurance company was that the premises, after the policy had been issued, became and remained vacant, in violation of that condition of the policy which declared that the entire policy shall be void if the building therein described be or become vacant or unoccupied for 10 days.

The plaintiff admitted such vacancy, but claimed that the forfeiture resulting therefrom had been waived by the insurance company. Upon the trial of the cause, the defendant, without introducing any evidence, demurred to the plaintiff's evidence. The court sustained the demurrer, and gave judgment for the defendant. To that judgment this writ of error was awarded.

It appears that the policy, which was for one year, was issued on or about the 8th of May, 1902, through Albert Morris & Co., the general agents of the insurance company in the city of Norfolk. A like policy had been taken out by the insured for the previous year; but upon his informing the building and loan association, which had a mortgage upon the property, that he could not pay the premium upon a policy for another year, that association took out the policy sued on in his name, with a provision that the loss, if any, should be payable to the building and loan association as its interest might appear. Albert Morris & Co. were also agents in that city for the Prudential Building & Loan Association, and were authorized to pay the premiums on policies of insurance in which it was interested, when such premiums fell due and were not paid, and could not be collected by them from the insured. The premium on the policy sued on not having been paid by the insured, Albert Morris & Co. paid it to the insurance company on the 5th of June.

On the 5th of July the insured vacated the premises, and between that time and the 10th of that month gave the key of the house to Albert Morris & Co., as the agents of the Prudential Building & Loan Association, informing them that he could not keep up the payments due the building and loan association on its loan secured upon the property. Albert Morris & Co. about two weeks after that, notified him that if he did not pay the premium they would have to collect it from the building and loan association. The insured did not pay them, nor did he know at that time that they had paid the premium to the insurance company under their agreement with the building and loan association. Between that time and the following October that association settled with or repaid Albert Morris & Co. the amount which they had advanced in paying the premium on the policy.

In November of that year the buildings on the premises were destroyed by fire. When the insurance company was notified of the loss, it at once denied its liability on the ground that the vacancy clause in the policy had been violated.

During the trial the plaintiff offered to read to the jury a receipt, dated in October, 1902, given to the building and loan association by Albert Morris & Co., for $83, the aggregate amount of the premiums on eight insurance policies, one of which was the premium on the policy sued on. The receipt was objected to on the ground that it did not purport to have been given by Albert Morris & Co. as agents of the insurance company. The court sustained the objection and refused to allow the receipt to be read in evidence. That action of the court is assigned as error.

The receipt not only did not show upon its face that it was given by Albert Morris & Co. as the agents of the insurance company, but it appeared from the evidence of Albert Morris, who executed the receipt for his firm and proved their signature thereto, that the receipt was given by his firm, not as the agents of the insurance company, but for insurance premiums which they had paid or advanced for the building and loan association, under its agreement with them, on policies in which it was interested. This being so, the court was clearly right in not admitting the receipt in evidence.

The next question to be determined is, has the plaintiff shown that the forfeiture was waived?

It is well settled that any acts, declarations, or course of dealing by an insurance company, with knowledge of facts constituting a breach of a condition in the policy, leading the party insured honestly to think that by conforming thereto a forfeiture of his policy will not be incurred, followed by due conformity on his part, will estop the insurance company from insisting upon the forfeiture, though it might be claimed under the express letter of the policy. Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Kinnier's Adm'x, 28 Grat. 88; Morotock Ins. Co. v. Pankey, 91 Va. 259, 260, 21 S. E. 487; Va. Fire, etc., Ins. Co. v. Richmond Mica Co., 102 Va. 429, 433, 46 S. E. 463, 102 Am. St. Rep. 846, and cases there cited; Insurance Co. v. Eggleston, 96 U. S. 572, 24 L. Ed. 841.

Applying that principle to the facts of this case, it is manifest, we think, that the plaintiff in error has failed to show that the insurance company has waived or estopped itself from relying upon the forfeiture set up as a defense. The premium was paid on June 5th, and the building did not become vacant until July 5th, and there is no evidence that the insurance company knew that it became vacant before the fire occurred.

It is argued that its agents, Albert Morris & Co., knew that it was vacant, and that their knowledge was notice to the insurance company. It is true that Albert Morris & Co. did know it, but that knowledge was acquired by them as agents of the building and loan association, and not while attending to the affairs of the insurance company. Knowledge acquired in that manner, in order to be binding upon the insurance company, would have to be present in the agent's mind at the time he did the act which it is claimed constituted the waiver, and the burden is on the party relying upon the waiver to prove this. That such knowledge was in the agent's mind may be shown by circumstances, as well as by direct evidence. Morrison v. Bausermer, 32 Grat. 225; Johnson v. Natl. Ex. Bk., 33 Grat. 473, 486, 487; 2 Minor's Inst. (4th Ed.) 980; 1 Joyce on Ins. § 544; Mechem on Agency, § 721; Martin v. South Salem L. Co., 94 Va. 28, 26 S. E. 591.

But, even if the knowledge of Albert Morris & Co. was the knowledge of the insurance company, it did no act afterwards to the prejudice of the insured or the beneficiary in the policy, or which can be held to have been a waiver of the forfeiture. If the insured, when called upon by Albert Morris & Co. to pay the amount of the premium two weeks after the house had been vacated, had paid that sum to them as premium on the policy, believing that they were collecting it as the agents of the insurance company, then he might have had the right to rely upon that as a waiver of the forfeiture; but he did not pay it, or pay any attention to their request. Neither did the insurance company, or its agents, Albert Morris & Co., do any act, or make any declaration, or pursue any course of conduct which gave the building and loan association the right to believe that the forfeiture was or would be waived. The evidence clearly shows that, when that association paid Albert Morris & Co. the amount of the premium, it paid it, not as a premium due the insurance company, but as a debt due from it to Albert Morris & Co. as its own agents for money advanced by them to pay the premium before the building had become vacant or the forfeiture had been incurred.

Mere knowledge by the insurance company of the existence of the breach of the contract does not of itself amount to a waiver or an estoppel. There must exist, in addition to a knowledge of the breach, some positive act of confirmation upon which, in connection with the knowledge, a waiver may be predicated, and by force of which the broken contract may be said to be revived. Richards on Ins. §§ 78, 79; 2 May on Ins. § 507; Vance on Ins. p. 374; Gibson v. Liverpool, etc., Ins. Co., 159 N. Y. 418, 426, 427, 54 N. E. 23.

Having reached the conclusion that the acts and conduct of the agents of the insurance company, conceding that they were binding upon it, were not sufficient to establish a waiver of the forfeiture or to estop the insurance company from setting it up as a defense, it will be unnecessary to consider the effect of that provision in the policy which declares that no officer, agent, or representative of the company shall have the power or be deemed or held to have waived any condition of the policy, unless such waiver shall be written upon or attached to it.

We are of opinion that there is no error in the judgment of the court of law and chancery, and that it must be affirmed.

(104 Va. 587)

TURK et al. v. RITCHIE et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 23, 1905.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—SETTLEMENT OF ACCOUNTS—REPORTS OF COMMISSIONER.

So long as decrees of reference entered in a suit to settle the estate of a decedent are not fully executed, and the data are not arrived at whereby an accurate account can be made for the final distribution of the assets of the estate, it is proper for the commissioner to whom the cause has been referred to include in his report any outstanding valid debt against the estate and for the court to decree payment of such debt.

2. SAME—DECREES.

A decree in a suit to settle a decedent's estate, adopting certain specific portions of the commissioner's report, directing the payment of certain specified debts and a partial distribution of the assets of the estate among the legatees, requiring such legatees to give refunding bonds, and recommitting the cause to a master to take a further account and not confirming the report, is not a final decree, such as to preclude a creditor from thereafter coming into the cause and asserting a demand against the estate.

3. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY—ACTIONS BY CREDITOR—PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY AS AGAINST SURETY.

A bill alleging the execution of a bond by a principal and sureties, the death of the principal and the sureties, and that the orator and oratrix are entitled to have the sum due collected and paid over, making the personal representatives, heirs, and distributees of the principal and of the sureties, parties defendant, specially praying that the personal estate of the principal and certain land covered by a deed of trust securing the debt be applied to the payment of the debt, and concluding with a prayer for general relief, confers upon the court jurisdiction to render a decree against the personal representatives of the sureties under the prayer for general relief.

4. JUDGMENTS—CONCLUSIVENESS—SCOPE OF ADJUDICATION.

A decree in favor of a debtor and against her creditor settles all questions as to the validity of the debt, and that such debt is not at the time of the decree barred by limitations.

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—ACTIONS—LIMITATIONS—LIABILITIES OF DECEDENTS.

A liability accrued against a decedent's estate as surety on a bond on January 15, 1894. December 10, 1906, the obligee in the bond obtained a decree against the principal and sureties. July 15, 1899, the obligee intervened in a suit to settle the estate of the decedent to enforce her decree. Held, that the obligee's demand was not barred by Code 1887, § 2920 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1540], providing that a right of action against the estate of a decedent which accrues after the decedent's death shall not continue longer than five years after its accrual.

6. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY—PROCEEDINGS AGAINST SURETY—DEFENSES—LACHES.

The personal representatives and legatees of a surety on a bond cannot assert the defense of laches to defeat proceedings by the obligee to enforce the bond, where the delay was caused by the act of the obligee in prosecuting proceedings against the principal and the estate of the other surety, and such proceedings resulted in a material reduction of the liability sought to be enforced against the estate of the surety in question.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Augusta County.
Settlement suit by R. S. Turk and W. A.

Turk, as executors of Rudolph Turk, deceased, against the creditors of Rudolph Turk. From a decree in favor of Mary E. Ritchie and others, creditors of said deceased, plaintiffs appeal. W. A. Turk died pending the appeal, which is prosecuted by R. S. Turk in his own right as surviving executor, etc., and as administrator of W. A. Turk. Affirmed.

A. C. Braxton, for appellants. J. & R. Bumgardner and Curry & Glenn, for appellee.

CARDWELL, J. In 1890 Rudolph Turk died testate, appointing W. A. and R. S. Turk his executors. By his will he directed that all his just debts and funeral expenses be paid as soon after his death as practicable, and, after making two specific bequests and directing how the residue of his estate was to be divided among his two sons then living and the widow and daughter of a deceased son, empowered his said executors to sell all of his real and personal estate, or so much thereof as they might deem best in order to carry out the terms of his will, conferring upon them full power to make conveyances of any and all real estate which they might sell, etc.

In September, 1891, W. A. Turk and R. S. Turk, in their own right and as executors, as aforesaid, instituted this suit of "Turk's Ex'rs v. Turk's Creditors," the scope and object of which was to convene all the creditors, known and unknown, of the said testator and to settle and distribute his estate under the direction of the court.

At the time of Rudolph Turk's death, the appellee, Mary E. Ritchie, née Shifflett, a daughter of Givens Shifflett, now also deceased, held a bond dated November 20, 1860, for the penal sum of $5,183.60, conditioned for the payment to David Fultz, her trustee, one day after the death of said Givens Shifflett, the sum of $2,591.80, in which Givens Shifflett was principal and the said Rudolph Turk and one D. Bashaw were sureties, which bond was secured by a deed of trust executed by Givens Shifflett to David Fultz, trustee, on a certain parcel of land owned by Shifflett, situated in Augusta county. Givens Shifflett died on January 14, 1894, whereby the said bond became due and payable on the following day, January 15, 1894; and in May, 1894, Mary E. Ritchie filed her bill in equity in the circuit court of Augusta county, in which her husband united for conformity, under the short style of "Ritchie and Wife v. Shifflett's Adm'r et al.," to enforce payment of said bond, and to that end to have the deed of trust securing the same enforced. The parties made defendant to this bill were the administrator, widow, and heirs at law of Givens Shifflett, deceased, R. S. Turk and W. A. Turk, the executors of Rudolph Turk, deceased, Darwin Bashaw, and the executor of David Fultz, deceased, who was trustee for Mary E. Ritchie, and as such held the naked legal title to the land conveyed in the deed of trust.

That cause was referred to a master commissioner, who filed his report, to which there was no exception, showing that Givens Shifflett had no personal assets, and that the land (123 acres) covered by the deed of trust securing the bond of Mary E. Ritchie was all of his estate, and that the sum due her was $2,591.80, with interest from January 15, 1894. This report of the master was duly confirmed and commissioners appointed by decree of May 20, 1895, to sell the land; and these commissioners subsequently reported a sale of the land to R. S. and W. A. Turk for the sum of $530, which was confirmed. The net proceeds of sale, after payment of costs, was $405.30, which, being credited on the debt of Mary E. Ritchie, left due thereon, as of the day of sale, the sum of $2,472.42, to be paid by the sureties, the estate of the principal debtor having been exhausted; and by a final decree entered in the cause December 10, 1895, after setting forth the proceedings aforesaid and ascertaining that the sum of $2,472.42 was still due to Mary E. Ritchie, it was adjudged, ordered, and decreed that "N. C. Watts, sheriff of Augusta county, and as such administrator of Givens Shifflett, deceased, out of assets in his hands for administration, W. A. Turk and R. S. Turk, executors of R. Turk, deceased, de bonis testatoris, and Darwin Bashaw, de bonis propriis, pay to the plaintiff, Mary E. Ritchie, the sum of $2,472.42, with interest thereon from the 16th day of November, 1895, till payment."

In the chancery causes, heard together, of Brown v. Bashaw, Ritchie and Wife v. Bashaw, and Bashaw v. Bashaw, the estate of Darwin Bashaw, the co-security with Rudolph Turk on Mary E. Ritchie's bond, was administered, his real estate sold, and the proceeds in part applied to the payment of this debt. The sum realized from Bashaw's estate was $1,217.29, which left, as the liability against Rudolph Turk's estate, the sum of $2,302.22, with interest on $2,279.43 from November 1, 1902.

During all this time the suit of "Turk's Ex'rs v. Turk's Creditors" was pending and undetermined, in which there had been several decrees of reference to a master commissioner to ascertain and report the debts outstanding against the estate of Rudolph Turk, deceased, and the assets of the estate, none of which had been fully executed, though there was a report of the master filed January 4, 1895, making a tentative statement of the assets, the unpaid debts outstanding, as far as ascertained, and an estimated balance of assets for distribution among Turk's residuary legatees, of which R. S. Turk and W. A. Turk were each entitled to one-third. This report was acted on in a decree entered May 16, 1895, in which the court, without confirming the report, adopted certain specific portions of it, directed payment of certain specified debts, and a partial distribution of the assets of Turk's estate among his residuary legatees, requiring refunding bonds to be given, and recommitted the cause to a master, "to take a further account of the transactions of the executors, and, if possible, to make an accurate distribution between the residuary legatees"; but upon subsequent developments so much of the said decree as invested R. S. and W. A. Turk with title to certain lands of the estate they had purchased was set aside and annulled, and they were directed to pay on account of their purchase-money bonds for said lands a sum sufficient to make up the deficiency in assets necessary to discharge the unpaid debts of the estate. No report was made on this last-mentioned decree of reference till December 15, 1900, and in the meantime a decree was entered, December 9, 1895, requiring a commissioner to whom the cause already stood committed to report particularly as to the liability asserted against the estate by one R. D. Byerley. Commissioner Waddell having failed to execute the references called for in the decrees theretofore entered, a decree was entered December 13, 1898, referring the cause to Commissioner Nelson to take the accounts required by those decrees, and on July 15, 1899, while the cause was before Commissioner Nelson under the unexecuted orders of reference, Mary E. Ritchie came into it by petition, setting up her debt against the estate of Rudolph Turk, deceased, by virtue of the Shifflett bond and the decree in the case of Ritchie and Wife v. Shifflett et al., to which demand Turk's executors interposed the plea of the statute of limitations and the plea of laches.

On November 24, 1899, a decree was entered bringing the cause on for hearing on said petition and directing Commissioner Nelson, to whom the cause then stood referred, to report on the matters set up in said petition in addition to the matters called for in the previous decrees, and in response to that decree Commissioner Nelson filed his report December 15, 1900.

From this report it appeared, inter alia, that R. S. and W. A. Turk (who had procured their bonds to the estate for $11,074.64 to be canceled) were indebted to the estate in their executorial capacity in the sum of $1,142.30, as of December 13, 1900; that the distribution account, as stated by Commissioner Waddell, should be reduced to meet additional indebtedness; and that there were outstanding against the estate debts due to P. D. Byerley, Mary E. Ritchie, and Jas. O. Hobbs, stating the amount of each—the debt reported as due to Mary E. Ritchie being subject to credit for such amount as might be realized from D. Bashaw's real estate. By an addendum to this report, filed November 12, 1902, Mary E. Ritchie's debt is restated, allowing credit for the sums realized on the debt from Bashaw's estate, and ascertaining the balance of the debt to be paid from the estate of Turk.

Upon the hearing of the cause on said report and the exceptions of Turk's executors thereto, the court by its decree of June 26, 1903, overruled the exceptions, confirmed the report, and adjudged that the estate of Rudolph Turk was indebted to P. D. Byerley in the sum of $196.54, with interest on $144.52, part thereof, from December 15, 1900; to Mary E. Ritchie in the sum of $2,302.22, with interest on $2,279.34, part thereof, from the 1st day of November, 1902; and to J. O. Hobbs in the sum of $182.40, with interest on $100, part thereof, from the 13th day of December, 1900; that said debts constituted valid subsisting debts against the estate of Rudolph Turk, deceased, properly assessed in the cause, and in no wise barred by the statute of limitations or the laches of the parties; and that said debts constituted all the unpaid indebtedness of said estate, except the costs of the suit—and decreed that R. S. Turk and W. A. Turk, executors of Rudolph Turk, deceased, pay de bonis testatoris to the several parties stated the several respective sums, etc.

From this decree R. S. Turk, in his own right and as surviving executor of R. Turk, deceased, and administrator of W. A. Turk, deceased, obtained an appeal to this court.

No ground for reversing the decree with reference to the debt of P. D. Byerley, contracted by the executors of Rudolph Turk, deceased, in preserving the property of the estate, is assigned in the petition for this appeal, nor pointed out in the argument here, and therefore we are not called upon to consider the decree in that aspect.

With reference to the debt decreed to J. O. Hobbs, we deem it only necessary to say that until the report of Commissioner Nelson, filed December 15, 1900, reporting, inter alia, the debt due to Hobbs, the decrees of reference theretofore entered directing inquiry and report of the debts outstanding against Rudolph Turk's estate were never fully executed, and the data arrived at, whereby an accurate account could be made for the final distribution of the assets of the estate. Therefore it was until then entirely proper for Commissioner Nelson to report any outstanding valid debt against the estate, and for the court to decree its payment.

The attack upon so much of the decree appealed from as settled the right of appellee Mary E. Ritchie to recover of Turk's estate the balance due her on the Shiffett bond is made substantially upon these grounds: (1) That the decree of May 16, 1895, in Turk's Executors v. Turk's Creditors, was a final decree, and a creditor of the estate was thereby precluded from coming into the cause and asserting a demand against the estate; (2) that the decree rendered against Turk's executors, in the suit of Ritchie and Wife v. Shiffett et al., relied on by appellee in her petition in this suit, is absolutely void; and (3) even if said decree were valid, it could not be relied on in this cause to repel the plea of the statute of limitations interposed by Turk's executors.

There is not, as we view it, an element of finality in the decree of May 16, 1895. The report of the master acted on in the decree did not purport to be a final finding as to the debts outstanding against Turk's estate, but only a partial statement of the accounts and matters necessary to a winding up of the estate. Nor does the decree confirm the report, except as to certain specific findings, and recommitts the cause to the master to take a further account of the transactions of the executors, and, "if possible, to make an accurate distribution between the residuary legatees," thus leaving the assets of the estate still under the control of the court liable for the payment of any valid debts against the estate which might be reported under the unexecuted decrees of reference made in the cause, and which were not fully executed, as we have remarked, until the report of Commissioner Nelson filed December 15, 1900.

The contention of the learned counsel for appellant touching the validity of the decree in favor of appellee and against the executors of Turk, entered in the suit of Ritchie and Wife v. Shiffett et al., and asserted in this cause, is not that the court entering the decree did not have jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the litigation in that cause and of the parties interested therein, but that the court transcended its jurisdiction in decreeing upon the pleadings in favor of appellee against the executors of Turk for the balance ascertained to be due her on the Shiffett bond; in other words, that the bill filed by appellee in that cause contained no intimation of the assertion of any claim against Turk's estate, and therefore the court was without jurisdiction to enter the decree in question.

The bill, upon which the decree was made, fully set forth the facts as to the execution of the bond by Givens Shiffett, with Rudolph Turk and D. Bashaw as his sureties; the execution of the deed of trust to Fultz, trustee, to secure the same; the death of Givens Shiffett, Turk, and Fultz—and charges that "your orator and oratrix are entitled to have the sum due to your oratrix, as secured as aforesaid, collected and paid over to your oratrix, and to convene before a court of equity the personal representative and the heirs at law and distributees of Givens Shiffett, deceased, and the personal representatives of David Fultz, deceased, and the personal representatives of Rudolph Turk, deceased, in order that the conditions of the bond of Givens Shiffett, and Rudolph Turk and D. Bashaw, his sureties, executed as aforesaid to David Fultz, * * * may be enforced." The executors of Rudolph Turk, deceased, as well as the other parties suggested in the charge of the bill, were made parties defendant thereto; the prayer of the bill being that the personal estate of Givens Shifflett, deceased, might be applied in due course of administration to the payment of said debt, and that in the event that said personal estate proved insufficient, which it was alleged would be the case, the tract of land upon which the debt asserted was secured be sold and the proceeds of sale applied to the payment of the debt, and concluded with the usual prayer for general relief.

Plainly the bill charged a liability upon the sureties of Givens Shifflett, as well as upon his estate, which the plaintiffs would have enforced if the estate of the principal and the land specifically bound for the debt proved insufficient, whereby the sureties or their personal representatives were put on notice of the liability asserted against them. Therefore the granting of the decree over against the executors of Turk for the balance ascertained to be due to appellee on the claim asserted, after exhausting the estate of the principal debtor, was not inconsistent with either the case made in the bill or the prayer for special relief, and was entirely proper under the prayer for general relief. 1 Bar. Chy. Prac. (N. Ed.) 281, 282; Walters v. Bank, 76 Va. 12; Beverly v. Rhodes, 86 Va. 415, 10 S. E. 572; Fayette L. Co. v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 93 Va. 274, 24 S. E. 1016; Laurel Creek, etc. Co. v. Browning, 99 Va. 528, 39 S. E. 156; Jones v. Tunis, 99 Va. 220, 37 S. E. 841; Vaught v. Meador, 99 Va. 569, 39 S. E. 225, 86 Am. St. Rep. 908; Dunn v. Stowers, 104 Va. —, 51 S. E. 366.

In Beverly v. Rhodes, supra, the bill was filed against the personal representatives of the principal and sureties in the bond sued on, and merely set out the execution of the bond, its assignment to the plaintiff, the qualification of the personal representatives of the deceased obligors, and that they left estates, real and personal, out of which the plaintiff's debt should have been paid, and the personal representatives of the deceased obligors were made parties defendant, the special prayer of the bill being that the payment of the debt demanded be enforced and to this end that all proper accounts might be taken, and concluded with the usual prayer for general relief. Upon a final hearing of the cause the decree was against the defendants for the amount of the debt, to be paid de bonis testatoris, and against Jas. B. Beverly, personally, who was the executor of William Beverly, one of the deceased sureties, who had left ample estate to pay his debts, and whose estate had been fully administered in another suit, to which the plaintiff in Beverly v. Rhodes was not a party. From this decree Jas. B. Beverly appealed, and insisted that the circuit court erred in not dismissing the bill on demurrer, because the plaintiff had an adequate remedy at law and no pretext for coming into a court of equity, and, further, that the plaintiff's action was nothing but an ordinary action upon a plain bond, and her bill nothing but a declaration, wherefore, even if the court was of opinion that it had jurisdiction of the case made, it ought to have submitted the questions of payment, laches, etc., to a jury. But this court held otherwise, and affirmed the decree of the circuit court, upon the principle applied in the authorities just cited, and which are in accordance with the opinion in the very early case of Parker v. Dee, 2 Chy. Cas. 200, where it was said: "When this court can determine the matter, it shall not be a handmaid to other courts, nor beget a suit to be ended elsewhere."

The decree asserted by appellee in this cause being a valid decree, it settles all questions as to the validity of the debt claimed by her, and that the debt was not barred by the statute of limitations when the decree was made. Brewis v. Lawson, 76 Va. 36, and authorities cited; Smith v. Moore, 102 Va. 260, 46 S. E. 326. In fact it is not contended that the debt was barred when the decree in question was entered, but that as appellee did not assert her right to recover of the estate of Turk on the bond of Givens Shifflett until July 15, 1899, five years and six months after January 15, 1894, when her cause of action thereon accrued, her demand is barred by the statute (section 2920 of the Code of 1887 [Va. Code 1904, p. 1540]), which is as follows:

"Limitations of Personal Actions Generally.—Every action to recover money which is founded upon an award, or on any contract, other than a judgment or recognizance, shall be brought within the following number of years after the right to bring the same shall have accrued * * *: Provided, that the right of action against the estate of any person hereafter dying, on any such award or contract, which shall have accrued at the time of his death, or the right to prove any such claim against his estate in any suit or proceeding, shall not in any case continue longer than five years from the qualification of his personal representative, or if the right of action shall not have accrued at the time of the decedent's death, it shall not continue longer than five years after the same shall have accrued."

The decree for this liability on Turk's estate, rendered on the 10th day of December, 1895, is asserted in this cause on the 15th day of July, 1899, 3½ years afterwards, while the cause was not only still pending and undetermined, but the debts outstanding against Turk's estate not fully ascertained and the estate not distributed, so that by no possible construction to be given section 2920, supra, can it have any application to the case under consideration.

It will be observed that appellee is not asserting in this cause a demand on the original cause of action—the Shifflett bond which became payable January 15, 1894—but the decree of December 10, 1895, into which the right of action on the original demand was merged; and, as we have said, that decree is conclusive of the question whether or not the debt was barred by the statute as against Turk's estate. Therefore the plea of the statute, interposed by Turk's executors, was rightly overruled.

There is no ground whatever for complaint on the part of Turk's executors, or residuary legatees, that appellee first prosecuted her suit of Ritchie and Wife v. Shifflett et al., the result of which was to exhaust the assets of Shifflett's estate, to secure a large contribution from the estate of Bashaw, the other surety of Shifflett, and thereby to reduce the liability of Turk's estate for appellee's demand to the minimum, wherefore appellant's defense of laches is wholly unavailing.

In the able arguments of counsel other questions were raised and elaborately discussed, but in the view taken by the court of the case it becomes unnecessary to consider them.

The decree of the circuit court is affirmed.

(104 Va. 580)

ONEY et al. v. WEST BUENA VISTA LAND CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 23, 1905.)

1. EASEMENTS—ACQUISITION.

An owner platted land into lots, blocks, streets. A map showing that the streets were to be connected with the streets of a city by means of a bridge to be erected by the owner was recorded. The owner offered to dedicate the bridge to the public but it was not accepted. He sold lots, the deeds referring to the map. He urged the existence of the bridge as an inducement to the purchasers. Held, that the conveyances of lots carried with them an implied grant of the bridge as an easement to the property conveyed.

2. SAME—REPAIR.

A grantor of an easement is, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, under no obligation to keep the same in repair; but this duty rests on those using the easement.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see vol. 17, Cent. Dig. Easements, § 117.]

3. SAME.

An owner platted land into lots, streets, etc., and recorded a map showing that the streets were to be connected with the streets of a city by means of a bridge to be erected by the owner. The existence of the bridge constituted the principal inducement for the purchase of lots. Held, that the purchasers of lots were bound to keep the bridge, constituting an easement to their property, in repair.

